DOCUMENTARY HISTORY, &c.

CORRESPONDENCE, MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS, PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEES, &c.

LETTER FROM THE GENERAL COMMITTEE, AT CHARLESTOWN, S. C., TO THE NEW-YORK COMMITTEE.

Charlestown, South-Carolina, March 1, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: It was with equal surprise and concern that we read in the publick prints what passed in your House of Assembly on the 26th of January, with respect to the proceedings of the General Congress. It is impossible for us, at this distance, to conjecture the reasons which induced the Assembly to refuse their formal assent to the Solemn Agreement of all these Colonies. We are obliged to suspend our judgment until we hear from you; and will not even permit ourselves to conclude that it is owing either to a neglect of the united voice of America, or to want of spirit in the cause of freedom.—In the midst of the pain that we feel at this singular instance of Provincial policy, we console ourselves with the apprehension that it was intended, not as a declaration of their real inclinations, but only as a prudential measure: that they having been chosen antecedent to the present dispute, and therefore not with a particular view to it, might suppose the necessity of their interfering, superseded by a posterior choice. We console ourselves with the thought that the legal Representatives of your respectable Colony, by refusing to act, did not mean to hold up to the world the opinion of their Constituents, but have only left it to another representation, not so much according to the letter of the law, but equally respectable, and as much to be depended on.

We only beg leave to make this remark upon their policy: that they have therein singled themselves out from the rest of the Colonies; who, as far as they have had the opportunity, have come unanimously into the measures of the General Congress. And we cannot but think it would have been much more happy for the whole, had there been no exception. Indeed, although the House of Assembly in this Colony hath nobly and unanimously adopted the Proceedings of the General Congress, yet they have not had it in idea to take the matter wholly into their own hands, independent of the Provincial Congress; but even now, while that Assembly is sitting, the General Committee of the Colony also sits and does business, independent of the House. A measure this, necessary in the Royal Governments, where the liability of the Assembly to sudden prorogations and dissolutions, renders their proceeding in business wholly dependant on the creatures of the Crown. Much, therefore, as we are surprised at the conduct of your Assembly, we are not so ignorant as to imagine it is the definite voice of the Colony; and, indeed, we do not allow ourselves to entertain a suspicion that your Resolutions would not be the same with those of the rest of the Colonies, if you only had a full and free representation of the whole Colony elected on the present occasion: such a representation we hope to hear of in due time.

We are not insensible of the consequence of your Colony in the great chain of American Union.—Nor do we imagine the Ministry insensible of it; we are well aware of your unhappy situation, and of the many artful measures that have been, and now are; taking, if possible, to throw you into confusion. We are well aware of the poison that is daily distilling from some of your pensioned presses, and the hireling writers that have crept in among you. We are not ignorant of that crowd of placemen, of contractors, of officers, and needy dependants upon the Crown, who are constantly employed to frustrate your measures. We know the dangerous tendency of being made the head-quarters of America for many years. All these things, though they necessarily tend to clog the wheels of publick spirit, yet do not cause us to doubt of your publick virtue, as a Colony: nay, we assure ourselves, that your love to Constitutional Liberty, to justice, and your posterity, however depressed for a little while, will at last surmount all obstacles, and do honour to New-York.

The present struggle seems to us most glorious and critical. We seem to ourselves to stand upon the very division line, between all the blessings of freedom, and the most abject vassalage. The very idea of an earthly power which shall bind the present and future millions of America in all cases whatsoever—in the direction of which we are to have no more voice than our oxen, and over which we can have no constitutional control, fills us with horror;—to hold not only our liberty and property at will, but our lives also, as well as the lives of all our posterity!—to be absolutely dependant for the air in which we breathe, and the water which we drink, upon a set of men at the distance of three thousand miles from us—who, even when they abuse that power, are out of the reach of our vengeance, is a proposal which this Colony hears with indignation, and can only submit to when there is no possible remedy. By the late detestable Acts of the British Parliament respecting America, all mankind will judge whether that body may be safely entrusted with such a power. We have now appealed to the remaining justice of the Nation; we have endeavoured to arouse them to a sense of their own dangers; we have appealed to their mercantile interests for our defence. Our hopes of success are not yet damped by any thing but the possibility of disunion among ourselves. We have the pleasure to inform you that in this Colony the Association takes place, as effectually as law itself. Sundry Vessels from England have already been obliged to return with their Merchandise, or have it thrown overboard as common ballast.

We may assure you of our fixed determination to adhere to the Resolutions at all hazards, and that Ministerial opposition is here obliged to be silent. We wish for the day when it shall be silenced among you likewise. And whatever noise is made by the friends of arbitrary rule about the design of those proceedings in your House of Assembly, we cannot and will not believe that you intend to desert the cause.

Three things, however, oblige us to write to you.

First. The general alarm which the proceedings above-mentioned have given, that we may obtain from you certain intelligence of the disposition of your Colony, whether those proceedings are to be understood as the general sense of the good people of New-York, or only of a bare majority of the House.

Secondly. That we may learn from you, whether the Association of the General Congress has actually been adopted by you, and is now put into execution. On these two points we beg you will give us the earliest intelligence possible, that we may be able (as we have not the least doubt that we shall be) thereby to quiet the anxiety of the people of this Province, and prevent the tools of Ministry from exulting at any appearance of disunion. And lastly, that we may suggest to you an expedient, which, with great success, has been tried in this Province, viz: that of a Provincial Congress, in which every corner of the Colony is fully and largely represented. As yet we have not had the pleasure of hearing that you have adopted this or any similar measure. And although we would not be understood as presuming to dictate to our brethren, yet we would take the liberty to inform them that this measure has given the greatest satisfaction here, and so firmly united the Town and Country, that we are thereby become one compact regularly organized body. The enemies of American freedom are aware of the cementing tendency of such a step, and wherever they have influence, endeavour to prevent it, well knowing that while the different Districts of a Colony are kept apart, they do not all receive the same information, and are exposed to the baneful effects of jealousy and division, especially when any considerable part supposes itself neglected by not being called in to give its voice. And we find, that the larger this representation is, the less the danger of corruption and influence; the more is sly deceit deterred from venturing its efforts; and the more weight goes with every determination. The Congress of this Colony consists of one hundred and eighty-four Members, and is by far the fullest representation of it that ever has been together before.

We, therefore, as brethren united in the same cause, do only beg leave to recommend the above measure, already found by experience, of such utility in sundry of the Royal Governments, but especially in this. The necessity of electing Delegates to the Congress in May, we are assured, will show the expediency of such a Provincial meeting.

We feel ourselves bound to you by the closest ties of interest and affection.—We consider this season as big with American glory, or with American infamy.

We therefore most ardently wish you the direction and aid of that Almighty Being who presides over all. We confidently expect to meet you in General Congress at Philadelphia, with hearts full of zeal in our Country's cause, and full of mutual confidence in the integrity of each other. We are, gentlemen, your friends and fellow-countrymen.

By order of the General Committee,
CHARLES PINCKNEY, Chairman.

INSTRUCTIONS FROM THE FREEHOLDERS OF CUMBERLAND COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

To JOHN MAYO and WILLIAM FLEMING, Gentlemen, their Delegates, MARCH, 1775.

We, the Freeholders of Cumberland County, having elected you to represent us in a Provincial Convention, to be held in the Town of Richmond, on Monday, the 20th of this instant, and being convinced that the safety and happiness of British America depend on the unanimity, firmness, and joint efforts of all the Colonies, we expect you will, on your parts, let your measures be as much for the common safety as the peculiar interests of this Colony will permit, and that you, in particular, comply with the recommendation of the Continental Congress, in appointing Delegates to meet in the City of Philadelphia, in May next.

The means of Constitutional legislation in this Colony being now interrupted, and entirely precarious, and being convinced that some rule is necessary for speedily putting the Colony in a state of defence, we, in an especial manner, recommend this matter to your consideration in Convention; and you may depend that any general tax, by that body imposed, for such purposes, will be cheerfully submitted to, and paid by the inhabitants of this County.

We desire that you will consider the Bostonians as suffering in the common cause, and cheerfully join in their support to the utmost of your power.

That you will direct the Deputies to Congress, on the part of this Colony, to use their best endeavours to establish a trade between the Colonies; and to procure a quantity of Gun-powder, and a number of Cotton and Wool Cards from the Northward, or elsewhere.

We desire further, that you will not depart from the Association formed by the Continental Congress in September last, but will strictly adhere to it in every particular.

Committee Chamber, New-York, 1st March, 1775.

To the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of NEW-YORK.

As the last Congress, held in Philadelphia, recommended that another Congress should be convened at the same place, on the 10th day of May next, and the election of Delegates ought not to be longer delayed, and most of the other Colonies having already appointed them, and as the Committee has no power, without the approbation of their constituents, to take any measures for that purpose: they therefore request, that the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of New-York, will be pleased to assemble at the Exchange, on Monday, the 6th instant, at twelve o'clock, to signify their sense of the best method of choosing such Delegates, and whether they will appoint a certain number of persons, to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect for that purpose, and join with them in appointing out of their body, Delegates for the next Congress. By order of the Committee,

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

ADDRESS TO THE SOLDIERS ORDERED TO AMERICA.

London, March, 1775.

The following Address has been sent to Ireland for publication, and should be published in all the American Papers:—

GENTLEMEN: You are about to embark for America to compel your fellow-subjects there to submit to Popery and Slavery.

It is the glory of the British Soldier, that he is the defender, not the destroyer of the civil and religious rights of the people. The English Soldiery are immortalized in history for their attachment to the religion and liberties of their Country.

When King James the Second endeavoured to introduce the Roman Catholic Religion and arbitrary power into Great Britain, he had an Army encamped on Hounslow-Heath, to terrify the people. Seven Bishops were seized upon and sent to the Tower. But they appealed to the laws of their Country, and were set at liberty. When this news reached the camp, the shouts of joy were so great, that they re-echoed in the Royal Palace. This, however, did not quite convince the King of the aversion of the Soldiers to be the instruments of oppression against their fellow-subjects. He therefore made another trial. He ordered the Guards to be drawn up, and the word was given that those who did not choose to support the King's measures should ground their arms. When behold, to his utter confusion, and their eternal honour—the whole body grounded their arms.

You, gentlemen, will soon have an opportunity of showing equal virtue. You will be called upon to imbrue your hands in the blood of your fellow-subjects in America, because they will not submit to be slaves, and are alarmed at the establishment of Popery and arbitrary power in one-half of their Country.

Whether you will draw those swords which have defended them against their enemies, to butcher them into a resignation of their rights, which they hold as the sons of Englishmen, is in your breasts. That you will not stain the laurels you have gained from France, by dipping them in civil blood, is every good man's hope.

Art will no doubt be used to persuade you, that it is your duty to obey orders; and that you are sent upon the just and righteous errand of crushing rebellion. But your own hearts will tell you, that the people may be so ill-treated as to make resistance necessary. You know, that violence and injury offered from one man to another, has always some pretence of right and reason to justify it. So it is between the people and their rulers.

Therefore, whatever hard names and accusations may be bestowed upon your fellow-subjects in America, be assured that they have not deserved them; but are driven by the most cruel treatment into despair. In this despair they are compelled to defend their liberties, after having tried in vain every peaceable means of obtaining redress of their manifold grievances. Before God and man they are right.

Your honour then, gentlemen, as soldiers, and your humanity as men, forbid you to be the instruments of forcing chains upon your injured and oppressed fellow-subjects. Remember that your first obedience is due to God, and that whoever bids you shed innocent blood, bids you act contrary to His commandments. Yours, &c.

AN OLD SOLDIER.

London, March, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: At this important era, when the British Empire is in danger of being involved in a civil war; when Trade and Commerce are at a stand; when all the horrors of misery, poverty, and wretchedness, are hanging over our heads; when want and famine threaten to succeed our former plenty, must not every Englishman shudder at the approaching danger?

When from the height of power, opulence, and grandeur, we are on the point of being precipitated into the lowest abyss of slavery and insignificance; when from being the first and most respectable people in the world, we shall be sunk below the consequence of a Nation, what must not be the feelings of every man, whose generous soul is nobly excited by a love of his Country? What will not be his indignation? What bounds will there be to his resentment? Which of ye will then stand forth and confess you have been the author of these measures? The general calamity, I fear, is not far distant; and horrid as it must be to this Country in general, still it will bring with it this comfort, that wicked Ministers and corrupt Members of Parliament must then render an account of their actions. The publick justice of this Nation has been long eluded, and calls now aloud for redress.

Beware, ye Ministers; ye know not on how small a point ye stand; ye are now on the brink of an impenetrable gulf; still ye have time to retract; but if tempted by the placid flowings of its waters, ye think securely to swim along the summit, ye are deceived. When once immersed, the briny waves will use their wonted might, and foaming billows send you down to the regions below. The people of England are not yet fully apprised of their danger: but be assured when they once come to be thoroughly sensible of the calamities your wrong-headed measures have brought on them, it will not be easy to stand the torrent of their resentment. Your venal hirelings in the Senate will desert you, or, if sensible of their being equally involved in your guilt, from a sense of common danger they should stand by you, do not think their weak arguments will have any avail. The people without doors will resolve upon those measures which those within should have done; and ye can expect nothing but that just punishment which your folly, presumption, and wickedness, shall have merited.

It is foreign to my present purpose to enter into a discussion of those rights you, as the supreme power of this Nation, claim of sovereignty over the Americans; let it suffice to say, it is not probable that men, who are descended from the same common ancestors with ourselves; who have been bred up from their childhood in the principles of liberty, and have lived from their first settlements there in the actual possession of this invaluable blessing; it is not to be imagined, I say, that such men will quietly submit, and suffer themselves to be despoiled of that freedom their ancestors have transmitted to them pure and inviolate; nor is it to be conceived that men, who are not destitute of spirit, and who have arms in their hands, will quietly lay them down and bend their neck to the galling yoke of tyranny; or is it likely that those who have a superiour force, able to crush their opponents, will be terrified by empty threats or menaces, when those threats are unsupported by authority, and unaided by justice? Your decrees will fall into the same ignominy and contempt as the denunciations of the Court of Rome. You might as well think to intimidate these people by the Pope's Bulls, as by Acts of Parliament. For what, indeed, signify threats or menaces, without the two essentials necessary to support them—justice and power;—the one to persuade, the other to enforce? In the present contest with America, I think I may safely say you are destitute of both.

Is it reasonable or equitable that such of ye as represent Northumberland, Cumberland, or any other County in England, or more especially such of ye as are placed in the House of Commons by the servile and corrupt votes of dependant Boroughs in the different parts of the Kingdom, should govern a large and extensive Country at three thousand miles distant? What knowledge have ye of America? What know ye of its concerns? Have ye been instructed by the people of that land? Are ye acquainted with their manners and their customs; the state of their finances; the riches and numbers of their people, and what imposts they are able to bear, and what would entirely crush them? To all these questions I believe I may safely answer in the negative: But in reply you say, you think it is reasonable that they, as members of the British Empire, should bear a part of the burden and expense, not considering that by the advantages which accrue to Great Britain from the Commerce of these countries, and by the restrictions we have laid on their Trade with all other Nations, we already receive more and greater benefits from them than their proportion of taxes would amount to. Wisely then have ye done to stop this certain source of riches, from the vain and improbable hope of taking from them by force what they already paid with good will.

I need not remind you of the story of the old woman, whose hen brought her a golden egg every morning, and would have continued so to do had not the covetous old hag thought, by killing the hen, she should at once obtain the whole mass of riches, which now she could only receive by detail, and accordingly put in force this cruel resolution. The fable tells you what was the consequence.

Now, how nearly you stand in the same predicament with this old woman, I leave to yourselves to determine: But if I grant that the Americans should pay a proportional tax, besides maintaining their own internal Government, what right have ye to be the assessors? To sit in the British Parliament, a landed qualification is necessary. But where must that qualification be situated? Why, within the Island of Great Britain. It is a maxim of our law, that no man shall be taxed but by his own consent, given either in person or by his Representative. I should be glad to know what assent ye can give for the Americans. Few or none of ye possess any property in America, or if ye do, it is not in virtue of such property ye sit in the British Senate; therefore, whatever burden you lay on their shoulders will be so much clear gains to yourselves. You will not feel the weight of the taxes, which, with so much ease and confidence, you order to be levied on the Americans. Some of you, indeed, may know the value of the sums raised, by the shares you received of the spoils. The Minister cannot be so ungrateful as to neglect adding to your salaries, when by your means he shall have brought about his end, and increased his own. But how weak these measures are, and how ineffectual, a very short time will demonstrate. Indeed, except yourselves, who will not be convinced? Every one is sensible of the dangerous situation to which we are now reduced.

Now, gentlemen, let me advise you, as you regard your own prosperity—let me conjure you as you value your safety, to consider well the situation of this unfortunate Country; look on the dangers that threaten it on every hand; consider not only the inexpediency of those measures, but the total inability of this Country to go through with them. Do you imagine the French and Spaniards will be tame and idle spectators, when they see us once deeply involved in a war with our Colonies? Throw off then your supine indolence; awake from your lethargick state; and if ye will not be excited by the desire of doing good, awake at least to the sense of your own danger. Think when the general calamity comes, who will be the objects of publick odium. Will not the advisers of these destructive measures be the first sacrifices to the publick clamour? When the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers are starving; when the whole mass of the people are in misery and distress, what security can you expect to find? Where will you hope to conceal yourselves? Will you be safe even within these sacred walls? Or rather, may you not fear being pursued, not only there, but even into your most secret lurking holes? Strafford and Laud were condemned, and justly executed for being the advisers of arbitrary measures. The King, had he been able, would have protected them; they only echoed back to him his own sentiments, strengthened by their flattery and obsequiousness. But weak is the power of rulers when opposed to the wants and distresses, the rage and resentment of the multitude.

When the artificers and handicraftsmen come by thousands to your House, demanding bread, it will be too late to argue;—the mischief will be done. You then will have only to conceal your obnoxious heads, and save yourselves if you can, from popular resentment and publick justice. There may be a time, and I believe that time will soon come, when the nod and smiles of the Minister will be shunned with as much care as they are now sought for with eagerness.

Once more I admonish you to awake before it is too late. Stop the further progress of the evil ye cannot now totally cure; and though ye will not be roused by a love of your Country, nor a sense of the impending ruin which threatens us, yet consider your own danger, as most assuredly such of ye as have been the advisers of these measures will be the first sacrifices. Repeal then these accursed Acts; acknowledge yourselves to have been in the wrong, and thus atone, as much as now lies in your power, for the mischiefs you have already occasioned. MONITOR.

COUNCIL OF NORTH-CAROLINA.

At a Council held at Newbern, in North-Carolina, the 1st of March, 1775, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Hon. Jas. Hasell, Hon. John Rutherford, Hon. Samuel Strudwicke, Martin Howard, and Samuel Cornell, Esquires.

His Excellency informed the Board that he had observed an Advertisement published in the Newspapers, and circulated through this Colony by Handbills, dated Perquimons County, 11th February, 1775, requesting the Counties and Towns thereof, to elect Delegates to represent them in Convention, at the Town of Newbern, on Monday, the third of April next, and signed John Harvey, Moderator. And considering such proceedings to be highly derogatory to the dignity of the Legislature appointed to meet at the same time, and in every light illegal and inconsistent with good order and Government, recommended the matter to the consideration of the Board, and desired their advice of the measures to be taken to contravene the design of said Advertisement.

The Board conceiving the highest detestation of such proceedings, were unanimous in advising His Excellency to issue a Proclamation to inhibit and forbid such illegal meeting; in the following words:

By His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esquire, Captain General, Governour, and Commander-in-chief in and over the said Province:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, an Advertisement is printed in the publick Newspapers, and also industriously circulated about this Colony in handbills, dated from Perquimons County, the 11th day of February, 1775, requesting the Counties and Towns thereof to elect Delegates to represent them in Convention, at the Town of Newbern, on Monday, the 3d day of April next, and signed John Harvey, Moderator. And whereas, the name and authority of such an officer, and such meeting, is unknown to the Laws and Constitution of this Country; and such an invitation to the people may tend to ensnare the unwary and ignorant among His Majesty's loyal and faithful subjects in this Province, to partake in the guilt of such unlawful proceedings:

And whereas, the Assembly of this Province, duly elected, is the only true and lawful representation of the people, and is competent to every legal act that Representatives of the people can do; and as an attempt to excite the people to choose another body of Representatives to meet at the time and place appointed for the meeting of the Assembly, is to betray them into a violation of the Constitution, in a point wherein they are most materially concerned to support it: a contempt of that branch of the Legislature which represents the people, and highly derogatory to its power, rights, and privileges; I have thought proper, by and with the advice and consent of His Majesty's Council of this Province, to issue this Proclamation: and I do hereby earnestly exhort the many good people of this Province, who have to their honour, hitherto prudently withstood the insidious attempts of evil-minded and designing men, that they do, on this occasion, steadfastly persevere in such loyal and dutiful conduct, and continue to resist and treat with just indignation all measures so subversive of order and Government, and so inconsistent with the allegiance they owe to His Majesty; and that they do not subject themselves to the restraints of tyrannical and arbitrary Committees, which have already, in many instances, proceeded to the extravagance of forcing His Majesty's subjects, contrary to their consciences, to submit to their unreasonable, seditious, and chimerical Resolves, doing thereby the most cruel and unparalleled violence to their liberties, under the pretence of releasing them from imaginary grievances; and I do further exhort all His Majesty's subjects in this Province, as they value their dearest rights under the present happy Constitution, and as they would testify their duty and allegiance to the best of Kings, that they forbear to meet to choose persons to represent them in Convention, pursuant to the advertisement herein before recited; and I also do most earnestly recommend to them to renounce, disclaim, and discourage all such meetings, cabals, and illegal proceedings, which artful and designing men shall attempt to engage them in, and which can only tend to introduce disorder and anarchy, to the destruction of the real interests and happiness of the people, and to involve this Province in confusion, disgrace and ruin.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said Province, at Newbern, the first day of March, Anno Domini, 1775, and in the 15th year of His Majesty's reign.

God save the King.

JOSIAH MARTIN.

By His Excellency's command,

SAMUEL STRUDWICKE, Secretary.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTE.

Philadelphia, February 22, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: I rejoice to find that, in a Province distinguished for its progress in science and literature as Pennsylvania, the few sons of despotism are reduced to the pensioned pen of some ministerial hireling at Boston. Believe me, gentlemen, your Paper did not gain an extensive circulation from the gleanings of others; its value has been owing to the originality, as well as the elegance of its essays. Every Newspaper, from New-Hampshire to Georgia, (two at Boston, and one at New-York, excepted,) would furnish refutations of the re-publication in your last Paper, signed Phileirene. But I will not ask you to serve up to your readers, at second-hand, what will be more acceptable as an original, though of a coarser and humbler composition. I therefore beg leave to present to my fellow-subjects and citizens

The other side of the Question.

It is a just remark of the celebrated Chesterfield to his son, that grant him but two or three positions, and he would undertake, by fair inference, to prove that robbing on the highway is an honest, and ought to be a reputable calling. Happy would it be if the sacred rights of mankind were as safe in this respect, as the persons of individuals. But the superiour temptations to justify the invasion of the former, are too alluring not to afford melancholy proofs, in every age and Country, of a prostitution of the most shining talents, to gild the pill of arbitrary power and lawless domination. When we see a Bacon, a Milton, a Strafford, and Bolingbroke, sacrificing at their shrine, can we be surprised if men of such principles, but far inferior abilities, should appear among us, with the Treasury of England in full view, and hearts panting to lord it over their fellow-men? Divine Providence has endowed the inhabitants of America with rational powers not inferior to those of any other Country; it is but justice to say, they have generally improved them better than any other. By their good sense and judgment shall this author be tried, whose facts, modesty, style, accuracy, and precision, have been thought worthy of a re-publication, which occupies half your last Paper, to the exclusion of all Foreign news, for which it has been distinguished. This fair structure is built on two principles.

1st. That the Americans have entire independence on the Mother Country in view, as the great object of their present contest.

2d. That all opposition to what is called Government, is rebellion.

Both these propositions are false and groundless; the writer was not able to prove, and therefore takes them for granted; but I may, with honest boldness, challenge him, or his adopting friend, to show, from the publick transactions of any Congress or Assembly throughout this great Continent, that such a claim was ever in their contemplation. Are the repeated and fervent acknowledgments of our allegiance to our common Sovereign; our submission to all his appointments of office, from the Governour to the lowest deputy's deputy; to his negative upon all our laws; to his decisions in Council, as the dernier resort in the administration of justice, and the payment of quit-rents; I ask if these are the badges of independence? But they do not end here. With what exemplary patience and obedience have we submitted to the restraints of Trade, and even an abridgment of the common bounties of Heaven. The water is not permitted to flow, or the earth to produce, for the same beneficial purposes to the American as for the Briton. In a Country where the price of manual labour calls for the utmost exertion of art and ingenuity, we are restrained from slitting or rolling iron, so as to answer some of the most important purposes in life. These are restrictions to which we not only have submitted, but to which the great Council of America has professed its willingness to submit. With what shameless affrontery can any writer, therefore, charge the people of America with seeking independence, when every transaction of Government, of trade, of justice, and manufactures, originates, proceeds, or terminates under the control of Great Britain. But the thirst of power is so raging and insatiable, that it esteems nothing possessed, while any thing remains to be possessed; impatient of all restraints, its desires perpetually outrun its enjoyments, and it can be satisfied with nothing less than an entire and full surrender of the liberty and happiness of mankind. What use it has made of its acquisitions, let the deserted villages, ruined towns, and uncultivated fields of arbitrary Countries declare. If to live by one man's will, would be all men's misery, can we suppose that we shall derive any relief from the number of our tyrants, or that our burden would be lighter, because many hands were concerned in the imposition.

Our author's next position is, that opposition of every kind to the powers set over us, however exercised, is rebellion. Those ornaments of human nature, Locke, Sydney, Hoadley, and many other illustrious names, have so refuted these absurd doctrines of passive obedience and non-resistance; and they are so repugnant to the common sense and happiness of mankind, that it would be an affront to the understandings of my countrymen to suppose they could now admit of a serious argument. If the good of the people is the end of all Government, if limitations of power have, by the experience of all ages, been found necessary for the safety of the governed, if a participation in legislation has been found to be the best and only limitation, with what pity and concern must we view that infatuation which can obtrude doctrines in America long since reprobated in Britain, as subversive of every principle of political safety and happiness. With men of such characters, the noble struggles of our ancestors against the prerogatives of the Crown were so many odious exertions of wickedness and folly.—Magna Charta, Trial by Juries, and exemption from arbitrary and perpetual imprisonment, are fruits of the most detestable impiety and treason; nay! the Resolution itself, as founded and formed by a resistance to that Government, but the basis and foundation of the present, was a successful rebellion. These are the stale artifices of our Court sycophants of every age. It would be an outrage upon the understandings, as well as rights of mankind, to call tyranny and slavery by their proper names, when they were seeking to establish them. Under the specious title of laws and Government, they hope to lull the vigilant, deter the timid, and damp the enterprising, till the shackles are riveted on, and the deluded wretches find, too late, that the will of their masters is the only law, and oppression the only Government. To draw the line, I confess, is no easy task; but wherever legal Government ends, there tyranny most certainly begins. To show that this terminated as to the Colonies, in the year 1763, a period in which the independency of America was never thought of, and to which our highest hopes and ambition is to return; to enumerate the proofs, the odious, but indisputable proofs of this, and to show that our present opposition has every prospect of success, I must refer to another letter, lest I should exclude some more able writer, or incur my own censure. In the mean time, my dear countrymen and fellow-citizens, read the histories of those Countries which were once free; converse with those, (for we have many among us) who have fled hither from arbitrary States; acquaint yourselves with their ruinous taxes, their venal courts of justice, their merciless depredations upon the chastity, property, liberty, and happiness of their vassals; then reason, and judge, and if you are not lost to every sentiment of publick virtue, the honour of your country, and regard for yourselves and your posterity, your hearts will rise in grateful emotions to the Giver of all good gifts, that He has cast your lot in a land of freedom; and I trust you will mingle with them a humble but firm resolution, by His assistance, to transmit the blessings you have received, undiminished, to the latest posterity. "He that would give up essential liberty for temporary safety, deserves neither liberty nor safety."—This was the favourite motto of many in this City but a very few years since. A principle of action and duty, founded upon truth and reason, will ever continue the same, however the persons or occasions may change. Come forward then, ye staunch advocates for Provincial Liberty, support your principles—this was once your Law and your Prophets—be consistent—convince the world that you do not act upon the local views of a party, but upon the manly and generous principle of publick good, which upon all occasions leads you to sacrifice temporary ease to essential liberty.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTE.

Philadelphia, March 1, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: I wish to address the understandings of my fellow-citizens, not to inflame their passions. As inquirers after truth, my highest ambition is to assist them—to furnish the clew; their own good sense will enable them to pursue it. I think an attention peculiarly due to such publications as come recommended by the graces of style and language; the most deadly poison may be conveyed in the most beautiful cup; it may be more inviting, but it is not the less fatal. The piece signed Phileirene is not destitute of those graces, but he has raised a fabrick on a foundation which only existed in his own imagination. There must surely be singular merit in that claim which must be misrepresented to be opposed with success. When I hear America charged with aspiring after independence, I ask, Were we independent on Great Britain in 1762? That is the era to which we all look back with regret, and to which we are anxiously seeking to return.

When I hear the Americans termed rebels, I ask, Was the Revolution a rebellion? That was an opposition to Government, because Government was attempted to be exercised in a manner inconsistent with the safety, liberty and happiness of the governed. One man attempted to legislate without their participation; in our case, this attempt is made by about eight hundred; can this circumstance change the nature of the action?

When I hear any one declaiming against the American system, I ask, Are you willing to be taxed by the British Parliament? A fair answer to these questions I have generally found more decisive and convincing, than the best connected chain of reasoning. If any man can answer them in the affirmative, I may pity, but cannot blame him for withdrawing from the contest. If I was asked to state the claims of America, I should say she has none, but that Great Britain should desist from innovations, useless and disappointing to herself, but fatal to America. We are defendants in this great suit; we ask but to continue in that state, in which our own reason and judgment convinces us our safety consists, and which the experience of one hundred years has confirmed, as the most beneficial for both countries.

For this long course of years, America, with a most unsuspecting confidence, resigned herself to the wisdom and virtue of the Parent State, whose wisest Ministers and ablest men were content with the benefits of Commerce, and sought no power but such as tended to its increase and security. After a long and expensive war, in which the Americans were repeatedly acknowledged the most loyal subjects and affectionate Colonists, a system was formed, which proceeded step by step in dreadful progression, till it has swallowed up every privilege and right which ought to distinguish an English Colonist from those of arbitrary States. Of what importance is it to us, that our fellow-subjects, three thousand miles off, should be distinguished from the other Nations of the earth, as free and happy, while we have no share in the distinction. Let us compare the rights of a British subject with those of an American, we shall see a very striking disparity.

In England.

1. A trial by a jury of his country, in all cases of life and property.

2. A trial were the offence was committed.

3. The Civil authority supreme over the Military, and no Standing Army in time of peace kept up, but by the consent of the people.

4. The Judges independent of the Crown and people.

5. No tax or imposition laid, but by those who must partake of the burthen.

6. A free trade to all the world, except the East-Indies.

7. A free use and practise of all engines and other devices, for saving labour and promoting manufactures.

8. A right to petition the King, and all prosecutions and commitments therefore illegal.

9. Freedom of debate and proceedings in their legislative deliberations.

10. For redress of grievances, amending, strengthening, and preserving the laws, Parliaments to be held frequently.

In America.

1. A trial by jury only in some cases; subjected in others, to a single Judge, or a Board of Commissioners.

2. A trial, if a Governour pleases, three thousand miles from the place where the offence was committed.

3. The Military superiour to the Civil authority, and America obliged to contribute to the support of a Standing Army, kept up without and against its consent.

4. The Judges made independent of the people, but dependant on the Crown for the support and tenure of their commissions.

5. Taxes and impositions laid by those, who not only do not partake of the burthens, but who ease themselves by it.

6. A trade only to such places as Great Britain shall permit.

7. The use only of such engines as Great Britain has not prohibited.

8. Promoting and encouraging petitions to the King declared the highest presumption, and the Legislative Assemblies of America dissolved therefor in 1768.

9. Assemblies dissolved, and their legislative power suspended, for the free exercise of their reason and judgment, in their legislative capacity.

10. To prevent the redress of grievances, or representations tending thereto, Assemblies postponed for a great length of time, and prevented meeting in the most critical times.

In a former paper I observed, that the legal Government of America terminated in the year 1763. A series of acts since that time will evince the truth of my assertion.

Then, for the first time, the taxation of America was attempted, and has been continued with unremitting assiduity to the present moment—then the powers of Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty Courts were extended beyond their former limits—then our property, for the first time, was taken from us without our consent—trial by juries in many cases of property abolished, and an innocent suitor laid under every possible disadvantage in asserting his rights. Soon after, the absolute Statute of Henry VIII, was revived, by Resolves of both Houses of Parliament, by which Americans may be carried to England, and tried for offences alleged to be committed in America. In the twelfth year of His Majesty's reign, the charge of burning any of the King's Ships or Stores in America was expressly made triable in England, to the total exclusion of a jury of the vicinage. The Acts respecting Massachusetts-Bay are too recent to need particular enumeration; their charter privileges, their justice, trade, and Government are wholly subverted, without observing the common forms of justice. What has been their case, may be that of every other Province; and let me observe, that innocence is a poor protection, when no opportunity is given to manifest it.

What opinion now, my fellow-citizens, ought you to form of an author, who calls an opposition to these measures a “utopian scheme, quickened into publick life by an itch of superiority and thirst of applause;—an infatuation, over-leaping all the sober bounds of law and Government;—conducted by men who delight in the destruction of peace and good order; whose safety consists in their precipitating their Country into anarchy and confusion.” Shameless falsehoods! calculated to impose on the weak and unwary; to foment those divisions, and bring on that ruin, upon which some men mean to build their own greatness. No, my dear fellow-citizens, look around you; are the men you deputed to the late Congress, those who have been active in Committees of publick transactions; are they men of doubtful characters and desperate fortunes? Are anarchy and confusion required for their safety or establishment in life? Is a bold step for the reformation of Government necessary to retrieve their characters? Have they been distinguished for a spirit of enterprise, wickedness, and folly, on other occasions?

The man whose signature is A Friend to the Constitution, and whose sentiments are in such unison with our author, shall determine these questions; for he must have supposed them applicable to this Province, or their publication here was idle. To arraign the justice of a cause; to entangle the honest mind in doubts and difficulties; to cut off all hopes and prospects of success; to paint in terrible colours events which have happened in dissimilar cases, and conceal the happy issue of similar struggles, are arts which will be practised, and against which we ought to be particularly guarded. I have attempted to vindicate the former, and in some future paper shall endeavour to show, that if unanimity accompanies our opposition, we have the utmost reason to hope that success will crown the work, and though we shall continue a dependant, we shall be a free and happy people.

NEWPORT (RHODE-ISLAND) COMMITTEE.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Inspection, for the Town of Newport, held in the Council Chamber, on Wednesday, March 1, 1775,

Mr. JOHN TANNER in the Chair.

Resolved, That the freedom of the Press is of the utmost importance to civil society; and that its importance consists, “besides the advancement of truth, science, morality, and arts in general, in its diffusion of liberal sentiments on the administration of Government, its ready communication of thoughts between subjects, and its consequential promotion of union among them, where, by oppressive Officers, are shamed or intimidated into more honourable and just modes of conducting affairs;” and therefore it is the duty of every friend of Civil Government to protect, and preserve from violation, that invaluable right, that noble pillar, and great support of Public Liberty; and to countenance and encourage the Press, so long as it shall be employed in promoting those beneficial purposes. But when, instead thereof, a Press is incessantly employed and prostituted to the vilest uses; in publishing the most infamous falsehoods; in partial or false representations of facts; in fomenting jealousies, and exciting discord and disunion among the people; in supporting and applauding the worst of men, and worst of measures; and in vilifying and calumniating the best of characters, and the best of causes; it then behoves every citizen, every friend to truth, science, arts, liberality of sentiment, to that union between subjects, upon which depends their security against oppression, to discountenance and discourage every such licentious, illiberal, prostituted Press.

And whereas, a certain James Rivington, a Printer and Stationer in the City of New-York, impelled by the love of sordid pelf, and a haughty domineering spirit, hath, for a long time, in the dirty Gazetteer, and in pamphlets, if possible still more dirty, uniformly persists in publishing every falsehood which his own wicked imagination, or the imaginations of others of the same stamp, as ingenious perhaps in mischief as himself, could suggest and fabricate, that had a tendency to spread jealousies, fear, discord, and disunion through this country; and by partial and false representations of facts, hath endeavoured to pervert truth, and to deceive and mislead the incautious into wrong conceptions of facts reported, and wrong sentiments respecting the measures now carrying on for the recovery and establishment of our rights, and the supporters of those measures; and particularly hath disgorged from his infamous Press, the most virulent, foul abuse, on the Members of the late Continental Congress—characters which, for wisdom, integrity, fortitude, and publick virtue, deserve, and have received, the applause of every inhabitant of this wide extended Continent, excepting a very few venal tools of a corrupt Administration.

And all this profusion of scurrility, abuse, and falsehood, this insidious, profligate Printer hath cast out, in order, if it were possible, to subvert the Association which all the American Colonies have approved, and for carrying of which into execution the General Assembly of this Colony have recommended Committees to be chosen:—Wherefore, we think it our bounden duty to hold up that infamous paricide, James Rivington, to the Continent in this odious light.

Resolved, therefore, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that no further dealings or correspondence ought to be had with the said James Rivington; and we recommend it to every person who takes his Paper, called Rivington's Gazetteer, immediately to drop the same; and also take the liberty to recommend a similar conduct towards him to the other Towns in the Colony.

Resolved, That this Resolution be printed in the next Newport Mercury.

By order of the Committee,
HENRY WARD, Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON
TO HIS FRIEND IN BOSTON, DATED MARCH 2, 1775.

The Ministry, it is now generally thought, are inflexible. Lord North was asked again and again this week, in the House of Commons, whether he had any thing more of a lenient or conciliatory nature to propose. He said there was nothing farther of that kind intended; and acknowledged that the remainder of the scheme was entirely coercive. When he was asked, whether the three Bills of the last year were to be repealed, he replied, that when the Colonies had come to an unconditioned submission, Parliament would consider what was fit to be done.

The Ministry are now in pretty good spirits, on account of what they conceive to be a division among yourselves in favour of Government, both in New-York and New-England. We think that, like drowning men, they are catching at every straw. Such, however, we hope their present expectations will prove.

A friend of mine saw a Letter just received from Lord Percy, in which he expresses his apprehensions of an attack being made upon the Troops at Boston, before any reinforcement can arrive, as the people in the Province are provided with a competent train of Artillery; so that all their servants have not the same assurance of success with themselves. But, indeed, it is impossible that the Ministry should really think themselves so secure as they pretend to be; and it is even thought by many that Lord North, when he moved for the late Resolution, really meant to have advanced some steps towards a solid reconciliation, had it not been for what is called the Bedford party in the Cabinet. Instead of this, the terms that are now proposed amount to nothing but an insult upon your common sense and spirit, and, I doubt not, will be resented accordingly.

ESSEX COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a Committee held for the County of Essex, in the Town of Tappahannock, in Virginia, on Thursday, the 2d of March, 1775, by special summons from the Chairman.

The Committee having been informed that Captain Joseph Richardson, master of the Brigantine Muir, since the first day of February last, had imported from the Island of Antigua, in the said Brigantine Muir, four pieces of British Osnaburghs, and three pieces of Irish Linen, some of which he had sold since his arrival; and the said Richardson having appeared before the Committee, agreeably to a previous summons for that purpose, on examination, confessed that upwards of two years ago he had imported into this Colony a quantity of British Osnaburghs from London, which he found himself unable to dispose of here, and therefore that he had carried some of it to Antigua, and left it there to be sold; and having found, upon his last voyage to that Island, that the same had not been sold, he brought it back again to this Colony, where he arrived since the first of February last, and sold one piece of it to one Thomas Wood, and that he has the residue by him. And having also acknowledged that he had imported at the same time three pieces of Irish Linen for the use of his family, and the same having been confirmed by the oath of William Moore, mate of the said Brigantine, the Committee having taken the matter under consideration, and having found that the said Richardson was unacquainted with the Continental Association, and that he had no intention of violating the same, or any part thereof, but that he was willing to accede thereto, and actually did sign the same, upon the first opportunity of doing so, are of opinion that the said Richardson deserves no censure for his conduct; but that the said Osnaburghs and Irish Linen, being prohibited by the Association, be re-exported to the said Island of Antigua, which the said Richardson declared himself willing to do. And it is ordered that Archibald Ritchie and John Brockenbrough do procure from the said Thomas Wood the piece of Osnaburghs by him purchased, and see that the said Richardson carry the same, as well as the other before-mentioned Linen, with him to Antigua, upon his next voyage.

The Committee having determined to encourage Arts and Manufactures within this Colony, as far as it is in their power, do agree and oblige themselves to pay Fifty Pounds, current money, to any person or persons who shall first produce to the Committee five hundred pair of Stockings, men's and women's, manufactured in this County; a third of which to be reasonably worth One Shilling Sterling a pair; a third to be reasonably worth Two Shillings Sterling a pair; and the other third to be reasonably worth Three Shillings Sterling a pair; of all which, he or they must give this County the refusal, and that the County will give for the same seventy-five per cent. on the above prices. And that the Committee will give the best encouragement to worsted combers.

By order of the Committee,
J. POWER, Clerk.

Remarks on the late manœuvres in AMERICA, by a real friend to his King and Country, and an AMERICAN.

New-York, March 2, 1775.

Nothing has surprised people more than the Virginians and Marylanders joining with so much warmth with the New-England Republicans in their opposition to the ancient Constitution, which has been the glory of an Englishman in every part of the world; as there are certainly no Nations under the Heavens more opposite to each other, than the inhabitants of these Colonies: it would be very difficult to account for it on the principles of religion or sound policy, had not the Virginians plainly discovered their indifference to both—so highly revered by their illustrious ancestors—by an act as tyrannical as it is unjust, calculated to serve private views, to distress thousands, and to sap all the foundations of honesty and morality, by destroying that confidence which is the support of our trade, without which every industrious man is deprived of his just demands. Can any thing more plainly discover the motives of their opposition than their having shut up all the Courts of Justice, by which they fraudulently deprive the honest merchant of his due, who generously administered to their wants and supplied their luxury; and return, with the blackest ingratitude, evil for good. Yet this is a notorious truth. Sallust, in enumerating the reasons that induced so many of the first families in Rome to join in Cataline's conspiracy to overturn the ancient Constitution of their Country, very naturally accounts for this conduct when he ascribes it to their desperate circumstances; involved in debt, slaves to luxury, and ruined by dissipation of every kind, they had no resource, no prospect for redemption, but what depended on the success of an impious civil war; through the horrors and calamities of which they were willing to wade, that they might avail themselves of their Country's distress, and find means to gratify their pride and unbounded lust; for this end every means was attempted, every virtue ridiculed, every friend to Government, and every lover of his country, branded with the most ignominious names, and held up as traitors, whom it would be glorious in their opinions to extirpate.

ADDRESS TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK

New-York, March 2, 1775.

The most authentick accounts have been received from Great Britain, that a large sum of money has been issued from the Treasury to the Minister of State, for secret services in America. The publick is extremely interested in the consequences of this dark manœuvre, and therefore every indication of corruption should be attended to, every order in favour of passive obedience noticed, and the authors of every measure tending to break the union and harmony of the Colonies, held up to publick view, and exposed to general indignation and contempt.

The application of publick moneys for secret services, has ever been considered as dangerous to the rights of a free people, especially in times of profound peace, when there is no necessity that spies should be maintained, or royal whores and favourites bribed. Such an attack upon us is, of all others, the most alarming. It is like destroying us by poison—it places us in dangers from false brethren, and converts those we esteemed our friends into insidious enemies—it teaches them to speak peace, when they mean destruction; and, under the specious pretence of supporting Government, to declare war against the Constitution.

History affords instances of men in every age, who have preferred the enjoyment of wealth, to the possession of a good conscience, and who have committed the most infamous actions to obtain the appellation of honourable, for themselves or families.

Prudence tells us, that what has happened in other Countries, and in other ages, may happen in our own. It certainly is wise, therefore, to be watchful of those whom we have made the guardians of our happiness, and take care that they do not turn the opportunities we have given them of doing us good, into occasions of bringing us to ruin and disgrace.

The world has long had reason to think that the dependants on the favour of a court, are not fit objects for the confidence of the people. It is difficult to serve two masters. Men in such circumstances frequently cleave to their interest, and reject the duty they owe their constituents.

It appears to me very extraordinary, that the people of this Colony in general, should consider a Congress as a necessary expedient in these perilous times, that the letters of the Committee of Correspondence appointed by the Assembly, should speak the same language, and that some of the members of that body should preside at the choice of the Delegates, and yet, that sundry individuals (who have heretofore been lights to the blind) should now take so much pains to decry the measure and prevent its influence. The inconsistency is obvious, and, I fear, nothing but a golden key can open the mystery.

Providence, R. I., March 4, 1775.

On Thursday last, the 2d instant, about twelve o'clock at noon, the Town Crier gave the following notice through the Town:—"At five o'clock, this afternoon, a quantity of India Tea will be burnt in the market-place. All true friends of their Country, lovers of Freedom, and haters of shackles and hand-cuffs, are hereby invited to testify their good disposition, by bringing in and casting into the fire, a needless herb, which for a long time hath been highly detrimental to our liberty, interest, and health."

About five o'clock, in the afternoon, a great number of inhabitants assembled at the place, when there was brought in about three hundred pounds weight of Tea, by the firm contenders for the true interest of America. A large fire was kindled, and the Tea cast into it. A tar barrel, Lord North's speech, Rivington's and Mills's and Hicks's newspapers, and divers other ingredients, were also added. There appeared great cheerfulness in committing to destruction so pernicious an article; many worthy women, from a conviction of the evil tendency of continuing the habit of Tea drinking, made free-will offerings of their respective stocks of the hurtful trash. On this occasion the bells were tolled, but it is referred to the learned whether tolling or ringing would have been most proper. Whilst the Tea was burning, a spirited Son of Liberty went along the streets with his brush and lampblack, and obliterated or unpainted the word TEA on the shop signs.

SAMUEL ADAMS TO A GENTLEMAN IN VIRGINIA.

Boston, March 2, 1775.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th of December last, to Mr. Cushing and others, by Captain Tompkins, of the Schooner Dunmore, in which were brought several valuable donations from our friends in Virginia, to the sufferers in this Town by the Port-Bill, was communicated to the Committee appointed to receive such donations, and by their direction I am to acquaint you that they cheerfully consented at your request, that the Schooner should be discharged at Salem, thinking themselves under obligation to promote her despatch, more especially as there was unexpected delay in her loading; and you have very generously declined receiving demurrage. We have repeatedly had abundant evidence of the firmness of our brethren of Virginia, in the American cause; have reason to confide in them that they will struggle hard for the prize now contending for.

I am desired, by the Committee, to acquaint you that a Ship has lately sailed from this place, bound to James River, in Virginia; the Master's name Crowel Hatch. When he was building his Ship, a proposal was made to him by some of the Committee, to employ the tradesmen of this Town, for which he should receive a recompense by a discount or five per cent. on their several bills; but he declined to accept of the proposal. This you are sensible, would have been the means of his employing our sufferers at their usual rates, and at the same time, as cheap to him as if he had got his Vessel built by more ordinary workmen, from the country. There is also another circumstance which I must relate to you. Captain Hatch proposed that the Committee should employ our Smiths in making Anchors for his Vessel, at a price by which they could get nothing but their labour for their pains, because he could purchase cast Anchors, imported here for the same price, which was refused. At this he was very angry, and (perhaps in gust of passion) declared, in the hearing of several persons of credit, that he was used ill; threatening that "he would stop all the donations he could, and that no more should come from the place where he was going to," meaning Virginia. These facts the Committee thought necessary to communicate to you, and to beg the favour of you to use your influence, that Captain Hatch may not have it in his power (if he should be disposed) to traduce the Committee, and injure the sufferers in this Town, for whose relief our friends in Virginia have so generously contributed.

I am, in the name of the Committee, sir, your obliged friend, and humble servant,
SAMUEL ADAMS.

Boston, Massachusetts, March 2, 1775.

His Excellency General Gage, in his answer to the Address of the Provincial Congress, in October last, was pleased to represent, as an instance of his lenity and forbearance, "that, notwithstanding the enmity shown the King's Troops, by withholding from them almost every necessary for their preservation, they have not yet discovered the resentment which might justly be expected to arise from such hostile treatment."

A second Provincial Congress has lately resolved, "That no person or persons ought to sell or dispose of any Straw which he or they may have on hand, except to the inhabitants of this Province, for their own private use, or the use of said Province."

Such a militation of sentiments between the Commander-in-chief and the Representatives of the people, must surely arise, from the different conceptions they have respectively formed of the end and design of the Troops being sent here: the General, that they were ordered here to strengthen the hands of Government, to preserve order, restore peace, and prevent confusion; that they are, therefore, to be considered as friends, and ought to be treated accordingly: the Congress, that they are sent to dragoon the good people of this Colony, and successively those of every other Colony upon the Continent, into a slavish submission to British Legislation; which, if it could be effected, must end in their ruin and destruction; that they are, therefore, to be considered as inveterate enemies; and that the pursuit of every measure, whereby to defeat their purposes, is strictly justifiable.

Straw is doubtless as necessary to make a Soldier's Tent comfortable, as a Mattress is to make an Officer's Tent so; and both would be alike withheld if they were equally in our power. From the Soldier, because he waits only for the word of command to cut our throats, and spread desolation as far and wide as his balls and bayonet, and the strength of his arm will enable him to extend it. From the Officer, because being better bred, his mind ought to be impressed with a due sense of the natural and civil rights of mankind; yet, nevertheless, can so steel his heart to the dictates of his conscience and the feelings of humanity, as wantonly to imbrue his hands in the blood of his innocent fellow-subjects, in obedience to the mandate of a petty Ministerial tyrant!—For I shall never be persuaded to believe, that the best of Kings, my most Gracious Sovereign, who, so early in life, is able to count a Royal dozen, can be so lost to the tender feeling of a parent, as coming to the knowledge of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, that he would not, with the highest indignation, spurn from his presence into everlasting banishment, the wretch who would dare to suggest, under any pretence whatever, the horrid thoughts of shedding the blood of his innocent American subjects; who, notwithstanding all they have suffered from delegated power, are still earnestly desirous to be esteemed his children; and could the malevolent tongue of slander and defamation be silenced, would soon become the objects of his Royal patronage: for they never have forfeited it, unless a forfeiture can be incurred by refusing to become subject to their fellow-subjects in power; or to any other laws but those to which they or their Representatives have given their consent; and their firm attachment to that Constitution of Government under which they, or their forefathers, have lived peaceably and happily for more than a century past. I repeat it, therefore, if blood is to be shed, it will be at the mandate of a petty Ministerial tyrant!

The officer who stoops to execute the hangman's office, rather than lose his commission, must and will be viewed in a most infamous light; whilst the soldier is beheld with an eye of pity and compassion, because the consequence of his disobedience is death without mercy. Neither straw, therefore, nor any other convenience that can render a soldier's life comfortable, is withheld from him upon any other principle than that of self-preservation.

If the General requires proof of the certainty of what is here advanced, let him give a regular discharge to all the soldiers under his command, and at the hazard of my head, I will give him incontestable security, that not one of them who is bred to labour, and is willing to work for an honest livelihood, but his industry shall immediately be so conducted, as to gain him from eighteen pence to three shillings sterling, for every faithful day's work he shall perform. For those of them that are honest, industrious manufacturers, convenient room and rough materials shall be provided for them to manufacture; and for those who are bred to husbandry, and the cultivation of lands, they shall become freeholders—sufficient land shall be allotted to them—they shall be assisted to build their houses, and supplied with necessaries to begin their new Plantations. For all these, and more than these benefits, they shall have security, not from one Province only, but the whole Continent.

Although, therefore, their profession is war and bloodshed, must they not shudder at the horrid thought of butchering the lives, and destroying the substance of those who never willingly injured them; but, on the contrary, would rejoice to see their circumstances as comfortable and happy as the friendly offices of their fellow-subjects, and their own industry and economy can make them. For we have land enough, and, therefore, room enough for a million of them.*

Let not then the community be charged with "shewing enmity to the King's Troops." Let not their "treatment" of them be stigmatized as "hostile." It arises from the "power of necessity, a solicitor that will not be denied; and, therefore, ought not to be resented.

It is difficult to conceive how the General, when he talked of resenting the hostile treatment of the King's Troops since their arrival here, could avoid reflecting that the complaints might, and ought to be retorted an hundred fold.

* Cannot the wisdom of the Continent devise motives sufficient to conciliate the friendship of the Officers to the dictates of humanity, and convince them that they ought, for their own sakes, to become the defenders, and not the destroyers of Civil and Religious Liberty; since the welfare and prosperity of every well regulated society can rest securely upon no other foundation.

Have not the inhabitants of this Continent, for years past, been every day defrauded (under colour of laws called British Statutes) of money, which has been shamefully lavished upon some of the most worthless characters? And does it not amount almost to a demonstration, that the baneful measure was adopted, not to lessen the national debt, as has been pretended, but with a premeditated design to plunder one part of the community, to bribe the other, and, by spreading general corruption, to establish universal slavery?

Have not the streets of our Capital been stained with the blood of its innocent inhabitants unnecessarily, and therefore wantonly shed by merciless military murderers? Are not our liberties abridged and our Constitution subverted to gratify the avarice and ambition of a few infamously distinguished parricides, who are willing, and by their conduct seem desirous to see their native country ruined, provided they may be permitted to riot in the spoils of it?

Does the English language afford words expressive of one half the hostile treatment—the cruel and unparalleled injuries, this Colony has suffered within these few years past, from the Parent State?

Is not our capital invaded by sea and land?—Are not the lives and property of its inhabitants at the mercy of Military and Naval Commanders?—Are not thousands of innocent persons deprived of the means of subsistence, by the annihilation of our Commerce? Must not many of them have inevitably perished with hunger, cold, and famine, had not their charitable brethren, throughout the Continent, come in aid of them?

Have we not been repeatedly threatened with an army of Canadian and Indian Savages to come, as soon as the season will permit, and invade our frontier settlements, to massacre the innocent inhabitants, and carry their children into captivity. Upon the arrival of every Vessel from Europe, are we not alarmed with the news of more Ships-of-war, and Transports with more Troops that are to be here in the Spring; when an open rupture is generally expected?

Has not an unmitred, unprincipled, would-be Bishop of New-York, in a pamphlet, under the specious title of "A Friendly Address," but with all the rancour and malice of an infernal fiend, threatened to let loose the dogs of war, like so many hell-hounds, to devour us? But let him beware lest the fate of Actaon should be verified in his own person.

Britons and Americans: Suffer me, for a moment, to arrest your attention; are not the facts above recited, not only true, but attended with innumerable circumstances of aggravation? Is not the provocation arising from them in a ratio of a million to one, compared with the provocation arising from the pretended hostile treatment of the King's Troops.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

NO. V.

Boston, March 2, 1775.

My Friends and Countrymen:

The question which we have been considering is, whether we are not so far independent of the British Empire, as to have the exclusive right of legislation inherently and irrefragably in ourselves, except in the instance of regulating Trade. It would give me pain to dwell so long upon a subject so generally understood in its nature, importance, and consequences, were it not to show to what cob-web reasonings the present scheme of Colony administration has driven its votaries; what latitudinarians they have become, in order to execute that which, in better times, the proudest Minister that Britain ever saw would have been too undaring to have projected.

The right is so clear as to almost elude the force of argumentation—so obvious, as in spite of opposing efforts, to command conviction, and to rank high towards the scale of intuitions—so stale, as to be determined from the first commencement of that relation of things out of which it grew—so indisputable, as to be presumed, and practised upon for about a century and a half, excepting in a very few instances of singular obliquity, by Kings, Lords, and Commons, by Governours, Counsellors, and Representatives—Parliaments, and Assemblies—Britons and Americans.—So confirmed as to have in its favour a whole torrent of histories, records, motives, principles, and proceedings, and, what is more, common sense and fixed habits, so importantly sacred, that no bold venal Parliament—no daring mercenary intriguing Minister, excepting as above, have ever ventured directly to encounter it. Ambition, avarice, venality, corruption, faction, and tyranny have all covered it.—Policy, law, ingenuity, and equity have found it unwieldy, and joined in ample subscriptions to its truth and justice.—How clear, how plain, must a right be, attended with such circumstances?—How cogent, how convincing the reasons which produced them?—It has passed through, almost unsuspected and unobscured, the storms of tyranny and the fogs of faction, from James the First to a recent date—to the fertile exertions of some modern geniuses, who, by an archangel acuteness, have attempted to reverse the tables of eternal truth, to confound the established course of nature, and, by the awful splendour of an omnipotent Court, to extinguish the candle of human intelligence. Oh unheard of lust of power! Quid non mortalia pectora cogis auri sacra fames?

We have considered the principles, and weighed the motives that possessed the breasts of our British ancestors, and induced to their emigration hence. We have followed them down through their material walks, until their reception of Letters Patent, forming them into a particular corporate body. We have examined the evidence on the face of those Letters, in favour of a Parliamentary independence. It remains that we inquire whether the same sentiment prevailed under the enjoyment of those Letters Patent, or Charters, that preceded, and was concomitant with their reception.

King Charles the First was the ever memorable Prince from whom we received our first Charter. Soon after the restoration of his very pitiful son, Charles the Second, the history of the Massachusetts-Bay informs us—That the conduct of our Government respecting its rights, in an instance then under consideration, as well as in the then some former instances, might be well accounted for, upon the sentiments of some persons of influence then amongst them. The sentiments which this historian says our Assemblies then adopted, and were governed by in a number of instances, were the following, viz: That birth is no necessary cause of subjection;—that the subjects of any Prince or State had a natural right to remove to any other quarter of the world, and that upon their removal, their subjection determined and ceased;—that the Country to which they themselves had removed, was claimed and possessed by independent Princes, whose right to the sovereignty and lordship thereof had been acknowledged by the Kings of England; that they therefore had actually purchased, for valuable consideration, not only the soil, but the dominion, the lordship and sovereignty, of those Princes; and that they had also received a Charter of incorporation from the King, containing a mutual compact, from whence arose a new kind of subjection, to which they were held, and from which they would never depart; that this was what was called a voluntary civil subjection, arising merely from compact; and from thence it followed that whatsoever could be brought into question relative to their subjection, must be determined by their Charter. And that they were to be governed by Laws made by themselves, and by Officers elected by themselves, &c. These were the practical political principles of our Government in an instance of public conduct, about five and thirty years after the granting of our first Charter, when the Patentees themselves were mostly upon the stage, and must be supposed to understand its tenour and meaning. There were instances of an earlier date, says the same historian, where these principles were practised upon by Government. A very ample testimony of the sense of our ancestors: and which shows that the present system of popular politics is not the creature of a modern patriot brain, that it was embraced from the beginning, and is as old as the Constitution—that it grew up with it, and has been its constant companion.

In the same arbitrary reign, several Acts of Trade and Navigation respecting the Colonies passed the British Parliament, and the above historian informs us, that our Assembly had a difficulty in conforming to them, the reason for which, assigned in a Letter to their Agents then in England, was, that “they apprehend them to be an invasion of the rights, liberties, and properties of the subjects of his Majesty in the Colony, they not being represented in Parliament, and according to the usual sayings of the learned in the Law, the Laws of England were bounded within the four Seas, and did not reach America.” And in fact, as they were not then in a capacity to dispute the point, and vindicate their injured rights by opposing their operation, they made provision by a Law of their own, that they should be observed, and operate by force derived from their own acts, which would have been absurd had they admitted the supreme authority of Parliament.

Edward Randolph, who was a busy instrument in the hands of Government, and deeply interested in Colony affairs, in 1676, represents to the Lords of His Majesty’s Most Honourable Privy Council, appointed a Committee for Trade and Plantations—“That no Law is in force or esteem here, but such as are made by the General Court, and therefore it is accounted a breach of their privileges, and a betraying of the liberties of their Commonwealth, to urge the observations of the Laws of England.”

And further, that “there was no notice taken of the Act of Navigation, Plantation, or any other Laws made in England for the regulation of Trade;” that—“the Government would make the world believe they are a free State, and do act in all matters accordingly; that the Magistrates ever reserve to themselves a power to alter any Law not agreeing with the absolute authority of their Government, acknowledging no superior;” and that “the Governor had declared to him, that the Laws of Parliament obligeth them in nothing but what consists with the interests of the Colony, and that the Legislative power and authority is and abides with the Colony solely.” This same Randolph, in a Letter to the Bishop of London, wherein he urges for a quo warranto against their Charter, says, that “independence in Government is claimed and daily practised.” Vide The publication of Papers by the late Governour Hutchinson. We have adduced a continued series of facts from an indisputable authority in this case, which proves beyond a doubt the sense that one of the parties had of our first Charter, almost from its first commencement to its final dissolution. Instances might be multiplied, but they are unnecessary to those who have not their minds steeled against the impressions of truth.—There are some, like the adder, whose deaf ear the thunder from Sinai would not penetrate—these must abide the consequences of their obstinacy, and grope in the dark at noon-day, until their feet stumble on the black mountains, clanking with chains and with fetters.

The Agents who were unsuccessfully employed by this Province to solicit at the Court of King William the restoration of our first Charter, and who, it must be presumed, well understood the second, being present and consulted upon framing of it upon its tenor and operation, gave as a reason for their acceptance:—“Our General Courts having, with the King’s approbation, as much power in New-England as the King and Parliament have in England; they have all English privileges, and can be touched by no law, and by no tax, but of their own making.”—Vide History of New-England.

Upon the arrival of our present Charter, in 1692, as appears by the History of this Government, “The first Act of our Assembly was a sort of Magna Charta, asserting and setting forth as a general privilege, ‘That no aid, tax, tallage, assessment, custom, loan, benevolence, or imposition whatever, shall be laid, imposed, or levied on any of their Majesties’ subjects, or their estates, on any pretence whatever, but by the Act and consent of the Governor, Council, and Representatives of the people assembled in General Court.’” The above are a few, out of the many instances that might be adduced, where the sense of our ancestors, in a continued and uniform succession of events, is clear, full, and to the point. Could these, and similar instances, have escaped the extensive reading of the fair, of the impartial, and modest Massachusettsensis? Especially as they are related by his favourite author, “his setting Sun?” Could he have read them, and yet, consistent with that tremendous regard to truth and rigid impartiality which he every where superabundantly professes, with serious solemnity declare, that "the denial of our being subject to the authority of the British Parliament is new. And that it is beyond a doubt, that it was the sense, both of the Parent State and our ancestors, that they were to remain subject to Parliament?"—And, "that if a person had, some fifteen years ago, undertaken to prove that the Colonies were annexed to the Realm, were a part of the British Empire or Dominion, and, as such, subject to the authority of the British Parliament, he would have acted as ridiculous a part as to have undertaken to prove a self-evident proposition.—And had any person denied it, he would have been called a fool, or madman." Pause, my friends.

You may learn from this instance, the great facility of bare assertions without proof, as well as the persuasive air and graceful talent at making them—if misrepresentations can be graceful.

If the apprehension of the King, who was the other party to our Charter, and the sense of the Nation, at the time it was granted, coincided with the sentiments of our predecessors, it must exclude all doubt respecting our subjection; every quibbling mouth must be stopped from the irresistible conviction of the heart—and every honest man become an advocate for our exemption from the supreme authority of the British Parliament. To this, my countrymen, permit me to ask your close and candid attention.

The Colonies in general are in the same predicament. The independence of one will prove the independence of all.* It may not be altogether impertinent to take a general survey of the doctrines and principles that formed the temper of the times in the reign of Charles the First. The ideas of British Government were founded upon the feudal system of policy, introduced by our Saxon auxiliaries, who, after subduing the Kingdom, divided the land among individuals in proportion to their rank and degree; and every man who by this division became a Freeholder, was then a Member of their Witten Gemote, or Parliament. This feudal polity was universally received, improved, and established in England, by the arbitrary will of the Norman Conqueror and his powerful Barons. In consequence of which it became a fundamental maxim and necessary principle in the English Constitution, "that the King was the universal Lord and original proprietor of all the lands in his Kingdom; and that no man doth, or can possess any part of it, but what was mediately or immediately derived as a gift from him, to be held upon feudal services." This scheme of policy, as it respected the King's prerogatives, continued down until the Statutes of the 12th Charles II., Cap. 24, by which all its branches were lopped off at one blow, and in the reign of William the Third, of glorious memory, by the Revolution principles, was torn up root and trunk, and the whole tables of power and property reversed. The policy and principles of their Witten Gemote, or Parliament, which contained the life and soul of the English Constitution, survived unimpaired this general wreck of preposterous prerogatives. The Nation viewed the power of Parliament as only extending to those assembled therein personally or by Representatives, and assenting to Laws so made. They must have considered, to be consistent with themselves, an extension of the authority of this Assembly to those who have no voice, connection, or influence therein, as unnatural, unjust, and repugnant to the first principles and policy of their Constitution. Charles the First, taught by the examples of his predecessors, and confirmed in his error by his Court sycophants, attempted to govern the Nation by the terrors of Royalty, and the absurd doctrine of a Divine, indefeasible right. In the reign of his father, James the First, the Judges of England determined that the King had a right to levy taxes, called tonnage and poundage, without the consent of Parliament. Charles, like an absolute monarch, governed the Nation eleven years without his Commons. For a long time he had exacted tonnage, poundage, ship-money impositions, with other arbitrary taxes, and exercised the right of selling monopolies, requiring benevolences, loans, &c., against the repeated remonstrances of the Nation. The claiming of these rights, and contending for these prerogatives, was what finally cost him his Crown, and that head which was unworthy to wear it. Ship-money was the tax unauthorized by Parliament, in which the famous Hampden stood forth as a champion for the people. The cause was argued in the Court of Exchequer, before all the Judges of England. Hampden was cast—the Nation roused—and the struggle for Liberty soon began.

Can any one suppose, without doing violence to common sense, that a King, contending for such a plenitude of power, in which he was supported by the examples of his predecessors, and the solemn adjudication of his Judges; possessing such principles, of which he was so tenacious as to seal them with his own blood and the blood of his favourites, meant to imply, in a Charter given to our ancestors, where he grants and yields to them and their successors, that they and every one of them shall be free and quit from all taxes, subsidies, and customs in New-England, for the space of seven years, and from all taxes and impositions for the space of twenty-one years, upon all Goods and Merchandise, at any time or times hereafter, either upon importation thither, or exportation from thence, &c.—I say meant to imply that after the expiration of those terms, they should be liable to impositions and taxes from Parliament, and not from himself, (as he considered in some cases his subjects in England,) independent of Parliament, or rather, that during these terms he would not himself require us to grant him any subsidies, aids, &c. Can any person imagine this? Was Massachusettsensis serious when he said it? Thus we have an argument, a priori, the granting of our first Charter, of the sense of the grantor, as we had with respect to our ancestors.

I am not yet done with this clause, which, we are told with an air of merriment, is rather an unfavourable circumstance for those who call the three-penny duty on Tea unconstitutional. If the King has considered this Colony as a part of the British Empire, and subject to the authority of Parliament, would he, could he by his own authority, have exempted it from taxes for seven or twenty years? If he could grant to one part of the British Empire to be free and quit from taxes, for the same reason he might to any and every part, and so lay the whole expense of Government upon a few individuals. If he could do this for seven or twenty years, for the same reason he might for seventy or seventy times seventy. This proves to demonstration, either that Charles the First apprehended, however the fact might be, that this Colony was not a part of the British Empire, or if it was, that it was not within the jurisdiction of Parliament. He undoubtedly viewed us as holding our lands of him as Lord paramount, according to the fictitious doctrine of the feudal system, and the Parliament strangers to the transaction.

If it should be said, although this clause does not imply the right in Parliament, yet it proves a right in the King to tax us, and we had as good be under the arbitrary power of the former, as subject to the will or caprice of the latter; we answer, that the present question is not what is best, but what is in reality the fact—not concerning the power of the King, but the right of Parliament. However, it is infinitely better to have but one tyrant than a million. We should have no objection to the King's taxing us by our own Assemblies. But these matters we will consider when we come to them; at present they are nothing to the purpose.

"In 1621, when the Commons proposed a bill to James the First, for the free liberty of fishing and fishing voyages, to be made and performed on the sea-coasts and places of Newfoundland, Virginia, and New-England, and other Countries, and parts of America," the Secretary of State was sent by His Majesty with the following declaration to the House of Commons, viz: "America is not annexed to the Realm, nor within the jurisdiction of Parliament; you have, therefore, no right to interfere;" and for this reason the bill was crushed. In like manner, when a bill respecting America was offered by the two Houses of Parliament to King Charles the First, (the very Prince who granted our Charter,) for his Royal assent, he refused it, giving as a reason, "that the Colonies were without the Realm and jurisdiction of Parliament." This needs no comment.

* By independence is not meant any thing inconsistent with the strictest allegiance or subjection to our gracious Sovereign, who glories in being born a Briton—the brightest gem in whose crown is to rule in the hearts, and reign over Freemen; or inconsistent with that authority of Parliament necessary for the regulation of Trade, the rectitude and fitness of which we cheerfully acknowledge.

This same King, in a Commission to the Right Reverend Father in God, the Archbishop of Canterbury, with a number of others, forming them into a Committee for Regulating of Plantations, after premising that divers of his subjects, with their exceeding industry and charge, had deduced great numbers of English subjects into several Colonies, in several places of the world, either altogether desert and unpeopled, or enjoyed by savage and barbarous Nations, gives of his mere grace to the said Commissioned, the following powers of protection and Government, over all English Colonies already planted, or that may in future be planted, viz: Power to make Laws, Ordinances, and Constitutions, concerning the publick state of the said Colonies or individuals.—Power for ordering and directing them in their demeanour towards foreign Princes and their subjects, towards ourselves and our subjects, within any foreign parts, beyond seas, during their voyages upon the seas, or to and from the same.—Power to inflict punishment on all offenders, violators of Constitutions and Ordinances, by imprisonment, restraint, or by loss of life or member.—To remove all Governours and Presidents from their places, and to appoint others in their stead; to punish them by a deprivation of their Provinces, or pecuniary mulcts.—Power to ordain and constitute Judges, Magistrates, Tribunals, Courts of justice, forms of judicature, and manner of process, in all cases, civil or criminal.—Power to alter, revoke, and repeal, all the laws and ordinances, although they may have had our Royal assent; to make new ones, and to new and growing evils and perils, to apply new remedies, in such manner and so often as unto you shall appear necessary and expedient.—And power to hear and determine all complaints against the whole bodies of the Colonies themselves, or any Governour, and to demand delinquent Governours to England, or into any other part, according to your discretion, and also to revoke Charters, if not duly obtained, or if hurtful to our Crown and Royal prerogatives; and to do all other things which shall be necessary for the wholesome government and protection of the said Colonies, and our people therein abiding,” &c. &c. &c.

This was the very Prince who granted our Charter. If the British Parliament had been a Court, in the apprehension of this King, which had cognizance of those matters, would he have erected another, with all the powers that Parliament possess over any part of the British Empire for these regulations? Or, if in apprehension of the British Parliament themselves, would they have acquiesced in, and submitted to the exercise of such powers? Could the most absolute King that ever swayed the British Sceptre, have exercised such powers over any part of the Empire that was within the jurisdiction of Parliament? Has the Grand Monarch more authority? Does not this prove beyond a contradiction, that Charles the First viewed the Colonies as independent of the Empire, and exempt from the authority of Parliament, even in the matter of regulating Trade? Lay your hand upon your breast, and let conscience answer.

In the reign of Charles the Second, several Acts passed abridging Trade with foreign Countries, and imposing duties upon several branches of Commerce between the Colonies, for the express purpose of regulating Trade, as the preamble of the Acts themselves demonstrate, and not to raise a Revenue to the Crown by the authority of Parliament. Virginia considered even these as grievances, and sent Agents to England to remonstrate against taxes and impositions being laid upon the Colony by the authority of Parliament.

This produced a declaration from the King, under the Privy Seal, asserting that “Taxes ought not to be laid upon the inhabitants and proprietors of the Colony but by the common consent of the General Assembly of the Colony.” Accordingly, this Monarch, when a permanent Revenue for the support of Civil Government in Virginia was deemed necessary, did not attempt it by Parliamentary authority, but applied to their General Assembly; and an Act passed under the Great Seal, in which it was enacted, “by the King’s most Excellent Majesty,” by and with the consent of the Colony of Virginia, &c. This Act granted a duty on Tobacco, for the support of Civil Government, which is still paid by virtue of it. Had this Colony been a part of the British Empire, in the apprehension of the King, he could not have become a part of their Legislative authority, in making a law to tax the people there. This would involve the political solecism, with a witness, of imperium in imperio; the King, Lords, and Commons forming the only Legislative power over the British Empire. The Parliament passing this affair over sub silentio, shows sufficiently their apprehension of the matter. In these instances, the sense of Charles the First, of his immediate predecessor, and successor; three successive Kings, privy in the order of events to our emigration, incorporation, and legislation under that incorporation, is as clear, and as full as words or actions could make them.

It is obvious to observe here, that a compact, or an agreement between parties, is only the mutual assent or consent of their minds, touching something which is the subject matter of their contract. The writing upon parchment or paper, is only the evidence of this assent. The agreement is, in the language of the learned, aggregatio mentium in realiqua facta vel facienda.

Make, my friends, a recollective pause. Permit me to ask you the following simple questions: Does not the King of England hold his Crown by compact? Is not the relation that is subsisting between him and his subjects in Great Britain, founded upon compact? Is not the relation that is subsisting between us and Great Britain, founded upon compact? Was not our Charter the evidence of this compact? Was it not the sense of King Charles the First, and of our ancestors, the parties to this Charter, that this Colony was not a part of the Empire, and should not be subject to the authority of Parliament? Is not this sense of the parties, the very essence and vitals of the compact? Were we not, then, upon the reception of our Charter, independent of the Supreme power of the Parent State? And are we not so now, of course, unless some subsequent transaction has united us? If you cannot answer all these questions clearly in the affirmative, I have only this favour to ask, which you cannot reasonably deny me, that you carefully review our past reasonings upon those subjects, with minds open to conviction; reconsider adduced facts fairly in their nature, tendency, and circumstances; and deliberately revolving the whole process in your own breast, judging for yourselves, yield your assent wherever the evidence preponderates.

You will excuse me, my fellow-countrymen, for having carried you into this dry detail of historical matters—matters that are well known—that have been often repeated. My design was to stir up your pure minds, by way of remembrance, when you are told, with an air of seriousness bordering upon devotion, that the Colonies have always been considered by the British Nation, and by the Colonists themselves, until within these few years, as within the jurisdiction of Parliament; a representation as remote from truth, as was ever propagated by the tongue of man, or the pen of prostitution; at a time when Royal Charters, National Faith, and the eternal principle of justice, on which they are founded, are puffed away by a British Senate, as motes and straws floating in the air; and the civil and natural rights of as loyal a people as ever breathed God’s air, or trod his earth, all prostrate at the feet of a Minister of State, are by his  wantonly trampled under foot.

It is unnecessary to say any thing to rouse the Americans. That man must be dead—past reanimating, who is not wide awake. He would discharge a kinder office, was there not danger of our dozing too long, who would administer political opiates, to render us, if possible, insensible of the cruel, barbarous, distressing, horrid oppressions we suffer, and unfeeling to the studied indignities that are offered us; that would enable us to suppress the emotions and ebullitions of an English heart; and by our spirit and firmness, moderation and forbearance, form a paradox which none but Americans can solve; keeping our swords in their scabbards, unless urgent necessity, or self-preservation should call them forth, and sheath them elsewhere.

FROM THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK,
DATED LONDON, MARCH 2, 1775.

The friends of America, on the arrival of the Packet, were much alarmed at a report, that New-York was disaffected to the common cause, and determined to break the Resolves of the Congress, especially that of non-importation; however, we had the pleasure, from the best accounts, to find it otherwise, and that we had little reason to fear the late Resolutions of your Assembly would produce any change in your proceedings. I have now to inform you that, notwithstanding all we could do, the Fishery Bill was yesterday read the third time, and passed the House of Commons, whereby a stop is to be put to all the Fisheries on the first of July, except the Whale Fishery, which is to be continued to the first of November. Every impartial man must, in his heart, condemn a Bill so replete with inhumanity and cruelty; and it will be an everlasting stain on the annals of our pious Sovereign, who, from the best accounts, is the grand promoter of these proceedings. We hope the firmness of your countrymen will evince to all the world your just sense of measures so unjust; and will, in due season, retort them with vengeance, on the guilty heads of the enemies of the British Empire.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON TO A GENTLEMAN
IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED MARCH 3, 1775.

Lest you should not have a true idea of Lord North's design in his motion, I send you the enclosed paper,* which gives a pretty just account of what he said on the occasion, and shows plainly it was planned to divide the Colonies, as well as the friends of Liberty here; in both of which I hope he will be deceived. The Bill against the four New-England Governments, of which you have had a copy, will finally pass the House of Commons this day, and is to take place the first day of July next. You may rely upon it, that in a few days another Bill will be brought into the House of Commons, to prohibit the other Colonies from any commercial intercourse with each other, and to confine their Trade in every individual article to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British West Indies only. My best information tells me, that General Gage is still to continue in Massachusetts-Bay; some of the Troops going from hence and Ireland are for Boston, the others for New-York, where they have, it is said, been requested to be sent, by Delancy and his band of traitors—Cooper, White, Colden, and Watts—to aid them in securing New-York for the Ministry. This, it seems, they have undertaken to do, with Military assistance.

New-York is to be a place of Arms, and Provisions are to be provided there for support of the Army in New-England; at the same time they hope, by having possession of New-York, to prevent any assistance from Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and the other Southern Colonies, going to New-England, of which they are very apprehensive. I hope there is virtue enough in the people of New-York to defeat this scheme, and that they will banish from their society the heads, at least, of the traitors, before the Troops get there to back them, which cannot be sooner than the last of May.

I do not see occasion to advise what is best to be done in the present situation of things, because if you mean to continue Freemen, resistance, even to the last extremity, must be made, and, if with united efforts, it will, in my opinion, assuredly be successful. If you are willing to be Slaves, you are only to submit at once, and wear your chains quietly.

I do not entertain the least doubt of your persevering in so noble a contest, and with proper application the Colony of New-York will, I think, join you heartily.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOUR OF GEORGIA.

Whitehall, March 3, 1775.

SIR: I have received your letters of the 19th and 20th of December, the latter numbered thirty-five, and have laid them before the King. But having nothing in command from His Majesty thereupon, I have only to lament, that His Majesty's subjects in Georgia, who have hitherto, in general, shown so great respect for the Mother Country, and loyalty to the King, should have, at length, manifested a disposition to adopt the sentiments, and follow the ill example, of their neighbours. But I trust that the measures I have taken for your support, and the zeal and alacrity of the King's Officers, and of those gentlemen who you say stand forth in the maintenance of the publick peace, will have the effect to prevent the Sons of Liberty, as they are called, from committing themselves in any act of violence.

I find, by a letter from Mr. Cooper to Mr. Pownall, that the Lords of the Treasury have had under their consideration, the proposition which you transmitted some years ago, in the shape of a Bill for better collecting His Majesty's Quit Rents. They seem, however, to be of opinion, that the provisions of an Act of the Province of North-Carolina for the same purpose, which they have had before them, are better calculated to answer the object in view than the Bill you recommended; and principally, because it enacts, that no Patent, Deed, or Conveyance of Land shall be held valid, unless enrolled in the manner the Act directs; whereas, in your Bill, the enrollment is enforced merely by penalty. I therefore think fit to send you a copy of the North-Carolina Act; that, by comparing the two together, you may be enabled to frame and pass such a law, as shall correspond with the sentiments of that Board.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Sir James Wright, Baronet, Georgia.

FROM THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOURS OF THE SEVERAL COLONIES.

Whitehall, March 3, 1775.

SIR: It is fit that I should acquaint you that the Resolutions of the House of Commons, which accompanies my separate despatch, passed in the Committee by a majority of two hundred and seventy-four to eighty-eight; and was received and agreed to by the House without a division. And, indeed, the great majorities which have appeared in both Houses, upon every question that has been proposed for maintaining the supremacy of Parliament, is such an evidence of the general sense of the Nation upon that subject, as must show how little ground there has been for those assurances which have been artfully held out to the Americans of support here, in the dangerous conduct they have adopted; and convince them that there neither can, nor will be any the least relaxation from those measures which that conduct has made indispensably necessary for reducing the Colonies to the constitutional authority of Parliament. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

His Honour the Lieutenant Governour of South-Carolina.

FROM THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOUR OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Whitehall, March 3, 1775.

SIR: By the mail of the last New-York Packet, I received your despatch of the 30th January, and have laid it before the King; but as my Circular Letter to you of this date, enclosing the Resolution of the House of Commons on the 20th of February, contains such instructions as have been thought fit to be given to His Majesty's Governours in the Colonies, in the present situation of affairs, I have not any particular commands from the King to signify to you thereupon.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Deputy Governour Penn.

FROM THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOURS OF THE COLONIES.

Whitehall, February 22, 1775.

SIR: Enclosed I send you, by the King's command, a Joint Address of both Houses of Parliament to His Majesty, upon a consideration of the Papers which had been communicated to them relative to the state of the American Colonies, together with His Majesty's most gracious answer to the said Address.

I likewise send you a printed copy of a Bill brought into the House of Commons, for Restraining the Trade and Fisheries of the four New-England Governments for a limited time; together with a copy of a Resolution declaratory of the sense of Parliament upon the subject of Taxation, which Resolution was moved in the Committee on Monday last, and carried by a majority of two hundred and seventy-four to eighty-eight.

As these two measures are as yet in the first stages only of consideration, and as the Bill may possibly admit, in its further progress, of some alteration, I shall only say upon them, that I flatter myself that the firm determination of Parliament to preserve the Colonies in a due dependance upon this Kingdom, tempered with the justice and moderation expressed in the last Resolution of the Committee, will have the effect to produce such a conduct on the part of the Colonies as shall lead to a restoration of the publick tranquillity.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania.

FROM THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOURS OF THE COLONIES.

Whitehall, March 3, 1775.

SIR: You will have seen, in the King's Answer to the Joint Address of both Houses of Parliament, on the 7th of February, (which Address and Answer have been already transmitted to you,) how much attention His Majesty was graciously pleased to give to the assurance held out in that Address, of the readiness of Parliament to afford every just and reasonable indulgence to the Colonies, whenever they should make a proper application, on the ground of any real grievance they might have to complain of; and therefore I have the less occasion now to enlarge upon the satisfaction it hath given His Majesty to see that Address followed by the enclosed Resolution of the House of Commons, which, whatever may be the effect of it, (I trust a happy one,) will forever remain an evidence of their justice and moderation, and manifest the temper which has accompanied their deliberations upon that question, which has been the source of so much disquiet to His Majesty's subjects in America, and the pretence of acts of such criminal disorder and disobedience.

His Majesty ardently wishes to see a reconciliation of the unhappy difference which has produced those disorders, through every means by which it may be obtained, without prejudice to the just authority of Parliament, which His Majesty will never suffer to be violated; approves the Resolution of his faithful Commons, and commands me to transmit it to you, not doubting that this happy disposition to comply with every just and reasonable wish of the King's subjects in America, will meet with such a return of duty and affection on their part, as will lead to a happy issue of the present disputes, and to a re-establishment of the publick tranquillity, on those grounds of equity, justice, and moderation, which the Resolution holds forth.

The King has the greater satisfaction in this Resolution, and the greater confidence in the good effects of it, from having seen that, amidst all the intemperance into which a people, jealous of their liberties, have been unfortunately misled, they have nevertheless avowed the justice, the equity, and the propriety of subjects of the same State contributing, according to their abilities and situation, to the Publick Burdens; and I think I am warranted in saying that this Resolution holds no proposition beyond that.

I am unwilling to suppose that any of the King's subjects in the Colonies can have so far forgot the benefits they have received from the Parent State, as not to acknowledge that it is to her support, held forth at the expense of her blood and treasure, that they principally owe that security which hath raised them to their present state of opulence and importance. In this situation, therefore, justice requires that they should, in return, contribute, according to their abilities, to the common defence; and their own welfare and interest demand that their Civil Establishment should be supported with a becoming dignity.

It has been the care, and, I am persuaded, it is the firm determination of Parliament to see that both these ends are answered; and their wisdom and moderation have suggested the propriety of leaving to each Colony to judge of the ways and means of making due provision for these purposes, reserving to themselves a discretionary power of approving or disapproving what shall be offered.

The Resolution neither points out what the Civil Establishment should be, nor demands any specific sum in aid of the Publick Burdens. In both these respects it leaves full scope for that justice and liberality which may be expected from Colonies that, under all their prejudices, have never been wanting in expressions of an affectionate attachment to the Mother Country, and a zealous regard for the welfare of the British Empire; and therefore the King trusts that the provision they will engage to make for the support of Civil Government, will be adequate to the rank and station of every necessary Officer, and that the sum to be given in contribution to the common defence, will be offered on such terms, and proposed in such a way, as to increase or diminish, according to the Publick Burdens of this Kingdom are from time to time augmented or reduced, in so far as those Burdens consist of Taxes and Duties, which are not a security for the National Debt. By such a mode of contribution, the Colonies will have full security that they can never be required to tax themselves, without Parliament's taxing the subjects of this Kingdom in a far greater proportion; and there can be no doubt that any proposition of this nature, made by any of the Colonies, and accompanied with such a state of their facilities and abilities, as may evince the equity of the proposal, will be received with every possible indulgence, provided it be, at the same time, unaccompanied with any declaration, and unmixed with any claims which will make it impossible for the King, consistent with his own dignity, or for Parliament, consistent with their constitutional rights, to receive it. But I will not suppose that any of the Colonies will, after this example of the temper and moderation of Parliament, adopt such a conduct; on the contrary, I will cherish a pleasing hope that the publick peace will be restored, and that the Colonies, forgetting all other trivial and groundless complaint which ill humour hath produced, will enter into the consideration of the Resolution of the House of Commons with that calmness and deliberation which the importance of it demands, and with that good will and inclination to a reconciliation which are due to the candour and justice with which Parliament has taken up this business, and at once declare to the Colonies what will be ultimately expected from them.

I have already said that the King entirely approves the Resolution of the House of Commons, and His Majesty commands me to say, that a compliance therewith by the General Assembly of New-York, [which has already shewn so good a disposition towards a reconciliation with the Mother Country,*] will be most graciously considered by His Majesty, not only as a testimony of their reverence for Parliament, but also as a mark of their duty and attachment to their Sovereign, who has no object nearer to his heart than the peace and prosperity of his subjects in every part of his Dominions. At the same time His Majesty considers himself bound by every tie to exert those means the Constitution has placed in his hands, for preserving that Constitution entire, and to resist with firmness every attempt to violate the rights of Parliament, to distress and obstruct the lawful Commerce of his subjects; and to encourage in the Colonies ideas of independence, inconsistent with their connection with this Kingdom.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Governour of New-York.

Copy of a Resolution of the House of Commons, 27th February, 1775, enclosed by the Earl of DARTMOUTH, in his Circular Letter to the Governours of the Colonies, dated March 3, 1775.

Resolved, That when the Governour, Council and Assembly, or General Court of any of His Majesty's Provinces or Colonies in America, shall propose to make provision according to the condition, circumstances and situation of such Province or Colony, for contributing their proportion to the common defence, (such proportion to be raised under the authority of the General Court or General Assembly of such Province or Colony, and disposable by Parliament,) and shall engage to make provision also for the support of the Civil Government, and the Administration of Justice in such Province or Colony, it will be proper, if such proposal shall be approved by His Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, and for so long as such provision shall be made accordingly, to forbear in respect of such Province or Colony, to levy any Duty, Tax or Assessment, or to impose any further Duty, Tax or Assessment, except only such Duties as it may be expedient to continue to levy, or to impose for the regulation of Commerce; the net produce of the Duties last mentioned to be carried to the account of such Province or Colony respectively

* These words were omitted in the Letters to the other Colonies.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOUR OF NEW-YORK.

Whitehall, March 3, 1775.

SIR: My separate despatch of this day's date, enclosing a Resolution of the House of Commons, may be ostensibly of use in case the General Assembly should think fit to take up the consideration of that Resolution; but it is fit I should observe to you that it is not His Majesty's intention, for very obvious reasons, that you should officially communicate it to them; at the same time as I think it cannot fail to be an object of discussion in the Assembly, I must add that the King considers that the good effect of it will, in a great measure, depend upon your ability and address in a proper explanation of it to those whose situation and connections may enable them to give facility to the measures it points to. And His Majesty has no doubt that you will exert every endeavour to induce such a compliance on the part of the Assembly, as may correspond with His Majesty's ideas of their justice, and his earnest wishes to see a happy restoration of the publick tranquillity.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Lientenant Governour of New-York.

FROM THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOUR OF NEW-YORK.

Whitehall, March 4, 1775.

SIR: The American Packets having been detained a few days beyond the usual time of their sailing, gives me an opportunity of acquainting you, that your despatch of the first of February has been received, and of assuring you that the sentiments of duty to the King, and wishes of a reconciliation with the Mother Country, so fully expressed in the Addresses of the Council and Assembly, in answer to your very prudent and proper Speech to them, have been very graciously received by His Majesty, and have given general satisfaction to all ranks of people in this Kingdom.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Lieutenant Governour Colden.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED MARCH 4, 1775.

The news which the Packet brought us of the conduct of the people of New-York, has filled every heart with joy, and employed every tongue in your praise. Even faction itself admires in sullen silence. Pursue the same line of mild and prudent counsel and conduct, and you will secure the liberties of your Country, and obtain immortal gratitude from the posterity of even your rivals.

I am glad you anticipated Lord North's proposition, as your honour will be so much the higher. Whatever the enemies of both Countries may say, the Resolution which was moved for by Lord North, is founded on the truest policy and benevolence. While it reserves and maintains the just and necessary sovereignty of Parliament, it invites the Colonists to an amicable settlement of the dispute. It draws a strong line between the seditious and honest (the misguided) citizen, and, while it leaves the former to be checked by the sword of justice, leads the latter to obedience, by granting him all the indulgence he could ask with safety to his own happiness. It blends that firmness and benevolence which are always united in the counsels of a prudent Legislature.

Such is the proposed Resolution; which Opposition will, without doubt, outrageously censure and traduce, because it will destroy their sanguine hopes of success, by tending to allay popular discontents, and renew the friendship of Great Britain and her Colonies. They foresee, with all the bitterness of envy, the triumph of their rivals, and sicken at the prospect of that publick tranquillity, over the imaginary destruction of which they smiled with malignant joy.—In the rage of disappointment, they forgot the necessary appearance of consistency, and charge the same Administration with timidity and an ignorant retreat, which they, but yesterday, censured with obstinate perseverance and inflexible severity. The former accusation is as groundless as the latter. Administration pursues the equitable and honourable line between both extremes, equally remote from undistinguishing impetuosity and wavering irresolution. The proposition in question discovers not the faintest colour of a resignation of Parliamentary authority, or sacrifice of its dignity.

The proposals of the Colonies, which it invites, are to be made by their Assemblies. The contested question about the right of taxation is to cease, with respect to such Province or Colony as shall propose to make provision by its Assembly, according to its situation and circumstances, for contributing its proportion to the common defence, and for the support of the Civil Government, and the Administration of Justice within itself.

By this salutary measure, therefore, the necessity and just authority of Parliament will be preserved, and the Americans gratified in their wish of being taxed by their own Representatives. The Legislature will still possess the unalienable power of commanding and employing the strength of the State in the common defence; and the Colonies enjoy the privilege of levying taxes in such modes as are most expedient and agreeable to themselves. While they cheerfully contribute their proportion for the support of their own Civil Establishment, and the general preservation and defence of the Empire, no taxes will be attempted to be levied on them but what are imposed by their own Representatives. When they refuse to fulfil their engagements, and will not assist in bearing the common burdens, Parliament will then only interfere, and exert that power which must necessarily reside in the Supreme Legislature, of obliging all the subjects of the State to co-operate for its preservation and defence.

By this measure, therefore, Parliament will give a new and honourable proof, that its decisions are guided by benevolence and fortitude: that when it sends forth the sword of justice to restrain and punish the factious, it extends also the most reasonable and friendly proposals to invite the good, though deluded citizen, to peace and reconciliation.

CHOWAN COUNTY (NORTH-CAROLINA) COMMITTEE.

March 4, 1775.

The Committee met at the House of Capt. James Sumner, and the gentlemen appointed at a former meeting of Directors, to promote subscriptions for the encouragement of Manufactures, informed the Committee that the sum of Eighty Pounds Sterling was subscribed by the inhabitants of this County for that laudable purpose. The Committee, taking into consideration the manner in which said sum may be applied, so as to redound to the utility of this Province in general, and to this County in particular, resolved, that the sum of Forty Pounds Sterling be paid by the Chairman of the Committee to any person who shall, in eighteen months from the date hereof, first make in this Province, or cause to be therein made, under his direction, five hundred pair of Wool Cards, such as usually cost One Shilling and Three Pence Sterling, in Great Britain; and five hundred pair of good Cotton Cards, such as usually cost Two Shillings and Six Pence Sterling in Great Britain, which the Committee hereby oblige themselves to purchase and pay, ready money, for, at the rate of Two Shillings Sterling for the Wool Cards, and Three Shillings Sterling a pair for the Cotton Cards; and it is expected that the person entitled to such premiums shall furnish them at that price. The quality and price that such Cards usually cost in Great Britain to be submitted to the Committee.

The Committee also offer a premium of Forty Pounds Sterling, to be paid by the Chairman of the Committee, to the person who shall first make for sale, in this Province, two thousand pounds of good Steel, fit for edged tools. The Committee are apprehensive the premiums here offered are too inconsiderable to induce any person to attempt the above branches of business ; but they flatter themselves that the other Counties in this Province, stimulated by the same laudable motives to promote industry, one of the primary sources of virtue and wealth, may join them, in order that the above branches of Manufacture may be effectually carried into execution ; in which case, it is hoped the Committees of such Counties as are desirous to contribute, will correspond with this Committee upon the subject, that the whole Premium offered may appear at once in the papers abroad, in which it is proposed to have it published.

The Committee likewise offer a Premium of Ten Pounds, Proclamation Money, to be paid by their Chairman, to any person who shall, within twelve months from this date, first produce one hundred yards of well fulled Woollen Cloth to the Committee, spun and wove in this County, and fulled in any County within the District of the Superiour Court of Edenton; and a Premium of Ten Pounds, like money, to be paid by the Chairman, to the person who shall, within twelve months from this date, first produce to the Committee one hundred yards of well bleached Linen, such as usually costs Two Shillings Sterling in Great Britain; and the sum of Five Pounds, like money, to any person who shall produce one hundred yards of Linen, next in quality, not of less value than what usually costs One Shilling and Eight Pence Sterling, in Great Britain; and both kinds of Linen to be manufactured in this County; and the quality of them to be submitted to the judgment of the Committee. Signed by order of the Committee,

SAMUEL JONES, Clerk.

Durham, New-Hampshire, March, 4, 1775.

MR. FOWLE: Whereas, some evil-minded and malicious persons have asserted that a number of people in the Town of Durham are about forming themselves into a Company, in order to throw off all obedience to the Militia Officers, and set at defiance the Laws of Government: I desire you to publish the Articles of Inlistment in your next paper, that the publick may judge how little foundation there is for so scandalous a report. The Articles are as follows:

"We, the Subscribers, do hereby agree to form ourselves into a Company, and meet at Durham Falls, on every Monday afternoon, for six months next coming, to acquaint ourselves with the Military Art, and instruct each other in the various manœuvres and evolutions which are necessary for Infantry in time of battle. We also agree to appear each time well furnished with Arms and Ammunition: And at our first meeting, to nominate and appoint the several Officers, who are to preside over us for the first month, and then proceed to appoint others for the next month, always avoiding to re-elect any that have served, until all the others have gone through their tour of duty, as Officers: And at any muster or field-day, we shall hold ourselves obliged to incorporate with the respective Companies to which we belong, and yield all due obedience to the proper Officers of the Militia, appointed by the Captain General; and endeavour to instruct those who are undisciplined in the best manner we are able."

Signed by eighty-two reputable inhabitants.

This is an exact copy of the Articles, which any person that yet remains in doubt may be satisfied of by applying to me and viewing the original, a sight of which may, at any time, be had; and was there nothing more illegal and injurious in a late paper, signed by several persons in this Province, I believe the signers would not take so much pains in keeping it from the publick view. But whatever may be the purport of that, I rejoice in laying the contents of this before the people, that they may judge whether it has the least appearance of an illegal combination, or whether, on the contrary, it does not appear to be a well concerted plan to promote and encourage the Military Art. I flatter myself that even malice itself could not adjudge this to be an unjustifiable measure, or suggest that any part of it looks like treason or rebellion; and I can account for the scandalous report concerning it, in no other way, but by supposing that these defamers expected (according to the custom of this day) to be rewarded for their slander by some posts of honour or profit.

Sir, I am your very humble servant,

JOHN SULLIVAN.

ON MR. SULLIVAN'S LETTER, OF MARCH 4, 1775.

MR. FOWLE: In a publication in your last paper, under the signature of Mr. Sullivan, we have been favoured with a copy of an Engagement entered into by a number of people to meet at Durham Falls, once a week, for the space of six months to come, in order to acquire Military skill, under Officers to be appointed by themselves, monthly.

As this is a matter of publick concern, I shall beg permission, Mr. Printer, through the channel of your paper, to lay some animadversions before the publick upon it, which, I think, it would be unpardonable to neglect.

In the first place, the appointment of all Military Officers, whether for a day, a week, or a month, is the sole right of the King, or of those deriving authority from him, and (to treat the matter in the most moderate terms) it is a very improper step for any body of men to assume that power to themselves, upon any occasion or pretence whatsoever.

The Laws of the Province require the Militia to be drawn forth, to learn the Military exercise, four times a year, and no more. Mr. Sullivan may, probably, tell us that this new-modeled Company does not come under this limitation; yet I presume he will not deny but that the meeting of any part of the Militia—and these people declare themselves to belong to it—any otherwise than the law directs, is, at least, an evasion, if not a direct violation of the law, both which ought to be equally avoided.

The Town of Durham, by having eighty-two of its inhabitants employed one day in a week, (for we cannot suppose they will mind any other business on those days,) for six months, in Military exercises, instead of their husbandry, will sustain a damage of Three Hundred and Twenty-Seven Pounds, lawful money, computing the loss of their labour only at half a dollar a day, for each person. Supposing, now, that all the men in the Province, fit to bear arms, which may be reasonably calculated at fourteen thousand, should catch this Military ardour, as most infections are catching; and according to the tendency of this plan, follow the example of Durham, it would, after Durham fashion, occasion a damage of Fifty-Four Thousand Pounds, lawful money, to the Province. A pretty tax, truly, for a new Country! Whatever reason Mr. Sullivan may have to rejoice in thus leading on the people to their own damage, I am sure the Province would have abundant reason not to rejoice in his rejoicing, but to regret their own folly; and it is well known that many are, at this day, in the like predicament on account of some past transactions amongst us. I hope, therefore, the people will judge for themselves, and avoid incurring a damage to the Province, which, no doubt, the Legislature had in contemplation to prevent, by limiting the times of training the Militia to four days in a year.

Moreover, this extraordinary spirit to acquire the use of Arms, at a juncture when the noise of civil discord begins to roar in our neighbourhood, marks strongly a disposition to employ our Arms against the power and authority we ought to support and defend; every appearance of which should be avoided with the utmost caution and circumspection.

As I wish not, Mr. Printer, to trespass too much on your indulgence, I shall, for the present, only take notice that, though Sullivan plainly discovers the Durham plan to be a child of his own; yet I still hope he will, upon reflection, have candour enough to acknowledge the deformities of his baby, and take it in good part in me, to advise him to abandon the system he hath for some time past been engaged in; a system manifestly tending to bring calamity and distress upon the good people of this once happy Province.

MONITOR.

MR. SULLIVAN'S REPLY TO "MONITOR."

MR. PRINTER: In your paper of the 17th instant, I observed a piece, signed by a person who calls himself Monitor, full of ill-natured reflections upon an Agreement entered into by a number of persons in Durham, to assemble once a week, for the space of six months, to instruct each other in the Military Art. The feeble attempts of this scurrilous writer to display his wit in the former and latter part of his nonsensical piece, can deserve nothing but contempt and ridicule.

His assertion, that a number of persons assembling for the purpose of instructing each other in the art of War, and appointing persons to give the words of command, interferes with the Royal prerogative in the appointment of Officers, and amounts to an evasion, if not a violation, of the Province Laws, fully demonstrates his ignorance, both of the Law and Constitution.

The curious calculation he makes of the loss New-Hampshire must sustain if the same military ardour (which he ignorantly calls an infection) should prevail throughout the Province, merits the ridicule of all mankind.

I am surprised that this curious calculator (while his hand was in) did not inform us of the amazing loss this Government sustains by devoting a seventh part of the time to religious exercises; and endeavour to convince us that, as our clothing costs a large sum, it would be best to go naked.

After which, I should be glad to know from him, if we were to lay down our arms, and make the infamous submission he contends for, how much money we should be able to earn in a day, and how much of our earnings we should be able to keep in our pockets.

I hope the publick will excuse my not giving a more serious and particular answer to the production of a dis-tempered brain, as that might make him wise in his own conceit, and induce this nonsensical scribbler to think himself a person of some consequence.

I shall conclude with reminding him, "that a shoe-maker never ought to go beyond his last."

Yours, JOHN SULLIVAN.

TO THE FREEMEN OF VIRGINIA.

Committee Chamber, Norfolk, March 6, 1775.

Trusting to your sure resentment against the enemies of your Country, we, the Committee, elected by ballot for the Borough of Norfolk, hold up for your just indignation Mr. John Brown, Merchant, of this place. We are fully sensible of the great caution with which publick censure should be inflicted; and, at all times, are heartily disposed to accomplish the great design of the Association by the gentle methods of reason and persuasion. But an unhappy proneness to unmanly equivocation, which has so much distinguished Mr. Brown, and for which he has, in more than one instance, been censured by the voice of the people, added to the present manifest discovery of his secret and most direct attempt to defeat the measures of the Congress, in the case now before us, and of some very unjustifiable steps taken to conceal his disingenuous conduct, hath precluded us from the milder methods we would wish to adopt, and compelled us to give the publick the following narration: On Thursday, the 2d of March, this Committee were informed of the arrival of the Brig Fanny, Captain Watson, with a number of Slaves for Mr. Brown; and, upon inquiry, it appeared that they were shipped from Jamaica as his property, and on his account; that he had taken great pains to conceal their arrival from the knowledge of the Committee; and that the shipper of the Slaves, Mr. Brown's correspondents, and the Captain of the Vessel, were all fully apprized of the Continental prohibition against that article. These circumstances induced a suspicion that Mr. Brown had given orders for the Slaves himself, which he positively denied, asserting that he had expressly forbidden his correspondents to send any, as being contrary to the Association, for the truth of which he appealed to his own letter-book. The Secretary being desired, at the request of Mr. Brown, to attend him to inspect the orders said to have been given, reported that he had had some slight and hasty glances at letters written between the middle of December and beginning of January, and was sorry to say he had seen one directed to Mr. Henderson, and another to Mr. Livingston, both of the date of December, and a third to Messrs. Campbells, of the first of January, all containing positive and particular orders for remittances to be made him in Slaves; at the same time hinting the necessity of secrecy, as it is an article, he writes, he could not avowedly deal in. The Secretary also reported, that he had seen a postscript, written a few days after the determination of this Committee, directing the return of a Slave imported from Antigua, in which postscript Mr. Brown writes his correspondent to send him no more than two Negro lads, as it would be dangerous to sell them here. But his orders to his other correspondents appear to have been so positive that they were complied with, notwithstanding his friend writes him that good Slaves would sell to more advantage in Jamaica than in Virginia. From the whole of this transaction, therefore, we, the Committee for Norfolk Borough, do give it as our unanimous opinion, that the said John Brown has wilfully and perversely violated the Continental Association, to which he had, with his own hand, subscribed obedience; and that agreeable to the Eleventh Article we are bound "forthwith to publish the truth of the case, to the end that all such foes to the rights of British America may be publickly known, and universally contemned, as the enemies of American Liberty, and that every person may henceforth break off all dealings with him."

Extract from the Minutes.

WILLIAM DAVIES, Secretary.

BALTIMORE (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Observation at Baltimore, March 6, 1775, present Forty-two Members:—

Captain William Moat, of the Brig Sally, from Bristol, appeared before the Committee, and reported his cargo on oath, consisting of one hundred tons of British Salt, and twenty-four indented Servants. The Captain further reports that he took in his Salt before the 12th day of December, and on or about that day he fell down the River with his Vessel, to a place called Rowland Ferry, there to take in his Servants; that he continued there until the 23d, and sailed from King-Road the 24th of December.

On motion made by Doctor John Stevenson, to whom Captain Moat's Vessel and Cargo were addressed, that he might have liberty to land the said cargo of Salt, alleging it ought only to be considered as ballast, and was not intended to be prohibited by the Association of the Continental Congress,

The Committee took into consideration the state of the said Brig Sally, Captain William Moat:

Resolved, unanimously, That the Salt imported in said Brig be not landed.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) COMMITTEE.

Cumberland County, New-Jersey, March 6, 1775.

The Committee of the County of Cumberland, in New-Jersey, met at Bridgetown; and after reading the Association of the American Congress, it appeared, by the voluntary declaration of Silas Newcomb, Esquire, a Member of the Committee, that he had contravened the same, and, in open violation of the Third Article of the aforesaid Association, had drank East-India Tea in his family ever since the first day of March instant, and that he is determined to persist in the same practice. After much time spent in vain to convince Mr. Newcomb of his error, it was agreed, that it is the duty of this Committee, agreeable to the Eleventh Article of the above-mentioned compact, to break off all dealings with him, and in this manner publish the truth of the case, that he may be distinguished from the friends of American liberty.

By order of the Committee,

THOMAS EWING, Clerk.

Cumberland County, New-Jersey.

Whereas, Silas Newcomb, Esquire, was, in March last, advertised by the Committee of said County, for a breach of the Association of the Continental Congress, and having since manifested a desire of making a publick acknowledgment for his former misconduct, the Committee accepted of the following recantation, viz:—

"I, the subscriber, do hereby publickly acknowledge my former error, and voluntarily confess myself to blame for obstinately refusing to submit to a majority of the Committee; and I do hereby ask pardon of the Members of the Committee for the abuses offered them, and promise, for the future, to regulate my conduct agreeable to the aforesaid Association, and a majority of said Committee. Witness my hand, the 11th day of May, 1775.

“SILAS NEWCOMB.”

Published by order of the Committee,
THOMAS EWING, Clerk.

FREEHOLD (MONMOUTH COUNTY, NEW-JERSEY) COMMITTEE.

Freehold, March 6, 1775.

Although the Committee of Observation and Inspection for the Township of Freehold, in the County of Monmouth, New-Jersey, was constituted early in December last, and the members have stately and assiduously attended to the business assigned them ever since, yet they have hitherto deferred the publication of their institution, in hopes of the general concurrence of the other Townships in the choice of a new County Committee, when one publication might have served for the whole; but finding some of them have hitherto declined to comply with the recommendation of the General Congress in that respect, and not knowing whether they intend it at all, they judge it highly expedient to transmit the following account to the Press, lest their brethren in distant parts of the Colony should think the County of Monmouth altogether inactive at the present important crisis.

“In pursuance of the recommendation of the Grand Continental Congress, and for the preservation and support of American freedom, a respectable body of the Freeholders, inhabitants of the Township of Freehold, met at Monmouth Court-House, on Saturday, December 10th, 1774, and unanimously elected the following gentlemen to serve as a Committee of Observation and Inspection for the said Town, viz: John Anderson, Esquire, Captain John Covenhoven, Messrs. Peter Forman, Hendrick Smock, Asher Holmes, David Forman, and John Forman, Doctor Nathaniel Scudder, and Doctor Thomas Henderson, who were instructed by their constituents to endeavour, to the utmost of their knowledge and power, to carry into execution the several important and salutary measures pointed out to them by the American Congress; and, without favour or affection, to make all such diligent inquiry as shall be found conducive to the accomplishment of the great and necessary purposes held up by them to the attention of America.”

At an early meeting of said Committee, a pamphlet, entitled Free Thoughts on the Resolves of the Congress, by A. W. Farmer, was handed in to them, and their opinion of it asked by a number of their constituents then present. Said pamphlet was then read, and, upon mature deliberation, unanimously declared to be a performance of the most pernicious and malignant tendency; replete with the most specious sophistry, but void of any solid or rational argument; calculated to deceive and mislead the unwary, the ignorant, and the credulous; and designed, no doubt, by the detestable author, to damp that noble spirit of union, which he sees prevailing all over the Continent, and, if possible, to sap the foundations of American freedom. The pamphlet was afterwards handed back to the people, who immediately bestowed upon it a suit of tar and turkey-buzzard's feathers; one of the persons concerned in the operation, justly observing that although the feathers were plucked from the most stinking fowl in the creation, he thought they fell far short of being a proper emblem of the author's odiousness to every advocate for true freedom. The same person wished, however, he had the pleasure of fitting him with a suit of the same materials. The pamphlet was then, in its gorgeous attire, nailed up firmly to the pillory-post, there to remain as a monument of the indignation of a free and loyal people against the author and vender of a publication so evidently tending both to subvert the liberties of America, and the Constitution of the British Empire.

At a subsequent meeting of said Committee, it was resolved, unanimously, that, on account of sundry publications in the pamphlet way, by James Rivington, Printer, of New-York, and also a variety of weekly productions in his paper, blended, in general, with the most glaring falsehoods, disorged with the most daring effrontery, and all evidently calculated to disunite the Colonies, and sow the seeds of discord and contention through the whole Continent, they do esteem him a base and malignant enemy to the liberties of this Country, and think he ought justly to be treated as such by all considerate and good men. And they do, for themselves, now publicly declare, (and recommend the same conduct to their constituents,) that they will have no connection with him, the said Rivington, while he continues to retail such dirty, scandalous, and traitorous performances; but hold him in the utmost contempt, as a noxious exotic plant, incapable either of cultivation or improvement in this soil of freedom, and only fit to be transported.

—This Committee did early make application to every other Township in the County, recommending the election of Committees; and they soon had information that those of Upper Freehold, Middletown, and Dover, had chosen theirs, and were resolved to enforce the measures of the Congress.

N. B. A very considerable number of the inhabitants of Freehold have formed themselves into Companies, and chosen Military Instructors, under whose tuition they are making rapid improvement.

Signed by order of the Committee,
JOHN ANDERSON, Chairman.

MAJOR BENJAMIN FLOYD, ETC., TO COMMITTEE AT SMITH-TOWN.

Brookhaven, Suffolk County, New-York, March 6, 1775.

Mr. RIVINGTON: A Committee of Observation for several Districts met on the 23d of February last, in Smithtown, Suffolk County, Long-Island; they should have told the publick that the few from Brookhaven were not of the Committee. Whether any Committee in the County has been chosen, in the manner they speak of, we know not. Brookhaven never was represented; so it has not, it cannot, approve of the Congress. We mean to consider only what concerns us—the fifth and sixth of the Committee Resolves.

Why does this Committee so highly disapprove of the Major and others? Is it because he fulfils his oath to, and exerts his power in defence of, Government? Does his example shame and upbraid them? They assuredly would commend and justify his conduct, were they not enchanted by seditious, independent, republican principles! It is your opinion, that most of the subscribers in Messrs. Gaine and Rivington's writing, were induced, &c. It is our opinion, that your opinion is a mere fiction. Have you heard both sides? Was there neither partiality or prejudice in the way? You may have an opinion that such as oppose you are traitors; this may lead you to proclaim them; this may excite you to imbrue your guilty hands in the blood of the saints! By what law did you form the opinion; what evidence have you to support it? For our part, we condemn the Court, and its arbitrary mandates, that carries its statutes and laws in its bosom. Tell us the law we have transgressed, “the unfair means we used,” and who has used any? We, who carried the Petition, used none; the people needed none, being generally glad of an opportunity to sign it. You must know the Constitution disavows ill arts; it condemns tyranny and slavery, and yours among others. You say, you are informed a Court of Inquisition would have said as much. Who are your informers? “A great number are dissatisfied;” we call upon you now to name them, for “we are highly dissatisfied” with your unfair manner of stating things. We know not any “that are dissatisfied with what they have done.” But we know some who are sorry that they missed the opportunity of “signing it.” But we will bury this pious Resolve, with the solemnity of your next, saying it is replete with the most impudent falsehoods and grossest misrepresentations.

A very ingenious writer, who is an honour to the Province, somewhere says, “that Four Pence upon the Hundred for the fibs, falsehoods, and misrepresentations of America's Sons, would pay a considerable part of the Nation's Debt.” We are of his opinion.

“The Major and abettors of the ingenious A. W. Farmer” call upon you to prove “them traitors.” If they are in no sense traitors, it is base and abominable “to esteem and treat them as traitors to their Country." If what is generally said be true, that the Congress made no laws, then it can be no transgression to trample upon and condemn the Association. For where there is no law, there can be no transgression. Now if you fail in proof of so high and presumptuous an imputation, the impartial publick must esteem you a most abusive and unlawful body. No sacred pretext or design can justify the commission of the least evil.

Tell us what moved you to proclaim our patriotick Printers traitors? Do you really mean to immure the Colonies in Popish darkness, by suppressing the vehicles of light, truth, and liberty? Are none to speak, write, or print, but by your permission? Does a conscience of guilt and tyranny hurry the Committees to starve and murder our virtuous Printers? One would conclude, from Mr. Holl's papers, that they had lost virtue, honour, humanity, and common sense. A free Press has been the honour and glory of Englishmen; by it our most excellent Constitution has been raised to greater perfection than any in the world. But we are become the degenerate plants of a new and strange vine; and now it seems ignorance must be the mother of both devotion and politicks.

The Major and friends to Government desire the Committee, who had no right to represent Brookhaven, to take back the odious, despicable epithet of traitors, as it is peculiarly adapted to the enemies of the Country, and the deluded abettors of the rebellious saints at Boston. For we, in our turn, "think that they (if any) ought to be esteemed and treated as traitors to their Country, and enemies to the liberties of America."

Signed by Major Benjamin Floyd, and a great number of others.

MEETING AT DANVERS, (ESSEX COUNTY,) MASSACHUSETTS.

At a meeting of the people of the Alarm List of the Third Company in Danvers, held at said Danvers 6th March, 1775, for the purpose of electing Officers for said Alarm List Company, Rev. Benjamin Balch, Chairman:

Said people unanimously made choice of Deacon Edmund Putnam for Captain; Rev. Benjamin Balch for a Lieutenant; and Mr. Tarrant Putnam for an Ensign. The said Gentlemen being all present, declared their acceptance. Attest, ARCH. DALE, Clerk of said Meeting.

Boston, March 6, 1775.

At this inauspicious day, when Tyranny lifts her shameless front, and is followed by a train of unfeeling Apostates, I cannot let my pen sleep. The enemies to Freedom, convinced that the Americans are not to be cheated, now openly declare that the Colonies must and will be subjected by force. This brings up the last and great question, whether the United Colonies can defend their rights? If they cannot, of all men they will be the most miserable. But I believe they can, and will defend them; and if the sword should be drawn against them, they may strike such a blow as will shake Britain to the centre. It is painful to the Americans to contemplate measures which may be ruinous to their brethren in Britain, but a tyrannical Ministry, encouraged by the Tories in both Countries, are now pushing their destructive plans with such rapidity and violence, that we must look forward to the last grand step for defence; and if they will not hearken to the wise and just proposals of the American Congress, but still continue to go on from bad to worse, the Americans will be compelled, by the great Law of Nature, to strike a decisive blow, and follow the example of the once oppressed United Provinces—publish a manifesto to the world, showing the necessity of dissolving their connection with a Nation whose Ministers were aiming at their ruin; offer a Free Trade to all Nations, and an asylum in the free regions of America to all the oppressed through the world. THIS IS THE DERNIER RESORT; and this, O Americans! you can do; and this you must do, unless tyranny ceases to invade your liberties. This great subject I have viewed on all sides; and it might be demonstrated by a million of reasons, that the Americans may thus secure to themselves and to posterity the blessings of Freedom. TIME AND JUDGMENT.

An Oration delivered MONDAY, MARCH 6, 1775, at the request of the Inhabitants of the Town of BOSTON, to commemorate the bloody tragedy of the 5th of MARCH, 1770. By Doctor JOSEPH WARREN.

My ever honoured Fellow-Citizens:

It is not without the most humiliating conviction of my want of ability that I now appear before you; but the sense I have of the obligation I am under to obey the calls of my Country at all times, together with an animating recollection of your indulgence exhibited upon so many occasions, has induced me once more, undeserving as I am, to throw myself upon that candour which looks with kindness on the feeblest efforts of an honest mind.

You will not now expect the elegance, the learning, the fire, the enrapturing strains of eloquence, which charmed you when a Lovel, a Church, or a Hancock spake; but you will permit me to say, that with a sincerity equal to theirs, I mourn over my bleeding Country; with them I weep at her distress, and with them deeply resent the many injuries she has received from the hands of cruel and unreasonable men.

That personal freedom is the natural right of every man, and that property, or an exclusive right to dispose of what he has honestly acquired by his own labour, necessarily arises therefrom, are truths which common sense has placed beyond the reach of contradiction; and no man, or body of men, can, without being guilty of flagrant injustice, claim a right to dispose of the persons or acquisitions of any other man, or body of men, unless it can be proved that such a right has arisen from some compact between the parties, in which it has been explicitly and freely granted.

If I may be indulged in taking a retrospective view of the first settlement of our Country, it will be easy to determine with what degree of justice the late Parliament of Great Britain have assumed the power of giving away that property which the Americans have earned by their labour.

Our fathers having nobly resolved never to wear the yoke of Despotism, and seeing the European world, through indolence and cowardice, falling a prey to tyranny, bravely threw themselves upon the bosom of the Ocean, determined to find a place in which they might enjoy their freedom, or perish in the glorious attempt. Approving Heaven beheld the favourite ark dancing upon the waves, and graciously preserved it, until the chosen families were brought in safety to these Western regions. They found the land swarming with Savages, who threatened death with every kind of torture; but Savages, and death with torture, were far less terrible than slavery. Nothing was so much the object of their abhorrence as a tyrant's power; they knew that it was more safe to dwell with man, in his most unpolished state, than in a Country where arbitrary power prevails. Even Anarchy itself, that bugbear held up by the tools of power, (though truly to be deprecated,) is infinitely less dangerous to mankind than arbitrary Government. Anarchy can be but of short duration; for when men are at liberty to pursue that course which is most conducive to their own happiness, they will soon come into it; and, from the rudest state of nature, order and good government must soon arise. But tyranny, when once established, entails its curse on a Nation to the latest period of time, unless some daring genius, inspired by Heaven, shall, unappalled by danger, bravely form and execute the arduous design of restoring liberty and life to his enslaved, murdered Country.

The tools of power, in every age, have racked their inventions to justify the few in sporting with the happiness of the many, and, having found their sophistry too weak to hold mankind in bondage, have impiously dared to force Religion, the daughter of the King of Heaven, to become a prostitute in the service of Hell. They taught that Princes, honoured with the name of Christians, might bid defiance to the Founder of their faith; might pillage Pagan Countries, and deluge them with blood, only because they boasted themselves to be the disciples of that Teacher who strictly charged his followers to "do to others as they would that others should do unto them."

This Country having been discovered by an English subject in the year 1620, was (according to the system which the blind superstition of those times supported) deemed the property of the Crown of England. Our ancestors, when they resolved to quit their native soil, obtained from King James a grant of certain lands in North-America. This they probably did to silence the cavils of their enemies, for it cannot be doubted but they despised the pretended right which he claimed thereto. Certain it is, that he might, with equal propriety and justice, have made them a grant of the planet Jupiter; and their subsequent conduct plainly shows that they were too well acquainted with humanity and the principles of natural equity, to suppose that the grant gave them any right to take possession; they therefore entered into a treaty with the natives, and bought from them the lands. Nor have I yet obtained any information that our ancestors ever pleaded, or that the natives ever regarded the grant from the English Crown; the business was transacted by the parties in the same independent manner that it would have been had neither of them ever known or heard of the Island of Great Britain.

Having become the honest proprietors of the soil, they immediately applied themselves to the cultivation of it, and they soon beheld the virgin earth teeming with richest fruits; a grateful recompense for their unwearied toil. The fields began to wave with ripening harvests, and the late barren wilderness was seen to blossom like the rose. The savage natives saw with wonder the delightful change, and quickly formed a scheme to obtain that, by fraud or force, which nature meant as the reward of industry alone. But the illustrious emigrants soon convinced the rude invaders that they were not less ready to take the field for battle than for labour; and the insidious foe was driven from their borders as often as he ventured to disturb them. The Crown of England looked with indifference on the contest; our ancestors were left alone to combat with the natives. Nor is there any reason to believe that it ever was intended by the one party, or expected by the other, that the grantor should defend and maintain the grantees in the peaceable possession of the lands named in the patents. And it appears plainly, from the history of those times, that neither the Prince, nor the people of England, thought themselves much interested in the matter; they had not then any idea of a thousandth part of those advantages which they since have, and we are most heartily willing they should still continue to reap from us.

But when, at an infinite expense of toil and blood, this wide extended Continent had been cultivated and defended; when the hardy adventurers justly expected that they and their descendants should peaceably have enjoyed the harvest of those fields which they had sown, and the fruit of those vineyards which they had planted, this Country was then thought worthy the attention of the British Ministry; and the only justifiable, and only successful means of rendering the Colonies serviceable to Britain, were adopted. By an intercourse of friendly offices, the two Countries became so united in affection that they thought not of any distinct or separate interests; they found both Countries flourishing and happy. Britain saw her Commerce extended, and her wealth increased; her lands raised to an immense value; her fleets riding triumphant on the Ocean; the terror of her arms spreading to every quarter of the globe. The Colonist found himself free, and thought himself secure; he dwelt "under his own vine, and under his own fig-tree, and had none to make him afraid." He knew, indeed, that by purchasing the manufactures of Great Britain, he contributed to its greatness; he knew that all the wealth that his labour produced centred in Great Britain; but that, far from exciting his envy, filled him with the highest pleasure; that thought supported him in all his toils. When the business of the day was past, he solaced himself with the contemplation, or perhaps entertained his listening family with the recital of some great, some glorious transaction, which shines conspicuous in the history of Britain; or perhaps his elevated fancy led him to foretell, with a kind of enthusiastick confidence, the glory, power, and duration of an Empire, which should extend from one end of the earth to the other; he saw, or thought he saw, the British Nation risen to a pitch of grandeur which cast a veil over the Roman glory; and, ravished with the preview, boasted a race of British Kings, whose names should echo through those Realms where Cyrus, Alexander, and the Cæsars, were unknown; Princes for whom millions of grateful subjects, redeemed from Slavery and Pagan ignorance, should, with thankful tongues, offer up their prayers and praises to that transcendantly Great and Beneficent Being "by whom Kings reign, and Princes decree justice."

These pleasing connections might have continued, these delightful prospects might have been every day extended, and even the reveries of the most warm imagination might have been realized; but, unhappily for us, unhappily for Britain, the madness of an avaricious Minister of State has drawn a sable curtain over the charming scene, and in its stead has brought upon the stage discord, envy, hatred, and revenge, with civil war close in the rear!

Some demon, in an evil hour, suggested to a shortsighted financier the hateful project of transferring the whole property of the King's subjects in America to his subjects in Britain. The claim of the British Parliament to tax the Colonies can never be supported but by such a transfer; for the right of the House of Commons of Great Britain to originate any tax, or to grant money, is altogether derived from their being elected by the people of Great Britain to act for them; and the people of Great Britain cannot confer on their Representatives a right to give or grant any thing which they themselves have not a right to give or grant personally. Therefore it follows, that if the Members chosen by the people of Great Britain to represent them in Parliament have, by virtue of their being so chosen, any right to give or grant American property, or to lay any tax upon the lands or persons of the Colonists, it is because the lands and people in the Colonies are, bona fide, owned by, and justly belong to the people of Great Britain. But (as has been before observed) every man has a natural right to personal freedom, consequently a right to enjoy what is acquired by his own labour; and as it is evident that the property in this Country has been acquired by our own labour, it is the duty of the people of Great Britain to produce some compact in which we have explicitly given up to them a right to dispose of our persons or property. Until this is done, every attempt of theirs, or of those whom they have deputed to act for them, to give or grant any part of our property, is directly repugnant to every principle of reason and natural justice. But I may boldly say that such a compact never existed, no, not even in imagination. Nevertheless, the Representatives of a Nation, long famed for justice, and the exercise of every noble virtue, have been prevailed on to adopt the fatal scheme; and although the dreadful consequences of this wicked policy have already shaken the Empire to its centre, yet still it is persisted in, regardless of the voice of reason, deaf to the prayers and supplications, and unaffected with the flowing tears of suffering millions, the British Ministry still hug the darling idol, and every rolling year affords fresh instances of the absurd devotion with which they worship it. Alas! how has the folly—the distraction of the British Councils, blasted our swelling hopes, and spread a gloom over this Western hemisphere! The hearts of Britons and Americans, which lately felt the generous glow of mutual confidence and love, now burn with jealousy and rage. Though but of yesterday, I recollect (deeply affected at the ill-boding change) the happy hours that passed whilst Britain and America rejoiced in the prosperity and greatness of each other. Heaven grant those halcyon days may soon return! But now the Briton too often looks on the American with an envious eye, taught to consider his just plea for the enjoyment of his earning as the effect of pride and stubborn opposition to the Parent Country; whilst the American beholds the Briton as the ruffian, ready first to take away his property, and next, what is dearer to every virtuous man, the liberty of his Country.

When the measures of Administration had disgusted the Colonies to the highest degree, and the people of Great Britain had, by artifice and falsehood, been irritated against America, an Army was sent over to enforce submission to certain Acts of the British Parliament, which reason scorned to countenance, and which placemen and pensioners were found unable to support.

Martial Law, and the government of a well regulated City, are so entirely different, that it has always been considered as improper to quarter Troops in populous Cities, as frequent disputes must necessarily arise between the citizen and the soldier, even if no previous animosities subsist; and it is farther certain, from a consideration of the nature of mankind, as well as from constant experience, that Standing Armies always endanger the liberty of the subject. But when the people, on the one part, considered the Army as sent to enslave them; and the Army, on the other, were taught to look on the people as in a state of rebellion, it was but just to fear the most disagreeable consequences. Our fears, we have seen, were but too well grounded.

The many injuries offered to the Town I pass over in silence. I cannot now mark out the path which led to that unequalled scene of horror, the sad remembrance of which takes the full possession of my soul. The sanguinary theatre again opens itself to view; the baleful images of terror crowd around me; and discontented ghosts, with hollow groans, appear to solemnize the anniversary of the fifth of March.

Approach we then the melancholy walk of death! Hither let me call the gay companion; here let him drop a farewell tear upon that body which so late he saw vigorous and warm with social mirth! Hither let me lead the tender mother, to weep over her beloved son! Come, widowed mourner, here satiate thy grief. Behold thy murdered husband gasping on the ground! And, to complete the pompous shew of wretchedness, bring in each hand thy infant children to bewail their father's fate. Take heed, ye orphan babes, lest, whilst your streaming eyes are fixed upon the ghastly corpse, your feet slide on the stones bespattered with your father's brains.* Enough! This tragedy need not be heightened by an infant weltering in the blood of him that gave it birth. Nature, reluctant, shrinks already from the view, and the chilled blood rolls slowly backward to its fountain. We wildly stare about, and with amazement ask, Who spread this ruin round us? What wretch has dared to deface the image of his God? Has haughty France, or cruel Spain, sent forth her myrmidons? Has the grim Savage rushed again from the far distant wilderness? Or does some fiend, fierce from the depth of Hell, with all the rancorous malice which the apostate damned can feel, twang her destructive bow, and hurl her deadly arrows at our breast? No, none of these. But how astonishing! It is the hand of Britain that inflicts the wound; the Arms of George, our rightful King, have been employed to shed that blood which freely would have flown at his command, when justice, or the honour of his Crown, had called his subjects to the field.

But pity, grief, astonishment, with all the softer movements of the soul, must now give way to stronger passions. Say, fellow-citizens, what dreadful thought now swells your heaving bosoms? You fly to arms; sharp indignation flashes from each eye; revenge gnashes her iron teeth; death grins a hideous smile, secure to drench his greedy jaws in human gore; whilst hovering furies darken all the air.

But stop, my bold adventurous countrymen; stain not your weapons with the blood of Britons; attend to reason's voice; humanity puts in her claim, and sues to be again admitted to her wonted seat—the bosom of the brave. Revenge is far beneath the noble mind. Many, perhaps, compelled to rank among the vile assassins, do, from their inmost souls, detest the barbarous action. The winged death, shot from your arms, may chance to pierce some breast that bleeds already for your injured Country.

The storm subsides; a solemn pause ensues; you spare upon condition they depart. They go; they quit your City; they no more shall give offence. Thus closes the important drama.

And could it have been conceived that we again should have seen a British Army in our land, sent to enforce obedience to Acts of Parliament destructive of our liberty? But the Royal ear, far distant from the Western world, has been assaulted by the tongue of slander; and villains, traitorous alike to King and Country, have prevailed upon a gracious Prince to clothe his countenance with wrath, and to erect the hostile banner against a people ever affectionate and loyal to him and his illustrious predecessors of the House of Hanover. Our Streets are again filled with armed men, our Harbour is crowded with Ships-of-war; but these cannot intimidate us; our liberty must be preserved; it is far dearer than life; we hold it even dearer as our allegiance; we must defend it against the attacks of friends as well as enemies; we cannot suffer even Britons to ravish it from us.

No longer could we reflect with generous pride on the heroic actions of our American forefathers; no longer boast our origin from that far-famed island, whose warlike sons have so often drawn their well-tried swords to save her from the ravages of tyranny, could we but for a moment entertain the thought of giving up our liberty. The man who meanly will submit to wear a shackle, contemns the noblest gift of Heaven, and impiously affronts the God that made him free.

It was a maxim of the Roman people, which eminently conduced to the greatness of that State, never to despair of the Commonwealth. The maxim may prove as salutary to us now as it did to them. Short-sighted mortals see not the numerous links of small and great events, which form the chain on which the fate of Kings and Nations is suspended. Ease and prosperity (though pleasing for a day) have often sunk a people into effeminacy and sloth. Hardships and dangers (though we forever strive to shun them) have frequently called forth such virtues as have commanded the applause and reverence of an admiring world.

Our Country loudly calls you to be circumspect, vigilant, active, and brave. Perhaps, (all-gracious Heaven avert it) perhaps the power of Britain, a Nation great in war, by some malignant influence may be employed to enslave you; but let not even this discourage you. Her Arms, it is true, have filled the world with terror; her Troops have reaped the laurels of the field; her Fleets have rode triumphant on the sea; and when or where did you, my countrymen, depart inglorious from the field of fight? You, too, can show the trophies of your forefathers' victories and your own; can name the fortresses and battles you have won, and many of you count the honourable scars of wounds received, whilst fighting for your King and Country.

Where justice is the standard, Heaven is the warrior's shield; but conscious guilt unnerves the arm that lifts the sword against the innocent. Britain, united with these Colonies by commerce and affection, by interest and blood, may mock the threats of France and Spain; may be the seat of universal Empire. But should America, either by force, or those more dangerous engines—luxury and corruption, ever be brought into a state of vassalage, Britain must lose her freedom also. No longer shall she sit the Empress of the sea; her ships no more shall waft her thunders over the wide ocean; the wreath shall wither on her temples; her weakened arm shall be unable to defend her coasts; and she at last must bow her venerable head to some proud foreigner's despotick rule.

But if from past events we may venture to form a judgment of the future, we justly may expect that the devices of our enemies will but increase the triumphs of our Country. I must indulge a hope that Britain's liberty, as well as ours, will eventually be preserved by the virtue of America.

The attempt of the British Parliament to raise a Revenue from America, and our denial of their right to do it, have excited an almost universal inquiry into the rights of mankind in general, and of British subjects in particular; the necessary result of which must be such a liberality of sentiment, and such a jealousy of those in power, as will, better than an adamant wall, secure us against the future approaches of despotism.

* The patience with which this people have borne the repeated injuries which have been heaped upon them, and their unwillingness to take any sanguinary measures, has very injudiciously been ascribed to cowardice, by persons both here and in Great Britain. I most heartily wish that an opinion so erroneous in itself, and so fatal in its consequences, might be utterly removed before it be too late; and I think nothing further necessary to convince every intelligent man that the conduct of this people is owing to the tender regard which they have for their fellow-men, and an utter abhorrence to the shedding of human blood, than a little attention to their general temper and disposition discovered when they cannot be supposed to be under any apprehension of danger to themselves. I will only mention the universal detestation which they shew to every act of cruelty, by whom, and upon whomsoever committed; the mild spirit of their Laws; the very few crimes to which capital penalties are annexed, and the very great backwardness which both Courts and Juries discover, in condemning persons charged with capital crimes. But if any should think this observation not to the purpose, I readily appeal to those gentlemen of the Army who have been in the camp, or in the field, with the Americans.

The malice of the Boston Port Bill has been defeated, in a very considerable degree, by giving you an opportunity of deserving, and our brethren in this and our sister Colonies an opportunity of bestowing, those benefactions which have delighted your friends, and astonished your enemies, not only in America, but in Europe also; and what is more valuable still, the sympathetick feelings for a brother in distress, and the grateful emotions excited in the breast of him who finds relief, must forever endear each to the other, and form those indissoluble bonds of friendship and affection, on which the preservation of our right so evidently depends.

The mutilation of our Charter has made ever Colony jealous for its own; for this, if once submitted to by us, would set on float the property and Government of every British settlement upon the Continent. If Charters are not deemed sacred, how miserably precarious is every thing founded upon them?

Even the sending Troops to put these Acts in execution, is not without advantages to us. The exactness and beauty of their discipline inspire our youth with ardour in the pursuit of military knowledge. Charles the Invincible taught Peter the Great the Art of War. The battle of Pultowa convinced Charles of the proficiency Peter had made.

Our Country is in danger, but not to be despaired of. Our enemies are numerous and powerful, but we have many friends determined to be free, and Heaven and earth will aid the resolution. On you depend the fortunes of America. You are to decide the important question, on which rest the happiness and liberty of millions yet unborn. Act worthy of yourselves—the faltering tongue of hoary age calls on you to support your Country. The lisping infant raises its suppliant hands, imploring defence against the monster slavery. Your fathers look from their celestial seats with smiling approbation on their sons, who boldly stand forth in the cause of virtue; but sternly frown upon the inhuman miscreant who, to secure the loaves and fishes to himself, would breed a serpent to destroy his children.

But pardon me, my fellow-citizens; I know you want not zeal or fortitude. You will maintain your rights, or perish in the generous struggle. However difficult the combat, you never will decline it when freedom is the prize. An independence on Great Britain is not our aim. No, our wish is that Britain and the Colonies may, like the oak and ivy, grow and increase in strength together. But whilst the infatuated plan of making one part of the Empire slaves to the other is persisted in, the interest and safety of Britain, as well as the Colonies, require that the wise measures recommended by the Honourable the Continental Congress be steadily pursued; whereby the unnatural contest, between a parent honoured, and a child beloved, may probably be brought to such an issue, as that the peace and happiness of both may be established upon a lasting basis. But if these pacifick measures are ineffectual; and it appears that the only way to safety is through fields of blood, I know you will not turn your faces from your foes, but will undauntedly press forward until tyranny is trodden under foot; and you have fixed your adored Goddess, Liberty, fast by a Brunswick's side, on the American Throne.

You, then, who nobly have espoused your Country's cause—who generously have sacrificed wealth and ease—who have despised the pomp and show of tinselled greatness—refused the summons to the festive board—been deaf to the alluring calls of luxury and mirth—who have forsaken the downy pillow to keep your vigils by the midnight lamp for the salvation of your invaded Country, that you might break the fowler's snare and disappoint the vulture of his prey, you then will reap that harvest of renown which you so justly have deserved. Your Country shall pay her grateful tribute of applause. Even the children of your most inveterate enemies (ashamed to tell from whom they sprang, while they in secret curse their stupid, cruel parents) shall join the general voice of gratitude to those who broke the fetters which their fathers forged.

Having redeemed your Country, and secured the blessing to future generations, who, fired by your example, shall emulate your virtues, and learn from you the Heavenly art of making millions happy, with heart-felt joy—with transports all your own, you cry, the glorious work is done! then drop the mantle to some young Elisha, and take your seats with kindred spirits in your native skies.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, Monday, March 6, 1775.

MY FELLOW-CITIZENS: As you are called on this day to give your voices on a measure of importance, permit one who has your welfare most anxiously at heart, to state the matter as it is. On the 2d instant, the Committee published an Advertisement to call you together, upon the business therein expressed. They do not pretend that this is in consequence of any powers you have vested with them; it is, therefore, a proposal coming from them as so many individuals. On Friday, the third instant, a number of Citizens, equally reputable in their characters with the members of the Committee, and far superiour in numbers, upon mature deliberation, conceived that this measure ought to be postponed. Every person who wants the sanction of your approbation should maintain his proposals with reasons, and the advocates for postponing the question have assigned a number in support of it. These you have seen in a handbill, and you are the judges of the weight they deserve. What arguments there are to hasten and precipitate this question, is not known, nor is it proper in the hurry and confusion of a crowd, to discuss questions which require time and attention for a sober, judicious determination. It seems proper, therefore, to postpone this question, from which no disadvantage can possibly arise.

A FREEMAN.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, Monday, March 6, 1775.

It has been the practice of some people in this City, upon all occasions, in order to defeat the well meant endeavours of its real friends, to misrepresent their intentions. With this view, it has been artfully propagated, that the Citizens who assembled at Montagne's on Friday, had resolved to oppose the appointment of Delegates. Disposed as I am, as an individual, for the measure of Delegates, I was alarmed at this insinuation; and having attentively considered the proceedings of the Meeting on Friday, find that the report is entirely false, and calculated to mislead you. The only measure proposed by the friends of Constitutional Liberty is, that the nomination of Delegates may be postponed; the time appointed by the Committee being so short as not to admit of deliberating on the most proper mode of electing them, and of framing proper instructions for their government. The method proposed by the Committee being extremely exceptionable, and such as will put this City, which pays one third of the taxes of the Colony, upon a footing with the smallest County in it.

A BURGER.

TO THE RESPECTABLE INHABITANTS OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, Monday, March 6, 1775.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: By the general tenour of your conduct, since the commencement of our unhappy disputes with Great Britain, you have uniformly and fully evinced yourselves to be possessed of an inviolable attachment to the cause of Constitutional Liberty, as well as of unshaken Loyalty to our most Gracious Sovereign, and a just abhorrence of such irregular proceedings as indicated a spirit of disaffection, or independency in any of the Colonists. These virtues, always valuable in a high degree, are peculiarly so in times like the present, when a dangerous infatuation has seized so many; when discord and tyranny, in the guise of liberty, stalk forth among us; and, under specious pretences, would entail misery, ruin, and the most abject slavery upon us. These virtues, which you have nobly exerted on several occasions, will soon be called to another trial.

A summons has been issued last Thursday, by the Chairman, and by order of the Committee, commanding your attendance at the Exchange on Monday, the 6th instant, for the purpose of choosing Delegates to go to the next Continental Congress. Considering our late transactions here relative to this matter, I am sure you must be greatly surprised at such a step as this. Especially when you are not called to deliberate on the expediency or propriety of appointing Delegates for the above purpose; but actually to choose them! and this, in consequence of an edict from the late Congress, whose views and proceedings you most cordially disapprove! Willing or unwilling, you are required to comply with this mandate.

Our only legal, Constitutional Representatives, the Members of our Assembly, to whom we have voluntarily committed the guardianship of our liberties, and the direction of our publick affairs, and who are vested with full authority for these important ends, have absolutely refused to appoint any Delegates for the ensuing Congress. Would not such an attempt in you, therefore, be an open violation of their just authority, and a glaring insult on them?

Whatever reasons might have existed for sending Delegates to the former Congress, there are none such now; but many cogent reasons to the contrary. Our Assembly have taken the subject of our grievances into consideration, and are vigorously pursuing the most effectual methods for obtaining their redress. The proceedings of the late Congress were violent and treasonable. Instead of healing the unnatural breach between us and the Parent State, which was the ardent wish of every honest, good man, they shut up every avenue to an accommodation. An adherence to their proceedings must have infallibly involved us in all the horrors of a Civil War, and ended in our ruin. Fully sensible of this, and of the unjust tyrannical power usurped by that Congress over North America, our Assembly—to their immortal honour be it spoken—had virtue and fortitude enough to reject those proceedings. Like faithful guardians of the great trust committed to them, they have taken the proper Constitutional steps to snatch us from impending ruin; restore harmony between this Country and Great Britain, and to secure our liberties on the firm basis of Constitutional principles.

Now reflect, my fellow-citizens, will not your sending Delegates to the next Congress directly tend to frustrate these laudable endeavours, of whose success we have a moral certainty? Will it not place this Province in the most absurd, inconsistent point of light, as bursting the bands of all Government, both with respect to Great Britain and our own Legislature? May I not aver, with truth, that you hold the violent proceedings of the late Congress in abhorrence? What can you expect from the next Congress but such measures as were adopted by the last, when you know the same Delegates are generally appointed by the other Colonies? Few alterations have been made; and where any have taken place, they were for the worse—persons more violent, if possible, being chosen. In what other view can we appear to Great Britain, than as heartily concurring with those who have attempted to throw off all allegiance—all subordination whatever? Nay! as acting in concert with those who have been guilty of open treason in the broad face of day? for that is the case of one of the New-Hampshire Delegates. I forget his name—it is the fellow who headed a riotous mob, stormed one of His Majesty's Forts, and forcibly carried off the Cannon, Arms, and Ammunition lodged there for the express purpose of using them against his Sovereign:—A gentleman is known by the company he keeps; and so is an honest man, or a loyal subject.

But this proposed meeting on Monday is replete with further mischief; for you are to assemble, not only for choosing Delegates, but also “to signify your sense, whether you will appoint a certain number of persons to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect for that purpose, and join with them in appointing, out of their body, Delegates for the next Congress.” Here you may perceive the first outlines of a Provincial Congress—the first artful advance towards bringing on us one of the heaviest curses. If the abettors of Republicanism can gain this advantage over the friends of our Constitution, the consequences must be terrible. Our Constitutional Assembly will become a mere cypher, and all order subverted.

I beseech you, fellow-citizens, to think for yourselves. Turn your eyes to those Colonies where Provincial Congresses are chosen; see the effects produced by them, and judge from those facts. In South-Carolina the Provincial Congress has shut up all the Courts of Justice. No man dare attempt to recover a just debt, unless graciously permitted by the Committee of the County. By very late accounts from Virginia, I am informed that matters there are in much the same predicament. In Maryland, the Provincial Congress has wrested the Militia out of the King's hands, and has levied immense sums of money—extorted large contributions from the inhabitants for the purpose of raising Troops to fight against His Majesty. The Provincial Congress of Pennsylvania met lately to carry the same design into execution, and were near effecting their purpose; and there the liberty of the Press is utterly destroyed. As for Massachusetts, you know the Provincial Congress have appointed a Treasurer, levied money, enlisted Minute Men, and are taking every step totally to annihilate the King's just and legal authority in that Province.

These are notorious, indubitable facts. They cannot be denied. Say, then, fellow-citizens, do you choose to bring yourselves into a similar situation? If so, then do not fail to appoint a certain number of persons, on Monday, the 6th instant, to meet such Deputies as the County may elect for that purpose, and to join with them. By this means a Provincial Congress will be immediately formed; and as the warmest and most forward persons are generally chosen on those occasions, I may venture to pronounce our Provincial Congress will not fall short of others in usurping an unjust authority, in being tenacious of it, and plunging this Province into the greatest confusion and irregularities. But if you detest, as I know you do, the thoughts of such proceedings, then unite as one man in opposing them. Let neither indolence, or any other consideration, prevent you from exerting your usual fortitude and spirit to stop the mischief which is swiftly approaching. Do not sully your former reputation, by suffering this maddest freak of rampant Republicanism to take place—the appointment of a Provincial Congress. Crush this accursed cockatrice whilst it is in embryo; if you permit it to grow up to maturity, it will sting you to death.

I am very sensible that no gentleman or man of character among us would, as matters are now circumstanced, accept of the appointment of Delegate to the Continental Congress, or of Deputy to a Provincial Congress. But you very well know that there are several here, who are under no restraints of delicacy, or regard to decorum and order on this head. These having no consequence, but such as they derive from our confusions, would willingly perpetuate those confusions, as it would raise their importance, and flatter their vanity. Against these you should be peculiarly on your guard. They will not fail to improve any supineness you may show on this occasion. Men of property should be alert and watchful, in the highest degree, on this emergency; for these having little or no property of their own, will be the more apt to make free with that of others; and we have no check or control on them, if they are once exalted into a Provincial Congress. To levy money will be one part of their office, and, besides, their intemperate measures will probably lead to confiscations, by which they can lose nothing.

That wisdom, loyalty, firm attachment to your excellent Constitution, and zealous assiduity may guide you at this most important crisis, is the unfeigned wish of

A CITIZEN OF NEW-YORK.

TO THE PUBLICK.

New-York, Tuesday, March 7, 1775.

“A Citizen of New-York,” has attempted, in Mr. Gaine's last Paper, to sow the seeds of discord among us, and interrupt our union and harmony. Those who read his performance attentively, will easily see his design; but cursory and less intelligent readers may be deceived by him. To prevent this, I will make a few remarks upon his curious publication.

As soon as he has finished his introduction, (which consists of nothing more than common-place phrases and trite expressions,) he begins to abuse our virtuous and patriotick Committee; and in the most villanous manner represents them as having done what they never did, and, I dare say, never thought of. He says, “a summons has been issued last Thursday, by the Chairman, and by order of the Committee, commanding your attendance at the Exchange on Monday, the 6th instant, for the purpose of choosing Delegates to go to the next Continental Congress." Is this true? It is not;—it is a wilful misrepresentation. Examine the Committee's advertisement: "they request that the Freeholders, &c., will be pleased to assemble, to signify their sense of the best method of choosing Delegates, and whether they will appoint a certain number of persons, to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect for that purpose, and join with them in appointing Delegates out of their body for the next Congress." Can any thing be more modest? Can words express a greater deference to the opinion of the publick? Or could the Counties be treated in a more respectful manner? There is no such thing as "commanding your attendance," nor was it the design of the meeting "actually to choose" Delegates, as plainly appears from the Committee's advertisement. It is true, you were "not called to deliberate on the expediency and propriety of appointing Delegates;" but the reason for this was, not an overbearing disposition in the Committee, but because the "expediency and propriety" of the measure was allowed on all hands; even those who met at Montagnie's, where Mr. John Thurman was Chairman, did not deny either of them, but implicitly agreed to both, and only proposed trying to get "the meeting of Monday next postponed until the 20th of April." So you see the artful falsehood used by this same Mr. Citizen.

The arguments drawn from the conduct of our Assembly are futile and ridiculous. What have they done about the matter? They have determined "not to take into consideration the proceedings of the Continental Congress, held in the City of Philadelphia, in the months of September and October last;" and that the sense of the House should "not be taken on the necessity of appointing Delegates for this Colony, to meet the Delegates for the other Colonies on this Continent in General Congress, on the 10th day of May next." If I understand English, this is nothing more than if the Honourable House had said, these are matters with which we do not choose to have any connexion, and therefore shall neither censure nor applaud, but leave it entirely to our constituents, to act as they think proper; if they choose to approve the proceedings of the Congress, and adhere to their determinations, let them do it; if not, let them disapprove of them, and signify their approbation or disapprobation in their own way. This seems to me the most natural construction of the conduct of the Honourable House; and that of some of the Members yesterday appears to justify this construction, for a number of them attended the meeting at the Exchange; and to suppose they would encourage, by their presence, a meeting which was (as the Citizen is pleased to call it) "an open violation of their just authority, and a glaring insult on them," contains such a reflection on the good sense of those gentlemen, and the propriety of their conduct, as I do not choose to make, and think ought not to be made by any person whatever. It appears, then, very plain, that the Citizen must have entirely mistaken the matter, or wilfully misrepresented it, that he might be furnished with weighty arguments against the meeting. From his perversion of the Committee's advertisement, I strongly suspect the latter was the case, but it is not right to use our firm attachment to our Constitutional Legislature as an instrument to deceive us. Fie! Mr. Citizen; that is a low-lived trick.

The remainder of the Citizen's Address is such an incoherent confusion of Provincial Congress, Republicanism, Constitutional Assemblies, Militia, Legal Authority, Cockatrices, Embryos, &c., that I am apt to think the man was non compos mentis when he wrote it, and I shall not attempt to answer it, lest the publick should think that I am mad too.

You see, my friends, what arts are used to support a faction; be on your guard; you acted yesterday in a manner worthy of yourselves; continue to act on all future occasions with the same order, decency, unanimity, and firmness; you will thereby confound the friends of despotism, convince them your attachment to "the best of Kings" and Constitutional Government is inviolable, and will preserve your own liberty, and that of your posterity, till time shall be no more.

ANOTHER CITIZEN.

City of New-York, March 7, 1775.

Personally came and appeared before me, David Matthews, Esquire, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, for the City and County of New-York, John Graham, Clerk to Robert and John Murray, of this City, Merchants, and being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, did depose and say, that he left this City on Monday morning last, in company with the said John Murray, and proceeded with him on board the Ship Beulah, then lying at the watering place; that shortly after they arrived on board said Ship they weighed anchor, and proceeded to Sandy Hook, where the said Ship continued until about seven of the clock this morning, at which time they weighed anchor and stood out to Sea; that the said deponent and the said John Murray left the said Ship, and came up opposite to Staten Island, where the said John Murray landed, about two of the clock this afternoon, and was going (as the deponent understood from the said John Murray) to Elizabethtown, to settle some business with Lord Stirling; that the deponent saw the said Ship pass the Light-House about eight of the clock this morning; that neither the said John Murray or the deponent was on board the said Ship after the anchor was weighed; that the deponent did not hear any conversation between the said John Murray and any other person, relative to the taking any goods out of the said Ship, nor does he believe that any boat was employed for that purpose; that the deponent's business on board was to copy invoices and letters. And further this deponent saith not.

JOHN GRAHAM.

Sworn, this 7th day of March, before me,

D. MATTHEWS.

New-York, Wednesday, March 8, 1775.

On Friday evening last, a number of persons who disapproved of the proposal made by the Committee for this City and County, in their advertisement, published Thurs-day, met at the house of the widow De La Montagnie, and after choosing Mr. John Thurman Chairman, proposed attempting to get the business intended for last Monday, (viz: the choice of persons to meet the Deputies from the Counties, for the purpose of choosing Delegates for the next Congress) postponed until the 20th of April, and published a handbill, desiring those who were of their sentiments to meet them there on Monday, the 6th instant, at ten o'clock, and proceed from thence to the Exchange.

A number of the friends of Constitutional Liberty, hearing of this manœuvre, and apprehending a scheme was on foot to defeat the design of sending Delegates to the Congress, met on the next evening, and determined to support the Committee, of whose virtue and patriotism we have had ample experience. At the close of the meeting, a gentleman having informed the company that the owners of the Ship Beulah (some time since arrived from London) had not performed their promise of sending her back, and that, therefore, the Committee's Boat had left her; about three hundred citizens unanimously determined to wait upon the owners to know why the Beulah had not sailed, and required the Captain's repairing immediately on board his Ship, then lying at the watering place, in order to her departure with the first fair wind. This service was effectually performed; and next day the Vessel fell down to the Hook, from whence she put to Sea on Tuesday.

Early on Monday morning preparations were made for the meeting at the Exchange. A Union Flag, with a red field, was hoisted on the Liberty-pole, where, at nine o'clock, the friends of Freedom assembled, and having got in proper readiness, about eleven o'clock the body began their march to the Exchange. They were attended by musick; and two standard bearers carried a large Union Flag, with a blue field, on which were the following inscriptions: On one side, George III.—Rex and the Liberties of America.—No Popery. On the other: The Union of the Colonies, and the Measures of Congress. Some time after they had arrived at the Exchange, came also the other company, who had met at the widow De La Montagnie's, among whom were some Officers of the Army and Navy, several of His Majesty's Council, and those

Members of the House of Representatives, who had refused taking into consideration the proceedings of the Congress, together with Officers of the Customs, and other dependants on the Court, &c. Soon after the parties met, some confusion arose, but subsided without any bad consequences. The Chairman of the Committee then proceeded to explain the design of the meeting; after which he proposed the following questions, viz:

First Question. Whether a certain number of persons shall be appointed and authorized to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect, and join with them for the sole purpose of appointing out of their body, on the 20th of April next, Delegates for the next Congress?

Second Question. Whether this meeting will authorize the Committee to nominate eleven Deputies for their approbation?

Both of which were carried in the affirmative. The meeting, and the majority which determined the questions, are supposed to have been the most numerous and respectable ever known in this City on the decision of any public proposal. The business of the day being finished, the friends of Freedom paraded through one of the principal streets of the City, to the Liberty-pole, and there dispersed, in the most quiet and orderly manner.

New-York, March 8, 1775.

The notification of the Committee, dated March 1, induced several worthy citizens, friends of Liberty and the Constitution, to assemble at the widow De La Montagnie's, on Friday evening, the 3d instant. The measure suggested by the Committee appeared to them to be liable to exception, as the probable tendency of it seemed to be the introduction of a Provincial Congress. They thought, too, that in a measure of so much importance to the community, no precipitate steps should be taken; that our fellow-citizens had a right to a little longer time than the Committee had thought proper to allow them; and they objected to the mode of taking the sense of the City by collecting the people together. They were apprized of the confusion, the heats and animosity, of which such a proceeding is generally productive; that on such occasions those citizens, who alone ought to be consulted, and who alone have a right to give their voices, namely, the Freeholders and Freemen, were liable to insults and indignities; and that, as it was impossible to discriminate between them and such as were collected on purpose to make a show of numbers, they foresaw that the mode proposed was entirely inadequate to the purpose of taking the sense of the City, in which they were confirmed by the experience of last year; when, after the Town had been kept in confusion, tumult, and disorder, for a long time, about the election of Delegates, the passing Resolves, meeting in the Fields, &c., the late reputable Committee of Correspondence had recourse to a poll, which was found the only essential measure of ascertaining what the sense of their fellow-citizens was. With the benefit of this experience, and under the influence of sentiments founded in prudence and moderation, as well as deference and respect for their fellow-citizens, the friends of Constitutional Liberty could not but disapprove of the measure adopted by the Committee. They proposed that the election of Delegates should be postponed for a time, when they intended, if, from the determinations of our Assembly now sitting, and the advices which might arrive by the expected Packet, some measure could not be adopted with the consent of all parties, and without division, that in such case the sense of the free-spirited and independent Electors of this City should be taken by a poll, by which those who had a right to give their voices might be distinguished from such as had not, and when the respectable citizens, in the exercise of Constitutional rights and franchises, lie blended with the rabble, which may always be collected by the pageantry of a flag, and the sound of a drum and fife. Unfortunately, however, the hopes which might be entertained from a calm, deliberate consideration of this measure, and thereby of healing our divisions, and of deriving weight to our determinations from the unanimity with which they might be carried, were defeated; for the day was fixed, and at hand. Accordingly on Monday, at the Exchange, a vast concourse of people were assembled; the Chairman of the Committee put two questions, upon each of which there was a very great division. Those who were opposed to the question, demanded a poll, for these reasons: that the business of the day was to take the sense of the Freeholders and Freemen; that none but such had a right to give their voices, and that it was impossible to discriminate them from those who had not such right. It is said that the Committee, in the evening, took up the consideration of the proceedings of the day; that many of them reported, that the majority of the people were in favour of the question; that they were, therefore, authorized to proceed to the election of Deputies to meet Deputies from the Counties in Provincial Convention. On the contrary, it is the opinion of a very great majority of our fellow-citizens, that no new powers would have been vested in the Committee by the transactions of that day; that they were appointed in matters relative to the Association only; that they had themselves disclaimed all other powers; that they had called the Freeholders and Freemen together in order to take their sentiments; that it was impossible, from the nature of the thing, to determine on which side the majority was.

The weight of the objections, therefore, to the measure of collecting the people together, appears from the event; and after the most disagreeable consequences which have followed, it will still be necessary to take that, as the last resource, which in prudence should have been the first measure, namely, taking every Elector's vote by a regular poll.

IMPARTIAL.

Committee Chamber, New-York, March 8, 1775.

Ordered, That Philip Livingston and John Jay, Esquires, be a Committee to wait on Mr. James Rivington, and request of him to acquaint this Committee by whose information, or by what authority, he published the following paragraph in his Gazetteer of 2d March, 1775:

"Last Monday the Committee of Observation met. It was proposed that they should nominate Delegates to the Continental Congress, for the approbation of this City and County; but being opposed, the final determination of the Committee was deferred until their next meeting."

The said paragraph being entirely and wholly false and groundless; and also to inform Mr. Rivington, that in printing the notice of the Committee of the 27th February, 1775, respecting the non-consumption of India Tea being then soon to take place, it was inserted, non-importation, instead of non-consumption; and desire him to correct the mistake in his next Paper. And that the said Committee do make their report at their next Meeting.

Committee Chamber, New-York, March 13, 1775.

MR. CHAIRMAN: In pursuance of an order of this Committee, of the 8th instant, we waited upon Mr. Rivington, and requested him to acquaint this Committee, by whose information, or by what authority he published the paragraph mentioned in the said order, in his Gazetteer of the 2d instant. Mr. Rivington told us he published it from common report, but would be more careful for the future, and was willing to contradict it.* The error Mr. Rivington committed in printing the notice of this Committee of the 27th February, 1775, respecting the non-consumption of India Tea being then soon to take place, he has corrected.

PHIL. LIVINGSTON,
JOHN JAY.

Resolved, That common report is not sufficient authority for any Printer in this City to publish any matters as facts relative to this Committee, and tending to expose them to the resentment of their Constituents, and the odium of the Colonies; for that the transactions of this Committee are not kept secret, and any person may, with ease, know the

* The Committee have not been precise in their manner of publishing my reply; to the above particulars, I added, "that what was related in my Paper was credited; yet if they would furnish me with accounts of their Proceedings, I might be able to print them without error."

I cannot think my conduct on this occasion merits so formal and public a reprehension; a reprehension highly favouring of Legislative authority, seemingly calculated to aggrandize the power of the accusers, and to disparage the political reputation of a persecuted, and, to the everlasting disgrace of many County Committees, a proscribed Printer.

New-York, March 16, 1775.

JAMES RIVINGTON.

truth of such reports, by applying to any of the Members of the Committee, who are numerous, and to be found in almost every part of the City.

Ordered, That the foregoing Order, Report, and Resolve, be forthwith printed in all the Papers.

By order of the Committee,
ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

TO THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

London, March 7, 1775

Some three, four, and five centuries ago, it was usual at the close of our Parliament to distinguish them, according to their deserts, by some particular epithet, whether good, bad, or indifferent. In consequence of this laudable usage, I find one of our Parliaments stands stigmatized with the opprobrious epithet of "ignorant;" a second with that of "insane;" and a third with that of the "merciless Parliament."

Any one of these severe, yet just epithets, our readers most probably will think a sufficient mark of detestation to damn the actors and acts of such a Parliament to all posterity. But what must posterity think of that Parliament, who, at this present hour, have actually two Bills before them, the first of which is to attain, and consequently to hang, draw, and quarter, one half of our American brethren; while the second is to prohibit their Fisheries, and consequently to starve the other half to death. Should these two Bills be enacted into two Laws, will not posterity deservedly brand that Parliament with all the three comited epithets abovementioned; and whenever they make mention of it with horror, as they must always do, will they not have reason to call it "the ignorant-insane-merciless Parliament of 1775?" But in charity to the two Houses, let us hope the King, whose most amiable prerogative is certainly that of "mercy," will pay some little attention to his coronation-oath. Let us hope, as his coronation-oath absolutely enjoins that "mercy" shall pervade and govern all the acts of his own judgment, he will not deliberately and indelibly blot his name with so foul a stain, by lending it to either of these two merciless, unnatural, inhuman Bills.

After this seasonable, and I hope successful admonition to the Royal ear, I proceed to show my countrymen, that as the Americans have not taken any step but what is fully guaranteed by the Runnymede Treaty, so, no act of any preceding, or of the present, or of any future Parliament can either declare or enact them to be guilty of any one breach of the Constitution, and consequently they are not guilty of high treason.

That the Americans have convened a Continental Congress without any writs of Summons from the King; that they have actually called out and arrayed their Militia without any orders from Government here at home; and that they are determined to resist with an armed force certain unconstitutional Acts of the last Parliament, I readily agree with the Royalists. But, that these same Americans are guilty of high treason against the King or Kingdom, by reason of any one, or all of these self-defensive proceedings, I absolutely deny. For I neither know of, nor ever will acknowledge, any deed of the subject to be high treason but what is stipulated, ratified, and confirmed to be such by some one of our four Constitutions or definitive Treaties.

Let us see, then, by what constitutional characteristic we may infallibly know what this crime of high treason is.

From the Norman Treaty we may learn by the several Articles, "De Proditione, that it is high treason against the King where any liege subject shall insidiate the King's death, either by himself, or by hired assassins, or by his own servants." Thus stood high treason against the King till the Runnymede Treaty took effect, when this species of it was enlarged so as to include not only the King's person, but also that of his Queen, and of all their children. "Sa va persona regis, et regina, et eorum liberorum."

There is another species of high treason mentioned in the Norman Treaty, and that is, where any liege subjects of the King, or any liege men of some Baron, shall, either on a Naval or Land Expedition, desert from the Command-in-chief or his associate, through fear of the war or death, "timiditate belli vel mortis." And this is properly called high treason, not against the King singly, but against the King and Kingdom. I do not find any other high treasons affecting the subject in any one of our four Constitutions.

Agreeable then to the Constitutional Law of this Realm, I define high treason against the King to be "an insidious attempt or design of a liege subject (either with his own hand or that of his servants) to take away the life of the King, the Queen, or any of their children; but it must be done insidiously, and not otherwise."

I also define high treason against the King and Kingdom to be "a desertion of our Sea or Land Forces, either in a sea or land expedition, or in the day of battle;" but not at any other times.

Compare the present resistance of the Americans with either of these two definitions, and I shall challenge any man to point out any one stage of their conduct that amounts to high treason, or, indeed, to any crime or offence whatsoever against the British Constitution. When, for instance, were they ever charged, or suspected of any sinister attempt, or insidious design against the lives of any of the Royal family? Or, when were they ever known to have deserted in the day of battle? Can the Crown Lawyers produce any Constitution, or even any one Act of Parliament that impeaches the credit or bottomness of my definition? If not, will they submit their own definition to the same unerring criterion and fair test? Their best definition, and that in which they all concurred, was, "that to resist any Law with an armed force, is high treason." This is an imperfect, lame definition, at best, for it only defines what high treason is, but is entirely silent as to what is not high treason. Besides, how can this definition of theirs stand with the Runnymede Treaty, which imperatively enjoins, not barely licences, but absolutely, I say, enjoins, the subjects, when they find any Laws made in violation, derogation, or abrogation of any one Article of the Runnymede Treaty, to take up arms toties quoties, and resist the execution of such unconstitutional Laws, if the King for the time being shall not previously, upon Petition, have repealed the same? This is the very case at present with the Americans. Acts of Parliament have been made in oppression of them, and in express violation of the Runnymede Treaty. They have petitioned against these Acts. The King first, and afterwards the two Houses of Parliament, have turned a deaf ear to their Petitions. Obtaining no redress from King or Parliament, they have recourse to Arms. "Yes—but (say the Crown Lawyers) that very resistance, according to our definition, is high treason." What! shall that be high treason in any subjects of the British Empire, for the doing of which they not only are imperatively enjoined by, but have the guarantee and sanction of the Runnymede Treaty? Or, is there any Act of Parliament now in being, that makes the American resistance to be high treason? If not, shall an ex-post-facto Law, and that too made in glaring violation of Magna Charta, overrule, nay, abrogate, Magna Charta itself? Look over your whole range of high-treason Laws, (those excepted which I have mentioned as constitutionally such,) and what are they, in fact, but so many Parliamentary assurances of the people, that they will not call these treason-enacting Kings to public account for certain alarming deeds, which, though perhaps they may be strictly legal of themselves, yet, by an overstrained interpretation, might be adjudged to be of a doubtful, if not of a criminal nature? I scarcely recollect one high-treason Law to have been enacted, except it was during a reign in which the National Religion was abolished, or the New Religion not thoroughly established, or the hereditary succession to the Crown interrupted, or where the King upon the Throne either was a notorious usurper, or a parricide, or had murdered his uncle, his brother, his wives, or his nephews. Let me add, too, that these temporary high-treason Acts of Parliament have always been deemed so highly odious, or suspicious, that they have generally been repealed by the next immediately succeeding King, unless indeed he stood (which hath sometimes been the case) in the same predicament with his Royal predecessor. Let us hear, then, no more of a definition, which absurdly tells us, "That to resist a Law, however unconstitutional it may be, is nevertheless high treason." If this definition be admissible, I am afraid it will go so far as to make our very Statute Books guilty of high treason; for if your readers will turn to the general index of our Statute Books, under the article "King," they will there find the title of one of our Acts of Parliament running in the very words following: "Resistance of evil Administration, by War, justified." The Statute to which this title refers is penned in the old French law-language, and the translator of it has mistranslated the word "War," for an armed force, or a strong hand. I made this observation, because, by our Constitution, there is an essential distinction between an armed force and a War. The latter is applicable only where the subjects of two different Kings, or two sovereign States, are fighting against one another: by the former, we understand, here in England, and the subjects of one and the same King are fighting against each other. The word "Guerre," or War, is twice used in this Statute, and in both places it speaks of War with foreign Kings; but whenever, in this Statute, there is any mention of the resistance which the Duke of Gloucester made to the King's Troops, it is not called a "Guerre," or War, but a combatement, or combat. The same nicety of expression is sedulously observed in the Runnymede Treaty; for whenever King John uses the word "Guerre," or "Guerreina," it is clearly expressive of a war with the King of England, and some other King or Nation: for instance, "cum scimus quomodo mercatores terræ nostræ tractantur, qui inveniuntur in terra contra nos in guerreina, si nostri salva sint ibi, alii salvi sint in terrâ nostrâ." On the contrary, when this same King John mentions the resistance which the Barons made against his authority, he does not call it by the odious name of "a War," but only by that of "discord." As for example, "a tempore discordia plene omnibus remisimus et condonavimus." This distinction, I say, is essentially necessary; for every War, properly so called, between one King and another, hath always for its object (however that object may be modified or disguised) either the preservation or extension of their respective Dominions; but that resistance which in the Runnymede Treaty is called "discord," and in the Statute above alluded to is called "combat," hath no other object in view but the mere preservation of the people's rights and liberties; besides, in the former, if the King be taken prisoner, his life is forfeited; in the latter, his life is sacred; and this accounts for the justification of resistance, for if the object itself be just, then the resistance of course is justifiable.

I have been careful to simplify this distinction, because it will explain a clause in the Twenty-fifth of our Third Edward, which hath been either grossly misunderstood, or wickedly perverted, by the King's Judges. The clause I allude to is that by which "to levy War against our Lord the King, within his Realm," is declared to be high treason. And doubtless it is; not because it is one of the special prerogatives of the Crown to make or denounce War, but because the King, if taken prisoner by a subject in a War levied by a subject, would certainly meet with no quarter; and where the "salva persona regis" is not observed, there it would be high treason, and constitutionally so, which is an irrefragable, indestructible, proof of the genuineness and bottomness of my definition of high treason. But treasonable levying of War by no means concludes that species of resistance against the kingly authority, in which the Americans are at this moment actually embarked; for that resistance amounts to nothing more than "a discord," very properly so called; for the King himself may, whenever he pleases, restore it to harmony, by relaxing the over-strained, jarring, chord of Government. If, on the contrary, he attempts to strain it one note higher, the chord itself, in this over tension, may burst asunder. But even then the consequences would not be fatal to him; for should they chance to take him prisoner, he would not only be entitled to his "salva persona," but it would be unconstitutional in them to put him to death.

That levying of War, properly so called, does not extend to constitutional resistance, also plainly appears from a Proclamation in Parliament, issued by this Edward the Third, in whose reign this same Statute of high treason was ordained. For this blessed King, (as Sir Edward Coke, in his exposition of this Statute, gravely calls him,) having dethroned and imprisoned his own father, openly proclaims in Parliament, "that no person, great or small, who pursued and took his father in custody, and who still remains in custody, shall be any ways hindered, molested, or grieved, for or by reason of such pursuit and imprisonment of his said father." A similar Proclamation was also made, word for word, in Parliament, by our Fourth Henry, who, while he was only a subject, had pursued and taken into safe custody, Richard the Second; so that these Proclamations being conformant to the true spirit of the Runnymede Treaty, were matters of course; and the Proclamations above mentioned only revived and enforced that clause of the treaty, but enacted no new *Law, which no Proclamation can do.

Thus, sir, I have clearly proved that the present resistance of the Americans is imperatively enjoined by our great Charter of Liberties; that it is supported and corroborated by Statutes and Proclamations, all penned in the true spirit of our great Charter; and that it does by no means come within the description of levying War against the King, nor in any manner within the purview of the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third; and that consequently the resistance of the Americans cannot justly or constitutionally be enacted by the present or any future Parliament to be high treason.

BRECKNOCK.

CONSTITUTIONAL SOCIETY.

London, Tuesday, March 7, 1775.

The Treasurer to the Constitutional Society reported that he had received the following Letters, with the enclosed sums.

To the Constitutional Society:

GENTLEMEN: The Collector of the Land Tax received from me this week Seven Pounds Thirteen Shillings; and I know it will be employed as usual, to pay prostituted Parliament pensioners for voting away the liberty of Englishmen as well as Americans. I send you Fifteen Pounds, and for every Pound that is taken from me for the bad purposes of the present plans of Administration, I will hereafter regularly send you Two, to be applied in defence of American Liberty, and I hope others will do the same. I have no objections to pay Taxes in support of an honest Government; but will voluntarily pay double against an infamous cabal, who are openly destroying the free Constitution of this Country.

I am, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

To Richard Oliver, Esq.:

SIR: I saw in the Newspapers that the Constitutional Society had given a Hundred Pounds to the distressed inhabitants of Boston. If the trifle I send herewith is thought worthy of acceptance by the Society, I beg they would apply it to the same purpose; if not, I desire it may be returned to the person who will bring the corner that is torn off from this letter. Most of the gentlemen in my neighbourhood are desirous to assist them; and if I know it will be acceptable, I will take care to forward their subscriptions to you. Any message given to the person who will bring the torn corner of this letter will be faithfully delivered to, sir, your humble servant,

(With Twenty Pounds.)

J. J.

To Richard Oliver, Esq.:

SIR: Enclosed I send you a Bank note, of Ten Pounds, which I desire you to pay into the Constitutional Society. I mean it towards the relief and assistance of the distressed inhabitants of Boston, in America, and beg that it may make part of the next vote of supply from that Society, in favour of the Americans. Their cause is the cause of England.

* This Parliamentary Declaration divides treason into two distinct branches, namely, high and petit treason. But it is to be observed, the Lords and Commons most carefully and skilfully avoided to give their accord to that branch of it which respects high treason, and only gave their simple accord to that branch of it which specifies the offences of petit treason; so that this Statute is of force only so far as it declares what offences are petit treason, and abates, (as the Lawyers phrase it,) as to that part of it which declaratively specifies what particular crimes are high treason, and consequently leaves that heinous crime upon its proper constitutional basis. And to what particular crimes high treason is restricted by the Constitution, I have sufficiently explained and ascertained in my two definitions of it before mentioned.

What have we at home but to resist a victorious Army, which will have been tried and modeled there, and devoted to the Crown, returning to England from the conquest of America? All is at stake! The single question is, whether the King of Great Britain shall, in future, be as absolutely despotick in every part of the Empire, as a late Act of Parliament appointed him to be forever in Canada? If despotism had not been the favourite form of Government with the proposers of that Bill, they would not have established that form, when they had it at their option which to appoint. After the conquest over freedom in America, your Army will give them the same option in England; and we already know their inclinations.

I therefore set my foot here, and have as many Thousands as I now send Pounds, which I shall be willing to dedicate to the same purpose, if the situation of the Americans shall continue to require, and their conduct to deserve, support.

I am, sir, with the greatest esteem for you and the gentlemen of the Society, your humble servant, H. B. J.

To the Constitutional Society:

When the common rights of Englishmen are invaded in any part of the British Dominions, my mite shall never be wanting to assist those who struggle like men for the rights of men. This Twenty Pounds and my prayers, is all I have to give. May God prosper the honest efforts of the Americans, and make them at length the happy instruments of bringing to justice those traitors who have long trampled upon us here with impunity. And may God bless you, gentlemen, for the honest example you have set us.

WILLIAM FINCH.

The Treasurer likewise reported that he had received a Ten Pound Bank note and Four Guineas, enclosed in a cover, directed to him with these words, "To the Bostonians."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, DATED MARCH 7, 1775.

Yesterday, No. III of a periodical Paper, called "The Crisis," and a pamphlet with the same title, containing Thoughts on American Affairs, were burnt by the common hangman, at Westminster Hall gate, pursuant to an unanimous order of the House of Lords and Commons. As soon as the condemned papers were burnt, a man threw into the fire the "Address of both Houses of Parliament to His Majesty, declaring the Bostonians in actual Rebellion;" likewise the Address of the Bishops and Clergy assembled in Convocation. The Sheriffs were much hissed for attending; and the populace diverted themselves with throwing the fire at each other.

And this day, at twelve o'clock, the Sheriffs attended at the Royal Exchange for the above purpose; but as soon as the fire was lighted, it was put out, and dead dogs and cats thrown at the Officers; a fire was then made in Cornhill, and the executioner did his duty. Sheriff Hart was wounded in the wrist, and Sheriff Plomer in the breast, by a brick-bat; Mr. Gates, the City Marshal, was dismounted, and with much difficulty saved his life.

No less than three publications, under the name of The Crisis, have come under Parliamentary inquiry; the first in the year 1714, written by Sir Richard Steele, a Member of Parliament, for which he was expelled the House; and the two which were burnt at the Royal Exchange yesterday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, February 27, 1775.

Complaint was made to the House of a printed Paper, intitled, "The Crisis, No. III, Saturday, February 4, 1775, printed and published for the Authors, by T. W. Shaw, Fleet Street, opposite Anderton's Coffee-House."

The said Paper was read by the Clerk.

The Earl of Radnor moved to "Resolve, that the Paper called 'The Crisis, No. III,' is a false, daring, infamous, seditious, and treasonable libel on His Majesty, designed to alienate the affections of His Majesty's subjects from his Royal Person and Government, and to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom."

Then an amendment was proposed to be made to the said motion, by leaving out the word "treasonable."

Which being objected to, after debate, the question was put, "Whether the word 'treasonable' shall stand part of the motion?"

And it was resolved in the affirmative.

Then it was moved, "To agree to the said Resolution, as at first proposed."

Which being objected to, the question was put thereupon:

And it was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, That His Majesty's Attorney General do prosecute the Printer and Authors of the said Paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, February 27, 1775.

A complaint being made to the House of a printed Paper, intitled, "The Crisis, No. III, dated Saturday, February 4, 1775, printed and published for the Authors, by T. W. Shaw, in Fleet Street,"

The said Paper was delivered in at the Clerk's table, and read.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the said Paper is a false, scandalous, and seditious libel, highly and unjustly reflecting on His Majesty's sacred person, and tending to alienate the affections, and inflame the minds, of His Majesty's subjects against his person and Government.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That one of the said printed Papers be burnt by the hands of the common hangman in New-Palace Yard, Westminster, on Monday, the 6th day of March next, at one of the clock in the afternoon; and that another of the said printed Papers be burnt by the hands of the common hangman, before the Royal Exchange in London, on Tuesday, the 7th day of March next, at the same hour; and that the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex do attend at the said times and places respectively, and cause the same to be burnt there accordingly.

THE CRISIS.—NO. I.

To the People of ENGLAND and AMERICA:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-SUBJECTS: It is with the greatest propriety I address this paper to you. It is in your defence, at this great, this important crisis, I take the pen in hand. A crisis big with the fate of the most glorious Empire known in the records of time; and by your firmness and resolution only, it can be saved from destruction. By your firmness and resolution, you may preserve to yourselves, your immediate offspring, and latest posterity, all the glorious blessings of freedom given by Heaven to undeserving mortals; by your supineness and pusillanimity, you will entail on yourselves, your children, and millions yet unborn, misery and slavery.

It is in your defence I now stand forth to oppose the most sanguinary and despotick Court that ever disgraced a free Country. It is in your defence I now unsheath the sword of Justice, to oppose the most profligate and abandoned Administration that ever showed the weakness, or abused the confidence, of a Prince. It is in your defence I now stand forth, with a firmness and resolution becoming an Englishman determined to be free, to oppose every arbitrary and every unconstitutional Act, of a venal and corrupt majority, smuggled into the present new-fangled Court Parliament, through the villany of Lord North, and purchased with the publick money, to betray their trust, enslave the people, subvert the Protestant religion, and destroy the glory, the honour, interest, and commerce, both foreign and domestick, of England and America; and all this villanous sacrifice of a great Empire, a brave people, and the glorious truths of Heaven, to ambitious views, and to gratify the mean vindictive spirit of one, assisted by a numerous train of deputy tyrants, whose sole aim has been to trample under foot the sacred rights of mankind, and the English Constitution.

It is in your defence, and in defence of the liberties of my Country, that I now stand forth, with a fixed resolution, to oppose, and show to the world, unawed by fear, the dangerous tendency of every act of lawless power, whether it shall proceed from the King, the Lords, or the Commons.

I will endeavour, in conjunction with my fellow-labourer in this great work, to rescue the liberty of the Press (that bulwark of freedom) from the ruin with which it is now threatened, by special juries of Middlesex, and the arbitrary decisions of a Scotch Chief Justice, the glorious advocates for despotick sway. The heavy fines and cruel imprisonment of the two Woodfalls, without even the appearance of guilt, and contrary to the intention of the Jury, will be faithfully recorded by the pen of truth, and fill many pages in the black catalogue of Murray's crimes. It shall be my endeavour, in this degenerate age, to revive the dying embers of freedom, and rouse my countrymen in England from that lethargick state of supineness and inattention, in which they seem to sleep at this time of national danger, when a mighty Kingdom, and all the dearest rights of men are hastening to their ruin; that they may yet stand high on the roll of fame, equal with their brave and virtuous brethren in America, who are now struggling in the glorious cause of liberty, against the cruel oppressions and the destructive designs of exalted villains, whose actions will be transmitted to posterity in characters of blood, and their names forever branded with eternal marks of infamy; while America will remain the glory and admiration of the world, and be held in the highest veneration to the end of time. Let not the long envied glory of Britain, O my countrymen! be eclipsed by the virtuous actions of the Americans in the new world. Our danger is the same; their cause is our cause; with the constitutional rights of America, must fall the liberties of England. Let us, then, show ourselves equal to them in virtue, courage, firmness, and resolution; and as they have done, prove to the world we are alike enemies to tyranny, and that we never will be slaves to one, nor to a majority of five hundred and fifty-eight tyrants. We will strain every nerve, and brave every danger, to stimulate our countrymen on this side the Atlantick, to a noble exertion of their rights as freemen; to show them the danger, as well as the infamy, of remaining quiet spectators of their own destruction; and to remove that dark cloud of slavery, which now obscures the glorious light of freedom; and but for the virtue of our forefathers, would, ages ago, have overwhelmed this Kingdom, like the States around us, in a long, a lasting night of misery and ruin.

Upon this plan, and with these principles, we set out, and intend to proceed, with the present (if not too far degenerated) and future generations may enjoy, undiminished, all the blessings of liberty. To accomplish this end we will risk every thing that is dear to man, and brave both Royal and Ministerial vengeance, to preserve from ruin, if possible, the natural rights of mankind, the sacred Constitution of the British Empire, and the freedom of our Country.

Agreeable to our motto, we shall ever think "liberty with danger, is preferable to servitude with security." We should glory in the smiles of our Sovereign, but will never purchase them at the expense of our liberty; nor will we ever give up, but with our lives, the right to expose, and publicly display, in all its hideous forms, the cruel despotism of tyrants. We can conceive no reason why the laws and religion of England should be sported with, and trampled under foot, by a Prince of the House of Brunswick, rather than by one of the House of Stuart. Surely, upon every principle of justice, reason, and common sense, whatever is tyranny and murder in one man, is equally so in another; and if it is just to oppose and resist one, it is as just to oppose and resist the other. It is not a name, nor an office, however important, that can or ought to bring respect and reverence to the possessor, while he acts below, and is unworthy of them. Folly and villany ought to have no asylum; nor can titles sanctify crimes, though, in our days, they protect criminals. A royal, right honourable, or a right reverend robber, is the most dangerous robber, and consequently the most to be detested.

Our modern advocates for villany and slavery, have found out a new way of arguing and convincing the judgments of men; they make nice distinctions without a difference, and tell the world what was tyranny in the time of Charles the First, is not tyranny in the reign of George the Third; and to this they add a long catalogue of virtues, which he never possessed. They say he is pious; that his chief aim is to render his subjects a happy, great, and free people. These, and many other falsehoods equally wicked and absurd, they endeavour to instil into the minds of the too easily deluded English. These, and such like artifices, have ever been made use of in the reign of arbitrary Kings, to deceive the people, and make them, with more ease, and to chains well polished, submit their necks, and even reverence and adore the hand that rivets them. Thus do tyrants succeed, and the galling yoke of slavery, so much complained of by almost every Nation in the world, becomes a crime of the first magnitude in the people, through their own credulity and vile submission. Truth, in spite of all the false colouring of venal writers, speaks a different language, and declares, in opposition to the pen of falsehood, that bloodshed and slaughter, violence and oppression, Popery and lawless power, characterize the present reign; and we will defy even the pensioned Johnson, after the closest examination of the two reigns, to tell which is the best. Charles broke his coronation oath, butchered his subjects, made ten thousand solemn promises he never intended to perform, and often committed perjury; (but these are no crimes in a King, for all Kings have a divine right to be devils.) He tried to overturn the Constitution by force, but found his mistake when it was too late, and that even royal villany does not always succeed, and when the just vengeance of Heaven overtook him, he saw (though he would not believe it before, and imagined he had a divine right to shed human blood) that the same power which raised him up could pull him down. The present Sovereign, not willing to make a figure in history without a head, and being more mild and gentle, just and good, has improved upon the plan, and is now tearing up the Constitution by the roots, under the form of law. This method of proceeding is certainly much safer, and more judicious, as well as just; for what right can an Englishman have to complain, when he is legally made a slave by Act of Parliament. How wicked! how rebellious! must the Americans be, and what levelling principles must they possess, to resist the divine right of the Lords and Commons, under the sanction of a divine Act of Parliament, sent from Heaven to plunder, butcher, starve, or enslave them, just as it shall come into their divine heads, or the heads of their divine instruments; and when once they have carried this divine law into execution, according to their righteous intention, we shall soon see, on this side the Atlantick, that they have the same divine right to use us in the same merciful and divine manner. This is but the first divine step of a diabolical plan for shedding human blood, reducing an industrious, brave, flourishing, and free people, from a state of affluence to that of misery, beggary, and slavery; and nothing but a resolution in the people here, will be able to prevent the next divine step of the same plan, from laying in ruins all the rights of the British, with those of the American, world.

The altar of despotism is erected in America, and we shall be the next victims to lawless power; all the horrors of slavery now stare us in the face; our religion subverted; freedom, law, and right, artfully undermined; the Roman Catholick religion not tolerated but established; a majority of the House of Commons and the House of Lords mere creatures of the King; in short, every engine of oppression and arbitrary power is at work, to accomplish our ruin.

O, my countrymen, that we could but inspire you with noble sentiments of liberty, rouse you to a just sense of your immediate danger, and make you feel, sensibly feel, all the blessings derived from freedom, the natural right of every man, but more particularly of Englishmen; it is our birthright, our inheritance; it was handed down to us by our ancestors, and sealed often with their blood. Let us, then, in justice to them, to ourselves, and to posterity, make a noble constitutional stand, in conjunction with our noble and spirited, but suffering, fellow-subjects in America, against the present plan, long fixed by the minions of power to destroy it, and overturn the Constitution, a Constitution ten thousand times superiour to any system ever devised by the Greeks or Romans.

At such a time as this, when the merciless, the relentless hand of tyranny is tearing out the vitals of freedom, sapping the foundations of publick security, making a mockery of publick justice, and destroying all the envied rights of Britain, and the truths of Heaven;—I say, at such a time, to be inattentive or inactive, is infamy; and he who can tamely see his Country upon the brink of ruin, without putting out his arm, and lending a helping hand to rescue her from destruction, must be an abandoned wretch, a disgrace to the name of Englishman, and to his Country.

THE CRISIS.—NO. II.

A bloody Court, a bloody Ministry, and a bloody Parliament.

The sudden and unexpected dissolution of the last ruinous Parliament, gave a just and general alarm to the whole Nation; and we may search in vain the voluminous pages of Grecian, Roman, or English history, to find such another plan of premeditated villany, for destroying, at one grand stroke of Royal and Ministerial policy, all the rights of a free people. Lord North, engendered in the womb of Hell; raised by the fostering hand of infernal spirits; and possessing principles which have eclipsed all the glories of his satanick parents, had the effrontery to declare, in the face of the House of Commons, and the world, but a few day before the recess of the late Parliament, that they should meet again early in October for the despatch of business. When he uttered the falsehood, it was suspected by many, and he well knew it had been determined that they should be dissolved, although the precise time was not fixed. On the 16th day of September, 1774, a notice was published in the Gazette for the last Parliament to meet on the 15th of November; eleven days had not elapsed before a Proclamation appeared for its dissolution, and calling a new Parliament. Who can guard against deception, artifice, and villany, when stamped with Royal authority? The very thought of an honest House of Commons struck terror into the guilty soul of Lord North, the diabolical minion of Royal favour, and instrument of Royal vengeance; nay, even the King, virtuous as he is, had his fears; and in order to secure their own creatures and dependants, or, in other words, to have the old Parliament revived, and smuggle a majority of venal, abandoned miscreants, who would deny their God, or sell their souls for money, into the present House of Commons, Lord North sent letters to all his friends, that they might be prepared; and it was known in the most distant parts of England, and even the time of election fixed in several Boroughs in Cornwall, some days before the Parliament was dissolved. This is a truth which Lord North, with all his consummate impudence, cannot deny.

The Ministerial hacks were again set to work, to fabricate lies, and publish them in the Newspapers, to elude and deceive the electors, that little or no opposition might be made to the tools of Government. One report said the dissolution of Parliament was owing to some disagreeable advices received from America; and that our virtuous King, with his still more virtuous Ministers, intended to adopt some conciliating measures with respect to the Colonies; and that it would betray a weakness in the King to let the same Parliament meet again to repeal those Acts which they but a few months before passed. Another report, equally true, asserted it was on account of intelligence received from the North, of a very alarming nature. And a third, that it was occasioned by a difference between the French and English Ministry, which rendered such a step necessary, as there was great reason to believe we should soon be involved in War, and that it would be exceedingly improper to have the Nation put in a ferment by a general election at so critical a time as that, and when the assistance of Parliament would be particularly wanted. A fourth report was, that Lord Chatham and his friends would be immediately taken into favour, and that there was to be an entire change in the Ministry. By these low artifices and Ministerial lies, the people of England were lulled into a state of supineness, and even made to lend a helping hand to complete their own ruin.

The subsequent part of this paper will unravel the diabolical scheme. Lord North saw a powerful opposition forming in every part of England; he was fearful of associations—he dreaded a Solemn League and Covenant, which he was certain the people would have entered into for the preservation of their rights and liberties, before next May, the time when the Parliament would have been dissolved of course; he trembled for the event, conscious of his own villany, and that his head had been long forfeited to the justice of his Country; he determined to take the electors by surprise, to put them off their guard, and rob them of time, that no opposition might be made to his creatures; and the people being prevented from fixing upon men of honest, independent principles, to whom they might with safety, delegate the important, the sacred trust of representation.

Lord North communicated his fears to the King; painted the daring rebellious spirit of the Americans; and told him that the people here were as disloyal and disaffected, and that hints had been thrown out in the publick prints, of plans forming in different parts of England for keeping out of the new Parliament most of his friends, and unless prevented by some well-concerted scheme, there was but too much reason to believe, from the spirit of the people, that they would succeed; an event, says this traitor, much feared, and greatly dreaded by every well-wisher to your person and Government, should it ever take place; and there is a Country party, or a majority of mock Patriots in the House of Commons, who are enemies to all order and Government—you must be reduced to the most degrading situation; indeed, your present friends will then be unable to give you any assistance; and instead of the power being in your hands, it will then be in the hands of the people; and you will be under the disgraceful necessity of giving your assent to the repeal of every Act which has been lately passed for the purpose of raising a revenue, and enforcing a due obedience to your authority. In short, you will be a King without power, and subject to the control of a few demagogues for liberty—the dregs of mankind—and a common rabble who will always support them; nay, it may even endanger the security of your Throne; for what will not a hot-headed Parliament do, with whom the voice of the people can have any weight. The plan for reducing the Americans, and making them dependant on your will, must be crushed; they will triumph in the victory obtained over the just power of Parliament, and your prerogative; your faithful servants will be compelled to leave you, and you will be without a real friend to advise with. If your Majesty can get a majority of your friends rechosen in the new Parliament, you will be able to raise what money you please, with their assistance; you will then be able to keep your present Ministers, and preserve them from the resentment (which has been incurred by serving you) of an enraged rabble, who are made to believe, through the licentiousness of the press, that they labour under a load of accumulated grievances. You will then be able to trample under foot faction, sedition, and rebellion throughout your Dominions, and to carry every thing before you, agreeable to your Royal pleasure. With the power of Parliament, and your Majesty's firmness and perseverance, you may bring England and America into a proper state of subjection to your will. To accomplish this, it will be necessary to prorogue the Parliament to some future day, then to meet, and immediately after call a Council and dissolve them; in the mean time, your friends may be made acquainted with the determination, and be prepared for the election, before any opposition can possibly be made, or the people know any thing of the matter.

The King, firmly resolved on the people's ruin, caressed his villanous minion, admired the plan formed for our destruction, and, drunk with the prerogative, he sucked in the baneful advice, and pursued it.

Thus the present Parliament was smuggled; and thus, in a most shameful, unprecedented, artful, and sudden manner, was the last House of Commons dissolved by the King, to answer his own and his Minister's wicked, tyrannical, and bloody designs against the people and Constitution of this Kingdom. Such an instance of an infamous exertion of the Royal prerogative, and under the like circumstances, is not to be found in the history of England; such an injury and insult was never before offered to a free people, and never ought to be forgiven. It was a piece of Hanoverian treachery, baseness, and ingratitude, which has far exceeded all the artful villany and low cunning of the discarded Stuarts. His Majesty, (Heaven protect so much goodness,) out of a tenderness to the Constitution, could not make so bad a use of his prerogative, five years back, as to dissolve the same Parliament, when their iniquitous proceedings, and their violations of justice had roused the indignation of the people, and he was requested to do it by upwards of eighty thousand freeholders, (signed,) and the general voice of the whole Nation. But in 1774 he got the better of that tenderness; and to answer his own purposes, could exert the Royal prerogative, which he had absolutely refused to his subjects in the haughty terms of a despot, with no other view but to overturn the Constitution of the British Empire, in England and America, and destroy or enslave the people.

His Majesty, his minions, and instruments of slaughter, are now safe in robbing the people of their property, by shameful and iniquitous taxes, in time of peace; safe in their subversion of the Protestant Religion; safe and successful in their cruel plan for starving the honest and industrious inhabitants, and destroying the trade of the Town of Boston, in America, and the Commerce of England; safe so far in their attempt to destroy the lives, rights, liberties, and privileges of millions; I say they are safe in all these violations of, and depredations on our National security, and natural rights—because we are tame.

THE CRISIS.—NO. III.

To the King:

SIR: To follow you regularly through every step of a fourteen years' shameful and inglorious reign, would be a task as painful as disagreeable, and far exceed the bounds of this paper: But we are called upon by the necessity of the times, the measures you are pursuing, by every principle of justice and self-preservation, and by the duty we owe to God and our Country, to declare our sentiments (with a freedom becoming Englishmen) on some of those dreadful transactions and oppressions which the Kingdom has laboured under since the glory and lustre of England's Crown was doomed to fade upon your brow; and to point out to you, Sir, your own critical and dangerous situation.

Sir, it is not your rotten troop, in the present House of Commons; it is not your venal, beggarly, pensioned Lords; it is not your polluted, canting, prostituted Bench of Bishops; it is not your whole set of abandoned Ministers; nor all your army of Scotch cut-throats, that can protect you from the People's rage, when driven by your oppressions, and, until now, unheard of cruelties, to a state of desperation.

The day, we fear, is not far distant, when you will have reason, too much reason, to wish you had acted like a father, and not like a tyrant; when you will be bound to curse those traitors, those exalted villains, who now, in the face of day, without a blush, you can be base enough to call your friends. Be assured, Sir, your danger is great, amidst all the fancied security; and it will be impossible for them to preserve you from the just resentment of an enraged, long abused, and much injured Nation. Should that day ever come, (but Heaven avert the stroke,) where can you hide yourself from the tenfold vengeance of a brave and mighty people, with law, justice, Heaven, and all their sacred truths on their side?

Then, like the wounds that bleed afresh, will be brought to their minds your barbarous and unprovoked massacre in St. George's Fields; when men and women were indiscriminately and inhumanly slaughtered, to gratify what would have disgraced even your footman—a pitiful revenge! Then, Sir, they will remember with horror and indignation, the letter of thanks, sent from the Secretary at War, by your order, to the Officer on duty, the 10th of May, 1768, (the day of carnage,) and likewise your pensioning and screening the murderers from the punishment of the law. Then, Sir, they will remember, the horrid plan laid at Brentford, for destroying the right of election; or in the most savage manner to take away the lives of the Freeholders of Middlesex, which was (to make use of a word from your merciful Royal dictionary,) effectually carried into execution, and several people killed; to this plan, Sir, formed by Proctor and your minions, you must have been privy, as the event afterwards sufficiently proved. Then, Sir, they will remember the mean, low, and criminal subterfuge you had recourse to, to dispense with the laws, and set aside the just verdict of an honest jury, to pardon those hired ruffians, Balf and McQuirk, convicted upon the clearest evidence, of premeditated murder. Then, Sir, they will remember the insults they received, and the ignoble answers you gave to the remonstrances and petitions, delivered by them to the Throne, praying the dissolution of Parliament. Nor will they forget, Sir, the infernal plan for smuggling the present House of Commons, and destroying all the rights of this free Country. In a word, Sir, these and every other despotick and bloody transaction of your reign will rise fresh in their minds, if they should be driven by your encouragement of Popery, your persecutions, your oppressions, your violations of all justice, your treachery, and your weakness, into a fatal and unnatural Civil War in America; I say, they will rise fresh in their minds, and stimulate them to deeds of glory; nay, they may pursue with implacable revenge the author of all their miseries.

The people, Sir, with a candour and indulgence peculiar to Englishmen, passed over the injuries and insults in the first part of your reign, or kindly laid the blame at the door of your Ministers; but it is now evident to the whole world, that there was a plan formed by Lord Bute and yourself, either before, or immediately after you came to the Crown, for subverting the British Constitution in Church and State; which, to our grief, with indefatigable pains and too much success, Lord Bute's tools, and your infernal minions, have carried into execution; therefore it no longer remains to determine who is now the greatest criminal in England.

Consider, Sir, if, through the late and present iniquitous measures, and an obstinate resolution in your Majesty to pursue them, the sword is forced to be drawn in America, it cannot remain long unsheathed in England. We hope there is some virtue here; and we entertain a better opinion of our countrymen than to believe they are so far degenerated as to tamely see a mercenary army of soldiers, who are at all times a terror to the peaceable inhabitants of every free State, butcher their brethren and fellow-subjects in America, because they are determined to defend their own rights and the British Constitution. I say they never will tamely see that, without putting out a helping hand, and sharing with them the glory of a decisive victory over tyranny, and all the agents of the infernal monarch of the dark regions of hell, who would enslave the world.

Should you, Sir, still pursue the tyrannical measures, only to gratify a mean vindictive spirit, and be the author of such dreadful mischiefs, O, we shudder at the thought, the people will then perhaps treat you with as little ceremony, as little respect, and as little mercy, as you and your minions have them; for, Sir, whenever the State is convulsed by civil commotions, and the Constitution totters to its centre, the Throne of England must shake with it; a Crown will then be no security, and at one stroke all the gaudy trappings of royalty may be laid in the dust; at such a time of dreadful confusion and slaughter, when the son's weapon drinks the father's blood, and we see the ruffian's blade reeking from a brother's heart; when rage is burning in the breasts of Englishmen, provoked by wrongs not to be borne by men, all distinctions must cease, the common safety and the rights of mankind will be the only objects in view, while the King and the peasant must share one and the same fate, and perhaps fall undistinguished together.

Let these things, Sir, be well weighed; tremble for the event; drive those traitors from your breast, who now surround you; let the just and honest have your confidence; and once more make your people happy, great and free; be not the instrument of their destruction; consider the solemn and sacred oath you made at your coronation to protect your subjects in all their rights and liberties, and the Protestant Religion as by Law established: consider, Sir, what a perversion of all right and justice that must be (besides the heinous crime of perjury,) when, instead of being their protector, you become their destroyer.

Your plan, Sir, for bringing the Colonies by force of arms into a state of subjection to your will, is cruel, bloody, and (I hope) impracticable; it is repugnant to every principle of humanity, justice, and sound policy, and the natural rights of mankind; it is the foulest disgrace to you, and will reflect eternal infamy on your reign and memory as the Sovereign and father of a free people. It is such a plan of encroaching violence and lawless power, as the Americans never can, never ought, nor ever will, submit to; it is such a scheme for enslaving, or destroying the human race, as every man ought to execrate and condemn, and to oppose even till he perish.

Men, Sir, at three thousand miles distance, must think it extremely hard to work, toil, and run hazards, only to support the infamous luxury of high pampered Lords, a rotten Court, and your tribe of venal Senators, minions, pimps, and parasites—the pests of society; and to be taxed and mulcted by them at their pleasure. All nature, Sir, revolts even at the idea of such a state of human misery.

Force, Sir, can never be used effectually to answer the end, without destroying the Colonies themselves. Liberty and encouragement are necessary to keep them together; and violence will hinder both. Any body of Troops, considerable enough to awe them, keep them in subjection, and under the direction of a needy Scotch Governour, sent only to be an instrument of slaughter, and to make his fortune, would soon put an end to planting, and leave the country to you, Sir, and your merciless plunderers only; and if it did not, they would starve the inhabitants and eat up all the profit of the Colonies. On the contrary, a few prudent laws, Sir, (but you seem to be a stranger to prudence as well as to justice and humanity,) and a little prudent conduct, (that, too, has long been despaired of by the Kingdom,) would soon give us far the greatest share of the riches of all America; perhaps drive other Nations out of it, or into our Colonies for shelter.

If violent methods be not used (at this time) to prevent it, your Northern Colonies, Sir, must constantly increase in people, wealth, and power; their inhabitants are considerably more than doubled since the Revolution; and in less than a century must become powerful States; and the more powerful, the more people will flock thither. There are so many exigencies in all States, so many foreign wars and domestic disturbances, that these Colonies can seldom want opportunities, if they watch for them, to do what you, Sir, might be extremely sorry for—throw off their dependance on the Mother Country; therefore, Sir, it should be your first and greatest care, that it shall never be their interest to act against that of their native Country; an evil that can no otherwise be averted, than by keeping them fully employed in such trades as will increase their own, as well as our wealth; for, Sir, there is too much reason to fear, if you don't find employment for them, they may find some for you. Withdraw, then, Sir, from America, your armed ruffians, and make a full restoration of the people's rights; let them tax themselves, and enjoy their property unviolated by the hand of tyranny. Thus, Sir, the subsequent part of your reign may yet be happy and glorious. May the compact between you and the people be no more invaded; may you be speedily reconciled to the just demands of the Colonies; may Lord Bute, Lord Mansfield, Lord North, and all your Majesty's infamous minions, who would precipitate you and the Kingdom into ruin, answer with their heads (and soon) for their horrid crimes; and may the succession in your Majesty's Royal House, and the Religion, Laws, Rights and Liberties, of the subject, go hand in hand down to all posterity, until this globe shall be reduced to its original chaos, and time be swallowed up in eternity.

THE CRISIS.—NO. IV.

To the Conspirators against the Liberties of mankind, at St. James's, in St. Stephen's Chapel, the House of Lords, or amongst the Bench of Bishops.

The steady and uniform perseverance in a regular plan of despotism, since the commencement of this reign, makes it evident to the meanest capacity, that a design was formed (and it has with too much success been carried into execution) for subverting the Religion, Laws, and Constitution of this Kingdom, and to establish upon the ruins of public liberty, an arbitrary system of Government: in a word, the destruction of this Kingdom will soon be effected by a Prince of the House of Brunswick.

The bloody Resolution has passed the House of Commons and the House of Lords, to address our present humane, gentle Sovereign, to give directions for enforcing the cruel and unjust edicts of the last Parliament against the Americans. His Majesty, possessing principles which nothing can equal but the goodness of his heart, will no doubt give immediate orders for carrying effectually into execution the massacre in America; especially as he is to be supported in polluting the earth with blood with the lives and fortunes of his faithful butchers—the Lords and Commons. Would to God they only were to fall a sacrifice in this unnatural Civil War.

The day of trial is at hand; it is time to prove the virtue, and rouse the spirit of the people of England; the prospect is too dreadful, it is too melancholy to admit of farther delay.

The Lord Mayor of London ought immediately to call a Common-Hall for the purpose of taking the sense of his fellow-citizens at this alarming crisis, upon presenting a remonstrance to the Throne, couched in terms that might do honour to the City, as the first and most powerful in the world, and to them as men determined to be free; in terms that might strike conviction into his Majesty's breast, and terour into the souls of his minions. This is not a time for compliments, nor should tyrants, or the instruments of tyranny ever be complimented.

The Merchants of London, it is to be hoped, and the whole commercial interest of England, will exert themselves upon this great occasion, by sending to the Throne spirited and pointed remonstrances, worthy of Englishmen; by noble and generous subscriptions; and in every other manner, give all the relief, and all the assistance in their power, to their oppressed and injured fellow-subjects in America.

Let them heartily join the Americans, and see whether tyranny and lawless power, or reason, justice, Heaven, truth, and liberty, will prevail.

Let them, together with the gentlemen of landed property, who must greatly suffer by this unnatural Civil War, make a glorious stand against the enemies of publick freedom, and the constitutional rights of the Colonies; for, with the ruin of America, must be involved that of England.

Let them, in plain terms, declare their own strength, and the power of the people; a power that has hitherto withstood the united efforts of fraud and tyranny; a power which raises them to a Throne; and when unworthy of their delegated trust, can pull them down.

Let them declare to the world they will never be so base and cowardly as quietly to see any part of their fellow-subjects butchered or enslaved, either in England or America, to answer the purpose of exalted villany; and by that means become the detested instruments of their own destruction.

Let them declare to the world they are not yet ripe for slavery; that their forefathers made a noble resistance, and obtained a decisive victory over tyranny and lawless power, when the Stuarts reigned; that they are determined to do themselves justice, and not to suffer any farther attacks upon their freedom, from the present Sovereign, who is exceedingly desirous, as well as ambitious, to destroy the liberties of mankind, but that they do insist upon a restoration of their own violated rights, and the rights of British America. Let them enter into an Association for the preservation of their lives, rights, liberties, and privileges, and resolve at once to bring the whole legion of publick traitors, who have wickedly entered into a conspiracy to destroy the dear-bought rights of this free Nation, to condign punishment, for their past and present diabolical proceedings, which have already stained the land with blood, and threatened destruction to the human race.

A few spirited resolutions from the City of London, and the whole body of Merchants of England, would strike terour into the souls of those miscreants—the authors of these dreadful publick mischiefs.

The grand principle of self-preservation, which is the first and fundamental law of nature, calls aloud for such exertions of publick spirit; the security of the Nation depends upon it; justice, and the preservation of our own, and the lives of our fellow-subjects in America, demand it; the very being of the Constitution makes it necessary ; and whatever is necessary to the publick safety must be just.

The present conspirators against the happiness of mankind ought to know that no subterfuges, no knavish subtilties, no evasions, no combinations, nor pretended commissions, shall be able to screen or protect them from publick justice. They ought to know that the PEOPLE can follow them through all their labyrinths and doubling meanders ; a power confined by no limitations but of publick justice and the publick good ; a power that does not always follow precedents, but makes them ; a power which has this for its principle, that extraordinary and unprecedented villanies ought to have extraordinary and unprecedented punishments.

To the Officers, Soldiers, and Seamen, who may be employed to butcher their Relations, Friends, and Fellow-Subjects in AMERICA.

You can neither be ignorant of, nor unacquainted with, the arbitrary steps that the present King, supported by an abandoned Ministry, a venal set of prostituted Lords and Commons, is now pursuing to overturn the sacred Constitution of the British Empire, which he had sworn to preserve.

You are not, or will not long be ignorant, that the King, the Lords and Commons, have (to satiate their revenge against a few individuals) declared the whole people of America to be in a state of rebellion, only because they have avowed their resolution to support their Charters, Rights, and Liberties against the secret machinations of designing men ; who would destroy them, and you are fixed upon as the instruments of their destruction. However, I entertain too good an opinion of you, to believe there is one true Englishman who will undertake the bloody work. Men without fortunes, principles, or connexions, may indeed handle their arms in any desperate cause, to oblige a tyrant or monster in human shape ; but men of family or fortune, or of honest principles, I hope could never be prevailed upon to sheath their swords in the bowels of their countrymen. Englishmen surely cannot be found to execute so diabolical a deed, to imbrue their hands in innocent blood, and fight against their friends and Country ; actions which must brand them with perpetual marks of reproach and infamy.

O my countrymen, let neither private interest nor friendship, neither relations nor connexions, prevail with or induce you to obey (as you must answer at the last day before the awful Judge of the world for the blood that will be wantonly and cruelly spilt) the murderous orders of an inhuman tyrant ; who, to gratify his lust of power, would lay waste the world. No, rather enter into a solemn league, and join with the rest of your countrymen, to oppose the present measures of Government, planned for our ruin.

When your Country calls, then stand forth and defend the cause of liberty, despise the degeneracy of the age, the venality of the times, and hand freedom down to posterity, that your children may smile and bless, not curse your warlike resolution. To die gloriously fighting for the Laws and Liberties of your Country, is honourable, and would deserve a crown of martyrdom ; to die fighting against it is infamy, and you would forever deserve the heaviest curses and execrations.

I hope neither you nor the Irish have forgot the shameful insults you have received from the King ever since the conclusion of the last war ; you have been despised, neglected, and treated with contempt, while a parcel of beggarly Scotchmen only have been put into places of profit and trust, in the East and West-Indies, in England and America, and the preference has, of honour and promotions, been constantly given to those people ; nay ! even to rebels, and some who have served in the French service. Be assured if you can be prevailed upon to butcher or enslave your fellow-subjects, and to set up an arbitrary power on the ruins of publick liberty, that your substance would soon be reduced to the miserable pittance of Foreign Troops ; and you, with the surviving subjects of England and America, be reduced to the miserable condition of being ruled by an army of Scotch Janizaries, assisted by Roman Catholics.

Let every English and Irish Officer, Soldier, and Seaman, seriously weigh these things, and then, if they are valiant, courageous, magnanimous, and free, like their forefathers ; if they are true to their King and their Country ; if they value their religion, laws, lives, liberties, families, and posterity, no consideration can prevail with them to engage against the Americans in an inhuman, bloody civil war.

Let every man, then, who is really and truly a Protestant, who wishes well to his Country and the rights of mankind, lay aside his prejudices and consider the cause of America, and her success in this struggle for freedom, as a thing of the last consequence to England, upon which our salvation depends ; for the present plan of Royal despotism is a plan of general ruin. I say, let us all speedily unite, and endeavour to defend them from their open, and ourselves from our own secret and domestick enemies ; and if any are lukewarm in this great publick cause, and at this time of imminent danger, let them be made an example of treachery and cowardice, that the present generation may detest and abhor them, and posterity exclaim against and curse them, as unnatural monsters, who would destroy the human race.

THE CRISIS.—NO. V.

To the People :

At a juncture like the present, when the National reputation of Britain, as well as her absolute safety, stands tottering on the brink of destruction ; when Liberty and Freedom, the great pillars of the Constitution, are, by force and fraud, undermined, and tumbling into ruins ; when the bloody sword of tyranny is drawn against America, and soon to be plunged into the bowels of her innocent inhabitants ; when the present Sovereign, aided by a despicable junto, the rebel, outcast, and refuse of Scotland, and a Parliament not returned by the free suffrages of the People, are rioting with impunity in the spoils of an insulted powerful Kingdom ; when they, by cruel oppression, have spread terror and civil war in every part of the British Empire ; when they have destroyed or suspended her trade, and sapped the credit of publick security ; when the most iniquitous and unjust Laws are daily passed to curb the spirit, and bind in chains the hands of a brave and free People ; when St. James's is made the slaughter-house of America ; when the Sovereign has become a National Executioner, and for a sceptre carries a bloody knife ; when, by a most scandalous and shameful profusion of the publick money, we are hourly robbed and plundered to answer all the purposes of kingcraft and villany ; when new Taxes are daily imposed upon the People in time of peace, to the almost entire ruin of the State ; when the minions of despotism are increasing the Land Forces, for the open and avowed purpose of wading knee-deep in blood through the Liberties of Britain ; when the Protestant Religion is openly subverted, and the British subjects in Canada deprived of those great securities of their personal liberty and property—the Habeas Corpus Act, and Trial by Juries ; when a suspending and dispensing power is assumed by the Crown ; when opposition to the most cruel and wanton acts of lawless power is deemed Rebellion ; when the Senators, designed as the protectors of the People, are become their destroyers ; when the appointed guardians of publick freedom are become base apostates and conspirators against the Liberties of mankind ; when neither oaths nor conscience can bind the Sovereign or his Ministers ; when both publick and private justice is denied to a subject, nay, to the whole body of the People at large ; when our lives are exposed to false accusations, and our persons to arbitrary imprisonment and heavy fines ; when the Judges before whom we are to stand upon life and death, and before whom all cases concerning liberty and property must be brought, are too much devoted to the will and pleasure of the Crown, and enemies to the natural rights of mankind ; when Juries, who are to decide our fate, are packed, bribed, or modeled to the pernicious designs of a wicked and detestable Ministry ; when every post, Civil, Naval, and Military, is filled by Northern flatterers and their adherents, by men of no principles, by parasites, pimps, catnites, and the advocates for arbitrary power ; when the People can see nothing but misery and slavery before their eyes ; when this vast and mighty Empire, the admiration and envy of the world, is, through corruption and villany, fallen into ruins :

At such a juncture as this, and under these dreadful and alarming circumstances of experienced and impending danger, it becomes the duty of every Englishman to stand forth to defend his life, his liberty, and his property, from lawless violence, and to save his Country from perdition.

So highly did our brave and worthy ancestors value and esteem their rights, liberties, and privileges, that they spared neither blood nor treasure in their defence, when invaded, as they too often were, by some of our Kings, who, in the pursuit of lawless power, pulled down all the fences of liberty, and broke in, like the present Sovereign, upon the Constitution, so far that the lives, liberties, and properties of the subjects of this Realm were hourly in danger, and many fell sacrifices to Royal or Ministerial vengeance.

Then it was, that our generous forefathers nobly associated themselves in defence of their inherent and legal rights, and made an offering of the best and choicest blood in the Kingdom to the shrine of Liberty, that we, their posterity, might be free and happy. To them and the glorious struggles they made with power, we owe all the blessings we enjoy, and the English Constitution—our greatest boast and their greatest glory.

It was in such times as these, when our brave progenitors behaved like Britons; with a true patriot-zeal, with which almost every breast was fired, they spurned the yoke, and broke the chains that were prepared for them, letting their King and his minions know they would not suffer him nor them to destroy their birthrights, and dispense with the known laws of the land, by which they were resolved to be governed, and not by his will, or any other lawless power upon earth.

Let us at this time, in this hour of imminent danger, follow so bright and glorious an example, by a well-timed, noble resistance to the present Royal and Ministerial plan for subverting the Laws and Religion, and overturning the Constitution of the British Empire in England and America; a resistance that will secure freedom to posterity, and immortal honour to ourselves. The field of glory is open before us; let us rouse from a state of apathy, and exert ourselves in a manner becoming of Englishmen, worthy of men who love liberty, and deserve to be free. Let us show to the world we are not to be enslaved by one nor by five thousand tyrants; for the sons of cruelty, corruption, and despotism, will pursue their bloody designs with great vigour, and with all the unrelenting malice of barbarians, against our fellow-subjects in America, in proportion as we are tame and acquiescing; and if once they can succeed, through our baseness and cowardice, the sword will be immediately turned against us—the sacred Constitution of our Empire dissolved, and we shall fall despised, unlamented, and detested, into the same horrible gulf of arbitrary power.

Let us take advantage of the present opportunity, while our resentments boil high; while every English breast is fired with indignation against those who are the authors of all our past and present calamities, which now convulse the State to its centre. Let us by all proper, just, and legal means, exemplarily punish the parricides, and avowed enemies of mankind. Let neither private acquaintance nor personal alliance stand between us and our duty to our Country. Let all who have an interest in the publick safety join in common measures to defend the publick safety. Let us pursue to disgrace, destruction, and even death, all those who have brought this ruin upon us, let them be ever so great, or ever so many. Let us stamp and deep engrave, in characters legible to all Europe at present, and to all posterity hereafter, what vengeance is due to crimes which have no less objects in view than the ruin of Nations and the destruction of millions. Let us frustrate their present desperate and wicked attempt to destroy America, by joining with our injured fellow-subjects, and bravely striking one honest and bold stroke to destroy them. Nay, although the designs of the conspirators should be laid deep as the centre; although they should raise hell itself, and should fetch legions of votaries from thence to avow their proceedings; yet, let us not leave the pursuit till we have their heads and their estates.

Hear part of the Address of your injured and oppressed fellow-subjects in America, to you, upon this melancholy occasion—upon the dreadful prospect of impending ruin. Let every Englishman lay his hand upon his heart, and declare whether he does not think they have been most cruelly treated; and whether he can, in justice, conscience, and humanity, draw the sword against them; or whether he would not rather join with them, and endeavour to obtain a decisive victory over tyranny, or fall gloriously with the liberties of his Country. These are their words:

“When a Nation, led to greatness by the hand of Liberty, and possessed of all the glory that heroism, munificence, and humanity can bestow, descends to the ungrateful task of forging chains for her friends and children; and instead of giving support to freedom, turns advocate for slavery and oppression, there is reason to suspect she has either ceased to be virtuous, or been extremely negligent in the appointment of her rulers.

“In almost every age, in repeated conflicts, in long and bloody wars, as well civil as foreign, against the many powerful Nations, against the open assaults of enemies, and more dangerous treachery of friends, have the inhabitants of your Island—your great and glorious ancestors—maintained their independence, and transmitted the rights of men and the blessings of liberty to you their posterity.

“Be not surprised, therefore, that we, who are descendants from the same common ancestors; that we, whose forefathers participated in all the rights, the liberties, and the Constitution you so justly boast, and who have carefully conveyed the same fair inheritance to us, guaranteed by the plighted faith of Government, and the most solemn compacts with British Sovereigns, should refuse to surrender them to men who found their claims on no principles of reason, and who prosecute them with a design that, by having our lives and property in their power, they may, with the greater facility, enslave you.

“The cause of America is now the object of universal attention; it has at length become very serious. This unhappy Country has not only been oppressed, but abused and misrepresented; and the duty we owe ourselves and posterity, to your interest, and the general welfare of the British Empire, leads us to address you on this very important subject.

“We call upon you yourselves to witness our loyalty and attachment to the common interest of the whole Empire. Did we not, in the last war, add all the strength of this vast Continent to the force which repelled our common enemy? Did we not leave our native shores, and meet disease and death, to promote the success of the British Arms in foreign climates? Did you not thank us for our zeal, and even reimburse us large sums of money, which you confessed we had advanced beyond our proportion, and far beyond our abilities? You did.

“To what causes, then, are we to attribute the sudden change of treatment, and that system of slavery which was prepared for us at the restoration of peace?

“Let justice and humanity cease to be the boast of your Nation! Consult your history, examine your records of former transactions; nay, turn to the annals of the many arbitrary States and Kingdoms that surround you, and show us a single instance of men being condemned to suffer for imputed crimes, unheard, unquestioned, and without even the specious formality of a trial; and that, too, by laws made expressly for the purpose, and which had no existence at the time of the fact committed. If it be difficult to reconcile these proceedings to the genius and temper of your Laws and Constitution, the task will become more arduous when we call upon Ministerial enemies to justify, not only condemning men untried, and by hearsay, but involving the innocent in one common punishment with the guilty; and for the act of thirty or forty, to bring poverty, distress, and calamity on thirty thousand souls, and those not your enemies, but your friends, brethren, and fellow-subjects.

“Admit that the Ministry, by the power of Britain and the aid of our Roman Catholick neighbours, should be able to carry the point of Taxation, and reduce us to a state of perfect humiliation and slavery, such an enterprise would doubtless make some addition to your National debt, which already presses down your liberties, and fills you with pensioners and placemen. We presume, also, that your Commerce will somewhat be diminished. However, suppose you should prove victorious, in what condition will you then be? What advantage or what laurels will you reap from such a conquest?

"May not a Ministry, with the same Armies, enslave you? It may be said, you will cease to pay them; but remember the Taxes from America; the wealth, and we may add the men, particularly the Roman Catholics of this vast Continent, will then be in the power of your enemies. Nor will you have any reason to expect that, after making slaves of us, many among us should refuse to assist in reducing you to the same abject state."

THE CRISIS.—NO. VI.

To the Right Honourable Lord NORTH, first Lord of the Treasury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Ranger of Bushy Park, &c.

MY LORD: We know not which is most to be detested, your Lordship's pusillanimity, or your villany. Such a miscreant never before disgraced the administration of any Country, nor the confidence of any King. One day you are all fire and sword; Boston is to be laid in ashes, and the rivers of America are to run with the blood of her inhabitants; Ships are prepared, Troops embarked, and Officers appointed for the threatened carnage. You no sooner find the brave Americans are determined to resist your instruments of slaughter, and to oppose the cruel designs of a despotick tyrant, or rob them of their rights, than all the bravadoing and all the blustering of your Lordship is immediately softened into a calm, and you relax; fear seizes your dastardly soul, and you sink beneath the weight of accumulated guilt.

One day we hear of nothing but accusations, proscriptions, impeachments, and bills of attainder against the Patriots of America, and they are speedily to be apprehended, and to receive a punishment due to their crimes—due to rebels. Three days do not elapse, before this just and noble resolution of your Lordship to bring those traitors to a trial is dropped, and lenient, or no steps are to be taken against them. Another day all the Colonies are in a state of rebellion, and the last advices received from America, you tell the House of Commons, were of a very alarming nature, and such a daring spirit of resistance had manifested itself throughout the Continent, that it was now high time Parliament should adopt measures for enforcing obedience to the late Acts. A plan is no sooner proposed by you, but carried by a rotten majority, for reducing them to a state of subjection to your, and your Royal master's will, and bloodshed and slaughter stare them in the face. They laugh at your impotent malice, and, with a spirited firmness becoming of freemen, dare you to the stroke; when, behold, your threats, and the resolution of your venal troop, (I will not call it a British Senate,) become like the threats and resolutions of a society of coal porters, who declare vengeance against another body of men who will not comply with their unlawful impositions, but fear the next day, without even the shadow of justice on their side, to carry their desperate designs into execution. The motion you made, my Lord, in the House of Commons, on Monday last,* for a suspension of the several American Acts till it is known which of the Provinces will raise a Revenue, and contribute to the luxuries of the Parent State, subject to the control of the British Parliament, is a subterfuge too low, and too thinly disguised, to deceive the Americans, or to impose upon the understanding of the meanest capacity. It is evident to the world this is only a villanous plan to divide them, who, while united together, may bid defiance to all your Lordship's cunning, fraud, force, and villany. The Americans, my Lord, are too sensible, and too brave, to be drawn into any trap, either of your, or your Royal master's making. You may weave the web as artfully as you please for their destruction, and they will be sure to break it. Their cause is just; it is the cause of Heaven, and built upon the solid foundation of truth and liberty. They will carefully watch over the sacred gifts of God, and never surrender them to you, nor any power upon earth, but with their lives. You have found, my Lord, that your hostile invasion, and all your force and violence, would not terrify them into a compliance with your measures, nor answer the infamous design of making the King absolute in America; and now you are determined to try whether, by fraud and artifice, you can effect your purpose.

You have, my Lord, by the most cruel oppressions, drove the Americans to a state of desperation. You have destroyed their Charters, invaded their Rights, and imposed Taxes contrary to every principle of justice and to every idea of representation; and by blockading the Port of Boston, reduced near thirty thousand people, in easy circumstances, to a state of dependance upon the charity and benevolence of their fellow-subjects; and now, rare condescension, suspension of the several American Acts, or, in other words, Ministerial oppression and villany, is to be granted them, provided they will raise a Revenue in America, still subject to the control of the King and Parliament in England. This suspension scheme, my Lord, will not do. The Americans will have a repeal of all the Acts they complain of, and a full restoration of all their Charters, Rights, Liberties, and Privileges, before they grant you a single farthing, and then not subject to the control of a banditti of rotten Members in St. Stephen's Chapel, of your appointing. For where would be the difference between their taxing themselves, subject to the control and at the disposal of the King and Parliament here, or of the House of Commons in England taxing them in the first instance? There would be none, my Lord, and they would still be in the same situation they are now—still subject to the will of the King, and the corrupt influence of the Crown. This scheme, my Lord, appears to me as ridiculous and absurd as the negative still vested in the Court of Aldermen, of the City of London, which gives a power to a majority of twenty-six to set aside the choice of seven thousand livery-men, in the election of their Mayor. Be assured, my Lord, this new plan must fall to the ground, with all your former ones in this business. The day of trial is at hand; the Americans will be firm. They will have a confirmation of all their rights; they will have a redress of all their grievances; they will levy their own Taxes, not subject to any controlling power; and they will fix the Constitutional Liberties of America upon a foundation not to be again shaken by you, nor any pusillanimous, weak, wicked, or cruel tyrant.

It is unnatural.—But for a moment, my Lord, suppose the Americans should come into your proposals, or agree with the terms of your motion, how, my Lord, can you make reparation for the injuries England and America have sustained; or will it, in any degree, lessen your villany, or atone for your crimes? What compensation can you make for the loss of our Trade, to the amount of near three millions? What compensation can you make for robbing the Nation of near one million and a half of money, to carry on your execrable designs against your fellow-subjects in America? You can make none. Your head, indeed, would be a pleasing spectacle upon Temple Bar; but the loss of that, and your estates, would never atone for a ten thousandth part of your crimes and villany. Still it is to be hoped the minority of the House of Commons, and the people, will never leave you till they have both—till you are made a publick example, and brought to condign punishment.

Every measure, my Lord, of your administration at home has been cruel, arbitrary, and unconstitutional; and every measure, with respect to Foreign Affairs, has been weak, cowardly, absurd, and ridiculous; unbecoming an English Minister, and only calculated to destroy the honour and interest of this Kingdom.

The glory and dignity of the British Nation was never so infamously sacrificed, both by you and the King, as in the year 1770, by a scandalous secret Convention with Spain, concerning Falkland Islands.

With respect to Domestick Affairs, you have endeavoured to erect the Sovereign into a despotick tyrant; you have made him destroy the Rights and Liberties of the people in every part of the British Empire. You have made it apparently his interest to promote divisions at home; you have obliged him to quit the glorious title of Father of his People, and debase himself into the head of a party, whom he has invested with an absolute dominion over him; and whilst he monarchs it in his own closet, becomes contemptible in the eyes of his subjects, and the whole world. Weak, timid, and irresolute, he deeply engages in all your Lordship's infamous measures, and the rest of his Ministers; and it is for this reason we see every act of Ministerial villany and murder sanctified by Royal authority.

THE CRISIS.—NO. VIII.

To the Lords SUFFOLK, POMFRET, RADNOR, APSLEY, and SANDWICH:

MY LORDS: You have a peculiar claim to an Address from the Authors of the Crisis, and it shall be our business in this Paper to preserve, if possible, the perishable infamy of your names.

The motion made by Lord Radnor, on Monday, the 27th of February, concerning No. III, of the Crisis, was unjust and villanous. The Paper contains nothing but the most sacred truths, and therefore could not be a false or scandalous libel. The amendment of the epithet, treasonable, proposed and supported by the Lords Pomfret, Suffolk, Apsley, and Sandwich, was infamous, and of a piece with every other proceeding of the present reign and present Ministry. It showed, in a particular manner, the bloody-minded dispositions of prostituted Court Lords, the instruments of murder and publick ruin. The immaculate Lord Sandwich insisted that the word treasonable should stand part of the motion, as a proper foundation for bringing the Authors to exemplary and condign punishment. Suppose, my Lords, this infamous amendment to the Radnor motion had been carried, and it had stood a false, scandalous, and treasonable libel, could the mere ipse dixit of a few venal Lords make that treason which, in the literal or constructive sense of the word, was not so.

The Author of No. III, is perfectly well acquainted with the Statute of Treasons, passed in the reign of Edward the Third, and likewise with the various expositions and interpretations of it. He well knew the Paper was written upon the true principles of the Revolution, and that it could be justified by the laws of the land. He well knew (though there is hardly any villany but what Court sycophants may do with ease) that it was not in the power of Lord Mansfield, with all his chicanery, with all his artifice, with all his abuse of the law, with all his perversion of justice, with all the aid of false construction and forced inuendoes, to bring it within the meaning of that Statute. He well knew the disposition of the Sovereign and his minions, and that nothing would or can satiate Royal, Scotch, or Ministerial revenge, but the blood of those who oppose the present most horribly cruel, and most infamously wicked, measures of Government. And, my Lords, he well knew the shocking prostitution of hereditary peerage, and the barefaced treachery and villany of a purchased majority in the House of Commons.

Has there not, my Lords, been innocent blood enough shed in this reign, that your Lordships should still thirst for more. Why should your Lordships be so desirous of stopping every channel of publick information? The infamy of your actions are sufficiently known, and will be handed down to the latest ages of time, while your names will stink in the nostrils of posterity.

The Statute of Treasons, my Lords, passed in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of Edward the Third, was an act of vast importance to the publick weal, for till then there was hardly a word spoke, or a paper written, but what was deemed treason; and the Parliament which passed it were called Benedictum Parliamentum—the Blessed Parliament.

The substance of this Statute is branched out by my Lord Coke into six heads, which we shall here give, with some observations of our own, to show your Lordships and the world, that No. III, of the Crisis, is not within the meaning of either of these heads, and that by your amended motion you designed to lay the ground-work of a prosecution the most cruel and infamous ever carried on in this Country, worse than those which, without proof or the colour of guilt, took away the lives of the great Lord Russel and Algernon Sidney.

The first head is concerning death, by compassing or imagining the death of the King, Queen, or Prince, and declaring the same by some overt deed; by killing or murdering the Chancellor, Treasurer, Justice of either Bench, Justice in Eyre, Justices of Assize, Justices of Oyer and Terminer, in their places during their offices.

The second is, to violate, that is, to know carnally, the Queen, the King's eldest daughter unmarried, the Prince's wife.

The third is, levying war against the King.

The fourth is, adhering to the King's enemies, within the Realm or without, and declaring the same by some overt act.

The fifth is, counterfeiting the great, the privy-seal, or the King's coin.

The sixth and last, by bringing into this Realm counterfeit money, to the likeness of the King's coin.

First. To compass and imagine, is to contrive, design, or intend the death of the King; but this must be declared by some overt act; declaring by an open act a design to depose or imprison the King, is an overt act; to manifest the compassing his death. I believe, my Lords, the Author of Number III of the Crisis, is not under the predicament of this exposition.

Second. By the word King, is intended, 1. A King before his coronation, as soon as ever the Crown descends upon him; for the coronation is but a ceremony. 2. A King de facto, and not de jure, is a King within this Act; and treason against him is punishable, though the right heir get the Crown.

Third, NOTE. It is very strange, but in the printed Statute Book, it is there said, probably attainted, which is a gross error; for the words of the Record are, et de ceux provablement soit attaint; and shall be thereof probably attaint; and it is amazing to me, that so gross a mistake should be suffered, since my Lord Coke has so expressly observed the difference in these words following. 3. Inst. fol. 12. In this branch, saith he, four things are to be observed: 1. This word (provablement) provably, that is, upon direct and manifest proof, not upon conjectural presumptions or inferences, or strains of wit, but upon good and sufficient proof; and herein, the adverb (provablement) provably hath great force, and signifieth a direct and plain proof; and, therefore, the offender must provably be attainted, which words are as forcible, as upon direct and manifest proof. Note. The word is not probably, for then commune argumentum might have served, but the word is provably be attainted. 2. The word attaint necessarily implieth, that he be proceeded with, and attainted, according to the due course of law, and proceedings of law, and not by absolute power, or by other means, as in former times had been used; and, therefore, if a man doth adhere to the enemies of the King, or be slain in open war against the King, or otherwise die before the attainer of treason, he forfeiteth nothing, because (as the Act saith) he is not attainted; wherein this Act hath altered that, which, before this Act, in case of treason, was taken for law. And the Statute of 34 Ed. III., saves nothing to the King, but that which was in esse, and pertaining to the King at the making of that Act. And this appeareth by a judgment in Parliament, in ann. 29 H. VI., that Jack Cade, being slain in open rebellion, could no ways be punished, or forfeit any thing, and, therefore, was attainted by that Act of high treason. 3. Of open deed, per opertum factum; these words strengthen the former exposition of provablement; an overt act must be alleged in every indictment upon this Act, and proved; compassing, by bare words, is not an overt act, as appears by many temporary Statutes against it. But there must be some open act, which must be manifestly proved. As if divers do conspire the death of the King, and the manner how, and thereupon provide weapons—powder, poison, harness, send letters and the like, for the execution of the conspiracy. If a subject conspire with a foreign Prince to invade the Realm by open hostility, and prepare for the same by some overt act, this is a sufficient overt act for the death of the King. 4thly. A conspiracy is had to levy war; this is no treason by this act, until it be levied; therefore it is no overt act, or manifest proof of the compassing the death of the King within this act, for the words are, deceo, &c., thereof, that is, of the compassing of the death. The wisdom of the makers of this Law would not make bare words to be treason, seeing such variance commonly among the witnesses, about the same, as few of them agree together.

In the preamble of the Statute of 1 Mar. (concerning the repeal of certain treasons declared after this Statute of 25 Edw. III. and before that time, and bringing all things to the measures of this Statute) it was agreed by the whole Parliament, that Laws justly made for the preservation of the Commonwealth, without extreme punishment, are more often obeyed and kept, than Laws and Statutes made with great and extreme punishments; and in special such Laws and Statutes so made, whereby not only the ignorant and rude unlearned people, but also learned and expert people, minding honesty, are oftentimes trapped and snared, yea, many times for words only, without other fact or deed done or perpetrated. Therefore this Act of the 25th Ed. III. doth provide that there must be an overt act. 5thly. As to treason, by levying war against the King, we must note, that though conspiring or compassing to levy war, without a war de facto, be no treason, yet it may conspire a war, and only some few actually levy it, all are guilty of the treason. Raising a force to burn or throw down a particular enclosure, is only a riot; but if it had been to have gone from Town to Town, to throw down all enclosures, or to change Religion, or the like, it were levying of war, because the intended mischief is publick. Holding a Fort or Castle against the King's force, is levying war. 6th. Counterfeiting the great or privy-seal, is treason, but it must be an actual counterfeiting thereof; compassing to do it is no treason; affixing the great seal by the Chancellor, without warrant, is no treason; fixing a new great seal to another patent is misprision, but no treason, being not counterfeiting within this Act. But aiders and consenters are within this Act. 7th. Treason concerning coin, is counterfeiting the King's coin; and this was treason at common law, and judgment only as of petty treason; but clipping, &c., being made treason by other Statutes, the judgment is, to be drawn, hanged, and quartered. Money, here, extends only to the proper money of this Realm. 8th. As this Statute leaves all other doubtful matters to be declared treason in Parliament, but not to be punished as such till so declared, so in succeeding Kings' reigns abundance of other matters were declared treason, which being found very grievous and dangerous, by this Statute, 1 Mar., it is enacted that thenceforth no act, deed, or offence, being by Act of Parliament or Statute made treason, petty treason, or misprision of treason, by words, writing, cyphering, deeds, or otherwise however, shall be taken, had, deemed or adjudged to be high treason, petty treason, or misprision of treason, but only such as be declared and expressed to be treason, petty treason, or misprision of treason, by this Statute of 25 Edw. III.

Here we rest the matter, my Lords, convinced that the author of Number III, is not within the meaning of this Statute, nor any exposition of it, and that the design of your Lordships in adding the epithet treasonable, was wicked, base, and infamous, and will be sure to secure to you the contempt and detestation of every honest man.

THE CRISIS.—NO. IX.

To the King:

SIR: You ascended the Throne of these Realms with advantages which, if properly improved, would have rendered your reign not only glorious and happy, but have made you the most powerful monarch upon earth; you might have kept the world in awe. Yet, O shame to tell, though the times demand it, you soon sacrificed your own peace, the tranquillity, honour, and interest of this great and mighty Kingdom, to the ambitious views and pernicious designs of your infernal minion, Lord Bute, and his profligate, abandoned adherents. Your accession to the Throne filled with joy the breast of every Englishman; but, alas! it was of short duration; you soon convinced them of their mistake, and the compliments paid to your understanding, the calm hour of reason soon convinced us were ill-founded.

No sooner seated upon the Throne of this vast Empire, than you, like all other Kings, as well as tyrants, made the people many and fair promises. You told your Parliament that the suppression of vice and immorality, the encouragement of Trade and Commerce, and the preservation of peace and harmony amongst your people, should be the rule of your conduct, and your principal study. How far you have kept your word, the sacred pen of truth shall now declare.

Scarce seated in regal dignity, before you drove from your presence and councils, by the advice of your Scotch favourite, Lord Bute, every man of honour and integrity, who was valued for his love to his Country, and affection to your family; you implicitly followed the advice of your Northern minion, and in their room took those only who were the most conspicuous for their vices, and the most abandoned in principle. These are facts which Sandwich, Bute, Grafton, North, &c., will confirm.

These men you still continue to countenance; every scene of iniquity they have been concerned in, and every act of violence, oppression, and murder they have committed, has been by you tacitly approved, nay, applauded! Adultery, debauchery, and divorces, are more frequent now than in the corrupt and profligate days of Charles the Second; these, Sir, prove incontestably your religious principles, and show how far you have suppressed vice and immorality.

It will now be necessary to inquire how far you have encouraged Trade and Commerce. Was it by illegally imposing a stamp-duty on the Americans, and taxing those commodities which we supplied them with from this Country, which has stopped, for near six years, a great traffick between this Kingdom and the Colonies? Was it by suffering, with the most shameful impunity, the Portuguese to infringe upon the privileges of the English Merchants at Lisbon, by which many were not only injured, but almost totally ruined? Was it by blocking up the Port and destroying the trade of the Town of Boston, thereby reducing to a state of miserable dependance more than thirty thousand people, and giving a vital stab to the whole Commerce of America?

We will now examine, Sir, how far you have preserved peace and harmony among your people. Was it by providing for all the beggarly relations, and miserable dependants of your Scotch minion, in preference to your English subjects, especially those who were the chief instruments of placing your family upon the Throne? Was it by ordering the late Lord Halifax to issue an illegal warrant for apprehending Mr. Wilkes? Was it by rewarding that delinquent after he had been found guilty of a breach of the English Laws? Was it by screening your Minister behind the Throne, who violated the rights of the Freeholders of England? Was it by rejecting the Petitions of your injured subjects, and laughing at the remonstrance presented to you from the first City in the world, the great capital of the British Empire? Was it by not granting the supplications of your people, and meanly referring those Petitions and Remonstrances to the consideration of those very men, whose conduct they arraigned, and who were only the slavish tools of your abandoned Ministers? Was it by sending Troops to Boston, depriving people of their Constitutional rights; and, contrary to all the Laws of this free Country, enforcing the tyrannical and oppressive Acts of your abandoned Parliament with the sword, and laying America under a Military Government? Was it by rewarding the profligate, the corrupt, and the plunderers of their Country, with titles and honours? Was it by a tame dastardly submission to the insults of the Spaniards, and a sacrifice of the honour of the British Nation? These, Sir, are the means you have made use of for preserving peace and harmony among your people. But, Sir, the greatest piece of ministerial villany, and diabolical cruelty is still behind—it is now going through the House of Lords, and you, Sir, will soon be called upon to sign it; it is a Bill for restraining the American Fishery, and starving to death, or driving to a state of desperation, more than three hundred thousand people. Consider, Sir, the fatal tendency of this Bill; determine no longer to be the dupe of an abandoned set of men; act from yourself, and refuse to sign an Act of Parliament which must involve one part of the Empire in a civil war, and reduce thousands of your subjects to poverty and want. Let no consideration prevail with you to execute a deed, at the idea of which humanity revolts. Consider, Sir, how much this will raise the indignation of your people here, when they find you are destitute of the common feelings of humanity, and that you can be so easily prevailed upon to sacrifice your subjects to the cruel designs of your Ministers and favourites. Give some proof of a determined resolution no longer to pursue measures which must end in the destruction of your Kingdom, and perhaps in the ruin of your family.

Consider, Sir, how despicable you appear in the eyes of the world; who, instead of governing, suffer yourself to be governed; who, instead of being a leader, are led; who, instead of being a King, are nothing but a mere cypher of State, while your favourite and Ministers wear all the appendages to sovereignty.

It has long surprised the Kingdom to think how you could bear such wretches to prey upon you; to think how you could suffer them to aggrandize themselves and creatures; to possess the greatest wealth, and to hold the first offices in the Kingdom; and all this by imposing upon you, by making you break your coronation-oath, by making you violate every promise you made with your people, and by filling your ears with lies, instead of truth. How is it possible you can bear such usage, which no sensible man in a private capacity can bear? and to be the dupe of the vilest of the creation, is so much beneath the dignity of a man who pretends to govern, that it is astonishing such fiends should prevail as they do. Indeed they never could, unless you, Sir, like them, was inclined to establish an arbitrary system of Government, and to set up your own will in opposition to the laws of the land.

Let me advise you, Sir, as you regard your own prosperity and the welfare of your Kingdom; let me conjure you, as you value your own safety, to consider well the fatal and ruinous measures your Ministers are pursuing, and you sanctifying with the Royal authority; consider the miserable, the unfortunate situation of this Country; think on the dangers which threaten on every side; consider we are now upon the eve of a Civil War with our Colonies; from the present face of things, it is inevitable; Trade and Commerce is at a stand, and all the horrors of wretchedness and want stare them in the face. Consider, Sir, the feelings of men, reduced in the short space of a few days, through wanton acts of power, from a state of ease and plenty to that of misery and famine. I ask, is it possible for them to set bounds to their resentment? Consider, Sir, the French and Spaniards will not long remain idle spectators, when once they see us deeply engaged in a war with the Colonies. Throw off then your supine indolence; awake from your lethargick state; and if you will not be excited by the desire of doing good, awake at least to a sense of your own danger; think when the general calamity comes on, who will be the objects of publick hatred. Will not the advisers of these destructive measures be the first sacrifices to the popular resentment? When the Merchants, Traders, and Manufacturers are starving, when the whole body of the people are in misery and distress, what security, Sir, can you expect to find? Where will your Ministers conceal themselves? They will not be safe even within the walls of your Palace!

Let these things, Sir, be well weighed, and no longer persuade yourself the people were made for you, and not you for them; no longer believe that you do not govern for them but for yourself; that the people live only to increase your glory, or to furnish matter for pleasure. For once, Sir, consider what you may do for them, and not what you may draw from them.

The people, Sir, think it to be a crime of the first magnitude to convert that power to their hurt which was intended for their good; and to obey a King while he acts in this manner, and tramples under foot all laws, divine and human, argues not only a want of sense in the highest degree, but a want of love for our Country, and a disregard for ourselves and posterity.

Your subjects, Sir, are under no obligations to you, nor do they owe you any allegiance any longer than you continue to protect them, and make their good the chief end of your Government. When a Prince assumes to himself an extravagant or an unlawful power, then all respect ceases, and he ceases to be a King; whilst he protects and preserves his people in their just rights, and governs them by the laws of the land, all good men will love and esteem him, and risk their lives and fortunes in his service; but when he begins to invade their liberties, to set up an arbitrary power, to impose unlawful taxes, raise forces, and make war upon his people, and suffer foreign States to insult and injure them, then all virtuous and good men will detest and abhor him, and endeavour to remove him from a throne he unworthily fills.

In such cases resistance is a virtue; and to say that some should passively suffer, lest, by resisting, they should cause the ruin of many, is not a just reason; because, in all probability, they will be the cause that millions unborn shall live happy and free; and what can be a more noble, glorious, and pious motive for suffering, than to transmit liberty to posterity? For this our fathers bravely fought—and many of them gloriously fell—to preserve themselves and their descendants free, and to destroy the tyranny and despotism of the Stuarts, and, Sir, (let me beg you will remember with gratitude,) to place your family upon the throne of the British Empire.

The author of this paper is far from advising violent measures upon every error or misconduct of a Prince; but resistance becomes a duty when they attempt the ruin of the State, the subversion of liberty, or overturning the Constitution of the Kingdom. It is notorious to the world, Sir, that your Ministers are guilty of all these black and deadly crimes, and yet you screen and protect them. The conclusions to be drawn from thence are obvious, and you, like Charles, may live to see your favourites fall.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CHARLESTOWN, IN SOUTH-CAROLINA, TO A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON, DATED MARCH 7, 1775.

I do assure you I am not now near so strenuous for America as when I left London. I am far, however, from being able to judge of the state of the Continent, in general; but sure I am this Province cannot long subsist without a free Trade, and a mutual dependance on the Mother Country. Many articles which Great Britain furnishes are now become very scarce; Rice and Indigo, the grand staple of our Commerce, are a drug.

Before the Non-Exportation scheme took effect, you would have been surprised to see the number of Ships in our harbour, and the Trade carried on in the Town; in short, on my arrival I observed as much hurry and bustle as in the streets of London; and I could not but admire the liveliness of the people. But the contrast is now visible; their tempers are soured; their fortunes, for want of Trade, consuming fast. A train of consequences must inevitably ensue which, in my opinion, they will not be able to retrieve in the space of a dozen years. It is the wish, therefore, of the wise and sober, that a speedy reconciliation with the Mother Country may be effected; but as this Province has bore so high a part in their opposition to Government, they are unwilling to give out till the terms offered become general.

PRINCESS ANNE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

Committee Chamber, Kempe's Landing, March 7, 1775.

The conduct of Mr. John Saunders being taken into consideration, relative to the Provincial and Continental Associations, at this important crisis, when the liberties of America are in danger of being subverted, it was thought expedient that he be held up to publick censure, and the rather because he hath had the advantage of a liberal education, and for some time past hath studied the law.

The facts upon which our censure is grounded are as follows: The said John Saunders was present at the meeting of a respectable body of Freeholders of the County, at the Court-House, in July, 1774, for the purpose of choosing Deputies to attend the Convention in Williamsburg, the first day of August last, and of entering into resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the County, in support of their just rights and privileges; which not one refused signing but said Saunders, who obstinately refused, though particularly solicited by some of the principal gentlemen then present.

When the Provincial Association, entered into in August, 1774, was read, and offered to the people that they might express their approbation by signing it, at a meeting of the Freeholders, on Tuesday, the 16th day of the said month, and afterwards at almost every publick meeting within this County, at many of which the said Saunders appeared, yet he constantly persisted in his refusal to accede thereto.

When the Continental Association was also offered him to sign, he likewise refused, alleging that the way of proceeding was illegal; of which the Committee for the County being informed, they, at a meeting held the 5th day of January, 1775, considering that the said Saunders was a young man, and might be better advised, appointed a Sub-Committee to wait on the said Saunders, who, agreeable thereto, waited on him at his own house, expostulated with him on his conduct, and desired him to retract these words, viz: "that the way of proceeding was illegal," which he spoke to Mr. Lemuel Thorowgood, who was appointed by the Committee to offer the said Association; upon which he replied, "that he did not intend such a return should have been made by Mr. Thorowgood;" and being asked whether those words were inadvertently uttered, he answered, "they were not." Mr. Saunders likewise acquainted them that he told Mr. Thorowgood, "it was his opinion he had no right to call upon him." They then desired him to give his reasons for not signing the Association: to which he answered, "if they had come as private gentlemen, he would have given them his reasons, but as they came in the capacity they did, he chose not to do so." A few days after being greatly pressed by Mr. Hunter, one of his most intimate acquaintances, he signed it; but, behold! at the end of his name he added the negative no, with a capital N! The Committee being informed of this additional mark of contempt, they then appointed a Sub-Committee, to summon the said Saunders to appear this day before them, who failed so to do.

On the same day, the Committee having maturely deliberated on the behaviour of one Benjamin Dingly Gray, concluded that his conduct ought to be inserted in the Gazette, and exposed to publick animadversion, of which the following is an exact detail:

On the 5th day of January last, in Committee, it was resolved that a list of the Non-Associators in this County, of whom the said Benjamin Dingly Gray was one, be entered in the Minute-Book, and a true copy thereof delivered to each Merchant residing in this County, and other copies fixed up at several publick places, and likewise in Norfolk County and Borough; and further, it was recommended to all persons not to have any dealings, or commercial intercourse with the said Non-Associators. The said Gray being apprized of this, and hearing that a list of the Non-Associators in this County was fixed up at the Market-House in Norfolk Borough, and that he was included in the said list, uttered the following disrespectful, scurrilous, and abusive words, to wit: "That he looked upon this Committee as a pack of damn'd rascals, for advertising him in the manner they had done, and that they ought to have advertised him in the publick papers, alleging in that case he would have had an opportunity of vindicating himself." The Committee being informed of the invectives thrown out, did, on Thursday, the 2d day of March, appoint three of their body to summon him to appear before them this day, who, when summoned, declared it was uncertain whether he could attend or not, being at that time indisposed, but added, that his sentiments were still the same with regard to this Committee.

Also, on the same day, the Committee being acquainted that Captain Mitchell Phillips had refused to appear before them, agreeable to an order made last meeting, that he might give his reasons for his late very extraordinary behaviour touching the Association, it was thought proper that such his behaviour should be made publick. The said Mitchell Phillips being always averse to the measures adopted by the Americans to preserve their just rights and privileges inviolate, and being Captain of a Company of Militia, over whom he has great influence, has exerted every effort to deter the men under his command from acceding to the Association, and represented all the American proceedings in the light of absolute rebellion, which, it is feared, may have a bad tendency.

And thereupon the Committee came to the following Resolve, to wit: That the aforesaid John Saunders, Benjamin Dingly Gray, and Mitchell Phillips, be looked upon as inimical to the liberties of this Country, and the means entered into by the American Continental Congress for the restoration of them, and that no person ought to have any commercial intercourse or dealing with them.

By order of the Committee,

THOMAS ABBOTT, Clerk.

ACCOUNT OF AN OUTRAGE COMMITTED BY CAPT. GRAVES.

Philadelphia, March 15, 1775.

On the 7th instant, as George Taylor, of Wilmington, in his own Shallop, was on his passage from thence to this City, he was boarded by a party of ruffians from the King's armed Schooner the Diana, commanded by Captain Graves, (nephew to Admiral Graves, now at Boston,) who brought Taylor to, and on boarding him, demanded what he had on board; to which he answered, only Rum and Limes; but civilly told them they might go down and look. They then demanded his papers, which were pronounced authentick; but this not satisfying them, they entered the cabin, wherein was several Hundred Pounds cash, which Taylor, no doubt justly thinking proper to have his eye toward, went after them to the cabin door, without going down; whereupon he was immediately menaced and insulted, as suspecting the honour of the King's men; and although he made no other than a moderate civil reply, as several passengers on board can testify, he was immediately furiously attacked and knocked down, where he was beaten in a most inhuman manner till the deck was besmeared with blood, and at the same time shamefully insulted with the infernal language common to such crews, (and which, but for offending the civilized ear, might be repeated.) They then threatened to throw him overboard and drown him, took the command of his boat, and after gratifying their malice by towing her about in the river, took her along-side the Schooner, where the illustrious Captain detained her a considerable time, insulting and abusing the Skipper, and justifying and applauding the conduct of his heroick men, who had thus brought him a common Shallop, with two or three men on board, without the least appearance of clandestine conduct. After the gallant Captain, with his crew, had somewhat glutted their rancour, they dismissed the Shallop; but Taylor was so wounded and abused, that he was not able to conduct her; yet, by the assistance of those on board, she was got up to this City, and he afterwards conveyed home to Wilmington, where he lay dangerously ill.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTE.

GENTLEMEN: Seeing in your Paper of Wednesday, March 15th, a most scandalous, false, and base representation of the conduct of a gentleman and boat's crew belonging to the King's armed Schooner Diana, I must, as a lover of truth, and being privy to the whole matter respecting George Taylor, of Wilmington, beg leave to assure the publick, that he was not struck, or in any manner molested, (though he used many provoking speeches,) till he took hold of the gentleman on duty by the collar, who then struck Taylor one blow, the matter there ending, as Taylor did not return it; neither was he taken along-side the Schooner, having produced the proper papers.

DASHWOOD BACON.

We, whose names are here under mentioned, from our personal knowledge of Mr. Bacon, as a gentleman and man of honour, are convinced he would not sign to any thing that was not strictly true. And we do further aver, on our honour, that the Shallop was not brought along-side, or detained longer than is usual in examining vessels.

JOHN DOWSON, Master.

JOHN BIRTHWHISTLE, Surgeon.

TO THE PUBLICK.

You have, no doubt, generally seen an attempt made, in a late number of the Pennsylvania Packet, by Dashwood Bacon and others, (probably confederates,) in order to exculpate the perpetrators of the atrocious fact committed upon the body of George Taylor, in his own vessel, in the King's-Road, by some of the Diana's crew, under the command of Captain Graves. That they should attempt to clear themselves in the manner they have, is not much to be admired, since it commonly happens that the most daring murderers plead "not guilty;" but when those who are called men, are grown so callous as to be insensible of the compunctions of conscience, and hardened as to deny the voice of truth, even in the face of the sun, it then becomes necessary more methodically to arraign them, and investigate their conduct before the tribunal of the people, that so, if possible, they may be subjected to the punishment and contempt which they justly deserve; for which purpose the following Depositions, relative to the aforesaid abuse, are here presented to the world, viz:

Wilmington Borough, ss.

Personally appeared before me, John McKinley, Esq., Chief Burgess of said Borough, Nathan Wood, who, being solemnly affirmed, doth declare and say, that he was lately a passenger on board George Taylor's Shallop, at the time when, on her passage from this Borough to Philadelphia, she was brought to by a party belonging to the King's armed Schooner Diana, Captain Graves commander; that on coming on board the Shallop, an Officer asked what was on board, and being answered by Taylor, only Rum and Limes, and the Officer demanding proper papers, Taylor immediately produced them. The hatch was then opened, and the hogsheads counted and compared, which agreeing with the papers, the Officer asked further, whether Taylor had not something more on board, or in the cabin, and in a very scoffing manner inquired whether he had not some Teas; Taylor replied, he was welcome to go into the cabin and see himself, assuring him at the same time that nothing was on board besides the Rum and Limes. Then the Officer and two Sailors went into the cabin and stayed some time, on which Taylor went to the cabin door and looked in; the Officer asked what he wanted; Taylor replied, I did not know there was any body in the cabin but you. The Officer then got into a violent rage, cursing and swearing in the most dreadful manner, and coming upon deck used many horrid imprecations and threats against Taylor, that he would kick him overboard, &c., for suspecting the King's men, and still vaunting that he was a King's Officer, at the same time striking and wounding Taylor, so that the deck was prodigiously besmeared with his blood. And this affirmant farther saith, that Taylor gave not the least provocation, but, on the contrary, both in his words and behaviour, showed the greatest respect and submission, and never resisted or attempted to touch the Officer. The Shallop coming abreast the Schooner, the Officer told Captain Graves, who was walking on the quarter-deck of the Schooner, that "this fellow has Limes and Rum on board;" whereupon the Captain immediately got into the boat with several sailors, came on board the Shallop, and, without any examination, highly approved of the conduct of the Officer in beating Taylor, (who, at that time, was leaning bleeding violently in the cockpit,) and said that if he had been on board he would have given him twice as much, and threatened to kick his teeth down his throat, and to take him on board the Schooner, and there to tie him up and whip him. The Captain then ordered four men into the boat to tow the Shallop along-side the Schooner, which had then drifted a small distance astern, but finding they could not tow her against the wind and tide, the anchor was ordered out; and the Captain asking for the papers, they were handed to him, and he having examined and found them authentick, ordered Taylor to go about his business, after having been detained nearly an hour and a half. And further this affirmant saith not.

NATHAN WOOD.

Affirmed this 1st day of April, 1775, before

JOHN MCKINLEY.

Likewise, William Carter, Mary Johnston, and Daniel Nicholson, being solemnly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, do severally depose and say, that they, respectively, were on board George Taylor's Shallop at the time afore-mentioned, and were particularly attentive to the transactions afore-related, and that what Nathan Wood, the above affirmant, hath declared in his examination, is just and true, and particularly that George Taylor gave not the least provocation, but on the contrary behaved in the most respectful and submissive manner.

WILLIAM CARTER,
MARY JOHNSTON,
DANIEL NICHOLSON.

Sworn this 1st day of April, 1775, before

JOHN MCKINLEY.

Now if conduct of this kind is permitted with impunity, let us no longer exclaim against the piratical States of Barba- ry for committing outrages upon the subjects of George the Third, since we see British barbarians, subjects of George the Third, under his commission, sanction, and authority, commit such audacious outrages upon the persons and property of his subjects. From what hath been heretofore offered against the present cause of complaint, some may perhaps have been ready to treat it as a fiction; but since the matter is here so amply confirmed, may we not with confidence look to the King, and call aloud upon him, or those who represent him in cases of this nature, strictly to examine into this conduct of his servants, so that justice, which is the boasted glory of the English Nation, may take place, and that they may thereby, in some measure, redeem the honour and dignity of the Crown from the obloquy and contempt to which such conduct has too justly subjected it.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTE.

Philadelphia, March 8, 1775.

RESPECTED FRIENDS: Observing that, in your Paper of the week before last, you published a piece styled "The Testimony of the Representatives of the people called Quakers," signed James Pemberton, but as there was a piece published in Bradford's Journal, signed B. L., which, as it is esteemed necessary towards elucidating several expressions not properly comprehended by those who are unacquainted with Friends' writings, I therefore hope, as you have favoured the publick with one, you'll do them the justice to publish the other.

AMICUS VERITATIS.

To the Printers of the PENNSYLVANIA JOURNAL:

It is a duty incumbent on societies or individuals, to vindicate or explain any publick transaction which excites general disgust or uneasiness, be the ground ever so slight. I have therefore preferred your Paper, as being more generally read by those calling themselves the Sons of Liberty, in order to remove those suspicions and misapprehensions which a late publication, as from the Society of Friends, I find has produced. Those who suppose this Testimony to be pointed against the measures thought necessary for the publick interest, have not attended to its language, or the conduct of that Society, since our unhappy dispute with the Mother Country commenced. A due regard to these will shew, that it is intended to preserve the general cause from being sullied by the violence or caprice of rash and turbulent minds. The Society hath ever been distinguished for its loyalty to the King, and obedience to his Government. This is therefore recommended in the strongest terms, but by no means implies a loyalty to Parliament, or a Government of fellow-subjects over fellow-subjects, the impropriety and injustice of which must be obvious to the meanest capacity. A due submission to the King and his Government most evidently means such a Government as an English King rightfully has over English subjects; a Government bounded and limited by law, and founded upon the two great principles of the English Constitution, which entitle the governed to dispose of their own property, and to partake in legislation. This is the Government for which America is contending, in which our duty to our King and our own rights are so happily blended.

A due caution is also given against riots, routs, illegal combinations, and assemblies, which, by a strange and forced inference of some weak or prejudiced minds, has been supposed to allude to the Congress, Committees, &c., bodies to which such terms are by no means applicable, and which are certainly not meant in the publication in question, for the following plain reasons:—

First. The peaceable meeting of persons, and discussion of publick affairs, let it be called by what name it will, is so far from being condemned by any law, that it is the best security of our happy Constitution that it is lawful.

Secondly. It cannot be supposed that any English subject, possessing the smallest portion of virtue and knowledge in the English Constitution, would, by such an imputation, condemn the three noblest assemblies who dignify the page of that history: The Barons who obtained Magna Charta from King John; the Assembly which restored Charles the Second and Monarchy; and the Convention at the Revolution, which placed King William on the Throne, and opened the way for the accession of the present Royal family. These were all Congresses, formed on the same principles and the same necessities as the late American Congress.

Thirdly. The supposition would condemn the very meeting whose publication we are considering. It is called a meeting of Representatives from New-Jersey and Pennsylvania. By what authority did these Representatives meet? The discussion of political questions is no part of the discipline or system of a Religious Society, nor comprised within the jurisdiction of any meeting among Friends, which only affect religious concerns, or the economical affairs of the Society. An extraordinary occasion produced an extraordinary meeting, but not an illegal one; because there is no law which prohibits the King's subjects from meeting to discuss any political questions. In this case it was a laudable one, as its intention must have been to make a timely provision against those irregularities and tumults which public commotions often create.

Fourthly. That the present Congresses and Committees were not meant, appears from the conduct of the worthy Friend whose name is to the publication, who has been present in such Assemblies, and took an active part in the choice of the Committee last summer; measures which could not have had his concurrence, if included under any of the descriptions of a riot, rout, illegal combination, or assembly. I might add, that several respectable members of this Society have not only served on former Committees of this kind, and acquiesced in the present measures, but have returned their thanks to the Committee of this City, for an alteration made in disposing or storing their Goods imported under the Association of the late Congress—procedures wholly inconsistent with the idea of its being an illegal assembly.

Upon the whole, it is presumed enough has been offered to show that this Testimony could not be intended to cast any disrespect upon the cause of public liberty, much less to create division or discord. Taken in its true and proper light, it is calculated to point out those rocks of licentiousness and outrage, which often lay concealed under the smooth surface of the fairest pretensions, and have proved fatal to the best of causes. It is, indeed, to be wished it could have derived more respect and authority from the numbers and weight of the representation. But the intention certainly has merit, however it may be thought to fall short in the execution.

Philadelphia, March 8, 1775.

When those who think themselves entitled to write for the public proceed with openness, ingenuity, and candour, if they do not merit the public attention and approbation, they certainly deserve their indulgence. But when any man undertakes to give the public advice, and to call upon them in the warmest and most passionate terms, to follow his directions, every degree of deceit, hypocrisy, or unfair proceeding, is so far from meriting approbation, that the man who attempts it deserves to be treated with the utmost indignation, and to meet with the fate of the worst of villains.

The person who takes an active part in any controversy carried on in the public Papers, and desires to enter the lists as a champion on either side, should be possessed of that degree of candour and honesty which obliges a man to enter into the real merits of the cause, and to give a full, fair, and impartial state of the controversy, in order to entitle him to a place in any Paper of reputation. When he has done this, he ought to have full liberty to use every argument with which reason and truth could supply him; but the instant he attempted to impose on the public by unfair representations, lies, or assertions without argument, he should be packed off to the common receptacle of all such materials.

In our present contest with Great Britain, the question is, Whether the Parliament of Great Britain has a right to make Statutes which shall bind us in all cases whatever? Now, if any one, without ever bringing this question in view, or attempting to discuss it, will undertake, by hard names, to frighten us into a submission, I think he wants that candour and ingenuity which alone can entitle him to a place in a Paper of character, and his manner of proceeding gives the Printer thereof a just right to refuse his lucubrations.

I believe I may appeal even to our adversaries, whether the writers in favour of our cause have not always begun by stating the case, as far as they intended to touch upon it, in the fairest and fullest manner, and then discussed it by arguments drawn from the nature of God and man, and the well-known and fundamental principles of the British Constitution. Had their opponents acted with equal ingenuity, it would have saved much trouble, wholly prevented all that heat and acrimony which has appeared at one time or another, and saved the pains of replying to many productions against which nothing but the fear of their affecting weak minds could ever induce any friend to his Country to take up the pen. Of this kind is the piece signed Phileirene, which contains nothing but bold assertions, couched in strong language, and most of them notorious falsehoods. Since this writer, at the request of A Friend to the Constitution, has been indulged with a republication in a reputable and extensively circulating Paper, I would beg leave to select a few of his assertions, and request the Friend to the Constitution to support them by the facts he refers to.

1. "That a submission to the laws and authority of Great Britain, in the cases we complain of, would alone make us a free, wealthy, and happy people." In order to make this assertion good, it will be necessary to prove that submission to laws neither made by ourselves, nor by our Representatives, and to be taxed by men who have no interest in our affairs, constitute true British freedom; that taking our Money from us without our consent will increase our wealth; that to be deprived of Trial by Jury will enlarge and confirm personal security; that our happiness consists in submitting to become the slaves of the worst sort of tyrants, viz: of such, that every alleviation of their own misery must be obtained by a proportional increase of ours; and that to be removed for trial to Great Britain is preferable to being tried by a Jury of the vicinity. And as all our Assemblies, from the one end of the Continent to the other, have petitioned against these Laws as infringements of their rights and privileges, it may not be amiss to point out to them the error of their proceedings, and to prove that they are not intended by the Constitution for Legislators. For, if the British Parliament has a right to bind us in all cases whatever, it is impossible for them to have the same right—the one right necessarily destroying the other.

2. "That we are arrived to such a pitch of infatuation, as to be unwilling to confine ourselves within the bounds, or to submit to the Laws prescribed by the Government to which we are subjects; that our conduct has justly merited punishment and contempt, and must inevitably sink us in infamy and obscurity; that our wickedness and folly is such, that we set about a reformation of a Government already the envy of every other Nation, and are determined to accomplish our views, or perish in the attempt; and that not the united misery of all our fellowmen, nor the destruction of the peace and good order of the world, will ever deter us from our desperate undertaking; but that rather than fail in our enterprise, we will exult to introduce anarchy and confusion into the State, and glory to riot upon the miseries of mankind in private life." That masterly pen which drew a finished character of the most consummate villain that ever breathed on the earth, fell greatly short of this picture, and, had he lived to this day, must have obtained some master strokes from Phileirene. But Cataline himself never equalled this. How Phileirene could attempt to fix such a character upon a people whose most violent struggle to preserve themselves from a ten years' perseverance in oppressive measures has been a Non-Importation Agreement, is yet more extraordinary than the celerity and cheerfulness with which he asserts such infamous lies. I beg pardon for the expression; I forgot that the truth of it can be proved by facts.

3. "That we aim at an independency, replete with the most distressing calamities, destructive mischiefs, and aggravated miseries; and that the darling object of our wishes is an Independent Republic." In supporting this, it will be necessary to prove that the Congress, which spoke the sentiments of all those whose conduct Phileirene condemns, and whose measures every Colony in America has adopted, mistook its own intentions, when it absolutely denied the charge in the strongest terms, and defied its most inveterate enemies to make good the charge. It will also be proper to make out to the satisfaction of impartial people, that our contending for British Liberty will be the sure means of being deprived of it, if we should prove successful.

4. "That our expectations of accomplishing our undertaking, are mad, and must at once appear groundless, when we consider that the Throne was never more secure in the hearts of a free and happy people; the Nation never more powerful in its resources, nor more respected abroad; nor Administration more firmly established in the esteem and approbation of a great majority of the people, than at this day."

That these assertions may not meet with unexpected difficulties in the proof, it will not be amiss to lay before you the present situation of Great Britain, that, having this in view, the demonstration may be suited accordingly. Her credit depending on her Trade, and a principal part of that cut off by our Non-Importation Agreement. Ireland, though in slavery, poverty, distress, and unarmed, hitherto scarcely restrained within bounds by the dread of a military force, but now reduced to that last stage of oppression which makes a wise man mad. Scotland, filled with resentment for the injuries offered her by the English. The English full of hatred and indignation against the Scotch, for the undue preference showed to them by the Court. The Capital of the Kingdom exerting its utmost influence against the present Administration; and in all probability she will find her measures supported by the united efforts of all the Trading Cities and Manufacturing Towns in the Kingdom. A general discontent through that Nation, on account of the Act of Parliament which establishes the Roman Catholick Religion in Canada. France professing the most pacifick disposition, but continually augmenting her Sea and Land Forces. Spain arming as fast as possible, and insulting her in almost every quarter of the globe—she bearing these insults with the tame submission, and unable, in the space of twelve years, to prevail upon her to pay the Manilla Ransom. Portugal, though under her protection, insulting her Merchants and restricting her Trade. It is too degrading to mention the Dey of Algiers. Her Army and Navy not fifty thousand strong, yet the annual expense of the Nation near Ten Millions Sterling. This sum raised with difficulty when she enjoyed all our Customs and Duties. These being stopped, there will be a failure of One Million at least, which must be raised by additional Taxes laid on those who are scarcely able to bear their present load. A debt of Forty Millions due to the Hollanders, who are a very jealous people, and who know that the security of their money depends entirely on the Trade of the Nation, which must suffer a most dreadful shock from our Non-Importation Agreement. Should they become fearful, and begin to draw their money out of the publick funds, all the circulating cash in the Kingdom would not more than pay the half of it. The Emperour of Germany at the head of two hundred thousand, and the King of Prussia at the head of three hundred thousand well disciplined Troops, overawing all her Continental allies, and in a capacity to take possession of her German Dominions whenever they please. Russia aiming at Commerce, and becoming a rival maritime Power. America determined to resist every further attempt which she shall make to enslave her, by force, and accessible only by her capital Cities, and those protected by a debt of about Six Millions Sterling, every Shilling of which must be totally lost, if our Cities are injured; besides, if matters should become more critical, these will be principally inhabited by the tools of the Ministry, for all such will be obliged to fly to them for safety, as is evident from the present state of Boston; which will be a very considerable additional security to our Cities. Able and judicious Statesmen in England, though unconnected with America, giving their opinion in favour of our conduct, and openly declaring the inability of the Nation to subjugate the Colonies by force. These are some of the facts, against which others of superiour force, certainty, and weight, must be produced, or it will be in vain to attempt to prove that the Nation was never more powerful in resources.

I am under the necessity of passing by, for the present, a multitude of assertions equally in need of facts to support them; but as there is one or two of a curious and extraordinary nature, and which I long to see demonstrated, I must crave the indulgence of the publick a few moments longer.

It is asserted "that the people in America can have no idea of the various manœuvres, evolutions, marchings, countermarchings, advancing, retreating, breaking, rallying, &c., which are practised in the Army, and, therefore, they will be astonished, confounded, and put to flight by attacks from every quarter." Now, a demonstration of this assertion must be a great curiosity, and will please many. But as one circumstance seems to make against it, I would be glad not to have it forgotten, viz: that though we may have little idea of their rallying, yet we must be allowed to have some confused notions of their breaking and running, especially such of us as can remember that when they were broke, within about forty miles of Fort Pitt, by a handful of Canadians and bush-fighting Indians, they never stopped flying until they arrived at Philadelphia. Impartiality, however, obliges me to mention one circumstance, which is rather in favour of some part of the assertion, viz: that the Americans have not a true idea of breaking and running, though it at the same time shows that they know how to rally; what I allude to is the behaviour of about three hundred Virginians, who, on that occasion, voluntarily formed, and covered the retreat of the flying Regulars. Ticonderoga has also furnished some of us with similar ideas. It is also asserted, "that at one time we will seem to have only a handful of Troops to encounter, and the next minute they will appear almost innumerable, merely from their dexterous movements, and the different situations in which they will be placed; and that, should we be able to perfect ourselves in this part of the discipline, (which we never can, as we are incapable of forming the least idea of it,) our skill will rebound with tenfold destruction upon our own heads, for by far the greatest part, when matters shall be brought to such extremities, will declare on the loyal side, and extricate themselves from the guilt of rebellion by the most vigorous efforts to suppress it."

I think it will be quite as hard to prove these assertions as to square the circle. It will require both fluxions, and an infinite series to do it. To make an handful of men appear almost innumerable to a people who know that every addition to that handful must first cross the great Atlantick, exceeds the power of magick. And I should not like to see it proved, lest it might lessen the merits of a General, "who, although respected and amiable for his social virtues, for his prudence, humanity, long-suffering, and clemency, of which we all cannot but be sensible, is nevertheless universally allowed to be a brave soldier, cool, intrepid, watchful, and resolute, and perfectly acquainted with the military art." Now if this be his character, how can he be excused for not putting these manœuvres in practice, instead of sending for more Troops? Can it be imagined that the freemen of the Province of Massachusetts-Bay are so determined as to refuse submission, if they saw an innumerable host of such well disciplined Troops ready to fall upon them? They must be heroes indeed, or at least resolved to lose life and liberty together if they are.

I will take no advantage of his glaring contradictions in one paragraph, representing us as the most resolute and desperate of men, who have no regard for our lives, and that we are willing to sacrifice all that is dear to us to obtain our beloved point; and in the next assures us that we will by and by be so terrified at the name of Rebellion, that we will murder one another to prove our loyalty. I will not require the facts which can prove these inconsistencies. I am not inclined to raise a suspicion of the abilities or courage of the British Troops. There are many circumstances which present themselves at this day, to show they have a tincture of the true British spirit still remaining, though the laws and regulations to which they are subject are of the most slavish, arbitrary, and despotick kind. It is hard to divest a real Englishman of his love of liberty, or admiration of those who are willing to risk their all in defence of it. There may be some mongrels among them, as well as among ourselves; yet the reluctance of the Officers to the service, and the desertion of the Soldiers, prove that they are not divested of feeling, and far from becoming Ministerial butchers. If things should come to extremities it is not to be doubted but they will discover further signs of a true English spirit. However, should they prove as loyal as Phileirene wishes them to be, twenty riflemen will, I doubt not, prove a match for any ten of them; and if we reason from former experience, Braddock and Howe have left us a proportion still more favourable. As to the common Soldiers, they have no great inducement to make them fight. If they will fight for pay, I think we could increase their wages. At any rate, a groat a day to feed upon, half an hour's exercise in the week, and ten years' loitering in crowded barracks, can give them but an indifferent title to the character of true British veterans.

That our skill in the military art, could we but attain it, would rebound with ten-fold destruction on our own heads, is rather hard. For shall we take that immense pains which it will cost an American to acquire it, and which alone can put us on an equal footing with these veterans, and then turn it against ourselves? This would be an infatuation which Phileirene and all his fellow-blusterers have not been able to accomplish, and, I fear, never will, notwithstanding the facts which can demonstrate its truth.

I once thought of touching on the doctrine of Rebellion and our duty to God; but as the facts necessary to demonstrate his assertions on this head might border on impiety, and the attempt itself would be blasphemous, I would not have it entered on; for if one man sin against another, the Judge may plead for him; but if a man sin against God, who shall entreat for him? Yet the matter may be settled in few words. God is certainly on the side of justice and the oppressed, and the Devil on the side of injustice and oppression. They may be considered as the leaders in this cause, and every man as actuated by the spirit of his leader. I will leave it to Phileirene and the world to determine which spirit he and his party are inspired with.

To the Friend to the Constitution :

SIR: As you may be acquainted with facts which have escaped the notice of all beside yourself; as you may be able to defend your cause by arguments, which, though hitherto concealed, will strike conviction into the hearts of the most stupid, insensible, and obstinate bigots; and as your proofs may be derived from sources hitherto unexplored by any other; I call upon you to exercise those political talents and abilities which, doubtless, you are possessed of, in demonstrating the truth of the foregoing assertions of Mr. Phileirene. Should the task prove hard or laborious, you must comfort yourself with this reflection, that it is the only means whereby you can prove yourself possessed of that candour and honesty, which is so rare amongst your party. If, in the course of your demonstration, this one point should fall in our favour, viz: that the present is a struggle of might against right, and that right is on our side, we have little to fear, even should every other assertion of Phileirene prove true. For when was arbitrary power successful in Great Britain? Not in the days of Charles the First, nor yet at the Revolution. William the Bastard is the principal instance of the kind I now recollect. If we be permitted, then, to draw any conclusions from former experience, while we have a legitimate King on the Throne we have little to fear. Had arbitrary power succeeded in the days of Charles the First, or James the Second, we should at present be in the same state or a worse than the people of France. Now would you, Sir, or Phileirene, or any of your party, rather find yourselves in this state and condition, than that your forefathers had pursued the measures they then adopted? According as you answer this question, we shall be condemned or justified, even should we be forced to draw the sword.

To the Author of a Pamphlet, entitled "A Candid Examination of the Mutual Claims of GREAT BRITAIN and her COLONIES, &c."

Philadelphia, March 8, 1775.

SIR: When your pamphlet was first put into my hands, I accidentally opened it at the last page but one, and was pleased to see the following words: "Thus I have, my dear countrymen, with the utmost candour and freedom, and the most benevolent regard for your true interest and happiness, laid before you the Constitutional extent of Parliamentary jurisdiction, and deduced your rights from the most solid foundation, and explained your duties." Pleased with this declaration, I eagerly began a careful perusal of the pamphlet; but what was my surprise to find that instead of deducing the rights of America from a "most solid foundation," you have laboured to show that America has no rights at all; and that we are the most abject slaves on earth. This set me upon an examination of the principles on which you have grounded your arguments; and from this examination it evidently appeared that you have ignorantly misunderstood or wilfully misapplied them.

The first principle which you lay down, and which, indeed, is the groundwork of your whole performance, is this: "There must be in every State a supreme Legislative power of the Colonies, and that the Colonists are, therefore, subject to its laws."

It may be proper before we proceed, to observe, that though there is no difficulty in laying down general principles on the nature of Government, yet it requires judgment and understanding to make a proper application of them. If it shall appear that your several quotations are totally inapplicable to the situation of the Colonies, with respect to their connection with Great Britain, your arguments must fall, of course, to the ground. And I apprehend I shall not only be able to make this appear, but clearly to show, as I said before, that you either did not understand the authors quoted, or that you have wilfully misapplied them.

Whoever has read, and is conversant with the authors on Government, will agree that whenever the above principle is laid down, it amounts in substance to this, and this only, viz: Wherever men have, from a state of nature, entered into a state of society, there must be somewhere a power lodged to make laws obligatory on all the members of that society. This power of making laws, however modified, is called the Legislative power; and any one will readily assent to the necessity there is, that this Legislative power should be supreme over the members; for if, after the Legislative power has ordained any thing to be done, the members should afterwards be left to their own choice to adopt or reject it, it follows clearly there must be an end of Government. Now let us consider whether this principle is not fully satisfied in the several Governments of America, without having recourse for an application of it to the Parliament of Great Britain. I will undertake to show that the principle is applicable to our several Governments, and to them only; and this I shall do from your own quotations.

Mr. Locke tells us that "The first fundamental positive law of all Commonwealths is the establishing the Legislative power; this Legislative is not only the supreme power of the Commonwealth, but is sacred and unalterable in the hands where the community have placed it." It cannot be denied. It is as well established as the Legislature of Great Britain; its powers within the bounds of the Province are as supreme and unlimited as the power of the Legislature of Great Britain. Here, then, the principle applies;—as there is a Legislative power in the Province of Pennsylvania, that power is, from the nature of all Governments, supreme, and all the inhabitants of the Province must be obedient to its laws. But to proceed: "There can be but one supreme power, which is the Legislative; to which all the rest are, and must be subordinate." This principle is certainly right; but let us see how judiciously it is applied. Certainly in the Province of Pennsylvania there neither is nor can be more than one supreme power, viz: the Legislature of the Province. To them the several Corporations, and other inferior jurisdictions must submit. But observe how completely wretched you aim to make the Americans. You quote Locke to prove that there can be but one supreme power, which is the Legislature; if so, and if the Parliament, as you say, is the Legislature of the Colonies, it follows that we have hitherto been deceived, and that there is no such thing as a Colony Legislature in existence. But, Sir, this supreme power, the community of Pennsylvania have undeniably vested in the Assembly and Governour, subject to our Sovereign's negative; and, of course, the Legislature of Great Britain is not the Legislature of Pennsylvania; for it would be "irregular and monstrous" to suppose us subject to two Legislatures. But this will not satisfy you. You will have it, that we shall be subject, not according to Mr. Locke, to "one" but to two supreme Legislative powers. Your quotation from Acherley is more pointed: "The supreme power in every Government and Nation is the Legislative power of making and altering those laws of it by which every man is to be bound, and to which he is to yield obedience." Is not every man in Pennsylvania bound by, and is he not to yield obedience to such laws as the Legislature of the Province shall enact? Every man will answer affirmatively; if so, is not this Legislative power of Pennsylvania, according to the express words of the above quotations, the supreme power in this Government? Can we then be subject to two supreme Legislative powers? But let us see whether you will not yourself prove sufficient for my argument. Page 43 you say, "Each Colony in the present Constitution, is capable, by its own internal Legislature, to regulate its own police within its particular circle of territory; but here it is confined: thus far, and no further can its authority extend." This, I hope, is sufficient to show that each Legislature is supreme within its own circle; and that this is all that is required to satisfy the principle on which you have benevolently endeavoured to build your system of tyranny.

You proceed next to a perplexed, inaccurate, and defective delineation of the English Constitution, and of the different capacities of the King, in order to point out the absurdity (as you call it) of the Colonies in acknowledging allegiance to the King, and denying obedience to the laws of Parliament. In this also, I apprehend, you are equally wrong. Let us attend to your argument. "To the King, in his representative capacity, and as supreme executor of the laws, made by a joint power of him and others, the oaths of allegiance are taken; and by him, that obedience in the subjects to the laws, which entitle them to protection in their persons and properties, is received. Is it then to him, as representative of the State, and executor of its laws, that the Americans profess their allegiance? This cannot be; because it would be owing an obedience to the laws of the State which he represents. It would be easy to prove that your idea of allegiance is totally defective; but as I intend only to expose the fallacy of your arguments, without advancing any plan of my own, it will perhaps be more satisfactory to refute you from your own words.

We Americans can, then, it seems, owe no allegiance to the King without involving in it a submission to the laws of the supreme Legislature of Great Britain, of which he is representative. Strange, indeed, that even our allegiance shall be drawn in as an argument in favour of Parliamentary power! But, Sir, let me, as a Pennsylvanian, address you and examine your argument. "The allegiance I owe to the King is due to him in his representative capacity, as supreme executor of the laws made by a joint power of him and others." Agreed, Sir, for argument's sake; but is not the King vested with the Executive power of this Government? Is he not the representative of our whole State, to see that our laws are duly carried into execution? And is not (on your principles) an oath of allegiance by a Pennsylvanian to the King, made to him as supreme executor of the laws of Pennsylvania? And if, Sir, an oath of allegiance, taken by a subject in England to the King, is to him as representative of the supreme Legislature of Great Britain, I ask, where is the absurdity of supposing an oath of allegiance taken by a Pennsylvanian, to be taken by him to the King, as the representative of the Legislative power of Pennsylvania, which is the supreme power of the Government in which he lives? There can be none. But further, Sir; does not every American acknowledge that he is bound by the common law of England, and such statutes as were made before the settlement of the Colonies, and which are applicable to our situation? Is not the King supreme executor of these laws? And where is the impropriety of supposing the oath of allegiance to relate to him as supreme executor of these laws, which we acknowledge do bind us, and at the same time rejecting the absurd and dangerous idea of its including an obligation to be bound by every law that the British Parliament has, or may make?

I have sufficiently destroyed, I trust, the two main pillars of your system. But not content with endeavouring to prove the Americans subject to the uncontrolled power of the British Parliament, you are for reducing the Legislatures of the several Colonies to the degrading situation of mere corporations. "The original intent of the prerogative, under which the inhabitants of particular districts of territory have been incorporated into bodies politick, was to enable the representative of the State to form inferior communities, with municipal rights and privileges; this prerogative is very ancient; William the Conqueror granted to London two Charters," &c.

If we examine into the nature of corporations erected by the prerogative, we shall find you are still unhappy in the application of your principles. That the King, by his prerogative, may erect the inhabitants of particular districts into inferior communities, with "municipal rights and privileges," is readily granted. But it requires more than this to show that the Colonies are mere Corporations. After granting all you call for, your conclusions do not follow; for though, as you say, the King may incorporate inferior communities with municipal rights, yet it does not follow that the King can grant to mere corporations full Legislative power. Let any one consider what is the object of corporations, and the purpose for which they are granted, and the comparison must vanish. But, Sir, is not the King visiter of all corporations? And has not the Court of King's Bench a power to inquire into, and correct all the irregularities that have arisen in any of them? And is this, Sir, one of the "solid foundations" from which you have deduced the rights of Americans? Certainly you will have the thanks of the British Ministry for going further than even they have dared. They contend only that we are subject to the power of Parliament: You, Sir, go further, and meritoriously endeavour to prove that we not only are subject to Parliament, but to the Court of King's Bench, where that friend to liberty, Lord Mansfield, now presides.

Let us next examine your favourite position, that the rights of the Commons to a share in legislation is derived from, and represent the lands within the Realm. Having, as you think, fully shown this, you proceed (no doubt, with "ineffable pleasure") to show that, by necessary consequence, the Americans have lost, not the right, but the exercise of the right of being represented in the British Parliament, though they still continue subject to all its laws. What does this amount to? Why, you have a right, but it is impossible you can derive any advantage from it. You have a right, but it is impossible you can exercise it. Want of right and want of remedy, is said, in law, to be the same. What an insult to an oppressed people, to tell them they have a right, but that it is impossible they can either exercise it, or derive any advantage from it. But let us next examine your position, and see if it is well founded. I apprehend it is not, and that your idea of representation is partial and inadequate. That the landed interest is represented in part, is granted, and you might have saved yourself the trouble of several tedious pages to prove what every man would immediately assent to. But is the landed the only interest that is represented? Or, does representation arise from land only? I answer both in the negative; and thus I prove it: The Commons is the Democratic part of the English Constitution. In small Democracies, the people should, and in many (in Greece) they did exercise the Legislative power in their aggregate capacity. In so large a State as England, such a tumultuous meeting would be attended with danger and inconveniences; and, therefore, it is provided by the English Constitution, that the people shall exercise this power by their Representatives, which it would be inconvenient should be done in their collective capacity. This, Sir, is the principle of representation, and by which every man of property in England has a voice in Parliament. It is upon this principle that the landed interest is represented by their Knights of the Shire. This, Sir, is not the origin, but the consequence of representation. Are not the Citizens and Burgesses chosen by the Mercantile or Trading interest of the Nation? Has not every man who is free of a Borough a vote, and consequently, is he not represented in Parliament, although he has not a foot of land? In short, the whole of representation, according to the English Constitution, is this: in all free Governments a branch of the Legislative power should reside in the people. In so large a Government as England, this is not practicable to be exercised in their collective capacities; from hence arose the necessity of representation, upon the genuine principles of which, every member of the community should have a voice. In forming this representation, care was taken of the landed interest, and Knights of the Shire were elected by proprietors of land to represent it. But this alone would have been a partial, inadequate representation; care was also taken to have the trading interest represented, that so not the landed interest only, but the whole body of the people should be represented by the House of Commons; in choosing whom, says a learned Judge, there is scarce a free agent in England who has not a vote. This subject might be continued further if necessary, but enough has been said to show your idea of representation to be erroneous.

According to you, Sir, we are bound by all laws made by the British Parliament. We have a right to be represented there, but it is impossible we can enjoy that right. So that the "persons, lives, and estates of the subjects in America are at the disposal of an absolute power, without the least security for the enjoyment of their rights." This is a dreadful situation! And the very reading it is sufficient to freeze the blood of any man that has a spark of liberty in him. How it has roused your passions! How animated is your observations on it! You say, "most certain it is, that this is a situation which people accustomed to liberty cannot sit easy under." Sit easy under slavery! It is a situation that all your sophistry, threats, or the arms of Britain will never make an American sit under at all.

But now the curtain is drawn up—the plan of union gentlemen, which is to restore us to the enjoyment of our lost rights! Having shown, as you think, that we have no rights at all, you very patriotically propose a plan, by which, if the British Administration pleases, we may be restored to some. But the very position tells us we are slaves. If our restoration to rights depends upon the pleasure and will of the British Legislature, they are our masters; we must submit to their pleasure. But send the author of the plan over as a delegate to solicit your cause, "the expense will be trifling;" it is a task he would, no doubt, perform "with ineffable pleasure."

You say, Sir, you have often conversed with the author of the plan, and well understand his principles. Pray, Sir, ask him whether he did not, in a Committee of Congress, deny, from the same learned quotations about landed property, the power of Parliament to bind the Colonies in any case. His conclusions from the same premises were, I am told, very different from what you have drawn in this pamphlet. He insisted that the right of English liberty is a right to participate in legislation; that as the lands in America are not represented, Americans could not be represented, and not being represented, they, of course, could not be bound; from hence he drew an inference of the necessity of some plan of union. Did he not, Sir, on this principle, deny the power of Parliament even to regulate Trade? And did he not even vote against it in Congress?

Much has been said against the Congress for rejecting this plan. The matter, I am told, stands thus: When it was first introduced in Congress, most of the members heard it with horror, as an idle, dangerous, whimsical, Ministerial plan. Some of the "Pennsylvania Oracles," Friends, with whom infinite pains had been taken before hand, moved to have it committed. This was rejected; then a motion was made that the plan might lie on the table, to be taken up at any future day. This was carried in the affirmative. When the minutes came to be revised, towards the end of the sitting, the plan was omitted. Here the patriot raged, and insisted on his right to have it on the minutes. The question was put, and a great majority thought the inserting it in the Journal would be disgracing their records, and accordingly rejected it. Certainly in such a society, every question must, of course, be determined by a majority. If, then, a majority were of opinion that the inserting it on their Journal would be disgraceful and injurious, they unquestionably had a right to reject it. If his plan was defensible, why did he not enter into the argument with a gentleman from Virginia, who challenged him to it, and who said he could prove it to be big with destruction to the Colonies? 'Tis true he did, when thus called upon, say that he would defend it, if the Congress would appoint a day for that purpose. But this, Sir, was when all was hurry, and the forms of business only delayed their breaking up. Besides, it was a little remarkable, that this "Oracle" was not ready to undertake the defence of a plan, when he had been for months haranguing and caballing about it.

You have mentioned some of the objections that were hinted against the plan, for it is false to say that the merits of it were ever regularly debated in Congress. One of those objections is, that the members of the Grand Council would be corrupted, and betray the interest of the Colonies. To this you answer, "that if American virtue was not firm enough to maintain liberty, it could be supported by no wisdom or policy whatever. But supposing the people to be in so corrupt a state, yet as the election was to be triennial, they might change them every three years, &c.; and besides, to avoid all risks of the Country, they might, by altering one word, as the plan, make the election duannual or annual, which must certainly remove the objection." No, Sir! it will not do yet, not even with the alteration. For let us once suppose this darling plan executed, an American Parliament met. Suppose when thus met, a motion is made, showing the inconvenience and difficulties of frequent elections, and proposing the making a law extending their political existence for seven years; precedents may be pleaded for it. But, Sir, supposing this Parliament to be but annual, may they not in one year, one month, one day, nay, in one hour, pass a vote, which may forever annihilate the liberties of all America? But will you not trust the virtue of Americans? Sir, I entertain a high reverence for the virtue of my countrymen. But the trust is too sacred. Permit me to tell you, that neither "wisdom or policy" would dictate the leaving the liberties of a Country to the virtues of any men, however great or conspicuous. We know too well the fallibility of human nature, and both "wisdom and policy" teach us to support our liberties with other props and pillars. I did not intend to have touched on the merits of the plan, but when I saw one of the objections to it so mutilated, I thought proper to state the objections more fully and forcibly. The whole of the plan is confused, impracticable, and dangerous, as probably soon will be shown.

I have reserved till now, purposely, my remarks on the gross abuse and calumny thrown out in your pamphlet against the Congress. How unfair, how ungenerous, to take detached parts of their proceedings, and from thence draw inferences as to their principles! How dare you, Sir, in the face of America, assert that they have proposed no plan of accommodation? That every page conveys sentiments of independence? Have they not expressly said, (and is it not the groundwork of their whole proceedings,) place America in the situation she was in before 1763, and all our complaints will subside? Is this not proposing a plan of accommodation? Yes, Sir, and the only reasonable constitutional plan that can be devised. Tear away that system of Revenue Laws, and their attendants, and peace will be restored. And is this, Sir, talking of independence? Consider the Statutes prior to 1763, to which America concedes obedience; consider the acknowledged prerogatives of the King of Great Britain, in all the Colonies; the appeal to the King and Council from judicial determinations; his negative to laws; and let any impartial man say, whether this is a system of independence. The labours and virtue of the Congress in the cause of liberty, will, to latest ages, be revered and esteemed, while you and your attempts will only be remembered to show posterity that even in these days of liberty, America had some degenerate sons—a Jefferies and a Filmer.

But, good Sir, before we part, let me ask you how you came to publish your friend to the world as a man of no principle or virtue. I see he has signed the Association. I am told he signed the Petition to the King. I find in the Association he says, (for it is certainly the act of all who signed it,) "the present unhappy situation of our affairs is occasioned by a ruinous system of Colony administration, adopted by the British Ministry about the year 1763, evidently calculated for enslaving those Colonies." And, Sir, I find further, that he did, for himself and those he represented, firmly agree and associate, under the sacred ties of virtue, honour, and love of his Country, to carry the Association into execution. Let us now hear your account of your friend's conduct. Deluded by hopes that his plan would be considered, he was led weakly to sign the Association. And your inference is plain, that he is released from the obligation, because he was disappointed in his expectation. What, Sir, would your friend bind not only himself but his constituents to the performance of an agreement which must, in his opinion, lead to their destruction? Does his notions of the "sacred ties of honour, virtue, and love of his Country," sit so easy on him, that he can enter into them to carry a favourite political point, and shake them off at pleasure, when his views are disappointed? One of the Pennsylvania Delegates, who dissented on the Association, and could not agree to carry into execution, staid away and declined signing it. I have now done with you. My view in writing these hasty remarks was not merely to defend the Congress, but to remove any bad impressions from your ill-grounded, base, and illiberal attack on them. To the impartial public I submit how far I have succeeded.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY (MASSACHUSETTS) CONVENTION.

At a Convention of Delegates from the several Towns in the County of Cumberland, held at the Court-House in Falmouth, Wednesday, March 8, 1775,

ENOCH FREEMAN, Chairman.

Adjourned to the Assembly Room, twelve o'clock.

Met at the Assembly Room, according to adjournment.

The following new Members were admitted, viz:

From NORTH YARMOUTH—The Hon. Jeremiah Powell, Esquire, and Jonas Mason, Esquire.

From NEW GLOUCESTER—Mr. Abel Davis and Mr. Moses Merrill.

Resolved, That this Convention do earnestly recommend to the several Towns in this County strictly to observe the Resolutions of the Provincial Congress with respect to paying their Province Taxes to Henry Gardner, Esquire, of Stow; and considering the alarming situation which this Province is now unhappily brought into, it is further recommended that they comply with this Resolve as soon as possible.

Then adjourned to Thursday morning, nine o'clock.

Thursday, March 9, 1775.

Met, according to adjournment.

Whereas, for the information of the inhabitants of the remote Towns of this County, several of the Members thereof are desirous of knowing the circumstances that attend the importation of certain Goods which have arrived in the harbour of Falmouth, from Bristol, since the first of February last,

Voted, That Mr. Parsons, Clerk of the Committee of Inspection for said Falmouth, be desired to attend on this Convention, with the proceedings of said Committee respecting said Goods.

Mr. Parsons accordingly attended with said proceedings, which being read, Voted, That Captain Thomas Coulson, the Importer of said Goods, be desired to attend on this Convention.

Voted, That a Committee of three persons wait on Captain Coulson, to desire his attendance.

Voted, That Mr. Isley, Col. Mitchel, and Col. Thompson, be of this Committee.

Captain Coulson accordingly attended, and being asked for a manifest of the cargo brought for him by a vessel which lately arrived from Bristol, he presented to this Convention a manifest of two hogsheads of Lines and sundry Rigging, Sails, and Stores for a new Ship lately built by him in this place, which he said was the original and only account he had received of said cargo. Being then interrogated whether he intended to send the same back to Bristol, agreeable to the opinion of the Committee of Inspection for the Town of Falmouth, he answered, that he would send back the vessel with the two hogsheads of Lines, (when the vessel was repaired,) but that he could not send back the Rigging, Sails, and Stores, as he wanted them for his new Ship, which, he said, he could not send home without, but that he was willing to let the vessel lay in the harbour with the said Rigging, Sails, and Stores on board, until the sitting of the Provincial Congress.

Said Coulson was then asked whether he would send back the said Vessel and Stores to Bristol, if it should be the opinion of the said Congress that he ought so to do. He answered that he would, if they would put him in a way to get his said new Ship home; but that otherwise he could not do it.

Captain Coulson was likewise asked whether the articles contained in the said manifest were all the vessel brought. He answered that there was nothing else on board said vessel; that nothing had been taken out of her but a bed belonging to one of the sailors, and that nothing should be taken out till he had the opinion of the Provincial Congress.

Then adjourned to the Library Chamber, three o'clock, P. M.

Three o'clock, P. M.

Met, according to adjournment.

After a full consideration of the foregoing matter respecting Captain Coulson, it appears to this Convention that the importation of the foregoing Rigging, Sails, and Stores, is a violation of the Continental Association. And whereas the said Committee of Inspection have given it as their opinion, that the same ought forthwith to be sent back, without breaking any of the packages thereof; therefore,

Voted, (by a majority of twenty-three to three,) That this Convention do highly approve of the proceedings of said Committee, and we do earnestly request that said Committee would pursue every measure recommended by the Association of the Continental Congress for putting into execution the several articles thereof.

Resolved, That it be recommended, and it is hereby strongly recommended to the several Towns in this County, that they immediately take effectual care to provide themselves a stock of Ammunition, double at least to that required by the Province Law, and such a quantity of Provisions as may by them respectively be thought necessary for the exigencies of the present season. And as it is of the utmost importance that husbandry should at this day be more particularly encouraged, it is earnestly recommended that the inhabitants of this County would exert themselves, as far as possible, to promote the raising such necessaries of life as may be suitable to the qualities of their respective lands.

Voted, That the several Members of this Convention be and hereby are desired to recommend to the inhabitants of their several Towns, strictly to adhere to the Resolves of the Continental and Provincial Congresses. And that they use their best endeavours to discourage riots, mobs, and all tumultuous proceedings, and that they would endeavour, as much as in them lies, to promote peace, order, and decorum, as essentially necessary for the safety of the people at this critical day.

Voted, That such of the proceedings of this Convention be published as the Falmouth Delegates shall think fit.

Voted, That this Convention be dissolved.

SAMUEL FREEMAN, Clerk.

GEORGE MASON TO GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Gunston-Hall, (Virginia,) March 9, 1775.

DEAR SIR: I have at last finished the Potomack River Bill, which I now send you, together with some very long remarks thereon, and a letter to Mr. Johnston, into which you will be pleased to put a wafer, when you forward the other papers to him. I also return the Acts of Assembly, and Mr. Johnston's notes which you sent me. This affair has taken me five times as long as I expected; and I do assure you I never engaged in any thing which puzzled me more—there were such a number of contingencies to provide for, and drawing up laws, a thing so much out of my way. I shall be well pleased if the pains I have bestowed upon the subject prove of any service to so great an undertaking. But by what I can understand, there will be so strong an opposition from Baltimore and the head of the Bay, as will go near to prevent its passage through the Maryland Assembly in any shape it can be offered.

I suppose you have heard of the late purchase made by some North-Carolina gentlemen from the Cherokee Indians, of all the country between the Great Kanawha and the Tennessee Rivers. I think, considering this Colony has just expended about One Hundred Thousand Pounds upon the defence of that country, that this is a pretty bold stroke of the gentlemen. It is suspected some of our Virginia gentlemen are privately concerned in it.

I have always expected that the new-fangled doctrine lately broached, of the Crown having no title beyond the Alleghany Mountains until after the purchase at Fort Stanwix, would produce a thousand other absurdities and squabbles. However, if I am not mistaken, the Crown, at that Treaty, purchased of the Six Nations all the Lands as low as the Tennessee River. So now, I suppose, we must have a formal trial, whether the Six Nations or the Cherokees had the legal right; but whether this is to be done by Ejectment, Writ of Inquiry, Writ of Partition, or what other process, let those who invented this curious distinction determine. The inattention of our Assembly to so grand an object as the right of this Colony to the Western Lands, is inexcusable, and the confusion it will introduce endless.

We make but a poor hand of collecting; very few pay, though every body promises, except Mr. Hartshorn, of Alexandria, who flatly refused; his conscience, I suppose, would not suffer him to be concerned in paying for the instruments of death. Your affectionate humble servant,

G. MASON.

— George Washington, Esquire.

Boston, (Monday,) March 13, 1775.

— Last Thursday morning, the 9th instant, a countryman was tarred and feathered, and carried through some of the streets of this Town by a party of Soldiers, attended by some Officers.

The following is the man's own Deposition relative to that affair, sworn to before a Magistrate, upon which we shall make no remarks, but leave the publick to judge of the conduct of some of those who are said to have been sent among us to preserve peace and good order, and to prevent mobs, tumults, and other unlawful assemblies.

Deposition of THOMAS DITSON.

I, Thomas Ditson, Jun., of Billerica, husbandman, testify and declare, that while walking in Fore-street, on the 8th of March, in the forenoon, I inquired of some townsmen, who had any guns to sell? One, whom I did not know, replied he had a very fine gun to sell. The man appeared to be a Soldier, and I went with him to a house where one was, whom the Soldier called Sergeant, and seeing some old clothes about the house, I asked whether they sold such things. The Sergeant replied that they did frequently. I then asked his price for an old red coat, ript to pieces. He asked Three Shillings and Six Pence Sterling; but I refused to give it. Then one McClenchy, the Soldier I met with at first in the street, said he had some old clothes to sell, and sent his wife out after them to a man he called Sergeant, and she soon brought an old jacket and an old coat. I then asked him if he had any right to sell them, and the Sergeant said that they frequently sold them, and he would give me a writing if I desired it; but said there was no occasion. I then bought the said coat and jacket, and gave Two Pistareens, and then put the clothes in a bag, which I left behind. After which I went to McClenchy's to see his gun, which he said was a very fine piece. I asked him if he had any right to sell it. He replied he had, and that the gun was his to dispose of at any time. I then asked whether the sentry would not take it from me at the Ferry, as I had heard that some persons had had their guns taken from them, but never thought there was any law against trading with a soldier. He then told me he had stood sentry, and that they frequently let them pass. He then asked me what I would give for the gun. I told him I would give Four Dollars, if there was no risk in carrying it over the Ferry. He said there was not, and that I might rely on his word. I then agreed to give Four Dollars for his gun, but did not take it nor pay the money. Coming away, he followed me down stairs, and said there was a Sergeant that had an old rusty piece he would sell cheap. I asked him his price. He said he would sell it for One Dollar and a Half, if I would pay the money down; and he urged me to take it. I then agreed to give him said sum. His wife, as he called her, then came down, and said, McClenchy, what are you going to do to bring that man into a scrape. I then told them that if there was any difficulty to give me my money again; but he refused, and replied his wife made an oration about nothing, and that he had a right to sell his gun to any body. I was afraid from her speaking, that there was something not right in it, and left the gun; and coming away, he followed me, and urged the guns upon me. I told him I had rather not take them, for fear of what his wife said. He then declared there was no danger, for he had spoken to the Officer or sentry, who said he had a right to dispose of them, and urged me to pay the Four Dollars I had offered for the gun; which I then refused, and desired I might have the One and Half Dollar back which I had paid him for the gun. He refused, saying there was no danger, and damned me for a fool. I then paid him the Four Dollars for the good gun, but did not receive any one of them. After I had paid the money, he then said, take care of yourself; and the first thing I saw was some men coming up. I then stept off to go after my great coat, but they followed and seized me, and carried me to the Guard-house upon Foster's Wharf. This was about six or seven o'clock in the evening. When I came into the Guard-house they read me a law which I never before saw nor heard of. I was detained there till about seven in the morning, when I expected I should have been obliged to pay the Five Pounds mentioned in the law read to me, and hired a Regular to carry a letter to some friends over the Ferry, which was to desire them to come to me as quick as possible, with money to pay my fine. Soon after the Sergeant came in and ordered me to strip. I then asked him what he was going to do with me. He said, damn you I am going to serve you as you have served our men; then came in a Soldier with a bucket of tar and a pillow of feathers. I was then made to strip, which I did to my breeches; they then tarred and feathered me; and while they were doing it, an Officer who stood at the door said, tar and feather his breeches, which they accordingly did, and I was then tarred and feathered from head to foot, and had a paper read to me, which was then tied round my neck, but afterwards turned behind me, with the following words wrote upon it, to the best of my remembrance: "American Liberty, or Democracy exemplified in a villian who attempted to entice one of the Soldiers of His Majesty's Forty-Seventh Regiment to desert, and take up Arms with Rebels against his King and Country." I was then ordered to walk out and get into a chair fastened upon trucks, which I did, when a number of the King's Soldiers, as I imagined about forty or fifty, armed with guns and fixed bayonets, surrounded the trucks, and they marched, with a number of Officers before them, one of whom I was told was the Colonel of the Forty-Seventh Regiment, who I have since heard was named Nesbit, together with a number of drums and fifes, from the Wharf up King-street, and down Fore-street, and then through the main street passing the Governour's house, until they came to Liberty-tree; they then turned up Frog-lane, and made a halt, and a Sergeant, as I took him to be, said, get down. I then asked him which way I should go, and he said, where you please. Near the Governour's house, the inhabitants pressed in upon the Soldiers; the latter appeared to me to be angry, and I was then afraid they would have fired, they being ordered to load their muskets, which they did.

THOMAS DITSON, Jun.

SUFFOLK, BOSTON, ss., March 9, 1775:

The above-named Thomas Ditson, Jun., personally appearing, maketh solemn oath to the truth of the foregoing Deposition by him subscribed. Before EDM. QUINCEY, Justice of the Peace.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS-BAY.
NO. V.

Boston, March 9, 1775.

MY FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: In our last we showed that the torrent of evidence, the run of history, a series of facts, the scheme of British policy, the principles of the English Constitution, and the prevailing sentiments of our predecessors, and the English Nation, all united in support of our claim. Perhaps there is no one fact in all historick existence of a similar nature, and the same antiquity, supported by such a variety of arguments and uniformity of evidence. Was it a truth, that by our Charter we were to be considered as a distinct State uniting under one common Sovereign with our Mother Country, we could not have reasonably expected fuller proof, at this day, near a hundred and forty years since. Many truths more recent have nothing but habit and usage to stand upon. Evidence, like all other things, wastes by the current of time. It is diminished in passing from one generation to another, in the same proportion as it is removed from those transactions to which it is applicable. That which is certainty in one age (such is the constitution of human affairs in the present imperfect state) may become probability the next, and by a third, dwindle into a bare possibility. It is a maxim, that where a proposition is attended with as much evidence as the nature of the thing will admit, and could reasonably be expected, upon supposition of its truth, there the mind ought to yield its assent, and embrace the position.

As on the one hand it must be confessed there are instances where the Nation hath chosen to consider us as subject to her supreme authority, and our predecessors, from an unsuspecting confidence and veneration for their Mother Country, (that authority not being the object immediately in view, or the question under consideration) have inadvertently done, or omitted to do, that which may be construed into a seeming concession. And what rights or privileges are enjoyed by any people under Heaven, which have not been at one time or another invaded? So, on the other hand, there are instances where the Nation has disclaimed this authority; and our ancestors, whenever it has been made a question directly, have declared themselves with spirit, in the strongest terms against it. Supposing, then, for the present, that nothing absolutely conclusive could be inferred from the sense of the Nation, or the sentiments of our predecessors, after the reception of the Charter, it would not materially affect the argument. For had there been a perfect harmony of sentiment, and uniformity of practice, all conspiring to proclaim our union and consequent subjection, it would, indeed, have been circumstantial evidence of a previous connexion; but would not, of itself, have united us or confirmed our dependance, if we were not united before. Such evidence, however cogent, can never invalidate that of a higher nature; nor is it admissible, where we have direct positive proof. In the present case we have the deed of compact, the Charter-rights in our own hands, under the solemnities of seals, and the established formalities of law; we can, therefore, judge for ourselves, and ought to do it from the perceptions of our own minds, and not upon the authority of others.

Admitting, for argument's sake, that it was the opinion of both parties that this Colony was united to the British Empire in such a sense as to be subject to her supreme Legislative authority, and that the subsequent line of conduct observed by both corresponded with such an apprehension, it only proves them guilty of an egregious mistake, arising from inattention to consequences, or a confusion of ideas.

It is admitted by all; it is an indisputable truth, that our predecessors came to America with the express and notorious design of enjoying, and in the first instance actually declared for a free Government. It is equally true that the British Nation never pretended, nor does she even now pretend, to any authority over us, which she apprehends inconsistent with such a Government. This was what was declared for at the first, and agreed to by all parties as a leading and controlling principle throughout the whole transaction. This was the cardinal hinge on which all their movements were to turn—the broad and permanent basis on which their civil superstructure was to rise. Every transaction, therefore, mutual or partial, abhorrent to this principle, however clear and formal, must be void ab initio, as founded in error—going upon a mistaken supposition of its compatibility with our general position. Supposing, then, that our Charter proved, and it was clearly the sense of the parties to it, that we were to be bound by British laws in all cases whatever; if it can be shown that such an agreement was repugnant to their first and common principle, its obligation ceases, as founded on mistake, and void from the beginning. This general agreement that our Government should be free, dispenses with, and voids the obligation of the particular one, that it should be subject to the authority of Parliament, if they are incompatible with each other.

To a fair and impartial consideration of the consistency and possible co-operation of these two principles, let us now afford our close attention. At first blush I confess they strike me as heterogeneous. Let us examine them. The very terms, Free Governments, plainly suppose that there are such sort of creatures in being as Governments that are not free, to which they are opposed. These are ordinarily called, in common parlance, as well as in technical language of the law, absolute, arbitrary, tyrannick, despotick, &c., and the subjects of them are, with equal propriety, said to be in a state of bondage, servitude, vassalage, and slavery.

Tyranny, despotism, and the like, are general abstract terms, expressive of a certain relation subsisting between different communities, or different parts of the same community, similar to that subsisting between a master and his servant, from which the term slavery, as applicable to States, probably took its rise. An individual who has the absolute right to direct the conduct, dispose of the property, and command the services of another, is, with propriety, called a master. The person who is under an obligation to obey his commands and submit to his authority, is, in appellation and reality, his servant. It is this right of commanding, and obligation to obey, that constitutes the servitude, and not the actual exercise of it. He is a good master that does not use his right, but still he is a master, and may become a hard—a cruel one, at pleasure.

A community so organized as to have one supreme power, may be resembled to a single person, which speaks and commands by the voice of law. If this community has an absolute right to direct the conduct, dispose of the property, and command the service of another State; or, in other words, to make laws binding upon it in all cases whatsoever, it stands precisely in the same relation to this State that a master stands in to his servant; and, of consequence, it is in a condition of complete servility, and the individuals composing it in abject slavery. The same holds with respect to different parts of the same State. It is of no importance as it regards the relation, that the right or authority is not exercised, or is used with lenity. This, indeed, may determine the character of the master State, in point of goodness, but the servile relation still remains. Soon may it exert itself to its utmost latitude, with unbounded rigour and accumulated vengeance. Recent facts evince the truth of this observation. Look to your Capital, the head and heart of this Province. Give way to reflection for a moment. There you may learn possible projections from real executions, and argue coming calamities from the power of afflicting. The question for us to determine, my countrymen, then is, whether we will be slaves or freemen; for I defy the veriest Tory of them all, the accutest jacobite that ever lived, to difference our case from the above stated ones.

If our positions are then true, and our reasonings upon them unsophisticated, the conclusion is irresistible, not only that we are exempted from the supreme authority of the British Parliament, but also that she is inconsistent with herself in claiming our subjection; as she does not pretend, in profession at least, even now, when nothing but her own power and will bounds her pretensions, to any authority inconsistent with civil liberty, or the rights of Englishmen; and yet assumes a power subversive of their real essence, and very shadows. Such is the conduct of those who sit at the helm, and by the reins of modern policy have practised the Nation into present measures. We hope if common sense, political discernment, and public virtue, have forsaken the mansions of high life, they are still resident in the Island, and will soon unite superiour to opposition.

Perhaps it will be said, as has been often said with little truth and less knowledge, if we were perfectly independent in the first formation of our Government, we have rendered ourselves since dependant by our General Assemblies recognising the authority of Parliament, and submitting to her Acts, in various instances; and by our receiving protection from our Parent State. To which we answer, that it was not in the power of all the Assemblies, from their first commencement to the present day, to have effected this union and consequent dependance.

The authority of General Courts do not extend to the alteration of the fundamentals of Governments, much less to their subversion. This can be done only by the express voice of the whole people at large. The Governour, Council, and House of Representatives, which compose the Assembly, are creatures of, and derive all their power from a Constitution agreed upon and previously established, which has for its primum mobile, groundwork and leading principle, Liberty, civil and religious. All transactions, therefore, growing out of such a Constitution, and founded upon it, as are the acts and doings of an Assembly, must breathe the spirit of freedom, and be governed by it, as by a pole-star in the political hemisphere. The election of Deputies, from time to time, is only a designation of persons, who are immediately vested with their authority by the foundation-principles of Government. Their power is only in a line of conduct chalked out by the Constitution. In their deviations they act in their private capacity, and not as the substitutes of the people. Acting within their delegated sphere, their constituents are, in speculation, virtually present, acting themselves by the votes and suffrages of their Representatives. This is what gives universal obligation to their proceedings. But it would be absurd to suppose a privacy between principals and substitutes, respecting a matter for which the former were not represented. Hence the irresistible conclusion, that our Constitution has not been destroyed or altered by Provincial Assemblies.

This is not only a truth in politicks, but also a certainty in metaphysicks. It is the first principles of Government that give political existence to substitutes, and support them in every instance of their publick conduct; of consequence these principles must be pre-existent in point of time to every constitutional transaction of theirs. Representatives, then, to effect the ruin or subversion of the Constitution, must remain such by virtue of it, during the process, and until they complete its destruction; and so it must survive its own dissolution, acting after it ceases to be. And further, if they can act as Representatives the very instant it is destroyed, which they must, in order to complete its ruin, they can for the succeeding, and so on. The consequence of which would be obviously this, that there could be substitutes of the people to act according to a Constitution, when there was no such thing existing in nature. An absurdity of the first magnitude. The same argument holds with respect to an alteration. This reasoning may be unentertaining, and at first view will perhaps seem a little obscure to a mind not cast in a metaphysical mould. I aim at perspicuity, at the expense of elegance, in every instance of ratiocination; if in this I have failed of success, it is imputable to a misfortune in the choice of words, not to a confusion of perceptions. Sure I am, that I clearly perceive the connection, or disagreement of ideas, and that you must subscribe to my conclusions, being masters of the train of reasoning as it passed in my own mind. Our opposers must either deny our premises, or admit our inference; that is, they must deny that Representatives are constitutional officers, and, as such, bound by it; or admit that we are still independent of the Parent State, notwithstanding their supposed recognition of the authority of Parliament. I have laboured this the more, as it is a general truth so very material in politicks. It was directly in the face of this principle that the British Senate became septennial, which probably is the cause, sine qua non, of our present difficulties. However, the application of this principle, as now established, is obvious, and its use important in the present case, as it evinces, to a demonstration, that had our Assemblies (which is directly the reverse of the truth, as we have already proved) not only acquiesced in, and submitted to Statutes enacted by the British Legislature, but had also, in express terms and in a manner the most cogent, passed Acts declaring this Province annexed to the Empire of Great Britain, and, as such, subject to her laws, this would by no means have united us without the consent of the people, nor have given our Parent State any new rights over us. Such Acts must have been void in their own nature.

A fortiori the adopting of the Statute and Common Law of England in our Courts of Justice, argues no such connection, or subjection, though it has been urged with a zeal not according to knowledge by some, and an address nearly allied to chicanery by others. It is the misfortune, generally, of arguments adduced in support of error, like Prior's darts, to return with effect upon those who advance them. If the practising upon the Common and Statute Law of England in our judicial proceedings, implied our subjection to her authority, (and if it does not prove this it proves nothing to the purpose,) for the same reason Great Britain's practising upon the laws of the Normans, Saxons, &c., would prove her subject to those Northern Powers; and the adopting the Civil Law of Rome, without an Act of their own Legislature, would infer the Briton's subjection to her infallible authority; which would carry the Nation right back again into the bosom of that mother of harlots, from whose arms Henry the Eighth wrested our parent, that he might enjoy the foster indulgence of a kinder companion. From this instance, learn what motives may reach a Royal breast. As a single amour induced one King to change the National Religion from the Roman Catholick to the Protestant, so a passion not more justifiable, though perhaps less personal, may influence some future Monarch to barter away the Protestant for the religion of the Canadians. Ages may first roll away. Empires roll and roll, and will forever roll. It is said they steer a Western course. Unborn Americans may bid them welcome. Present actors speed their progress; and future patriots enjoy their blessings. But to return to the subject.

The genuine history of the matter is simply this: The Common Law of a Country is of reciprocal and personal obligation upon each of its inhabitants, independent of the law-giver. In England it is considered as the birthright of Englishmen. When individuals remove to Countries uninhabited, or to Territories already peopled, if they do not incorporate with the original inhabitants, so as to be subject to their laws, they are considered as carrying with them, and being bound by those laws which were obligatory upon them in the abandoned State, so far as is applicable, upon change of circumstances, with other necessary restrictions. And this, not because they are the Statutes of the deserted State, but as they are convenient rules of conduct, which had induced a mutual, personal obligation, whose force was to be commensurate with the possibility and fitness of their operation. In this view our ancestors considered themselves bringing from the land of their nativity the Common Law, together with such Statutes as were in being at the time of their emigration, disclaiming the validity of all subsequent Acts. Our Courts of Justice have always been thoroughly penetrated with a sense of the propriety of this distinction. If, in some instances, unmindful of their judicial department, in favorem, to say the least of it, they have trespassed in untrodden paths, and, by a dangerous metamorphose, become Legislators, it would be as irrational to argue our subjection from this extra-judicial courtly conduct, as from the aberration of the fixed stars. But I quit the delicate subject. A sentiment of the ingenious Blackstone is much to our purpose. "For," says that learned Judge, "the Common Law of England, as such, has no allowance or authority in our American Plantations; they being not part of the Mother Country."

The affair of receiving protection from Great Britain, is an argument urged, I presume, for the want of a better. On this score, it has with truth been said, we owe her nothing. Our Trade, which she monopolizes, as to its profit, is more than an equivalent. From this she realizes annual millions; by this we cheerfully pay her, like children possessing property, a large annuity, as has been clearly shown in the ingenious observations of the inimitable Novanglus, to which I beg leave to refer you. But if our arrears were great, would it give her a right to make us her slaves? In our infant state, and during the long and bloody conflicts with the savage natives, she neither gave, or offered us aid. Of later years, we have neither wanted, or received protection, except from the bare existence of her Navy, in common with Portugal, and other places, in the articles of Trade and Commerce, and this for her own emolument. The American Trade carries its own reward with it, especially to the Parent State, which names, with the strictest attention to her own interest, the ports and channels of its circulation. We are, and from the beginning have been, of sufficient ability to defend ourselves against all our own proper enemies. And what is more, we actually have done it. Mr. Hutchinson, in his History, speaking of the famous Phillipick war, says: "This is certain, as this Colony was at first settled, so it was now preserved from ruin, without any charge to the Mother Country." We have ever contributed our full proportion for the annoyance of the common adversary. In the last war, America was one of the principal seats of action. It was a National, a British, a general war, originating from National motives, and directed against Britain's inveterate enemy. We were not involved in it as Americans, as Colonists, but as subjects of the King of England. When war is made upon a common Sovereign, it must have a local existence. It is accidental that one particular place, rather than another, is made the scene of it. Therefore it most certainly ought to be supported by the joint assistance of the whole. As subjects of an English King, we have always been lavish of men and money for military operations. In the last war we much exceeded our proportion; at the close of which a reimbursement was made us by Parliament. For the truth of this, we may appeal to the recorded acknowledgment of the House of Commons. This undisputed fact proves, also, to the satisfaction of every reasonable man, that we had not been deficient on former occasions; otherwise she would not have reimbursed to us what had been long due to herself. Since this period, it must be confessed, her exertions have been very extraordinary for the administration of justice and the support of Civil Government in America, and in this Province in particular. Within a year, Ships have been manned, and Armies transported at a great expense, destined to our Ports and Towns, to distress, impoverish, abuse, and enslave the best of subjects. Whether we are bound to bear a part of this expense; to pay the whole; or ten thousand times as much, if the Parliament should call for it, is the question we are considering.

But we stand upon a foundation still more stable, deeper rooted, and more highly exalted, whose chief corner-stone was laid in Heaven. Nature has disjoined us by one of her insuperable barriers—an Ocean, a thousand leagues wide. And her Omnipotent Sovereign has rendered the union, and consequent subjection contended for, morally impossible, by making us moral agents, subject to the immutable and eternal laws of our being. We can challenge a freedom; challenge rights inconsistent with the claims of Parliament under the broad seal of Heaven—from the King of Kings, and Lord of all the earth; rights that were born with us; created in us by the decrees of Providence; that cannot be surrendered even by ourselves; that cannot be taken from us but by the same Almighty arm that bestowed them. So that had it been the sense of our ancestors, the sense of the King, and the sense of the Nation previous to our emigration, that we were to continue subject to the Parent State; had we declared for this subjection in the first instance; had we received a Charter in confirmation of this declaration; had our Assemblies and Courts of Justice strengthened and corroborated this relation by unnumbered acts and proceedings; had the body of the people, with full satisfaction and indescribable avidity, sanctified the same by their express fiat; and lastly, had we been defended by the parental arm from our first settlement to the present day, and still needed the same protection; I say, had this been the state of facts, the reverse of all which we have proved to be true, it would not, it could not oblige us to submit to the supreme authority of Parliament to the degree she contends for. For this would be to relinquish our duty which we owe to that Being whose will alone gives universal obligation.

Such is the nature of man, such the constitution of things, that his duty is discoverable by reason, aided by revelation; and is discharged by conforming to the laws of eternal justice, and the practice of every social virtue. On this depends man's truest happiness and best good. This happiness is said to be the foundation of natural law, or ethicks, it being inseparably interwoven with our frame, and forming all the principles and springs of action. This natural law is coeval with mankind, implanted by the Deity, and of the highest obligation. It is binding all over the globe, in all countries, at all times; the same at Rome, at Athens, in Britain, and America. No Senate, no Parliament, no Assembly, can dispense with it, retrench or alter it. Whoever violates it, says Cicero, renounces his own nature, divests himself of humanity; and will be rigorously chastised for his disobedience in the coming world. No law, no transaction repugnant to this law, is of any validity. It is the origin of all power, and the support of all authority.

We being then, in common with all mankind, under an indispensable obligation to pursue our own happiness in a course of religious and social duties; it will hence follow, that we cannot surrender those rights which are necessary for our happiness, or give up that liberty which is necessary for the performance of our duty: also, that we cannot divest ourselves of our natural freedom, so far as to submit to the absolute will either of an individual or a State, who might treat us according to their arbitrary whim and fancy. This is what Great Britain requires of us. This is the situation into which she has for years been plotting to force us.* A voluntary submission to her claim in its full latitude will be submitting to a necessity of doing whatever she commands, of course to the necessity of doing wrong at her sovereign nod; for I presume she does not as yet pretend to infallibility. In short, it would be in effect abandoning our lives, which we are not masters of; renouncing our duty, which we are not permitted to do; selling our Country, our wives, and our children, which are not ours so to dispose of; betraying our religion, which would be treason against Christ; and exchanging happiness for misery, which would be, as much as in us lay, reversing God's benevolent plan of moral Government in the world.

To illustrate this by a similar instance. Suppose in some future day Great Britain, intoxicated by a lust for innovations, dazzled with the overflowings of power, unchecked by her own sentiments, or our cries and groans, which would never reach her, should pass a law tolerating the Papistical religion in all the English Colonies; suppose she should advance one step further, and establish it with disqualifications and penalties, (the transition being easy from one to the other.) To submit to such a law would be betraying our religion, to oppose treason and rebellion, the consequence of which would be loss of life, confiscation of goods, corruption of blood, and a reducing to beggary wives and children. I do not mention this as what would probably take place; it is enough that it is possible. The established religion of the Nation has been repeatedly changed. What has been may again be. The claim of Parliament is to legislate for us in all cases whatever. If she establishes this claim, we are slaves; I speak it with anguish—we are miserable!

To put ourselves then into the absolute power of another, be it State or individual, is violating a first law of nature, whose seat has been said "to be the bosom of God"; her voice the harmony of the world. All things in Heaven and earth do her homage; the very least as feeling her care, and the greatest as not exempted from her power."

The next inquiry is, whether successful opposition be possible; if possible, whether prudent and safe. If measuring upon the scale of probability, we are led to conclude in favour of both, our duty is plain.

FROM THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

FOR THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

Boston, March 9, 1775.

My worthy Friends and Fellow-Countrymen:

The more I reflect upon the Petition, so called, of the American Continental Congress to the King, the more I am surprised, astonished, and amazed at the unaccountable folly it discovers. One would think that an assembly, allowed on all hands to be unknown in the Constitution, would, in an undertaking of this kind, have endeavoured to obviate any objections to their authority by the moderation, truth, justice, and equity of their complaints; would have recommended themselves by that decent demeanour and dutiful behaviour which would have insured an attention to their requests from the Throne, and interested the Nation in their favour; but alas for us, we find them, contrary to their own declaration, actuated by "a restless levity of temper, unjust impulses of ambition, and artful suggestions of seditious persons," instead of that quiet submission to lawful authority, that decent moderation, and those loyal principles which ought to have been the characteristic of their councils.

* By Great Britain, I would be understood to mean those Ministers who have been vibrating the political pendulum.

But I shall waive any further general observations, until I have particularly examined the remaining grievances complained of, of which the next in order, is, "The Judges of Courts of common law have been made entirely dependant on one part of the Legislature for their salaries, as well as for the duration of their commissions."

By this, so far as it respects this Province, can be intended only the Judges of the Superiour Court, as it is confined to such as receive salaries; and the Judges of the Inferiour Courts have only court fees, upon the several causes which come before them. And here let us examine what was formerly our situation in this respect, and thence determine the expediency, propriety, and necessity of the alteration. The Judges of the Superiour Court were before dependant upon the annual grants of the House of Representatives for their salaries, which have ever been so small, that they would scarce defray the necessary expense of attending the Courts, and never sufficient to maintain a family; so that unless the Judges had a private estate to subsist their families upon, they must have been constantly kept in the most pressing circumstances, if not greatly involved in debt. Of this repeated remonstrances were made and petitions presented for relief, but without success; and what was a still greater hardship, they were in continual danger, that by any unpopular adjudications, even these scanty pittances would be curtailed. Under these circumstances, could the dignity of the King's Judges be properly supported and preserved? Could they act with that firmness, spirit, freedom, and resolution requisite to maintain so important a character? Could they be considered as not "dependant on one part of the Legislature for their salaries?"

To these questions let every impartial observer return an answer, and determine for himself, whether they were rendered more dependant on one part of the Legislature, when they were made entirely independent of every part. Add to this, that they and some other Civil Officers who where formerly paid by the Province, are now paid out of that fund which you are taught to believe is squandered away upon a set of worthless placemen and pensioners; and thereby an internal tax upon your estates for these purposes prevented. As to the "duration of their commissions," they are now removable only by an order from His Majesty, under his sign manual; and it is paying but an ill compliment to His Most Excellent Majesty, whom they profess to believe the gracious father of his people, and ever attentive to the reasonable complaints of his subjects, to suppose that he will make an improper or wanton use of this power. However, there is no doubt to be entertained, that even in this instance, as soon as we return to our former state of obedience, such an alteration will be made upon a dutiful application to the King and Parliament, as will remove every ground of complaint on this account.

The next article is, "Counsellors holding their commissions during pleasure, exercise Legislative authority." This is very extraordinary; we all profess to think the British Constitution the best that now is or ever has been established in the world; we are all striving after the rights, liberties, and privileges of Englishmen; we all wish to be under a Government as nearly similar as the difference of our circumstances will admit; and yet this alteration, which certainly reduces us to a much nearer resemblance of that great original, which we so much and so justly admire, is complained of as a grievance. Before the late Act of Parliament for regulating the government of the Massachusetts-Bay—for I consider this grievance as confined to this Province, for reasons I shall hereafter explain—the Council was annually chosen by the House of Representatives, and consequently, by adopting any unpopular measures, were in danger of losing their election the ensuing year. This we have seen verified in many instances of the most worthy and sensible men in the Province being left out of the Council merely on this account. On the other hand, if any members, who were zealous in support of the popular schemes were elected into the Council, they were liable to be turned or kept out by the negative which the Governour had upon the election. By the late Act they are appointed by His Majesty, with the consent of his Privy Council, and rendered independent of any branch of the Legislature here, and, therefore, may be presumed to be impartial and unbiased in their councils. In which of those modes of appointment the Council best resembles the House of Lords in England, who hold their seats by hereditary right, independent of the King or the Commons, let every one judge for himself, and thence conclude what a grievance we labour under in this respect.

They go on to complain that "humble and reasonable Petitions from the Representatives of the people have been fruitless." Had they been more explicit in their declaration of the instances of this kind referred to, we might better judge of the justice of their complaint. The Congress knew that in consequence of the Petitions from the Colonies, the Stamp Act was repealed; they knew that certain Duties, imposed upon several articles by another Act of Parliament, were taken off in consequence of a similar application, from all the articles except Tea, and that this was kept on only to save the legal and constitutional right and supreme jurisdiction of the British Parliament; they know that whenever this right is acknowledged, and their honour thereby saved, that even this Duty will be taken off, and no further occasion of complaint given. They must have seen, that, had it not been for the high-handed, unwarrantable measures adopted by those who call themselves Whigs; had they instead thereof proposed any plan of accommodation, any means of settling the dispute amicably and honourably; all things would have been adjusted upon an equitable, a constitutional and permanent foundation. There can be no reasonable doubt that this has been the disposition of Administration for some years past; but that our daring outrageous behaviour, instead of the "humble and reasonable Petitions from the Representatives of the people" that we are told of, has compelled them to use coercive measures, to bring us to a due sense of that dependance upon the British Nation which our forefathers, and we, until very lately, have uniformly acknowledged. Can it be supposed that a powerful, a brave-spirited, and generous Nation can, on the one hand, admit such extravagant claims as the Colonies now set up, or, on the other, entertain a design of oppressing and enslaving them? Both these things are equally incompatible with her own interest, and therefore equally improbable. Yet you are made to believe them by your leaders, who find it their interest to fish in troubled waters; who know that as soon as the ball of contention is once taken away, they must sink into their native obscurity, and therefore seek their own advancement in your ruin. Could I suppose that views so dishonourable and base influenced the British Councils, as an attempt to injure and enslave you, no one would more readily join heart and hand in a forcible opposition to their measures, if all peaceable and reasonable means failed of success. But I am firmly persuaded, and upon the best grounds, that your fears are without foundation; that your danger exists only in your own imaginations; and I pray God that your eyes may be opened, that you may see things in their true and natural colours, and escape the impending evils before they burst upon you.

The next complaint is, that "the agents of the people have been discountenanced, and Governours have been instructed to prevent the payment of their salaries." Let us examine the grounds of this complaint. Formerly, while we were convinced that our own interest was inseparably connected with that of Great Britain; while we were willing to submit to the rightful exercise of her authority over us, and in this submission found that we were happy, peaceful, and free, an agent was chosen by the three branches of the Legislature, who took care of the concerns of the Province at the Court of Great Britain. To this no objection was ever made, but a salary was granted and regularly paid, and the interest of the Province carefully attended to by the agent. Of late years the demagogues on this side the Atlantick, finding they should not be able to accomplish their sinister purposes unless they had an agent of their own appointment, who would join in forwarding and promoting their own rash measures, determined to effect this point; accordingly the House of Representatives, when they found the Governour would not approve the choice of an agent they had made, to answer these ends, instead of electing a suitable person, in whom all parties might agree, proceeded in their separate capacity to choose one, who should serve the House alone, and the Council appointed one for themselves. These agents were never admitted as such, at any board or office in England, not being properly appointed, and were therefore useless to all good intents and purposes whatever. This measure was also justly deemed offensive by His Majesty, as introducing unnecessary innovations, and he accordingly, to save a useless expense of money to the Province, instructed his Governour to refuse his consent to the payment of the salaries granted to the agents thus appointed, which he, without doubt, had not only a legal and constitutional right to do, but therein consulted the true interest of the Province, and which ought by no means to be considered as a grievance, as every valuable, just, and lawful purpose may be answered by the former as well as the latter mode of election. With how much reason, then, a complaint is made on this account, it is for you, my fellow-countrymen, to determine, before you adopt any forcible measures for redress. Admitting, indeed, that these things are really illegal and oppressive, every method ought to be tried for relief before you proceed to such desperate extremities; and if you fail of success, you ought even then to consider whether the miseries and calamities necessarily attendant upon and consequent to a forcible opposition to the Parent State, do not far exceed any advantages which you can expect to gain from the fullest satisfaction of your wishes in this unnatural contest. But when you consider that your complaints are for the most part groundless, that you are seduced, deceived, and misled by your worst enemies, under the mask of patriots, you cannot, I think, hesitate immediately to think and judge for yourselves, to exercise that virtue, prudence, and wisdom, which you naturally possess; and now, while it is in your power, secure your happiness and freedom undiminished, lest you be finally compelled to make the greatest sacrifices to maintain even a partial enjoyment of them.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

Boston, March 9, 1775.

Please to insert the following Recantation and Confession:—

To err is incident to every human being, but candidly to confess errors when conscious of them, I am apprehensive is the property of but few. No man is blame-worthy for natural imperfection, but obstinacy and perverseness, as they are enemies to truth and right, so they are characteristic of a wrong head and a bad heart. I am now about to produce to the world one instance of a candid acknowledgment of having possessed erroneous principles in politics, and consequently must have been guilty of a wrong conduct in society. In the beginning of our political confusion here in America, I was what you may truly call a Whig, in the modern acceptation of the word. Not that I ever justified or countenanced mobs and riots; I was ever an advocate of harmony, peace, and good order in society. But being so often told, and conceiving it to be the basis of the English Constitution, that no person, properly qualified, should have his money taken from him but by his own consent, or that of his Representative, I conceived it to be unconstitutional even for the Parliament of Great Britain to make any Act which should necessarily and unavoidably affect the properties of the Colonists. I conceived, moreover, that though we were subjects of the King of England, yet we had a Constitution of our own, no ways controllable by the Lords and Commons of Great Britain; and that the Parliament had no more right to legislate for us, than our Legislature here had to legislate for them. (Such was, I now freely confess, my ignorance then of the English Government and Constitution, and the relation between the Colonies and the Parent State, which I now plainly perceive, taken altogether, compose one entire Empire, and the Parliament its supreme legislative head.)

Upon these principles, when the Stamp Act first came over, which, if carried into execution, would necessarily affect our properties, I loudly exclaimed against it, and considered it as a most violent infraction of the English

Constitution, and a direct taxing of the Colonies. That Act, so inexpedient and unreasonable in its nature and operation, was never carried into execution, but speedily repealed, though succeeded by another, which we apprehended almost as bad, viz: An Act for imposing duty on Glass, Painters' Colours, Paper, Tea, &c., articles which, though not absolutely necessary for life, yet so very useful, that we could not well do without them; and besides, the duty was solely for the purpose of raising a Revenue in America, and was introductory to every other species of taxation. The design was very evident in the Stamp Act, therefore the general cry was, among us Whigs, (or patriots, as we called ourselves,) let us by all means oppose it with violence; if we do not, we shall become the most abject slaves to the Parliament of Great Britain. Our opposition was the means of the Stamp Act being repealed, and will produce the same effect as to this, if we show the same temper and resolution. The truth was, the duty was soon taken off from all the articles except Tea, (though I now believe more owing to the influence of our friends at home, than our clamour here.) We then, however, exulted in our patriotism, and considered ourselves as the instruments of saving our Country from impending ruin. We were so elated with success, that we doubted not any Act of Parliament relative to the Colonies would be repealed, if we opposed it with firmness and resolution. Our pride was so elevated, that we could not have patience with those who would not heartily join us in our plan. We considered them as cowardly wretches, or mean, selfish governmental expectants. Our candour and charity did not extend so far as to suppose it possible for them to speak their real sentiments when they differed from us. My conscience now, upon recollection, abundantly tells me how deficient I was at that time, in those amiable qualities.

We were not, however, entirely acquiescent, though we had struck such a noble stroke, and got the duty taken off of every article but one, it was with great reluctance we could suffer it to remain on Tea; but as the Merchants in this Province (who, though their profession is Commerce, are generally the springs which keep in motion the wheels of Government) appeared to be tolerably easy, (some importing Tea directly from England, paying the duty, others illicitly running it from the Dutch, taking their chance of seizure,) the spirit of uneasiness seemed in some measure to subside, and both Whigs and Tories purchased and drank Tea freely in this Province, without particular inquiry whether it paid the duty or not, from the year 1767, to the time the East India Company were permitted by Parliament to send their Tea immediately to America. This, like a spark falling upon gunpowder, immediately set us into a flame again. We considered the Parliament as granting a monopoly to one trading Company, to the detriment of all America. We then thought it our duty once more to rouse ourselves in defence of our injured Country. Though I was very warm in the cause, yet I never advised to the destruction of the Tea, but, in an evil hour, it was all destroyed. The particular circumstances are too well known to need repeating; but it is a thousand pities they could not be buried in eternal oblivion. The action struck me so horribly, as being repugnant to every principle of justice, and a downright piece of piracy, that I could not help exclaiming against it, as being pregnant with the most ruinous consequences to us. I then began to be afraid of the chastisement of an incensed and powerful Nation. I thought it was high time to stop in our career, and seriously consider what we were about, lest we should plunge ourselves into ruin before we were aware of it. But my brother Whigs, having more courage and resolution than I had, perceiving me to begin to waver, exerted themselves to keep up my spirits, and continually exhorted me to stand firm and unshaken. Nothing is wanting, said they, but resolution and unity; desperate diseases require desperate remedies; we have, as it were, passed the Rubicon; the other Colonies will stand by us; our Committees of Correspondence have wisely taken care to secure their principal men; if we do not appear unanimous, we are lost; we must not look back, but forward; we are afraid of nothing but the miscreant Tories, who endeavour to prevent our union; we must keep them down by continued threats, and now and then a little chastisement; the Printers we have got under our thumbs; they dare not print any thing but what is on the side of liberty; if any one of them does, we are determined he shall lose our custom; and never fear, if we only stand firm in our opposition, we gain our point.

Still further to secure me and keep me steadfast, (for they were sensible I had some influence,) they chose me one in a Committee of Correspondence, &c., and then, I acknowledge, I was for a considerable time wound up to a higher pitch of enthusiasm than ever. We met often; indeed we made it almost our whole business; but our conversation was altogether upon politicks, and always upon the side of liberty, rights, and privileges. Every argument was defensive of liberty, and instead of an opponent, each was an applauder of the other, and a reviler of all Tories; and each, perhaps to inspirit the other, expressed more than was his just and real sentiments. The same thing took place with respect to other Committees, with whom we always kept up a continued intercourse by letters. How often have we expressed ourselves, with a studied zeal and determined resolution, purposely to prevent any flagging of spirit in other Committees, and how often have we received as spirited answers in reply! Thus we went on animating and supporting each other, till the Suffolk Resolves appeared; then, I acknowledge, I was almost as much struck as when the Tea was destroyed, but throughout our circle shouts of applause echoed round the room. I could not help at that time seriously observing, that I was fearful we went too fast; the Continental Congress, which was then sitting, might not justify such very spirited Resolves, and then our cause would be injured, as we must certainly acquiesce in their determinations. Therefore I apprehended it would be most prudent for us to take our hints from them, rather than lead. The reply was, that our Delegates were men of sense, and some of them good speakers; one of them particularly could carry almost any point he was determined upon, therefore they must have great influence in the Congress; and as there was a continued correspondence kept up between the Committee of Boston and the Delegates, there was no doubt but they were apprized of them previously to their publication, and depended upon their being adopted by the Continental Congress. Accordingly they were adopted and approved of, though they do not appear in the pamphlet containing their doings. But still, notwithstanding the authority of the Continental Congress, and the high spirits and assurance of our and other Committees, I could not help, upon serious reflection, when alone, having many compunctions of heart, as it evidently appeared to me that all could not be right. The course seemed to me to lead directly to rebellion, which my soul abhorred, and was never in my intention.

From that time I was determined seriously and impartially to examine for myself, and attend to all that was said on both sides. Our custom ever had been, not to attend, and scarcely to read any thing that was not wrote on the right side of the question, as we called it. The first thing I read with attention was a letter from a Virginian to the Continental Congress, while they were sitting at Philadelphia. That letter I found contained many serious and just observations, sufficient to awaken in any unprejudiced mind alarming apprehensions of the consequences of our hasty conduct. Afterwards I met with the "Friendly Address," and many other pamphlets wrote on the side of Government, together with some excellent pieces published in Mills and Hicks's, and Draper's Papers. These, taken altogether, seem to me fairly to lay open and expose the whole scene of our political errors and iniquities. And what confirms me still more in the justness of their observations, and the conclusiveness of their reasonings is, that they seem unanswerable by the whole Whig party. The weak and futile replies that have been made to some of them do not deserve the name of answers. What I have seen contains little more than scurrility and illiberal abuse; instead of sober reason and candid reply, they spend their shafts in invective and indecent railing. Indeed, from the beginning, notwithstanding my prejudices in favour of their cause, I have been often disgusted at their manner of treating men and measures. It appeared to me it was by no means calculated to persuade or convince serious and rational men. I am now fully convinced, however high I once was, that the cause of the Whigs is not a just one, otherwise they surely must have defended it with a better appearance of reason and plausibility. Another reason which tended not a little to cure me of my whiggish principles, was the crabbed fruits they produced. In contending for liberty, they seem inclinable to engross it all themselves; the prevailing temper and disposition among them seems by no means to be pacifick; they are arbitrary and even tyrannical in the whole tenour of their conduct; they allow not to others who differ from them the same liberty of thinking and acting that they claim themselves, but shamefully abuse them, and treat them with spite, malice, and revenge. The instances of that kind are too numerous and notorious to require a particular detail.

How shockingly extravagant are the late Resolves of the County of Worcester? What a shameful attempt to discourage the liberty of the Press, that glorious palladium of English liberty. Let an honest Whig seriously consider whether such a conduct can flow from good principles, any more than a bad tree can bring forth good fruit. I now seriously advise all my former brethren of the Whig party to follow me in my recantation, rather than to throw out squibs at me in Edes and Gill's, or Thomas's Papers. All that I can now do, (and that I shall do,) in the way of atonement for my former whiggish conduct, is to endeavour to proselyte as many as I can; and I find myself happy in being as successful at least in leading people from error, as I was once in persuading them into it.

A CONVERTED WHIG.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO MR. RIVINGTON, IN NEW-YORK, DATED BOSTON, MARCH 9, 1775.

Last Monday the annual Oration was pronounced in the old South Meeting; there was a very numerous audience. Some gentlemen of the Army placed themselves on the top of the pulpit stairs. In the pulpit were Warren, the orator of the day, Hancock, Adams, Church, &c. &c. I had been informed that the Military were determined not to suffer the least expression that had a tendency to reflect on the King or Royal family to pass with impunity; of course, my attention was directed to their conduct on the critical occasion. The Republican was, I fancy, apprehensive of this, for through the whole oration there was an affectation of loyalty and veneration for the King and the Brunswick line; it was, however, replete with invective, inflammatory expressions, denials of Parliamentary claim, abuse of Ministry, &c., &c. The officers frequently interrupted Warren by laughing loudly at the most ludicrous parts, and coughing and hemming at the most seditious, to the great discontent of the devoted citizens. The oration, however, was finished; and it was afterwards moved by Adams that an orator should be named for the ensuing fifth of March, to commemorate "the bloody and horrid massacre, perpetrated by a party of soldiers under the command of Captain T. Preston." At this the officers could no longer contain themselves, but exclaimed, fie, shame! and, fie, shame! was echoed by all the Navy and Military in the place; this caused a violent confusion, and in an instant the windows were thrown open, and the affrighted Yankees jumped out by fifties, so that in a few minutes we should have had an empty house; in the meantime, a very genteel, sensible officer, dressed in gold-lace regimentals, with blue lapels, moved with indignation at the insult offered the Army, since Captain Preston had been fairly tried and most honourably acquitted by a Boston Jury, advanced to Hancock and Adams, and spoke his sentiments to them in plain English; the latter told the officer he knew him, and would settle the matter with the General; the man of honour replied, "you and I must settle it first." At this the demagogue turned pale and waived the discourse. It is said this gallant gentleman's life is threatened, but I fancy there is little danger. The Town was perfectly quiet all night; no exhibition or ringing of bells; they knew better.

You will soon have in New-York the Asia, a fine Sixty-four, commanded by an excellent seaman, son of your old friend Sir George Vandeput.

CONNECTICUT ASSEMBLY.

At a General Assembly of the Governour and Company of the English Colony of Connecticut, in New-England, in America, holden at New-Haven, by adjournment and special order of the Governour of said Colony, on Thursday, the second day of March, Annoque Domini, 1775 :

It being represented to this Assembly that Abraham Blacklee, of New-Haven, Captain of a Military Company in the Second Regiment in this Colony, is disaffected to this Government, and the privileges thereof, as established by Charter, and has frequently spoken contemptuously of the measure taken by this Assembly for maintaining the same, and threatened to act in his office in opposition to the lawful authority of the Colony contrary to the duty of his office :

Resolved, By this Assembly, that James A. Hilhouse and Samuel Bishop, Esquires, be, and they are hereby appointed a Committee to inquire into said matters, and make report of what they find, with their opinion thereon, to this Assembly at the next session.

It having been represented to this Assembly that Isaac Quintard, of Stamford, in the County of Fairfield, Captain of the Second Military Company in the Town of Stamford, in the Ninth Regiment in this Colony, and Filer Dibble, of said Stamford, Captain of the First Military Company in the Town of Stamford, in said Regiment, at said Stamford, in January last, in contempt of the authority in this Colony, did attempt and endeavour to prevent the introduction of certain barrels of Gunpowder into this Colony for the Government use, agreeable to the order and directions of legal authority, which conduct is inconsistent with the duty of their said office and of dangerous tendency :

Whereupon it is Resolved, By this Assembly, that Gold Sillick Silliman, and Jonathan Sturgess, Esquires, be, and they are hereby appointed Commissioners, and are fully authorized and empowered to notify said Quintard and Dibble to appear before them, at such time and place as shall be by them appointed, and to examine the witnesses relative to said conduct, and examine into the truth of said representation, and to report what they shall find to the General Assembly, at their session in May next.

It being represented to this House, that the Towns of Ridgfield and Newtown have come into and published certain Resolutions injurious to the rights of this Colony, in direct opposition to the repeated Resolves of this House, and of dangerous tendency :

Resolved, That Col. Joseph Platt Cook and Col. John Read, be a Committee to inquire into the truth of said representation, and how far any person or persons holding commissions under this Government have been any way active or concerned in promoting the measures taken by said Towns, and make report of what they shall find to the General Assembly, to be held at Hartford, in May next.

Wednesday, March 8, 1775.

In the House of Representatives of the Colony of Connecticut, assembled at New-Haven :—

Whereas, our brethren of the Town of Boston have long suffered, and are yet suffering under the hand of oppression, grievous and unparalleled hardships and distresses, in consequence of their resolution to support the great principles of Constitutional Liberty ; and having endured, and yet enduring those sufferings in the common cause of America, with most exemplary fortitude and magnanimity ; the principles of humanity and justice to ourselves and them, require that they should not be left to sink under the weight of burdens which, without assistance, may become absolutely insupportable.

And although many donations have been made them by this and the other Colonies ; yet, upon authentick intelligence, it appears they are inadequate to the real distresses in which thousands of their innocent and virtuous inhabitants are involved by means as aforesaid.

This House, taking the matters aforesaid into their serious consideration, do Resolve, That it be, and it is hereby earnestly recommended to the several Towns in this Colony, to continue cheerfully and liberally to contribute to the relief of their suffering brethren in said Town, according to the several abilities which Divine Providence has given them ; esteeming it an incumbent duty, and an acceptable service in the sight of God and their Country.

By order of the House,
WILLIAM WILLIAMS, Speaker.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

New-Haven, March, 1775.

Colony of Connecticut, ss.

Resolved, That the thanks of this House be given to the worthy and patriotick House of Assembly for the Island of Jamaica, for their kind and seasonable mediation in favour of the Colonies on this Continent, by their late humble Petition and Remonstrance to His Majesty. And that the Speaker of this House be, and he is hereby directed to write to the said Honourable Assembly, and enclose a copy of this Resolution ; also of the Resolution of this House, at their session in May, 1773, appointing a Committee of Correspondence, and invite them to come into that, or a similar method of mutually communicating such intelligence, as may be of publick importance, and more immediately affecting the inhabitants of the British Colonies and Islands in America.

Test : RICHARD LAW, Clerk.

Colony of Connecticut, Lebanon, March 14, 1775.

SIR : In pursuance of the direction of the Honourable House of Representatives for this Colony, I have the pleasure of transmitting the enclosed Resolutions, and at the same time to return you their unfeigned thanks for your late kind and seasonable, yet spirited and pertinent mediation, in their behalf, by your Remonstrance and Petition to His Most Gracious Majesty.

The clear knowledge you have of the inherent and unalienated rights of the Colonists, and the readiness you have shewn to assert them, with a temper and firmness worthy of such a cause, of Englishmen and Americans, at once reflects the highest honour on your worthy and patriotick Assembly, and merits the most grateful acknowledgments of this whole Continent.

The unnatural contest between the Parliament of Great Britain and these Colonies is at length, by the unwearied efforts of our enemies for a course of years, brought (to all human appearance) near to a most alarming crisis ; in which, threatened as we are by the dreadful alternative of surrendering all for which our fathers suffered and bled, all that is deserving of men, Englishmen and Americans, in life ; or suffer all the horrors of a military contention with the Parent State ; the striking union of these Colonies, a consciousness of the justice of our cause, and the rectitude of our views, with the approbation of our fellow-men, seem, under Heaven, our greatest consolation and support.

The representations of so respectable a body as the Assembly of your large and important Island will, we flatter ourselves, meet with the most favourable attention of His Majesty and his Ministers, and have a happy tendency towards procuring for us and you, (and indeed the whole Nation, ultimately interested in this great common cause,) the redress of those grievances under which we labour, and the establishment of the liberties and privileges of the whole Empire, on the most sure and permanent basis.

We shall ever be happy in keeping up an intercourse with your Island, and shall, from time to time, with pleasure embrace every opportunity to give you the earliest intelligence, of whatever we shall judge of publick concern, or more immediately affecting the Colonies in general, or your Island in particular ; and shall gratefully receive the like favours from you.

I am, by order, and in behalf of the House of Representatives for this Colony, Sir, your most obedient and very humble servant,

WM. WILLIAMS, Speaker.
Hon. Speaker of the House of Assembly, Jamaica.

LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE J. TRUMBULL, GOVERNOUR OF CONNECTICUT, TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, ONE OF HIS MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE.

New-Haven, March, 1775.

MY LORD : I duly received your Lordship's Letter of the 10th of December last, enclosing His Most Gracious Majesty's Speech to his Parliament, and the Addresses in answer thereto, which I have taken the earliest opportunity to lay before the General Assembly of the Colony; and am now to return you their thanks for this communication.

It is, my Lord, with the deepest concern and anxiety, that we contemplate the unhappy dissensions which have taken place between the Colonies and Great Britain, which must be attended with the most fatal consequences to both, unless speedily terminated. We consider the interests of the two Countries as inseparable, and are shocked at the idea of any disunion between them. We wish for nothing so much as a speedy and happy settlement upon constitutional grounds, and cannot apprehend why it might not be effected, if proper steps were taken. It is certainly an object of that importance as to merit the attention of every wise and good man, and the accomplishment of it would add lustre to the first character upon earth.

The origin and progress of these unhappy disputes, we need not point out to you; they are perfectly known to your Lordship. From apprehensions on one side, and jealousies, fears, and distresses on the other, fomented and increased by the representations of artful and designing men, unfriendly to the liberties of America, they have risen to that alarming height at which we now see them, threatening the most essential prejudice, if not entire ruin, to the whole Empire. On the one hand, we do assure your Lordship that we do not wish to weaken or impair the authority of the British Parliament in any matters essential to the welfare and happiness of the whole Empire. On the other, it will be admitted that it is our duty, and that we should be even highly culpable, if we should not claim and maintain the constitutional rights and liberties derived to us as men and Englishmen; as the descendants of Britons, and members of an Empire whose fundamental principle is the liberty and security of the subject. British supremacy and American liberty are not incompatible with each other. They have been seen to exist and flourish together for more than a century. What now renders them inconsistent? Or, if any thing be further necessary to ascertain the one or limit the other, why may it not be amicably adjusted, every occasion and ground of future controversy be removed, and all that has unfortunately passed, be buried in perpetual oblivion?

The good people of this Colony, my Lord, are unfeignedly loyal, and firmly attached to His Majesty's person, family, and Government. They are willing and ready, freely as they have formerly most cheerfully done upon every requisition made to them, to contribute to the utmost of their abilities to the support of His Majesty's Government, and to devote their lives and fortunes to his service; and, in the last war, did actually expend in His Majesty's service more than Four Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling beyond what they received any compensation for. But the unlimited powers lately claimed by the British Parliament drove them to the borders of despair. These powers, carried into execution, will deprive them of all property, and are incompatible with every idea of civil liberty. They must hold all that they possess at the will of others, and will have no property which they can, voluntarily and as freemen, lay at the foot of the Throne as a mark of their affection and devotion to His Majesty's service.

Why, my Lord, should our fellow-subjects in Great Britain alone enjoy the high honour and satisfaction of presenting their free gifts to their Sovereign? Or, if this be a distinction in which they will permit none to participate with them; yet, in point of honour, it should be founded on the gift of their own property, and not of that of their fellow-subjects in the more distant parts of the Empire.

It is with particular concern and anxiety that we see the unhappy situation of our fellow-subjects in the Town of Boston, in the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay, where we behold many thousands of His Majesty's virtuous and loyal subjects reduced to the utmost distress by the operation of the Port Act, and the whole Province thrown into a state of anarchy and confusion, by the Act for changing the Constitution of the Province, and depriving them of some of their Charter-rights. We are at a loss to conceive how the destruction of the East-India Company's Tea could be a just or reasonable ground for punishing so severely thousands of innocent people who had no hand in that transaction, and that even without giving them any opportunity to be heard in their own defence.

[And we submit whether the conditions of their being restored to their former privileges, are not becoming impracticable under their present circumstances, since the Town is not, by law, authorized to tax the inhabitants for such a purpose; and the Province is not permitted the privilege of the Assembly; nor, they conceive, could they constitutionally hold one, until their Charter-rights are restored. Indeed, how can they constitutionally give His Majesty any security for their future good behaviour, but by their Representatives in General Assembly. Were the Acts for shutting up their Port and altering the Government of the Province, repealed; the armed force withdrawn from Boston, and the people put upon a footing to act freely and constitutionally, we cannot doubt but that as they have, upon all former occasions, shown themselves to be a generous, brave, and loyal people, they would comply with any reasonable requisition that should be made by his Majesty.]

Give us leave to recommend to your Lordship's most serious and candid attention the unhappy case of that distressed people, and in effect of all the Colonies, whose fate seems to be involved in theirs, and who are therefore most anxiously distressed for them. Permit us to hope, that, by your Lordship's kind and benevolent interposition, some wise and happy plan will be devised which may relieve us from our present anxieties, and restore that harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies, which we all most ardently wish for, and which alone can render us truly happy.

I am, my Lord, in behalf of the Governour and Company of Connecticut, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient and most humble servant,

GENERAL ASSEMBLY, New-Haven, March, 1775.

In the Upper House the foregoing draught for a Letter to the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, being read, is approved, and his Honour the Governour is desired to sign a transcript thereof, and transmit the same to his Lordship as soon as opportunity will permit.

Test: GEORGE WYLLYS, Secretary.

In the Lower House, Mr. Strong, Mr. Deane, Colonel Talcott, Mr. Hosmer, Mr. Wales, and Mr. Sturgess, are appointed a Committee to confer with such gentlemen as the Honourable Upper House shall appoint to confer on the subject-matter of the foregoing Letter.

Test: RICHARD LAW, Clerk.

In the Upper House, William Samuel Johnson and Oliver Wolcott, Esquires, are appointed to confer with the Committee of the Lower House on the subject-matter of the foregoing Letters.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CONNECTICUT TO MR. RIVINGTON, NEW-YORK, DATED MARCH 13, 1775.

Our Assembly met on the 2d of March. The two first days were chiefly employed in examination of the conduct of Captain Glover and the Representatives of Ridgfield, which Town had very freely declared against adopting the Congress's measures. A Committee was appointed to superintend this business, and make a report at the next May session. The debates of a week's duration upon the matters cost the Colony One Hundred and Seventy-Five Pounds. In the next place, many long and learned arguments were produced by the old leaven, the Republicans, urging the necessity of an Army to be immediately raised. The matter was recommended to a Committee, consisting of the most inflammatory and the truest malignant men, who openly declare for independence. After two days they produced a Report, as follows:

"That a Major General and two Brigadier Generals be appointed; that ten thousand bushels of Wheat, two thousand barrels of Pork, three thousand stands of Arms with Bayonets, be provided; and the Assembly emit Bills to the amount of Thirty Thousand Pounds, lawful money."

This was craftily concerted; for had the Bill succeeded, of course a subsequent one must have passed to raise a number of Troops to eat the provisions. But Heaven be praised, by this time the eyes of the most respectable Members were opened; they saw that all the old firebrands were the promoters of these destructive measures; and to the eternal honour of many Members who spoke and acted on behalf of the Constitution, a majority of the House was roused, and they then proceeded to vote by paragraph upon the Bill. They allowed the creation of General Officers, but all the rest were thrown out of the House; and, instead of the destructive measure concerted by the Cromwellites, a vote was passed by a great majority to petition his Majesty for a redress of such American grievances as should be enumerated by a Committee then appointed by the House to compose and report it for their approbation.

This Assembly was a special one, called for the express purpose of raising, &c., six thousand men. And notwithstanding the Secretary and Squire Wylls, who went to Cambridge to consult the Provincial Congress, assured the House that the Congress then met at Cambridge, on mature deliberation, wanted not assistance from this Colony, they being sufficiently able to fight all the Troops General Gage had then at Boston, our warm sons of — insisted on raising an Army in this Province, and, at any rate, drive the King's General out of this religious land.

A Letter, carrying with it, in effect, a Petition, was sent down to the Lower House from the Upper House, addressed to Lord Dartmouth. The Wasp immediately seized, and clumsily attacked those parts of it which were calculated to conciliate and restore harmony between Great Britain and America; but he was overruled, and returned home grievously disappointed.

LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN CONNECTICUT TO MR. HOLT, NEW-YORK, DATED MARCH 29, 1775.

Mr. James Rivington has often been animadverted on in a publick manner, and sundry Resolves have been passed in the different Colonies, respecting his conduct as a Printer; not only as being partial, but as publishing falsehoods tending to disunite them in their great struggle to support constitutional liberty, destroy their mutual confidence, and render abortive that system of conduct recommended by the Congress as the most certain and advisable expedient for obtaining a redress of our grievances. Mr. Rivington, or his partisans, have represented this as an attempt to destroy the liberty of the press. But shall a press disgorge calumny and falsehood with impunity? Shall the most innocent actions of a community be traversed, and the most reputable characters, even Legislative bodies, be traduced with passive tameness? This would be a tacit acknowledgment of the charge. Is it not notorious, that he, while America is anxiously struggling to preserve her constitutional liberties, like an invidious spy, watches every motion towards the grand point, and strives to frustrate every design, by disseminating distrust and falsehood among the people, in order to intimidate or divide them, thereby rendering his press an engine of tyranny, as well as a sink of the most impure productions. An instance of this we have, in his "uninfluenced" paper of last week, termed "Extract of a Letter from Connecticut."

It is evident, from the whole strain of this epistle, that the writer attempts to set the General Assembly of this Colony in a disadvantageous point of light, villify and disgrace some of its most worthy members, and create a distrust of them among the Colonies, as though they had changed measures, which is wide of the truth, as I shall show anon. He says—

"Our Assembly met on the second of March, and the two first days were spent in examining the conduct of Captain Glover and the Ridgfield Representatives, which had declared against the measures of the Congress." Here he stumbles at the very threshold; I am very certain nothing of that matter was debated the first day. His account of the Committee is very confused; if it is intelligible, he means the Committee were appointed to superintend the examination of the Representatives; but while the House spent two days in examining them, how could any Committee superintend? Did they appoint a Committee to superintend themselves? He says a Committee were appointed to superintend the business, and make report in May. The meaning (if any) is obscure, at best. If he intends such a Committee were appointed to superintend the examination of the first two days, or while the examination lasted, it is not true.

He next observes: "The debates of a week's duration upon the matter cost the Colony One Hundred and Seventy-five Pounds." Here, again, he needs a comment. If he is intelligible, he must mean a week was spent in debating such matters as he had before mentioned, i. e. examining the Representatives; but this is not true. At first he speaks of but two days himself, and I before observed on the first day none of his matters were agitated; now he seems to assign a whole week to that business, for he can't be supposed so silly as to accuse the Assembly of sitting a week on matters at large. His design was doubtless to insinuate that the House spent a week about a trifling examination, which cost the Colony One Hundred and Seventy-Five Pounds. This might raise a clamour, and this, I charitably believe, was his design.

The next clause is remarkable; he says, "In the next, many long and learned arguments were produced by the old leaven, the Republicans, urging the necessity of an Army to be immediately raised; the matter was recommended to a Committee, consisting of the most inflammatory, who openly declare for independence." Such a high charge against the Committee ought to be supported by the strongest evidence; but the whole weight rests on the mere ipse dixit of an anonymous author. Should this dirty performance gain any credit, what idea must the community entertain of the Committee, and Assembly that appointed them? He says, "They were Republicans, who openly declare for independence, i. e. such as disavow Monarchy, and admit no King to preside in the State." Is this true? I ask this vile calumniator whether he ever heard any such doctrine advanced in that Assembly, or by the Members of it? If so, let him support the charge, and give us his name; otherwise he will be accounted a malicious defamer. Is a Printer to be tolerated who charges the Representatives of a Colony with treasonable principles from an anonymous scribbler? He ought to publish the name of his correspondent, or take the blame of this scurrilous accusation to himself. But I must inform him that the Committee consisted of gentlemen of the first character, for ability as well as loyalty, and firm attachment to the British Constitution.

The Report of the Committee, and vote for a Petition to His Majesty, which next occur, I shall remark on hereafter. He then proceeds: "This Assembly was a special one, called for the express purpose of raising six thousand men." How he obtained this intelligence I cannot conjecture. Did the Governour mention it in his speech, or was it ever declared in the Upper or Lower House of Assembly? I am confident he never heard it from the first or the last, and cannot suppose him a Member of the second; whence, then, did he derive his intelligence of the express purpose? I presume it was a creature of his own morbid imagination. He next acquaints us, "Two gentlemen went to Cambridge to consult the Provincial Congress." This, I conceive, was mentioned with a malevolent design towards them, in order to asperse their characters. That they were there is conceded; but whether with a design to consult the Congress or not, is, I believe, mere conjecture. If that was really their errand, where is the crime? Is not America engaged in supporting the Town of Boston? Is it then a crime to consult them in affairs of common concern?

He proceeds: "Our warm sons of — insisted on raising an Army in this Province, and, at any rate, drive the King's General out of this religious land." This is mere rant. No such thing was proposed in the Assembly (I am very certain) through the whole session.

He subjoins: "A Letter, carrying with it in effect a Petition, was sent down to the Lower House from the Upper House, addressed to Lord Dartmouth." A Letter was sent from the Upper Board to the Lower House, for their concurrence and approbation; it was an answer to one received from Lord Dartmouth, and addressed to that Nobleman; in this they declare the loyalty of themselves and the other Colonies to his present Majesty, and their concern at the claims of the British Parliament, which have occasioned so much anxiety among the Colonists; they decently asserted our Constitutional rights, and condoled the unhappy sufferers of Boston as a virtuous and loyal people; in fine, they requested his Lordship's kind interposition with His Majesty for our relief.

He concludes: "The Wasp immediately seized and clumsily attacked those parts of it which were calculated to restore harmony between Great Britain and America; but he was overruled, and returned home grievously disappointed." Whoever was designed by the Wasp, the epithet, clumsy, is not so applicable to that insect as to his own dull performance. But here again he errs from the truth. When the Letter was read in the Lower House, sundry clauses were objected to. Though (in my opinion) the fair import of the Letter was unexceptionable, yet, as not only one, but several Members were of opinion that some expressions were too vague, and might be wrested to a noxious sense, they were cautious of making any seeming concessions of their indubitable rights. After some debate, a Committee was appointed from both Houses to make some amendments, which they did, by substituting more cautious and determinate expressions, and varying rather the diction than sense; when it passed the House (as I thought) without a dissent. So that instead of being overruled, as he falsely suggests, there was an amendment to the general acceptance; and no one (I believe) returned home grievously disappointed, except the author or his voucher.

As to what he says in this polite way, "that the Wasp clumsily attacked those parts of the Letter that were calculated to restore harmony between Great Britain and America:" no parts were attacked except such as I just noticed. Doubtless he was offended that any corrections were made, and intended they should be understood in the noxious sense to which the House feared they might be wrested, else why is he angry with others for attacking those parts which, it was apprehended, might be taken in such a sense? By such as might restore harmony, it is evident he designed such parts as might gratify the Ministry, at the expense of our liberties.

I promised to consider the Report of the Committee, and the vote for a Petition to His Majesty. The House considered at large the alarming situation of America; they professed their allegiance to his present Majesty, and firm resolution to support our Constitutional liberties. They desire to live peaceable and loyal subjects to His Britannick Majesty. But should violence essay to enslave them, they believe they are warranted by the example of Great Britain and the Constitution itself, to defend themselves, and repel any lawless invasion. Though they were well united in the grand principle of Constitutional liberty, yet it is no wonder, in this sad dilemma, if their councils were serious. After considerable debates on affairs the most interesting that ever were agitated in a Senate, the Committee withdrew, and framed a Bill, (as their author informs,) that the minds of the Assembly might be known. Every Article of this Bill was calmly debated; and approving that for appointing General Officers, (such as have been in some of the neighbouring Provinces for a long time,) the rest of the Bill was prudently dismissed. In these debates, a concern for the publick weal so far predominated over private resentment, that the whole was conducted with the greatest friendship and harmony, so that when a great part of the Bill was rejected, yet it seemed to be with a general approbation of the Committee themselves, as every one seemed inclined to pursue the most prudent advice, whether suggested by himself or another.

I now proceed to consider the Petition to His Majesty: here our author fails of telling the whole truth. Mr. Rivington, the week before he published the extract now under consideration, mentions this Petition as cause of great joy.* One would think from this, that the Colony had been in open rebellion, and was now returning to their duty; else why this transport? Did he never hear that this Colony petitioned their Sovereign before? I can tell him they have repeatedly. Did not the Congress petition? He knows they did. Whence, then, this exultation? Doubtless he had an eye to those parts of the Letter which were calculated to restore harmony between Great Britain and America, which his correspondent informed him were clumsily attacked by the Wasp; but he returned home grievously disappointed. That this is mere fiction, I have shown before. But being deceived by his correspondent, he felt a glow of uncommon joy, which he could not conceal until he might publish the Letter. He thought, perhaps, Connecticut had made a compliment of her liberties to the Ministry; and this he was impatient to publish.

This Colony, ever attached to the present reigning family, did vote to prefer a Petition to His Majesty; but on a little reflection, it was thought inexpedient at this juncture, as the Congress had petitioned in behalf of America in general, and they had not then heard what reception their Petition met with; and by some it was thought, in every such step we ought to advise with the other Colonies. In short, I have the satisfaction to see, that the very same reasons that the worthy Representatives of Pennsylvania offered their Governour as an excuse for not petitioning at present, prevailed on this Assembly to defer it to a future session.

A MEMBER OF THE LOWER HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

IN VIRGINIA, DATED MARCH 10, 1775.

Our political madness is still in its zenith, and we are consequently taking the most effectual measures that the wit or folly of man can devise to render America totally independent of this Country. You must, by this time, have heard of the Bill prohibiting the four New-England Governments from Fishing, &c. Another Bill is also in its motion, to confine New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South-Carolina, to trade no where but with Great Britain, Ireland, and the British West-Indies. By the long silence of the London Merchants, they were considered as men not very serious in the business of America, (which was really the case, a very few excepted,) and have been treated with the utmost contempt; and the Cabinet, owing to this dilatory conduct, have had time to get every one of their plans confirmed by Parliament. Those of Glasgow sent up a very spirited Petition, but at the same time let Lord North know, by their Member, Lord F. Campbell, that they did not mean any opposition by it, but only to get credit in America. The Ministers seem now convinced if America continues united, and perseveres in her Non-Importation and Non-Exportation scheme, it will, without one blow, distress the Nation so much that they must yield to the most humiliating terms America can demand. Therefore, bribes, pensions, places, contracts, and all other arts, are attempted to divide the Colonies, particularly New-York; and by the most irritating measures they are provoking to blows, in hopes to rouse the resentment of the Nation against America, which is at present strong against themselves, and less than twelve months brings on their long-deserved fate. The way to defeat such diabolical schemes is to bear every thing that human nature can bear, and only, as common prudence directs, be prepared to resent any force or injury that may be offered. I wish this universally known. Your Governour, besides the parts of his letters published, and other parts transcribed to you, has written for five thousand Troops, or else he cannot stir in Virginia; but they can-

* We hear from Connecticut, that last Friday, the Assembly of that Colony, after sitting ten days, adjourned to meet at Hartford, on the 13th of April. The Printer has received many particulars of their proceedings, but they must be deferred, as they came too late for this week's paper; we have only room to inform the publick, that a Letter was sent from the Upper Board for the approbation of the Lower House, addressed to Lord Dartmouth. It contains every mark of loyalty to the King, and carries with it, in effect, a Petition. The House of Assembly, by a great majority, voted a petition to His Majesty, and a Committee was appointed to draw it up. The event has afforded unspeakable satisfaction to the friends of our happy Constitution.

not even spare the ten thousand which Gage wrote for. The Address to the Soldiers had very great effect in England and Ireland.*

ADDRESS OF THE INHABITANTS OF ANSON COUNTY, NORTH-CAROLINA, TO THE GOVERNOUR.

To His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esq., &c.:

MOST EXCELLENT GOVERNOUR: Permit us, in behalf of ourselves, and many others of His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects within the County of Anson, to take the earliest opportunity of addressing your Excellency, and expressing our abomination of the many outrageous attempts now forming on this side the Atlantic, against the peace and tranquillity of His Majesty's Dominions in North America, and to witness to your Excellency, by this our Protest, a disapprobation and abhorrence of the many lawless combinations and unwarrantable practices actually carrying on by a gross tribe of infatuated anti-monarchists in the several Colonies in these Dominions; the baneful consequence of whose audacious contrivance can, in fine, only tend to extirpate the fundamental principles of all Government, and illegally to shake off their obedience to, and dependence upon, the imperial Crown and Parliament of Great Britain; the infection of whose pernicious example being already extended to this particular County, of which we now bear the fullest testimony.

It is with the deepest concern (though with infinite indignation) that we see in all publick places and papers disagreeable votes, speeches, and resolutions, said to be entered into by our sister Colonies, in the highest contempt and derogation of the superintending power of the legislative authority of Great Britain. And we further, with sorrow, behold their wanton endeavours to vilify and arraign the honour and integrity of His Majesty's most honourable Ministry and Council, tending to sow the seeds of discord and sedition, in open violation of their duty and allegiance.

We are truly invigorated with the warmest zeal and attachment in favour of the British Parliament, Constitution, and Laws, which our forefathers gloriously struggled to establish, and which are now become the noblest birthright and inheritance of all Britannia's sons. We should be criminally wanting in respect and gratitude to the manes of those ancestors, and ill deserve the protection of that superiour Parliamentary power, could we tamely suffer its authority to be so basely controverted and derided, without offering our protest to your Excellency against such ignominious disobedience and reproach; for we consider that, under Divine Providence, it is solely upon the wisdom and virtue of that superiour legislative might that the safety of our lives and fortunes, and the honour and welfare of this Country, do most principally depend.

Give us leave, therefore, Sir, to express our utter detestation and abhorrence of the late unjustifiable violation of publick commercial credit in the Massachusetts Government. We protest against it with the utmost disdain, as the wicked experiment of a most profligate and abandoned Republican faction, whereby the general repose and tranquillity of His Majesty's good subjects on this Continent are very much endangered and impaired. We think it indis-

* Williamsburgh, Va., June 17, 1775.—It was with great surprise, and, I must confess, with a good deal of concern, that I observed in Mr. Purdie's Gazette, of the 9th instant, an extract of a letter from London, dated the 10th of March last, which mentions, "that the Merchants of Glasgow, upon the present unhappy differences subsisting betwixt Great Britain and her American Colonies, sent up a very spirited Petition to Parliament, but at the same time let Lord North know, by their Member, Lord Frederick Campbell, that they did not mean any opposition by it, but only to get credit in America." The writer of this letter must have either been greatly misinformed, or actuated by interest or resentment; for from the most certain intelligence, I can assure the good people of this Colony that the latter part of the paragraph mentioned is equally false as it is injurious to the Merchants of the City of Glasgow, and the gentlemen with whom they are connected in this Colony. No part of the British Nation have exerted themselves with greater warmth, and, I may truly add, with greater sincerity, than the Merchants of Glasgow, for a restoration of that happy union so ardently wished for by every true friend to America or Great Britain; and I am fully convinced that every Merchant in this Colony views with the greatest abhorrence the very idea of such villanous, disingenuous, and unmanly conduct, as the writer of the above letter charges them with.

The greatest unanimity, gentlemen, is essentially necessary at this period, in this as well as every other Colony in America. Surely, then, our publick Printers should be extremely careful to promote, by their publications, an object of such importance, and avoid, with the greatest caution and resolution, every thing that may have a contrary effect.

pensably necessary, and our duty at this alarming crisis, to offer this memorial and protest to your Excellency, against all such enthusiastick transgressions, (more especially the late ones committed by the common cause Deputies within this Province,) to the intent that it may be delivered down to posterity, that our hands were washed pure and clear of any cruel consequence, lest the woful calamities of a distracted Country should give birth to sedition and insurrection, from the licentiousness of a concert prone to rebellion.

And we cannot omit expressing further to your Excellency, that we consider all such associations at this period of a very dangerous fatality against your Excellency's good Government of this Province, being calculated to distress the internal welfare of this Country, to mislead the unwary ignorant from the paths of their duty, and to entail destruction upon us, and wretchedness upon our posterity.

We do, most excellent Governour, with all obedience and humility, profess and acknowledge, in our consciences, that a law of the high Court of Parliament of Great Britain is an exercise of the highest authority that His Majesty's subjects can acknowledge upon earth, and that we do believe it hath legal power to bind every subject in that land, and the dominions thereunto belonging. And we do, moreover, with all duty and gratitude, acknowledge and reverence in the utmost latitude an Act of Parliament made in the sixth year of the reign of his present most sacred Majesty, entitled "An Act for the better securing the dependance of His Majesty's Dominions in America on the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain."

And we do further beg leave to express our detestation of the many scandalous and ignorant deliberations on the power of that Parliament in the control of His Majesty's Provincial Charters. For could the doctrine of such unruly propositions possibly exist, or should their insolent attempt unhappily prevail, it must at once extinguish those Laws and that Constitution which are the glory of the British Empire, and the envy of all Nations around it.

We are truly sensible that those invaluable blessings which we have hitherto enjoyed under His Majesty's auspicious Government, can only be secured to us by the stability of his Throne, supported and defended by the British Parliament, the only grand bulwark and guardian of our civil and religious liberties.

Duty and affection oblige us further to express our grateful acknowledgments for the inestimable blessings flowing from such a Constitution. And we do assure your Excellency that we are determined, by the assistance of Almighty God, in our respective stations, steadfastly to continue His Majesty's loyal subjects, and to contribute all in our power for the preservation of the publick peace; so that, by our unanimous example, we hope to discourage the desperate endeavours of a deluded multitude, and to see a misled people turn again from their atrocious offences to a proper exercise of their obedience and duty.

And we do furthermore assure your Excellency, that we shall endeavour to cultivate such sentiments in all those under our care, and to warm their breasts with a true zeal for His Majesty, and affection for his illustrious family. And may the Almighty God be pleased to direct his Councils, his Parliament, and all those in authority under him, that their endeavours may be for the advancement of piety, and the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and his Kingdoms, that the malice of his enemies may be assuaged, and their evil designs confounded and defeated; so that all the world may be convinced that his sacred person, his Royal family, his Parliament, and our Country, are the special objects of Divine dispensation and Providence.

Signed by two hundred and twenty-seven of the Inhabitants of the County of ANSON.

ADDRESS OF THE INHABITANTS OF ROWAN AND SURRY COUNTIES, NORTH-CAROLINA, TO THE GOVERNOUR.

To His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esq., &c.:

Permit us, on the behalf of ourselves and many others of His Majesty's most dutiful subjects within the Counties of Rowan and Surry, to protest against any person or persons, who may violate any of His Majesty's laws, or the peace of this Government. We are truly invigorated with the warmest zeal and attachment to the British Constitution and Laws, upon which our lives and fortunes, and the welfare of the Province now depend; and utterly protest against meetings of people against the peace thereof, or any thing which may give birth to sedition and insurrection. We cannot but express to your Excellency that we consider all such associations, at this crisis, of a very dangerous fatality against your Excellency's good Government of this Province, and to distress the internal welfare of this Country, and to mislead the unwary from the paths of their duty. And we do assure your Excellency that we are determined, by the assistance of God, in our respective stations, to continue His Majesty's loyal subjects, and to contribute all in our power for the preservation of the publick peace, and that we shall endeavour to cultivate such sentiments in all those under our care, and warm their breast with a true zeal for His Majesty, and affection for his illustrious family.

May the Almighty God direct his Council, his Parliament, and all those under him, that their endeavours may be for the advancement of piety, and the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and his Kingdoms, that the malice of his enemies may be assuaged, their evil designs confounded and defeated, so that the whole world may see his sacred person, our laws, and Country, are the special objects of Divine dispensation and Providence.

Signed by one hundred and ninety-five of the Inhabitants of the Counties of ROWAN and SURRY.

ADDRESS OF THE INHABITANTS OF GUILFORD COUNTY, NORTH-CAROLINA, TO THE GOVERNOUR.

To His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, &c.:

We, His Majesty's most loyal subjects of the County of Guilford, and Province of North-Carolina, beg leave to lay before your Excellency, that we hold in open detestation all illegal and unwarrantable proceedings against His Majesty's crown and dignity. That whereas there is a general dispute between His Majesty and the Colonies of America, past our knowledge to determine what the event may be, we therefore hold a firm attachment to His Majesty King George the Third, his crown and dignity; and we being a poor and unhappy people, lying under the reflection of the late and unhappy insurrection, we therefore have taken this opportunity to show forth our loyalty to His Majesty and his lawful commands; and for further confirmation hereto subscribe our names, as maintaining our rights under a legal authority.

Signed by one hundred and sixteen of the Inhabitants of the County of GUILFORD.

DECLARATION OF INHABITANTS OF BROOK-HAVEN, SUFFOLK COUNTY, NEW-YORK.

Brook-Haven, March 10, 1775.

Whereas, Major Benjamin Floyd was mentioned in Mr. Hugh Gaine's Paper of the 6th of February, as having got a number of subscribers to a certain Petition, said to be signed to the General Assembly of this Province:* Wherefore we desire to inform the publick, that whereas, he, the said Benjamin Floyd and Joseph Denton did carry about this Town a paper, calling of it a Petition to the General Assembly of this Province, and did earnestly urge and persuade all that they could to sign the same, calling of it a good thing, and telling people that it was to support the laws of the Province, which was likely soon to fail; and that it was an instrument well drawn, and the best calculated for that purpose: And as we, the subscribers, did, by their persuasions, without having a proper knowledge of the design of said instrument, sign our names to the same; but as we since have learned that the said instrument, called a Petition, was designed and is calculated, as we think, to make divisions and disagreement between the Legislative authority, viz: the Governour, the Council, and General Assembly, and the commonalty of the good people of this Province, with respect to the observing of the Counsels and Resolves of our worthy Delegates, recommended in Continental Congress for the good people of this Province to observe, as being the most likely method to obtain a redress of our publick grievances; and we do hereby publicly declare our dislike and disapprobation of said pretended Petition, and of all such instruments as may have a like tendency to make divisions and parties among the good people of this Province. In witness whereof, we have hereunto signed our names.

N. B.—The reader will please to note that the above is a true copy of what is now carrying about in the Township of Brook-Haven, and to which a considerable number have signed, (of those that subscribed the pretended Petition above alluded to,) whose example, it is not doubted, will be followed by many more.

IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED MARCH 11, 1775.

You have herewith enclosed some of the late English papers, and a peculiar fiery piece called the Crisis, wrote professedly in favour of Liberty and America, and which, from its freedom, has suffered martyrdom at Westminster and the Exchange, by order of a prostituted Parliament.

The plan of this accursed Ministry is, to divide and govern, in hopes of completing their principle of slavery, by the base advantages and preferences now held out to New-York, North-Carolina, and Georgia. Surely Americans must see through the flimsy texture, and nobly spurn at the offer! I cannot suffer myself to believe that these Provinces will desert the cause of liberty, by accepting the ignoble Commerce offered to them by this abhorred Parliament. But should it be the unhappy case, which God forbid, why then, let all the rest of America unite in a firm determination never to trade or have any connection with them again. With what contempt ought the base majority of the New-York Assembly to be held! Have they not been honoured with that disapprobation, to wit: Tarring and Feathering? It ought to be administered as a deterrent to others. For if that defection had not happened, we had the utmost reason to expect other measures would have been adopted than these villanous Acts passed and passing. But for the satisfaction of my countrymen, let me assure them, that if they will but steadily abide by the Resolutions of the Congress, this hateful Ministry must retire; and then, under the auspices of the wide-expanded soul of Chatham, his noble conciliatory plan of a union must be adopted, and that, in spite of open enemies, or the more concealed and dangerous ones lurking under the specious title of moderation, we shall be free for ever.

It gives every friend to American liberty the greatest satisfaction to find Doctor Franklin will return by the April Packet; for his long acquaintance with the machinations of this infamous Administration will enable him to spirit up the lukewarm, and confirm the Patriot, as well in the Congress as throughout America.

Once more, let the Americans be united, and they shall obtain the glorious prize; but if they divide, they are irretrievably ruined.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN PHILADELPHIA,
DATED LONDON, MARCH 11, 1775.

My zeal for the liberties of America will not let me rest; I think those valuable blessings are more in danger than ever, and I therefore warn my friends of it, and yourself in particular.

I am well assured that the Americans are not to be intimidated by force, and that they are prepared to oppose force to force, if violent measures should be openly and steadily pursued; but I am fearful that they may be lulled asleep by the insidious arts of Administration. The despicable junta that govern all our publick proceedings have at length discovered their error, and that the hostile measures they have begun with, have united the Colonies in one common bond, which they were taught to believe would produce a contrary effect; and they are now shifting their battery—conciliatory steps are continually talked off, and an abatement of their demands is echoed by every tool in office.

Beware of this snake in the grass, and give no credit to any pacifick proposals, till you have a certain and total disavowal of all their unconstitutional claims.

You will have heard, before this reaches you, of that infamous and cruel bill, which we call the Fishery Bill; which, I take upon me to say, was, in its original dress, as black a bill as ever was brought into a British Parliament. It is true they have softened it from reading to reading, by various salvos and exceptions, but all tending to divide. The Quakers of Nantucket have been excepted, on Petition from the Society here; and there are to be other exceptions in favour of those who are willing to subscribe to certain secret compacts, which are yet kept in the breast of the Ministry, but which, I take it, are somewhat of the same nature of those made formerly between the Devil and his adherents, by which, for some trifling gratification (and in which they were commonly deceived) they sold themselves to everlasting slavery.

Our Parliament have also another bill before them, called a Conciliatory Bill; the purport of which amounts to this: that if any of the Colonies on the arrival and publication of said Bill shall agree to tax themselves to such an amount as the Parliament shall approve, (which money is also to be under the direction of Parliament) that such Colonies shall be taken into favour, and the Penal Acts suspended; but which are still to remain as a rod hanging over them, to be used as occasion shall require.

And a third bill is also in agitation, which is to include all the disobedient Colonies in the same predicament as the Massachusetts, viz: to prohibit their exports to any other parts than Great Britain, Ireland, and the West-Indies.

I should inform you that New-York is not in this list. The late Resolves of their Assembly have been very grateful incense to the nostrils of our Ministry; and though, in my opinion, a matter of little consequence, yet they have afforded great triumph and exultation, and have given an opening to favour that Colony at the expense of the rest.

But I trust that the majority, even of that City, are with us, and that they will maintain the Non-Importation Agreement, in its utmost rigour. And now I am on this topick, let me advise you of one loophole, where the enemy may attempt to come in. The King's Ships that are now preparing, both the Men-of-War and the Transports, will be in some degree freighted with European Goods—great quantities are getting ready; this you may depend on. I speak on the best authority, though perhaps not on my own certain knowledge; for I would have it understood that I would not execute an order for the best friend I have for those purposes.

Our Merchants and Traders in this City have had several publick meetings, and have made such application to the governing powers as they thought would produce the most salutary effects; or rather, (if I may express myself without reserve,) such application as they could all concur in; for it must be confessed, and indeed it cannot be concealed, that a very considerable part, though not the majority of the Merchants and Traders, are averse to the Americans.

In short, your cause is not a favourite cause in this Kingdom, as I believe I have already wrote you. Having submitted, in some degree, to slavery ourselves, we do not so fully feel the distress it may occasion in others; and partly through interest, partly through prejudice, and partly through ignorance, I fear the majority are against you. But I wish you not to be disheartened, since, to say the worst, you have a most respectable minority; a minority that will never give up your cause, if you do not desert it yourselves; nay, some of us, as I know, will maintain your rights, though you should be so base to barter them for a mess of pottage.

I can assure you that, exclusive of those publick and Constitutional Societies already established, some others are forming, for the avowed purpose of supporting British and American liberty; and I make no doubt that some good will happen from these associations; the English are slow in resentment, as in deliberation; but they are determined in the prosecution of either when they once engage.

We have already commenced a publick subscription for the relief of the sufferers in Boston; some handsome sums have already been subscribed; but, as yet, it wants the usual enthusiasm that accompanies things of this sort;

however, I don't despair that it will ultimately succeed, and it will be a glorious declaration of our principles, by the most undoubted touchstone.

ORANGE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

March 11, 1775.

An accusation being lodged with the Committee of Orange County against Francis Moore, Jun., of his having violated the Eighth Article of the Continental Association, by gaming: the said Moore was cited, and appeared before the Committee convened February 23, 1775. The testimony of a witness, as well as the confession of the accused, convinced the Committee that the charge was well founded; but Mr. Moore gave such evidence of his penitence, and intention to observe the Association strictly for the future, and alleging, moreover, that he was not thoroughly aware of the extent of the prohibition contained in that article, that the Committee think it proper to readmit him into the number of friends to the publick cause, till a second transgression.

It need scarcely be added, that this mitigation of the punishment prescribed in the Eleventh Article, proceeds from a desire to distinguish penitent and submissive, from refractory and obstinate offenders.

FRANCIS TAYLOR, Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BOSTON TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED MARCH 12, 1775.

Last Monday Doctor Warren delivered an Oration against the effects of Standing Armies in free Governments, &c. There was a prodigious concourse of people present, and amongst them, in the most conspicuous part of the house, about forty Officers. The oration was spirited, yet free from particular reflections on mercenary Troops.

The red-coated gentry behaved with tolerable decency till after the Doctor had finished; when, taking exception at the words of the vote that was put for the appointment of an orator for the next year, one of them cried out fie! fie!—This exclamation was seconded by two or three others; and the people thinking that it was the cry of fire, great confusion was occasioned; many of the women jumped out of the windows, and much mischief would have ensued, had not the gentlemen in the desk very strenuously exerted themselves to restore quiet, which, after some time, they effected.

The pronouncing this oration must be construed as a publick affront to Mr. Gage in both his stations—as General of the Army and Governour of the Province. In the first, as it was a reflection, in general, on Standing Armies in time of peace; and in the other, as it was in a Town Meeting, held directly contrary to an Act of Parliament; to enforce which, His Excellency came to Boston. Nor is it a small proof of the spirit of the inhabitants, who, in defiance of a Fleet and Army, with the muzzles of their guns at their doors, dared to tell them that they were an illegal body of men, and the tools of tyrants.

We had a most extraordinary exhibition here last Thursday. As the populace of Boston had thought fit to repeal the tarring and feathering act, the King's Troops have thought fit to revive the said statute; and in consequence of such a determination, gave us a specimen of a Royal mob. The Soldiers have been encouraged by their Officers to take every method of tricking the unwary. An honest countryman, on Wednesday, was inquiring for a firelock; a Soldier heard him, and told him, he had one which he would sell. Away goes the ignoramus, and after paying the Soldier very honestly for the gun (which was only an old one, without a lock) was walking off, when half a dozen seized him, and hurried the poor fellow away under guard, for breach of the Act against trading with the Soldiers; and after keeping him in duress all night, the next morning, instead of carrying him before a Magistrate, who, on complaint, would have fined him, (as has been the case in several instances,) the Officers condemned the man, without a hearing, to be tarred and feathered; which was accordingly executed. After stripping him naked and covering him with tar and feathers, they mounted him upon a one-horse truck, and surrounding the truck with a guard of twenty Soldiers with fixed bayonets, accompanied with all the drums and fifes of the Regiment, (Forty-Seventh) and a number of Officers, Negroes, Sailors, &c., exhibited him as a spectacle through the principal streets of the Town. They fixed a label on the man's back, on which was wrote, "AMERICAN Liberty, or a specimen of Democracy;" and, to add to the insult, they played Yankee doodle.

O Britain! How art thou fallen! Is it not enough that British Troops, who were once the terror of France and Spain, should be made the instruments of butchering thy children; but must they descend also to exploits too infamously dirty for any but the meanest of the mobility to practise? What a wretched figure will the Boston expedition hereafter make in the historick page!

I did myself the pleasure of writing you the first of this month, and then sent you a copy of such part of the Earl of Dunmore's Letter to Lord Dartmouth as had been laid before both Houses of Parliament; since which time I have had an opportunity of knowing the secret part of his Lordship's Letter which was not laid before Parliament; and as it particularly marks his character as Governour of Virginia, in reference to the good people of that brave Colony, and will, I trust, be so instructive to the Members of their House of Burgesses as never hereafter to confide in him, but to consider and treat him as their confirmed enemy, I beg that you will use the best and speediest means to communicate it to them, as I pledge myself to you for the truth of the information.

After Lord Dunmore had given his uncandid representation of Virginia, as transmitted to you on the first of this month, he proceeded warmly to recommend to Lord Dartmouth that some Men-of-War should be stationed in Chesapeake Bay, to prevent the Virginians from carrying on any external trade except with this Country; and that all communication might be cut off between them and the Northern Colonies, he advised that some Sloops or Tenders should be placed in Chester and Sassafras Rivers; and as he observed that the Council as well as the House of Burgesses, and almost every person of fortune and consideration in the Colony, except the Attorney General, were as deeply engaged as the inferior planters in factious associations and plans of resistance, great outrages and disorders would soon take place among them, from a want of a regular distribution of law; and therefore he strongly urged the King's Ministers, as a sure method to increase these disorders, and which, in the end, he asserted, could not fail to produce Petitions from the rich praying the protection of this Legislature, that His Majesty would, without delay, order himself and all the other Executive Officers of Virginia, to withdraw from thence.

This, I faithfully assure you, is the secret counsel of Lord Dunmore. Can you, therefore, my dear sir, wonder that Administration persevere in their ruinous and despotick system of American politicks? Be you firm, however, in your wise Resolutions of Non-Importation, Non-Exportation, and Non-Consumption, and to these add an immediate accomplishment in the art of war, and in the end you will establish the rights of America upon an immovable basis. But you must first make the luxurious proud people of this Kingdom feel the want of your Commerce and affection, before they will do you any degree of justice.

IN MARYLAND, DATED MARCH 13, 1775.

I wrote you by Captain Falconer, since which some very material changes have happened in the state of political affairs. The Minister, finding a general discontent take place on account of the measures pursuing with regard to America, and in order to save the Stocks, which began to give way, gave out that he intended to extend the olive branch to the people on your side the water. The very sound exhilarated the minds of the people here; the Funds immediately recovered, and the people began to conclude that every thing would soon be settled in an amicable way. And what was this olive branch? Nothing but the motion, which will have reached you before this comes to hand. A motion which, at first, nobody could comprehend; a motion couched in such cabalistical terms, on purpose to confound the understandings of mankind, but which, when understood, was found to contain nothing of the least healing tendency, only calculated to separate and divide the Colonies from each other. Divide et impera is an old adage, and now they are in hopes of practising it with success amongst you. The Ministry, indeed, begin to plume themselves already on their success in this way. The proceedings at New-York, and the last advices from General Gage, flatter them exceedingly that the seeds of dissension are growing very fast even in the New-England Provinces. How far this is true, a little time will discover; in the meantime military operations are carrying on with the same zeal as before. The Troops are to be sent, and a Bill is ordered into Parliament for restraining not only the New-England Fishery, but another to stop the Trade of all the Colonies except New-York, North-Carolina, and Georgia, which they hope will declare on the side of Government, in consideration of which particular indulgences will be granted them. Whatever these indulgences may be, I have no doubt they will only be of a temporary nature till Government has got a firm footing.

I have told you before that your salvation is in your own hands, if you will be but firm and unanimous. You have but to adhere closely to your Non-Importation and Non-Exportation Agreement. If there was danger before of your disunion, I cannot help hoping that this last restraining Bill will come in aid, in order to link you closer to each other. It comes now to be tried what materials you are made of. If you have not virtue enough to withstand this attack, you will become a scorn and a laughing stock to all the world, a reproach to human nature; and depend upon it the burdens that will be laid upon you will be in proportion to the temper you have shown to resist them. I shall not attempt to point out any particular modes of proceeding; these, I trust, will be concerted with wisdom, firmness, and resolution. Be assured the good of the community at large is not the object certain persons in power have in view; they mean to make you beasts of burden, or, as the Congress have very properly expressed it, "hewers of wood and drawers of water;" but I hope you are all of their mind in this respect. You perhaps imagine that Government is nothing more than a power delegated in a few for the good of the whole. If you think that this is the opinion of the people in power, you are very much mistaken; they think that the community at large are to labour, toil, and sweat, in order to maintain a few great people wallowing in luxury, idleness, extravagance, and all manner of debauchery. If the present measures succeed, depend upon it you will have tax-gatherers in various shapes swarming in upon you in abundance. If you patiently submit, there will be none to pity you.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON TO A GENTLEMAN
IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED MARCH 13, 1775.

The people in general are much alarmed at the measures now pursuing; and I have no doubt that when they come to feel the effects of your Non-Import and Non-Export Resolutions, their resentment will break forth with great violence. The City of London and all the great trading and manufacturing Cities and Towns, are exceedingly averse to the present proceedings, and apprehensive of the worst consequences.

The Ministry are sensible of and declare the dangers and difficulties of their undertaking. But they are encouraged to the attempt by a firm persuasion of success in corrupting New-York and intimidating New-England. Did they believe the Americans would be united and firm, I am sure they would not venture upon coercive measures. Even as it is, should the seduction of the one and the intimidation of the other not produce a general relaxation of your Resolutions, they will be disposed to accommodate rather than risk a serious and determined opposition. For you must remember that the resolute face they put on is merely on supposition that if pushed you will submit. But should the whole Continent appear firm and determined, should their seducing and intimidating schemes prove abortive, depend upon it that they must submit to what you ask. Their plans are calculated for immediate operation, and one year's perseverance on your part will totally and entirely defeat them. I have the most absolute trust that the virtue of our countrymen will support a resolute resistance, and I therefore look forward to your success with entire confidence. The Ministerial language is, the unconditional submission of the Colonies. But if you are firm, faithful, and united, the unconditional submission will be theirs.

By whatever means you can keep the Assembly of New-York from deserting, even by out-bidding the Ministry, it will be worth the purchase; for nothing will more effectually damp their hopes than the declaration of the Assembly of that Province in favour of the Congress. They have therefore despatched emissaries to exert every effort of corruption there by bribery and places for individuals, endowments for the College, and the establishment of Royal Docks, Arsenals, &c., in the City.

A reinforcement of two thousand men at the utmost is to be sent to General Gage, and four Regiments to New-York. They will probably arrive the latter end of May.

The Bill for prohibiting the Commerce and Fishery of the New-England Provinces has passed the Commons, and leave is given to bring in a Bill to extend the prohibition to all the Colonies, New-York, North-Carolina, and Georgia excepted. They are determined you shall live within yourselves, which, if you can effect, your triumph is secure.

BALTIMORE (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Observation at Baltimore, the 13th of March, 1775. Present, forty-eight Members.

Captain Henry Tickle, of the Brig Henry and Joseph, from Liverpool, addressed to Mr. George Woolsey, appeared and reported on oath his cargo, consisting of five thousand one hundred and thirty-three bushels of British Salt, six half-crates of Earthen-ware, and one hoghead of Rum for ship-stores; and further made oath "that he had not broken bulk or landed any part of his cargo since his arrival in this Province."

Captain George Woolsey, the Consignee of the aforesaid Vessel, made oath that he hath not, nor hath any person by his order, or with his privity or consent, unladen or taken out any part of the cargo imported in said Vessel since her arrival.

Ordered, That notice be given to Dr. John Stevenson, that the Committee requests his attendance with Captain William Moat, of the Brig Sally, at two o'clock, P. M.

The Committee proceeded to consider the state of the Brig Henry and Joseph, and of the cargo imported in the same.

Resolved unanimously, That the said cargo be not landed.

Upon application made by Captain Woolsey to the Committee, for leave to reship the cargo of the Brig Henry and Joseph; and on Captain Woolsey his engaging that the said cargo shall not be landed in any part of North America, between Nova-Scotia and Georgia; and on his further engagement, that the master of the Vessel in which the said cargo is to be reshipped, shall engage on oath, that he will not (unless compelled to do so by stress of weather) land the same within the parts before limited; and that he will produce a certificate from the place where the said cargo shall be landed, of the landing of the same:

Resolved, That leave be given agreeable to the above.

Doctor John Stevenson, with Captain William Moat, attending agreeable to notice;

The Chairman acquainted them that information was made to the Committee, that the cargo of Salt imported in the Brig Sally, or part thereof, had been unladen, contrary to the Resolution of the Committee made the sixth instant.

Doctor Stevenson declared that, apprehending the Resolution entered into by the Committee on the sixth instant did not prohibit him from shipping the Salt to any other part of this Province, or Virginia, he had, in consequence of such opinion, shipped a quantity on board four Bay crafts, to be disposed of for his account; that no part of the said Salt had been landed in Baltimore County; that he will deliver into the Committee the names of the skippers of the several crafts, and will return an account of the proceeds of the Salt, and the same will freely give for the relief of the poor of Boston; and that the remainder of the Salt now on board the said Brig shall not be landed in any part of America, between Nova-Scotia and Georgia: And Captain William Moat, having declared on oath, that the remainder of the Salt now on board the Brig shall not be landed within the limits aforesaid:

Resolved by the Committee, that the said apology be accepted.

Information being made to the Committee, that many misrepresentations of the proceedings of the Continental Congress had been made, with a view to lessen the influence which the Association drawn, entered into, and recommended by them, justly merited, and had almost universally obtained; and it appearing to the Committee that such misrepresentations are made by artful, designing, and wicked men, to divide the people, and defeat the measures now wisely pursued for the preservation of American liberty:

Resolved unanimously, That it is the duty of this Committee, and of every member thereof, and that we will collectively and severally persevere to carry strictly into execution the Association of the Continental Congress, and enforce an observance of the same; and that any attempt to defeat such purpose will, with its author, be exposed to the publick.

The Congress, by the Third Article of Association, having recommended the disuse of all East-India Teas; the Committee request that their Constituents, in their several families, will strictly adhere to this resolution; and, however difficult the disuse of any article which custom has rendered familiar, and to many almost necessary, may be, yet they are induced to hope the ladies will cheerfully acquiesce in this self-denial, and thereby evince to the world a love to their friends, posterity, and Country.

A very extraordinary arrangement having been lately made in the Magistracy of this County, the Committee reflecting on the conclusions which may probably be drawn from it in distant places to the disadvantage of the gentlemen superseded, cheerfully embrace the opportunity afforded by the present meeting, to testify in favour of their conduct while they were in office. From personal acquaintance, we know them to have been irreproachable in private, faithful and impartial in publick life; and deservedly entitled to the thanks of the whole County, for the conscientious discharge of the trust reposed in them.

Resolved, therefore, unanimously, That this Committee ought, and we hereby do, in our own names, and in the names of our constituents, sincerely thank those worthy gentlemen, whose abrupt dismission, with all the circumstances attending it, does them the greatest honour. They return to a private station with the general approbation of the County, and the pleasing satisfaction of having honourably acquitted themselves of their obligations during their continuance in office. Their dismission is a real loss; it is the more to be regretted as, from the manner of it, we can hardly expect that any of equal worth and character will hereafter be prevailed on to undertake the troublesome, unprofitable employment, now rendered distasteful to men of independent spirit and firmness; and evidently exposing them to unmerited insult.

CHARLES RIDGELY, Chairman.

A true copy from the minutes.

ROBERT ALEXANDER, Sec'y pro tem.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN HARFORD COUNTY, IN MARYLAND, TO HIS FRIEND IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED MARCH 13, 1775.

I was last week at Baltimore, where I was witness to a manœuvre in Government which has greatly astonished and alarmed the people. It is nothing less than almost a total revolution in the Magistracy, which, we hear, is to be executed throughout the Province. The reason of this unprecedented stretch of power is now easily understood, the Magistrates of this Province being, in general, firmly attached to the liberties of their Country, and resolved strictly to adhere to the determination of the Congress.

Those of Baltimore County were men of firm and independent spirits, having nothing to hope, and nothing to fear from Government, and were highly acceptable to the people for their faithful and unwearied attendance on publick business. During the sitting of Court, which was last week, a rumour was spread abroad that a new commission was expected, and some of the old Magistrates were said to be dismissed, and a set of men introduced in their places, the very mentioning of whose names was looked upon as a burlesque on Magistracy. The commission, however, was produced in Court, and read, when it was found that nine of the oldest and best Magistrates were left out, and eleven others named, some of whom had never been heard of by the people, and others but too well known for their uniform opposition to every measure that has been adopted for the preservation of American freedom. The astonishment, contempt, and indignation, which were visible in the countenance of all present, gave disagreeable apprehensions lest some violence should succeed; but temperate resentment was adopted, and will be pursued.

No reason was alleged for such a violent insult on the Bench, nor could at first be conjectured. The Magistrates who were thus disgracefully dismissed had been earnestly solicited to engage in the business, and often refused, but at length, out of respect to the Governour, and desirous that the publick peace and good Government might be maintained, they were prevailed on to act, and accordingly executed their trust with great fidelity, much to the satisfaction of the people, and with evident detriment to their own private affairs. The affront that was designed has totally failed of its intended effect; for it was soon known that the honour of their dismission was procured by the vilest means of a contemptible junto in Baltimore Town, who are incurably inimical to the rights of Americans, and the veriest tools of Government. Their number and characters are exceedingly trifling; but they have found means, by the lowest sycophantism, to attach themselves to men who have the ear of our too easy Governour, and by the basest calumnies and suggestions, have brought about this change so irritating to the people. The better to conceal their insidious design, some of the good old Magistrates were permitted to keep their stations a little longer, till the tyros should be fixed securely in their seats; then it was not doubted but they were to follow their brethren. But these gentlemen, seeing through the flimsy veil, with a proper and becoming spirit rejected the bait, and nobly threw up their commissions; refusing to countenance such unworthy treatment of their brethren, or associate with men whose political principles they detested.

Two of the youngest Justices in the old commission were made of the quorum in the new; and whether they were childishly tickled with this trifling distinction, or had been tampered with, is not certainly known; but, to the mortification and grief of their friends, they were prevailed on to qualify, by which they have shaken their credit greatly with their countrymen. They were, indeed, men of merit, and esteemed by the people, and inadvertently engaged in this dirty business, not discovering the real design of the manœuvre, or adverting to the general characters of the men who were placed by their sides. It is thought they will yet resign, and thus regain the confidence of their countrymen; for the refusing or accepting of a seat on this courtly Bench is now, very justly, made a criterion, by which to know a man's political principles. He that refuses, acts consistently, and exhibits an unequivocal proof of his unshaken attachment to his Country; he that accepts cannot hope that any declarations of his own will wipe off a well-founded suspicion that he is at least a negative character.

I may, perhaps, by another opportunity, give you a specifick description of the individuals who compose this right worshipful group. Indeed, they are in general below contempt, having no respect or authority among the people, and I hear, are daily insulted in the streets, and lampooned from all quarters. Can it be expected that men who are the contempt and detestation of the people, will ever be able to keep peace and good order in the community? These are the blessed effects of that arbitrary spirit of Government which, issuing from a polluted source, have descended with increased contaminations to the remotest departments of office.

DELAWARE ASSEMBLY.

Monday, March 13, 1775.

The House met at New-Castle, pursuant to their adjournment, [on the 26th of October last,] and adjourned till to-morrow morning, ten o'clock.

Tuesday, March 14, 1775.

Messrs. George Read, Thomas McKean, and John Clark, Members of this House, who were absent at the beginning of this session, now appeared in the House, took and subscribed the usual qualifications, and took their seats accordingly.

Mr. McKean informed the House, that the late Representatives of the Freemen of this Government met in Convention at New-Castle, on the first and second days of August last, and among other things nominated and appointed the Honourable Cesar Rodney, Esq., George Read, Esquire, and himself, or any two of them, Deputies or Delegates on the part and behalf of this Government, in a General Continental Congress, then proposed to be held at the City of Philadelphia, on the first Monday in September following, or at any other time or place that might be generally agreed on, then and there to consult and advise with the Deputies from the other Colonies, and to determine upon all such prudent and lawful measures as might be judged most expedient for the Colonies immediately and unitedly to adopt, in order to obtain relief for an oppressed people, and the redress of our general grievances; the proceedings of which Convention he delivered in at the table, and the same were, by order, read.

He then proceeded to inform the House, that they, the said Cesar Rodney, George Read, and himself, repaired to the City of Philadelphia, according to appointment, and that the Congress had agreed to the several particulars contained in a printed pamphlet, intitled, "The Journal of the Proceedings of the Congress held at Philadelphia, September 5th, 1774," and certified to be a genuine and exact copy of the original by Charles Thomson, their Secretary, which he delivered in at the table for the perusal and consideration of the House.

Ordered, That the same be read.

And the same was done accordingly.

Resolved, That the same be detained under consideration till to-morrow morning.

Then the House adjourned till to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Wednesday, March 15, A. M.

The House resumed the consideration of the Proceedings of the late Convention, and of the Continental Congress; and after due deliberation, Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House do approve of the conduct of the late Representatives of this Government in their said Convention, and of their appointment of the said Cesar Rodney, Thomas McKean, and George Read, as Deputies on the part and behalf of this Government.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House do approve of the Proceedings of the late Congress held at the City of Philadelphia, and of the conduct of the gentlemen appointed Deputies to attend the same on the part of this Government.

On motion,

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the thanks of this House be given to all the Members of the said Congress, and in particular to the gentlemen who represented this Government at the same, for their faithful and judicious discharge of the trust in them reposed.

Ordered, That the Minutes and Journal of the said Convention and Congress be deposited amongst the files and Minutes of this House.

On motion,

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House will make an allowance to the gentlemen who represented this Government at the Congress, for their expense in attending the service aforesaid.

On motion,

Ordered, That Messrs. McKinly, Robinson, and Ridgely, be a Committee for that purpose, and make report of their proceedings this afternoon.

On motion of Mr. Ridgely,

That a Committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation of Slaves into this Government, Ordered, That Messrs. Ridgely, Read, and Clowes be a Committee for that purpose.

Thursday, March 16, 1775.

The Committee appointed to consider of an allowance to be made to the gentlemen who attended the late Congress at Philadelphia; on behalf of this Government, for their expenses during the sitting thereof, now report to the House that they have considered the same, and are of opinion that the sum of Sixty Pounds be allowed to each of the said gentlemen, for their expenses on that service.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the House do approve of the same, and that Orders be drawn by the Speaker on the Trustees of the several Loan-Offices of this Government for the same, according to the directions of the Proportion Act.

On motion,

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the Honourable Cesar Rodney, Speaker, Thomas McKean, and George Read, Esquires, be and they are hereby appointed and authorized to represent this Government at the American Congress, proposed to be held at the City of Philadelphia, on the tenth day of May next, or at any other time and place, with full power to them or any two of them, together with the Delegates from the other American Colonies, to concert and agree upon such further measures as shall appear to them best calculated for the accommodation of the unhappy differences between Great Britain and the Colonies, on a Constitutional foundation, which the House most ardently wish for; and that they report their proceedings to this House at their next meeting.

Friday, March 17, 1775.

On motion,

Ordered, That Messrs. Evans, Ridgely, McKinly, Hall, and Rench, be a Committee to prepare Instructions for the gentlemen appointed to represent this Government at an American Congress to be held at Philadelphia, in May next.

Monday, March 20, 1775.

Mr. Speaker laid before the House a Letter which he had received from three of the Colony Agents in London, which was, by order, read, and ordered to be transcribed upon the Minutes of the House; and follows in these words, viz:

London, December 24, 1774.

SIR: This is just to inform you, that having received the Petition of the General Congress to the King, we immediately communicated the same to Lord Dartmouth, Secretary of State for the American Department, as the regular official method, and that by which only we could have expectation of obtaining an answer. His Lordship this day informed us, that he had laid the same before the King; that His Majesty had been pleased to receive it very graciously, and to say it was of so great importance that he should, as soon as they met, lay it before his two Houses of Parliament. We can now only add, that we are in great respect, Sir, your most obedient and most humble servants,

W. BOLLAN,
B. FRANKLIN,
ARTHUR LEE.

To the Honourable the Speaker of the Assembly of the three Lower Counties on Delaware.

Tuesday, March 21, 1775.

A Petition from several Inhabitants of New-Castle County, and two Petitions from a number of the Inhabitants of Kent County, praying the House to pass a Bill for establishing a Militia, were presented to the Chair, and by order read the first time.

To the Honourable the Representatives of the Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, in General Assembly met, 14th March, 1775.

The Petition of the Inhabitants, freemen of Kent County, most humbly sheweth:

That we conceive a well-regulated Militia, composed of the gentlemen Freeholders and other free men, to be not only a Constitutional right, but the most natural strength and most stable security of a free Government, from the exercise of which a wise people will not excuse themselves even in time of peace.

That, happily secure in the affectionate protection of our Mother Country, we have for some time past been carelessly negligent of Military art and discipline, and are, therefore, the more exposed to the insult and ravages of our natural enemies at this unhappy time, when we have lost our interest in the esteem and affection of our Parent State.

We, therefore, pray your Honours to take our case into your most serious consideration, and by passing an Act of Assembly establishing a Militia throughout this Government, grant us relief in the premises, and your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Thursday, March 23, 1775.

The Doorkeeper informed the House that Mr. Secretary waited at the door.

Ordered, That he be admitted; and he was admitted accordingly, and presented to the Chair a written Message from his Honour the Governour, with copies of two Proclamations, referred to in the same.

On motion,

Ordered, That the same be read; which was done accordingly.

Ordered, That his Honour the Governour's Message be transcribed on the Minutes; and follows in these words, to wit:

A Message from the Governour to the Assembly.

GENTLEMEN: At your last sessions in October, I informed you that the jurisdiction of this Government had been extended to the boundary lines now run and marked by Commissioners appointed by the proprietors of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and recommended it to you to establish such divisional lines in the Counties as the settlement of the new boundary might require; but soon after your last adjournment, I was obliged, by His Majesty's commands, signified to me in a letter from the Secretary of State, by my Proclamation, dated the 2d of November, to supersede that which I had issued on the 15th of September, for the above purpose of extending the jurisdiction until His Majesty's pleasure should be further known therein.

I have now, gentlemen, the satisfaction to acquaint you, that I have lately been advised by the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, that His Majesty, on further consideration of the matter, is graciously pleased to approve of the arrangement made by my Proclamation of the 15th of September, and to permit me to recall that of the 2d of November, so that you are now at full liberty to resume the business I recommended to you at your last session.

JOHN PENN.

New-Castle, 23d March, 1775.

Friday, March 24, 1775.

The Committee appointed to prepare and bring in a Bill to prohibit the importation of Slaves into this Government, now laid one on the table, which they submitted to the correction of the House.

On motion, by order, the same was read the first time.

The Committee appointed to prepare Instructions for the gentlemen appointed by the House to represent this Government at the American Congress, proposed to be held at Philadelphia in May next, now report, that they have essayed a draught of the same, which they laid on the table for the inspection and correction of the House.

On motion, by order,

The same was read the first time.

On motion, by special order,

The Bill to prohibit the importation of Slaves into this Government, was read the second time, paragraph by paragraph, and, after sundry amendments, passed the House, and was ordered to be engrossed.

Saturday, March 25, 1775.

The engrossed Bill to prohibit the importation of Slaves into this Government, was read and compared.

On motion,

Ordered, That Messrs. Ridgely, Clowes, and Clark, be a Committee to wait upon his Honour the Governour, with the Bill to prohibit the importation of Slaves into this Government, for his perusal and concurrence.

Monday, March 27, 1775.

The Doorkeeper informed the House that Mr. Secretary waited at the door.

Ordered, That he be admitted; and he was admitted accordingly, and informed the House that his Honour the Governour, by him, returned the Bill to prohibit the importation of Slaves into this Government, to which his Honour cannot give his assent.

Wednesday, March 29, 1775.

On motion,

The draught of Instructions for the gentlemen appointed by the House to represent this Government at an American Congress, proposed to be held at Philadelphia in May next, was, by order, read the second time, paragraph by paragraph, agreed to, and ordered to be transcribed on the minutes, and follows in these words, to wit:

Instructions to the Deputies appointed by this Government to meet in General Congress on the tenth day of May next.

1. That in every act to be done in Congress, you studiously avoid, as you have heretofore done, every thing disrespectful or offensive to our most gracious Sovereign, or in any measure invasive of his just rights and prerogative.

2. That you do adhere to those claims and resolutions made and agreed upon at the last meeting of the Congress; yet, for the restoration of that harmony with the Parent State which is so essential to the security and happiness of the whole British Empire, and which is so ardently wished for by this House, you may, on your parts, yield such contested claims of right as do not apparently belong to the Colonists, or are not essentially necessary to their well being.

3. If His Majesty should be pleased graciously to appoint any person or persons to treat with the Colonies on the present unhappy disputes subsisting between them and the Parent State, you, or any of you the Congress shall nominate, may treat with such person or persons on behalf of the inhabitants of this Government.

4. If the Congress, when formed, shall not, in every question to be voted by Provinces, allow this Government an equal vote with any other Province or Government on this Continent, you are decently but firmly to urge the right of this Government to an equal voice in Congress with the other Colonies.

The House adjourned till the fifth day of June next.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Monday, 13th March, 1775:

Present, the Hon. John Penn, Esquire, Governour, Benjamin Chew and Edward Shippen, Junior, Esquires.

The Governour laid before the Board a Letter that he received last night by the Packet from the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, dated the 7th of January, 1775, which was read, and follows in these words, viz:

Whitehall, January 7, 1775.

SIR: I am very much obliged to you for the early communication of the proceedings of the General Congress.

These proceedings are of a very extraordinary nature, and it is with concern I see, by your letter of the 6th of December, that the Resolution for Non-Importation has been so generally adopted in the Colony under your government. Such measures and proceedings are but ill calculated to restore peace and union between Great Britain and the Colonies. But though they may in the moment provoke the vengeance of Government, I will hope that we may yet, in the consideration of the business, be led to some proposition that may ultimately bring about a happy accommodation upon some general constitutional plan.

FOURTH SERIES.—VOL. II.

Your letter of the 3d of November, No. 5, states the case respecting the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Maryland, in a very different light from that in which it was represented to me. And the King, confiding in your assertion that the extension of the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania up to the line settled and marked by the Commissioners, had been so far from having the effect to disturb the peace of his subjects; and occasioning violence and bloodshed, that it had a quite contrary tendency, and given universal satisfaction, is graciously pleased to approve the arrangement made by your Proclamation of the 15th of September, and permit you to recall that issued on the 2d of November.

I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Deputy Governour Penn.

The Board, taking the latter part of the above Letter into consideration, were of opinion that it would be advisable for the Governour to issue a Proclamation agreeable to His Majesty's permission, signified in the said Letter, to recall the Governour's Proclamation of the 2d of November last. It is accordingly ordered that a draught of a Proclamation be prepared, to be laid before the Board at their next meeting.

Memorandum, March 16, 1775.

The Governour this day wrote to Governour Eden the following Letter, on the subject of the Proclamation to be issued respecting the boundary between Pennsylvania and Maryland:

Philadelphia, March 16, 1775.

SIR: I make no doubt you have been informed, since your return from England, that in the month of September last I issued a Proclamation for extending the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania and the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, up to the boundary lines run and marked by the Commissioners appointed to that service, and that I afterwards revoked that Proclamation by a subsequent one of the 2d of November, in consequence of His Majesty's orders, signified to me by the Secretary of State, "that I should desist from issuing any orders for extending the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania beyond those places where it had been usually exercised, until His Majesty's further pleasure should be made known therein." I am now to inform you that I have received a letter from the Earl of Dartmouth by the last Packet, advising me that His Majesty, "on further consideration, is graciously pleased to approve the arrangement made by my Proclamation of the 15th of September, and to permit me to recall that of the 2d of November;" and I propose immediately to issue a new Proclamation, to make known His Majesty's pleasure in this matter, and to enforce that of the 15th of September.

I am, with great respect, your Excellency's most obedient and most humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

To His Excellency Robert Eden, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Maryland, Annapolis.

BOSTON TOWN-MEETING.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Boston, on Monday, March 13th, 1775, upon a motion made and seconded, Voted, That the Committee of Correspondence be directed to draw up an exact state of the behaviour of the Troops under the command of General Gage, and of the Navy under the command of Admiral Graves, going as far back as they shall judge proper; and also carefully to observe their conduct in future, taking their information upon oath before two Justices of the Peace, quorum unus, always giving legal notice to the persons accused of disorderly proceedings, and report to the Town.

Attest: WILLIAM COOPER, Town Clerk.

MEETING OF THE INHABITANTS OF HACKENSACK, NEW-JERSEY.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Precinct of Hackensack, in the County of Bergen and Province of New-Jersey, held pursuant to an Act of Assembly of the said Province, on Tuesday, the 14th of March, in the year of our Lord 1775, THOMAS MOOR, Esq., Chairman.

This Meeting being heartily grieved at the unhappy disputes now subsisting between Great Britain and her American Colonies, and earnestly wishing that the present misunderstandings may be removed, and such a reconciliation take place as may be consistent with the dignity of Great Britain and the true interest of the Colonies; and being unanimously of opinion that it is the duty of every loyal subject to adopt and encourage the most lenient measures, which may tend to heal and not inflame the present differences:

We, therefore, in order to contribute what is in our power to this salutary purpose, and to show our loyalty to our King, and love to our Country, do Resolve,

1. That we are and will continue to be loyal subjects to His Majesty King George, and that we will venture our lives and fortunes to support the dignity of his Crown.

2. That we disavow all riotous mobs whatsoever.

3. That by humbly petitioning the Throne, is the only salutary means we can think of to remove our present grievances.

4. That we have not, nor (for the future,) will not, be concerned in any case whatever with any unconstitutional measures.

5. That we will support His Majesty's Civil Officers in all their lawful proceedings.

Signed by thirty-seven Inhabitants.

COMMITTEE OF FREEHOLD, (MONMOUTH COUNTY,) NEW-JERSEY.

March 14, 1775, P. M.

The Committee of Observation for the Township of Freehold, in the County of Monmouth, New-Jersey, have made repeated applications to the inhabitants of the Township of Shrewsbury, earnestly requesting and exhorting them to comply with the instructions of the late American Congress, in constituting for themselves a Committee of Observation, that they might conspire with their brethren in the other Towns belonging to the County, in executing the Resolves of said Congress; but, although they have entertained hopes, notwithstanding their former opposition, that they would do it at their stated annual town-meeting, they are, at this late hour, informed, that the said annual meeting of Shrewsbury is broke up without a Committee being chosen, or any one step taken whereby the least disposition is discovered of their being inclined to adopt the Resolutions of said Congress. They think it, therefore, their duty, however painful the declaration, to bear publick testimony against them.

And we do now unanimously enter into the following Resolve, viz: That from and after this day, during our continuance as a Committee, (unless they shall turn from the evil of their ways, and testify their repentance by adopting the measures of the Congress,) we will esteem and treat them, the said inhabitants of Shrewsbury, as enemies to their King and Country, and deserters from the common cause of true freedom; and we will hereafter break off all dealings and connection with them while they continue their opposition. We do furthermore recommend the same conduct towards them to our constituents, and all others; earnestly hoping it may be a means of reclaiming those deluded people to their duty and interest, whom we shall always be pleased to receive and treat as returning prodigals. Signed by order of the Committee,

NATHANIEL SCUDDER, Clerk.

MEETING OF FREEHOLDERS, &c., IN NEW-WINDSOR, (ULSTER COUNTY,) NEW-YORK.

March 14, 1775.

At a meeting of the Freeholders and other inhabitants of the Precinct of New-Windsor, in the County of Ulster, and Province of New-York, legally convened by mutual consent, in order to elect a Committee of Observation, and deliberate on other matters relative to our political welfare, this 14th day of March, 1775.—Then proceeded, and chose Mr. George Denniston, Chairman, and the following persons for the above named Committee, viz: Mr. George

Denniston, Mr. Robert Cross, Mr. Joseph Bellknap, Mr. Francis Mandiville, Mr. Nuac Shutts, and Mr. Hezekiah White; afterwards did solemnly agree to, and with each other, in observing the following Resolutions ourselves, and, as far as our influence may extend, recommend them to the observation of others, viz:

Resolved 1st, nem. con., That we acknowledge no other Sovereign or Potentate on earth to be our lawful and liege Sovereign, save His Majesty King George the Third, of legal descent from that illustrious House of Brunswick, which was, by the kind providence of God, established to sway the British sceptre on just and equitable principles, but more emphatically described and known by the name of Revolution principles.

Resolved 2dly, nem. con., That we will yield to none in point of affection and loyalty to our most gracious Sovereign, but will each one for himself, when thereunto legally called, (even though to the most distant and remote parts of His Majesty's Empire,) venture our lives and properties in defence of our Sovereign's person, family, and Government, when exercised on the above-named principles.

It is with the greatest regret, and deepest concern of heart, we conceive a plan adopted and invariably pursued for a number of years past, by the British Parliament, for enslaving us, by levying taxes on us without our consent, and declaring they (the Parliament) are fully vested with power to make laws obligatory on us, in all cases whatsoever:

Resolved, therefore, 3dly, nem. con., That such declarations and unbounded power assumed, are subversive of our natural and legal rights as British subjects; and that we would be far deficient in point of duty to our King and the British Constitution, were we to yield a tame submission to them.

But as the wisdom and prudence of the whole Continent hath been called forth in appointing and holding a Continental Congress, in order to state our grievances, and point out the means by which we may be relieved from them:

Resolved 4thly, nem. con., That we do sincerely and willingly accord to the Association entered into by that body, with a full determination to abide by and observe the same, and do unfeignedly thank our worthy Delegates of the Province of New-York, in conjunction with the rest of that honourable body, for the care they have taken for the security of our liberties, and the patriotick principles they have exhibited to the world, which will remain more sure and permanent in the annals of American history than monuments either of brass or marble erected to their honour and perpetuity of their memory.

And whereas it is agreed in the Seventh Article of the Association, to improve the breed, and increase the number of Sheep:

Resolved 5thly, nem. con., That we will use our best endeavours in promoting so laudable and beneficial an undertaking, and do promise that we will not kill any Sheep under four years old, or procure them to be killed by others; neither will we sell the best of our Sheep to butchers, or others employed by them to purchase, whereby the breed of our Sheep is much injured.

And further, we consider the Freedom of the Press as the great palladium of English liberty; therefore we will do all in our power to encourage and support the same. But there is a certain news-printer in New-York, named James Rivington, who appears to us divested of every principle of honour, truth, or modesty; his papers being filled with pieces replete with falsehoods and mere chicanery, only designed, as we believe, to divide and lead astray the friends of our happy Constitution:

Resolved, therefore, 6thly, nem. con., That we will have no connection or intercourse with said Rivington, nor will we purchase any of his publications until we receive sufficient evidence of his sincere repentance; for we do believe he is a Ministerial hireling, an enemy to his Country, and a traitor to the British Constitution.

And as a certain pamphlet, signed A. W., A Farmer, hath been for some time circulating among us, which is artfully designed to impose on the illiterate and unthinking part of mankind, having a show of plausibility, but the foundation-principles on which it proceeds are notoriously false:

Resolved, therefore, 7thly, nem. con., That the said pamphlet be now publickly burnt in contempt and abhorrence of the author, publisher, and vender of it, at the same time holding them in our estimation as enemies to their Country, with whom no friend to it should have any connection, intercourse, or commerce; well knowing that every shilling of property we put into their hands, we are in a certain proportion enabling them to purchase chains to bind us in slavery. [And said pamphlet was burnt accordingly.]

And further, as we do much esteem the wisdom and prudence of the late Continental Congress held at Philadelphia, in September and October last, as well for their recommending another Congress to be held in May next, as for the other important services they have done us:

Resolved, 8thly, nem. con., That we are ready and willing to co-operate with our brethren of the different Towns and Precincts in this County, in choosing a Delegate or Delegates to represent us in the next General Congress, believing that the resolutions and determinations of any man, or body of men on earth, cannot legally divest us of this inherent right and privilege we enjoy as British subjects.

Ordered, That these Resolves be printed by John Holt.
GEORGE DENNISTON, Chairman.

LETTERS FROM PHILADELPHIA, TO MR. RIVINGTON, NEW-YORK.

Philadelphia, March 15, 1775.

What in the name of common sense can make the Whigs exult? Can you find out wherein Lord North has flinched? Do you see any prospect of His Majesty's relaxing, applauding the Congress, or being dumbfounded at their proceedings? I am sure I cannot. It is true a number of Merchants in the Trading Cities have petitioned, and they will probably be followed by the Manufacturing Towns; but do they ask a repeal of all the Acts which the Congress have recited as grievances? No: they wish a restoration of peace between the State and its members to take place; but is it likely a lasting harmony can issue from a compliance with all the demands of America—by gratifying her petulant humours? If she be now indulged, she will rise in her demands, till there will be no end of them. But if every Act relating to the Colonies should be repealed; if the Parliament should relinquish all claim of power whatever over the Colonies, I declare I should be surprised to see the warm patriots rejoice, although they might perhaps force a superficial smile. They know, and the Tories know full well, that all their consequence is derived from the calamities of this convulsed Country, who, like salamanders, glory in a fiery element. 'Tis true, there are great numbers of honest, well-meaning people, who have been so far deluded as perhaps to approve of every act of violence which has been committed; these probably would most sincerely rejoice in an amicable adjustment of the dispute; and they would be told by their leaders it was owing to them that the salvation of their Country was brought about, although a more prudent conduct on our part would have effected it more certainly, and with a thousandth part of the noise and confusion, without creating party strife amongst one another, and without alienating the affections of the Colonists from the best of Sovereigns that ever held the British sceptre.

Ambition, and a thirst of power, are dangerous to combat with. Our patriots have in general chosen for their leaders the most violent and zealous; and I cannot persuade myself but that they would sacrifice their Country to their ambitious views. They are elated beyond measure at the thoughts of filling such exalted stations, having usurped not only the Legislative, but the Executive branches of Government, and both of them unlimited and unbounded. They will not, I am confident, part with these precious offices without great reluctance and pain; and they will regret any circumstance that shall deprive them of them. I do not indiscriminately aim at all Committee-men, or all persons who side with them; I only direct my discourse to such as are active in widening the breach, and have had the art or address to make the vulgar believe liberty is the grand object of their pursuit. These are dangerous men, of whom we ought to beware, who have designs, and are carrying on intrigues unknown, unsuspected but by too few. For my part I shall be happy beyond expression at any step which may check the career of these unskilful pilots, and place men of more ability and more integrity at the helm. Let me most heartily felicitate you on the King's having received the Petition. It will have two good effects. It will convince the world that he is disposed to hear the complaints of his subjects, and give them the weight they may deserve. It will, besides, deprive our Republicans of the pleasure they would take in inveighing against him, which they would certainly have done most bitterly, had he rejected their Petition without a hearing.

Philadelphia, March 15, 1775.

You cannot conceive with what pleasure our Patriots circulated a false report that the mob had pulled down Mr. Rivington's house; had cut off the ears of a number of Tories; and that Mr. Rivington, in making his escape, had broke his back. This they told with every mark of joy, approaching almost to rapture. But how inconceivably were they dejected, when they found the whole was a Putnamitish lie. Their lank, lean visages betrayed the most mortifying affliction, which they have not yet got the better of, although this was almost as improbable as the lie which the same party set on foot respecting the bombardment of Boston; yet as blood-thirsty Demagogues were rejoiced at the report, they really believe it true. To what a shift are the sons of licentiousness driven, when nothing but lies will serve to keep alive the dying faction. In Boston, the Republican Printers assert, that the Testimony which the loyal Friends gave forth the beginning of this year was wrote ten years ago, and accuse the few Printers of altering the date from 1765 to 1775. This is so bare-faced a Putnamite, that it will not gain ground even in the faction. This same party have had generalship enough so far to invert the order of nature and reason as to make a Whig a Tory, and a Tory a Whig; which denominations are now generally adopted. They have done the same by slavery and liberty; and truths by them are called lies, and the most gross and palpable falsehoods secure a credit equal to proofs of holy writ.

Philadelphia, March 16, 1775.

Our Fanus, Tornado, and the lean Cassius, are the triumviri who now support the sons of violence. To these the Patriots look up as naturally as the mariner to the vane, or the philosopher to the thermometer; and they have lately seen a gleam of joy darting from their countenances. At this the whole race of Whigs appeared to rejoice; for they were before indeed in a state of desperation. Like a drowning man, they catch at a straw, but, alas! it will not support them. It is, however, a gross imposition on the publick for them to attempt to make the world believe that it would please them to have the matter finally settled; and you may depend, if their numbers (now fast decreasing) should not fail, they will make some excuse, if possible, to keep up the ball; for when that drops, their whole importance will evaporate in fumo.

J. POWNALL, SECRETARY TO THE BOARD FOR TRADE AND PLANTATIONS, TO LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR COLDEN.

Whitehall, March 15, 1775.

SIR: I am desired by the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, to send to you for your information, the inclosed Extracts of the Minutes of their Lordships' Proceedings upon several Petitions and Memorials referred and presented to them, relative to the pretensions of sundry persons to the District, commonly called King's District, and other lands adjacent thereto, in the Province of New-York, heretofore claimed by Mr. Van Rensselaer.

I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

J. POWNALL.

Lieutenant Governour Colden.

At a Meeting of His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, Thursday, February 23, 1775. Present: Mr. Jenyns, Mr. Keene, Mr. Gascoyne, Mr. Greville.

The Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State attends.

Their Lordships took into consideration the state of His Majesty's Province of New-York, in respect to the disputes which have arisen in that Province, and the disorders that have prevailed therein, to the disturbance of the publick peace, by means of the claims and pretensions that have been set up on different grounds and titles to Lands in that Province; and the following Papers relative to a tract of Land laying between Hudson's River and the boundary line between New-York and Massachusetts-Bay, heretofore claimed under an ancient Grant by Mr. Van Rensselaer and others, were read and considered, viz:

Order of the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated 26th August, 1773, referring to this Board, for their consideration and report, the Petition of Major General Simon Fraser, on behalf of himself and sixteen other Officers, praying that they may be included in any grant or order, hereafter to be made in favour of the Captains Campbell and Ourry, and their associates, of Lands in the Province of New-York, so as to entitle the Petitioners to a share thereof, agreeable to the proportions specified in the Royal Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763:

Order of the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated August 26, 1773, referring to this Board, for their consideration and report, the Petition of Lieutenant Colonel Stewart, and seven others, in behalf of themselves; and several other Officers, who served in America during the late war, setting forth their services, and the expenses they have incurred in prosecuting His Majesty's right to certain Lands claimed by John Van Rensselaer, Esq., in New-York, and praying for a grant of a tract containing two hundred and fifty thousand acres of the said Land:

Petition of the proprietors of the Westenhook Patent to Governour Tryon, praying that patent may be granted to each proprietor for such share of the Lands contained in several lots therein specified, as to each of them shall, upon the said division, be allotted, (except out of the lots No. 9, 12, and —, the land formerly granted to Stephen Bayard and his associates,) and that the said grants be subject to those conditions to which they are now subject by their present patent:

Petition of James Savage in behalf of himself and several hundred others, to the Board, dated September 20, 1774, praying the confirmation of their title to certain Lands, therein described, in the Province of New-York, which are possessed and have been cultivated by them.

Letter from Mr. Savage to the Secretary to this Board, dated February 17th, 1775, relative to his Petition, and inclosing—

A Letter to him from P. V. Schaack, dated New-York, December 24th, 1774, on the same subject:

Mr. Savage's case:

Memorial of Samuel Bayard, in behalf of himself and his associate, praying to be put in quiet possession of their property in a tract of Land called Westenhook Patent, by the dismission of Mr. Savage's Petition, and the prohibition of all acts of violence by his adherents:

Copy of a Letter from Mr. Samuel Bayard, Junior, to William Knox, Esquire, dated June 11th, 1774, on the same subject.

It appearing, that Mr. Bayard's Memorial was not subscribed by any person, and the Secretary having informed the Board that it had been delivered to him this morning by Captain Williams, on behalf of the proprietors of the Westenhook Patent, who claim a part of the Lands in question: Captain Williams was called in; and being asked if he had authority from the proprietors of the Westenhook Patent to act for them in their business, he said he had, and accordingly subscribed his name to the Memorial above-mentioned, as their agent. And the Board being informed that Mr. Savage attended without, in behalf of the present occupants and possessors of the Lands in question, with Mr. Ingersoll, his solicitor and advocate, and also Colonel McLean, and others, on behalf of the Officers, whose Petitions are mentioned above, they were called in, and each respectively heard in support of their claims and pretensions.

Colonel McLean, having stated that the Governour and Council of New-York had, in direct disobedience to an order in Council, (made in behalf of the reduced officers,) confirmed to Mr. Van Rensselaer, by patent, Lands which they claimed; and had not taken any notice of a caveat entered by them against such confirmation: Mr. Tryon, who was present, desired that a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, containing his reasons for such confirmation might be read; and Lord Dartmouth having directed the said letter to be produced, it was accordingly read.

At a Meeting of His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, Friday, February 24th, 1775. Present: Mr. Jenyns, Mr. Keene, Mr. Gascoyne, Mr. Greville.

The Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State attends, and also Mr. Tryon, Governour of New-York.

Their Lordships made a further progress in the consideration of the business of New-York, mentioned in the preceding Minutes; and the parties were further heard in what they had to offer in support of their respective claims and pretensions.

At a Meeting of His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, Monday, February 29th, 1775. Present: Mr. Jenyns, Mr. Jolliffe, Mr. Gascoyne, Mr. Keene.

The Earl of Dartmouth took into further consideration the business of New-York, mentioned in the two preceding days' Minutes, and the parties interested in the Lands in question attending again; Mr. Dagge, solicitor for the reduced Officers, submitted to the Board the following proposal for adjusting the matter in controversy, so far as it regarded the claims of said Officers, and those of the present possessors and occupants, viz:

"That the Petitioners be allowed to locate their Lands, claimed under the Proclamation, upon that tract within the Province of New-York which lies between the North and South Manors of Rensselaer, bounded on the West by the Kinderhook Patent, and on the East by the jurisdiction line between the Provinces of New-York and Massachusetts, as far as such locations can be made without prejudice to the present occupancies, (now under actual improvement,) allowing to each occupant at the rate of fifty acres of woodland for every two hundred acres of Land under actual improvement, and so in proportion for a greater or lesser number of acres; such parcels of woodland to be as contiguous as possible to each occupancy, to which the same shall be respectively allotted. And if any quantity of woodland shall have been already inclosed by any of the occupants, such woodland, if less than the proportion above-mentioned, shall be reckoned as part of the woodland so directed to be allotted to each occupancy as aforesaid; and if it exceeds the number of fifty acres, in that case no woodland shall be allotted; and that, in so far as the vacant Lands shall fall short of the quantity claimed by the Petitioners, they be allowed to locate double the quantity of such residue in some other part of the Province of New-York, or elsewhere in North America, not already granted."

Mr. Savage having desired, by his solicitor, some time to consider the said proposal, the parties withdrew; and, after a short time, they desired to be called in, when Mr. Savage signified his consent to and approbation of the said proposal, in which the Board acquiesced, not thinking that any thing had been stated or proved on the part of the Westenhook proprietors, that made them, in this case, objects of the attention of Government; and, therefore, that they should be left to prosecute their claims, if they had any, in such other manner as they should be advised.

At a Meeting of His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, Thursday, March 2d, 1775. Present: Mr. Jenyns, Mr. Keene, Mr. Greville.

The Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State attends; also Mr. Tryon, Governour of New-York.

Their Lordships took into further consideration the state of the Province of New-York, more particularly in regard to the Lands between the Rivers Hudson and Connecticut, upon which both the Province of New-York and that of New-Hampshire heretofore claimed a right of jurisdiction; and upon parts of which settlements have been made by grants of the Governours of both Provinces, in some instances, of the same Land, by means whereof the publick peace hath been disturbed, and the course of publick justice obstructed.

Upon the subject of those claims, it was proposed by Governour Tryon, and agreed to by the Board, that such of the grants made by the Governour of New-Hampshire to the West of Connecticut River as have not yet been confirmed, and do not interfere with any grants made by the Government of New-York, or that of Canada before the conquest, should now be confirmed to the present occupants and possessors, subject to the payment of the quitrent reserved upon all Lands granted in New-York.

That with regard to those grants made by the Governour of New-Hampshire, of Lands in those districts, which do either interfere with grants made by the Governour of New-York, or the Governour of Canada before the conquest, it would be advisable to recommend the having some question stated, that should comprehend the whole of the case, so as to include every claim, and an action brought thereupon in the Supreme Court of New-York, upon such grounds that, either by means of special verdict, or upon some plea of error, an appeal might lie from the judgment of the said Court to the Governour and Council, and from them to His Majesty in his Privy Council; or otherwise, that the matter should be left to be settled by arbitration, in any mode that should be satisfactory to the different parties.

At a Meeting of His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, Thursday, March 9th, 1775. Present: Mr. Jenyns, Lord Robert Spencer, Mr. Gascoyne, Mr. Jolliffe, Mr. Keene.

The Governour of New-York attending without, with Mr. Burke, agent for that Province, and also Colonel Read, lately arrived from thence; they were called in, and their Lordships resumed the consideration of the state of the disputes touching the propriety of Lands in New-York between Hudson River and Connecticut River; and Colonel Read, who is largely interested in those lands, having stated that he had material evidence and information to lay before their Lordships touching this matter, it was agreed to reconsider the propositions stated in the Minutes of the 2d instant, when Governour Tryon, who was going to Bath on account of his health, should return from thence.

Their Lordships being of opinion that it would be proper, in order to prevent any further survey or location of Lands in King's District, and on the other Lands surrendered by Mr. Van Rensselaer, that a copy of the Minutes of their Lordships' proceedings on this subject should be sent to Lieutenant Governour Colden, the Secretary was ordered to transmit a copy of those Minutes, and also to give another copy thereof to Mr. Savage.

Committee Chamber, New-York, 15th March, 1775.

The Sub-Committees appointed by this Committee to join with the Vestrymen of each Ward in this City, in superintending the polls held this day, in the said Wards, for taking the votes of the Freemen and Freeholders on the question, "Whether they would choose Deputies for this City and County, to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect, and join with them for the sole purpose of appointing out of their body Delegates for the next Congress?" And if yea, who such Deputies should be;

Reported, That they had accordingly attended the said polls, and delivered to the Committee the several poll-lists by them taken, under their hands, and the hands of the Vestrymen of such Wards, from which it appears that eight hundred and twenty-six Freeholders and Freemen voted for Deputies, and elected the eleven persons nominated by this Committee; and that one hundred and sixty-three voted against the measure of appointing Deputies. The said Sub-Committees also informed this Committee that almost all those who voted against the appointment of Deputies, declared they were nevertheless for Delegates.

Ordered, That the said reports and poll-lists be lodged with the Secretary, and that Circular Letters be written to all the Counties in the Colony, informing them of the appointment of Deputies for this City and County, and requesting them, with all convenient speed, to elect Deputies to meet in Provincial Convention at the City of New-York, on the 20th day of April next, for the sole purpose of appointing Delegates to represent this Colony at the next Congress to be held at Philadelphia, the 10th day of May next.

Ordered, That the above extracts from the proceedings of the Committee be published.

By order of the Committee:

JOHN ALSOP, Deputy Chairman.

LETTER FROM THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK, TO ALL THE COUNTIES IN THE COLONY.

New-York, 16th March, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The late Congress having deemed it expedient that, in the present critical state of American affairs, another should be held at Philadelphia the 10th of May next; and the neighbouring Colonies having already appointed Delegates for that purpose, we beg leave to call your attention to that subject, and to remark, that the honour, as well as the interest of the Province requires that we also should be fully and properly represented.

Influenced by these considerations, this City and County conceive it highly necessary that a Provincial Convention should, without delay, be formed of Deputies from all the Counties, for the sole purpose of appointing out of their body Delegates for the next Congress; and, therefore, have already chosen their Deputies. They prefer this mode to any other, as it tends to unite the Counties, and to preserve that harmony between them so essential to the interest of our common cause.

Be pleased to communicate this letter to the inhabitants of your County; and should they concur with us in sentiment, we beg they will consider whether it would not be best to choose their Deputies so soon as that they may be down here by the 20th of April next; which day we take the liberty of proposing to you as proper for the meeting of the Convention.

We forbear urging any arguments to induce your concurrence, being well persuaded you are fully sensible that the happiness of this Colony, and the preservation of our rights and liberties depend on our acceding to the general union, and observing such a line of conduct as may be firm, as well as temperate.

By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

ELECTION OF DEPUTIES TO THE CONVENTION IN NEW-YORK.

New-York, March 16, 1775.

On Monday, the 6th instant, the Freeholders and Inhabitants of this City and County, by a very great majority, assented to the following mode of proceeding, viz:— That the General Committee should nominate eleven persons to be, on Wednesday, the 15th, proposed to the choice of the Freemen and Freeholders, as Deputies, to meet on the 20th of April such Deputies as the other Counties might elect, and join with them, for the sole purpose of appointing out of their body Delegates for the next General Congress, agreeable to the recommendation of the last. Accordingly the Committee nominated the following persons, viz: Philip Livingston, John Jay, James Duane, John Alsop, Isaac Low, Francis Lewis, Abraham Walton, Abraham Brasher, Alexander McDougall, Leonard Lispenard, and Isaac Roosevelt.

From the time of the nomination every artifice was used, (by the same party who have constantly exerted their utmost abilities to obstruct and disconcert every measure of opposition to the tyrannical acts of the British Ministry,) in order to prevent the election of the Deputies nominated by the Committee, and to frustrate the design of a Provincial Congress, and of sending Delegates (at least with full powers from the whole Province) to the next General Congress. Before the day of election a great number of pieces were published on both sides, full of artifice and specious pretences on the Ministerial part, and of sound weighty argument on the other. Between the two, the argument and the views of each party were pretty well understood at the day of decision, when the votes of the Free-men and Freeholders were fairly taken, as follows, viz :

For the Deputies.		Against the Deputies.
Out Ward,	66	Out Ward,	—
North Ward,	99	North Ward,	36
East Ward,	125	East Ward,	22
South Ward,	42	South Ward,	23
West Ward,	213	West Ward,	23
Dock Ward,	52	Dock Ward,	32
Montgomery Ward,	228	Montgomery Ward,	27
	825		163

Besides great numbers of the majority, who, finding their votes not wanted, did not vote.

It is hoped the transactions of this day will in some measure restore the generality of the people to the good opinion and esteem of the neighbouring Colonies.

Last night our General Committee appointed a Subcommittee to draw up, and report at the next stated meeting, a state of the facts relative to the landing of Goods out of the Beulah.

New-York, March 16, 1775.

Yesterday polls were opened in the different Wards, for the election of eleven Delegates for this City, to meet Deputies who may be chosen by the Counties to form a Convention, out of whom to elect Delegates for the next Congress at Philadelphia. Of those who voted for this measure, it may with truth be affirmed, there was a great proportion who did it because there was no alternative. The disposition of our fellow-citizens is in favour of Delegates to meet the sister Colonies in Congress, as it is supposed that their principles respecting the unhappy situation we are in, with relation to Great Britain, are so well known, that no violent or unjustifiable measures will be assented to on their part. Sensible that the people were determined to send Delegates, it was the art of those who framed the question, upon which the poll was taken, to state it in such a manner that the electors might be led to think that they would be deprived of Delegates unless they pursued the mode pointed out to them, for when numbers of voters demanded that their votes might be taken for the five Delegates, it was absolutely refused. Had a poll been opened upon fair principles, stating the alternative, concerning which the division of sentiments arose, there is no doubt but the old five Delegates would have been elected almost unanimously. When the warmth of opposition has a little subsided, and those generous, candid, and liberal sentiments are suffered to prevail which have characterized the good people of this City, they will see who have endeavoured to mislead them; they will be shocked to think that they have espoused a measure which is founded upon depriving a very great number of their fellow-citizens of the liberty of declaring their sentiments; and they will suspect that cause which would require such a conduct, and those leaders who could adopt it; they will be alarmed when they consider that they have been instrumental in turning out those very Delegates, of whose conduct certain folks pretend to be such admirers.

They will see that all this is a scheme to supplant some of them, and to introduce into the Congress a man who has fomented all our intestine divisions for a number of years past, and who, in the course of the last year, so much disturbed the peace of this City by his presumptuous attempts. They will perceive that if it was only intended to have a Provincial Delegation, five Deputies would have answered as well as eleven on behalf of this City, for they will altogether make but one vote, as they will doubtless vote by Counties, not individually. Consider, then, what dependance can be placed in those who insidiously pretended that the number eleven was fixed upon, on purpose that the six might have an opportunity of putting in the old five! Consider that these schemes have been the means of depriving us of a Delegate, whose conduct at the last Congress was equally spirited and independent with any other of that body, and in all probability one more of the old Delegates will follow the same example; and then reflect what you have gained by this measure.

A CITIZEN.

Philadelphia, March 16, 1775.

According to publick notice, the subscribers towards a fund for establishing an American Manufactory of Woollens, Linens, and Cottons, met in Carpenters' Hall, on the 16th of March, 1775, to consider of a plan for carrying the same into execution. Daniel Roberdeau being chosen President, opened the business of the day with a sensible and elegant speech, pointing out the advantages of establishing the aforesaid Manufactories in this Country. The Company afterwards proceeded to the election of Officers, when the following gentlemen were chosen:—Treasurer, Joseph Stiles; Secretary, James Cannon; Managers, Christopher Marshall, Richard Humphreys, Jacob Winey, Isaac Gray, Samuel Wetherill, Junior, Christopher Ludwick, Frederick Kuhl, Robert S. Jones, Richard Wells, Thomas Tilbury, James Popham, Isaac Howell.

The business of the day being finished, the Company unanimously voted their thanks to the President, and requested that he would favour them with a copy of his Speech for publication, which he politely consented to.

A Speech delivered in CARPENTERS' HALL, MARCH 16th, before the Subscribers towards a fund for establishing Manufactories of Woollen, Cotton, and Linen, in the City of PHILADELPHIA.

GENTLEMEN! When I reflect upon the extent of the subject before me, and consider the small share of knowledge I possess of it, I confess I rise with timidity to speak in this assembly; and it is only because the requests of fellow-citizens in every laudable undertaking should always operate with the force of commands, that I have prevailed upon myself to execute the task you have assigned me.

My business, upon this occasion, is to lay before you a few thoughts upon the necessity, possibility; and advantages of establishing Woollen, Cotton, and Linen Manufactories among us.

The necessity of establishing these Manufactories is obvious from the Association of the Congress, which puts a stop to the importation of British goods, of which woollens, cottons, and linens always made a considerable part. So large has been the demand for these articles, and so very necessary are they in this Country, that it is impossible for us to clothe ourselves without substituting some others in their room. I am far from thinking that the Non-Importation Agreement will be so transitory a thing as some have supposed. The appearance of a change of measures in England respecting the Colonies, does not flow from a conviction of their injustice. The same arbitrary Ministers continue in office, and the same arbitrary favourites continue to abuse the confidence of our Sovereign. Sudden conversion should be trusted with caution, especially when they have been brought about by interest or fear. I shall think the liberties of America established at an easy price by a two or three years' Non-Importation Agreement. By union and perseverance in this mode of opposition to Great Britain, we shall afford a new phenomenon in the history of mankind, and furnish posterity with an example to teach them that peace, with all the rights of humanity and justice, may be maintained by the exertion of economical as well as military virtues. We shall, moreover, demonstrate the falsehood of those systems of Government which exclude patriotism from the list of virtues, and show that we act most surely for ourselves, when we act most disinterestedly for the publick.

The possibility of establishing Woollen, Cotton, and Linen Manufactories among us, is plain, from the success which hath attended several attempts that have been made for that purpose. A great part of the inhabitants of several of the Counties in this Province clothe themselves entirely with woollens and linens manufactured in their own families. Our wool is equal in quality to the wool of several European Countries; and if the same pains were bestowed in the culture of our Sheep, which are used in England and Spain, I have no doubt but in a few years our wool would equal the wool of Segovia itself. Nor will there be a deficiency in the quantity of wool which will be necessary for us, if we continue to adhere to the Association of the Congress as strictly as we have done. If the City of Philadelphia consumes 20,000 Sheep less this year than it did last, how many 20,000 Sheep may we suppose will be saved throughout the whole Province? According to the ordinary increase in the breed of Sheep, and allowing for the additional quantity of wool, which a little care of them will produce, I think I could make it appear that in five years there will be wool enough raised in the Province to clothe the whole of its inhabitants. Cotton may be imported upon such terms from the West-Indies and Southern Colonies, as to enable us to manufacture thicksets, calicoes, &c., at a much cheaper rate than they can be imported from Britain. Considering how much these stuffs are worn by those classes of people who constitute the majority of the inhabitants of our Country, the encouragement of the Cotton Manufactory appears to be an object of the utmost consequence. I cannot help suggesting in this place, although it may appear foreign to our subject, that the Trade to the West-Indies and Southern Colonies for cotton would create such a commercial union with the Middle and Northern Colonies, as would tend greatly to strengthen that political union which now subsists between them. I need say nothing of the facility of cultivating flax, nor of the excellent quality of the linens which have been already manufactured among us. I shall only add, that this manufactory may be carried on without lessening the value of that trade which arises from the exportation of our flaxseed to Ireland.

I cannot help laying a good deal of stress upon the public spirit of my countrymen, which removes the success of these Manufactories beyond a bare possibility, and seems to render it in some measure certain. The Resolves of the Congress have been executed with a fidelity hardly known to laws in any Country, and that too without the assistance of fire and sword, or even of the Civil Magistrate, and in some places in direct opposition to them all. It gives me the utmost pleasure to mention here, that our Province is among the foremost of the Colonies in the peaceable mode of opposition recommended by the Congress. When I reflect upon the temper we have discovered in the present controversy, and compare it with the habitual spirit of industry and economy for which we are celebrated among strangers, I know not how to estimate our virtue high enough. I am sure no objects will appear too difficult, nor no undertakings too expensive for us in the present struggle. The sum of money which has been already subscribed for the purpose of these Manufactories, is a proof that I am not too sanguine in my expectations from this Province.

I now come to point out the advantages we shall derive from establishing the Woollen, Cotton, and Linen Manufactories among us. The first advantage I shall mention is, we shall save a large sum of money annually in our Province. The Province of Pennsylvania is supposed to contain 400,000 inhabitants. Let us suppose that only 50,000 of these are clothed with the woollens, cottons, and linens of Great Britain, and that the price of clothing of each of these persons, upon an average, amounts to Five Pounds sterling a year. If this computation be just, then the sum annually saved in our Province by the manufactory of our clothes, will amount to £250,000 sterling.

Secondly: Manufactories, next to Agriculture, are the basis of the riches of every Country. Cardinal Ximenes is remembered at this day in Spain, more for the improvement he made in the breed of Sheep, by importing a number of rams from Barbary, than for any other services he rendered his Country. King Edward the Fourth and Queen Elizabeth, of England, are mentioned with gratitude by historians for passing Acts of Parliament to import a number of Sheep from Spain; and to this mixture of Spanish with English Sheep, the wool of the latter owes its peculiar excellence and reputation all over the world. Louis the Fourteenth, King of France, knew the importance of a Woollen Manufactory in his Kingdom, and in order to encourage it allowed several exclusive privileges to the Company of Woollen Traders in Paris. The effects of this Royal patronage of this Manufactory have been too sensibly felt by the English, who have, within these thirty or forty years, had the mortification of seeing the trade up the Levant, for woollen cloths, in some measure monopolized by the French. It is remarkable that the riches and naval power of France have increased in proportion to this very lucrative trade.

Thirdly: By establishing these Manufactories among us, we shall employ a number of poor people in our City, and that too in a way most agreeable to themselves, and least expensive to the Company; for, according to our plan, the principal part of the business will be carried on in their own houses. Travellers through Spain inform us, that in the Town of Segovia, which contains 60,000 inhabitants, there is not a single beggar to be seen. This is attributed entirely to the Woollen Manufactory which is carried on in the most extensive manner in that place, affording constant employment to the whole of their poor people.

Fourthly: By establishing the Woollen, Cotton, and Linen Manufactories in this Country, we shall invite manufacturers from every part of Europe, particularly from Britain and Ireland, to come and settle among us. To men who want money to purchase lands, and who, from habits of manufacturing, are undisciplined to agriculture, the prospect of meeting with employment as soon as they arrive in this Country, in a way they have been accustomed to, would lessen the difficulties of emigration, and encourage thousands to come and settle in America. If they increased our riches by increasing the value of our property, and if they added to our strength by adding to our numbers only, they would be a great acquisition to us. But there are higher motives which should lead us to invite strangers to settle in this Country. Poverty, with its other evils, has joined with it, in every part of Europe, all the miseries of slavery. America is now the only asylum for liberty in the whole world. The present contest with Great Britain was, perhaps, intended by the Supreme Being, among other wise and benevolent purposes, to show the world this asylum, which, from its remote and unconnected situation with the rest of the globe, might have remained a secret for ages. By establishing manufactories, we stretch forth a hand from the ark to invite the timid manufacturers to come in. It might afford us pleasure to trace the new sources of happiness which would immediately open to our fellow-creatures from their settlement in this Country. Manufactories have been accused of being unfriendly to population. I believe the charge should fall upon slavery. By bringing manufacturers into this land of liberty and plenty, we recover them from the torpid state in which they existed in their own Country, and place them in circumstances which enable them to become husbands and fathers, and thus we add to the general tide of human happiness.

Fifthly: The establishment of Manufactories in this Country, by lessening our imports from Great Britain, will deprive European luxuries and vices of those vehicles in which they have been transported to America. The wisdom of the Congress cannot be too much admired, in putting a check to them both. They have in effect said to them, "Thus far shall ye go, and no farther."

Sixthly: By establishing Manufactories among us, we erect an additional barrier against the encroachments of tyranny. A people who are entirely dependant on foreigners for food or clothes, must always be subject to them. I need not detain you in setting forth the misery of holding property, liberty and life upon the precarious will of our fellow-subjects in Britain. I beg leave to add a thought in this place which has been but little attended to by the writers upon this subject, and that is, that poverty, confinement, and death are trifling evils when compared with that total depravity of heart which is connected with slavery. By becoming slaves we shall lose every principle of virtue. We shall transfer unlimited obedience from our Maker to a corrupted majority in the British House of Commons, and shall esteem their crimes the certificates of their commission to govern us. We shall cease to look with horror upon the prostitution of our wives and daughters, by those civil and military harpies who now hover around the liberties of our Country. We shall cheerfully lay them both at their feet. We shall hug our chains. We shall cease to be men. We shall be slaves.

I shall now consider the objections which have been made to the establishment of Manufactories in this Country.

The first, and most common objection to Manufactories in this Country is, that they will draw off our attention from Agriculture. This objection derives great weight from being made originally by the Duke of Sully, against the establishment of Manufactories in France. But the history of that Country shows us, that it is more founded in speculation than fact. France has become opulent and powerful in proportion as Manufactories have flourished in her; and if Agriculture has not kept pace with her Manufactories, it is owing entirely to that ill-judged policy which forbade the exportation of grain. I believe it will be found, upon inquiry, that a greater number of hands have been taken from the plough, and employed in importing, retailing, and transporting British woollens, cottons, and linens, than would be sufficient to manufacture as much of them as would clothe all the inhabitants of the Province. There is an endless variety in the geniuses of men; and it would be to preclude the exertion of the faculties of the mind to confine them entirely to the simple arts of agriculture. Besides, if these Manufactories were conducted as they ought to be, two-thirds of the labour of them will be carried on by those members of society who cannot be employed in agriculture, namely, by women and children.

A second objection is, that we cannot manufacture cloths so cheap here; as they can be imported from Britain. It has been the misfortune of most of the Manufactories which have been set up in this Country, to afford labour to journeymen only for six or nine months in the year, by which means their wages have necessarily been so high as to support them in the intervals of their labour. It will be found, upon inquiry, that those Manufactories which occupy journeymen the whole year, are carried on at as cheap a rate as they are in Britain. The expense of manufacturing cloth will be lessened from the great share women and children will have in them; and I have the pleasure of informing you that the machine lately brought into this City for lessening the expense of time and hands in spinning, is likely to meet with encouragement from the Legislature of our Province. In a word, the experiments which have been already made among us, convince us that woollens and linens of all kinds may be made and bought as cheap as those imported from Britain; and I believe every one who has tried the former, will acknowledge that they wear twice as well as the latter.

A third objection to Manufactories is, that they destroy health, and are hurtful to population. The same may be said of Navigation, and many other arts which are essential to the happiness and glory of a State. I believe that many of the diseases to which the manufacturers in Britain are subject, are brought on, not so much by the nature of their employment, but by their unwholesome diet, damp houses, and other bad accommodations, each of which may be prevented in America.

A fourth objection, to establishing Manufactories in this Country, is a political one. The liberties of America have been twice, and we hope will be a third time preserved by a non-importation of British manufactures. By manufacturing our own clothes we deprive ourselves of the only weapon by which we can hereafter effectually oppose Great Britain. Before we answer this objection, it becomes us to acknowledge the obligations we owe to our Merchants for consenting, so cheerfully, to a suspension of trade with Britain. From the benefits we have derived from their virtue, it would be unjust to insinuate that there ever will be the least danger of trusting the defence of our liberties to them; but I would wish to guard against placing one body of men only upon that forlorn hope to which a non-importation agreement must always expose them. For this purpose I would fill their stores with the manufactures of American looms, and thus establish their trade upon a foundation that cannot be shaken. Here, then, we derive an answer to the last objection that was mentioned; for in proportion as manufactures flourish in America, they must decline in Britain, and it is well known that nothing but her Manufactories have rendered her formidable in all our contests with her. These are the foundations of all her riches and power. These have made her Merchants Nobles, and her Nobles Princes. These carried her so triumphantly through the late expensive war; and these are the support of a power more dangerous to the liberties of America than her Fleets and Armies—I mean the power of corruption. I am not one of those vindictive patriots who exult in the prospect of the decay of the Manufactories of Britain. I can forgive her late attempts to enslave us, in the memory of our once mutual freedom and happiness. And should her Liberty, her Arts, her Fleets and Armies, and her Empire, ever be interred in Britain, I hope they will all arise in British garments only in America.

JOURNAL OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

Committee Chamber, March 16, 1775.

The Committee met, by adjournment, this evening at the Exchange: Present,

Isaac Low, Chairman,	Joseph Totten,	Comfort Sands,
John Jay,	Thomas Ivers,	John Berrian,
Isaac Sears,	Hercules Mulligan,	Nicholas Roosevelt,
Alexander McDougall,	John Anthony,	Edward Fleming,
John Broome,	Theophilus Anthony,	Frederick Jay,
Abraham P. Lott,	William Goforth,	George Janeway,
Abraham Duryee,	Francis Basset,	Lindley Murray,
Francis Lewis,	Jeremiah Platt,	Lancaster Burling.
John Lasher,

Mr. Lewis, from the Sub-Committee appointed to state the case of Messrs. Robert Murray and John Murray respecting their having landed Goods from on board the Ship Beulah, reports a Letter from the Committee of Elizabethtown to this Committee, which Letter is in the words following, viz:

Elizabethtown, Friday, 12 o'clock P. M., March 10, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: In consequence of the information received from Captain Sears relative to the suspicion that some part of the Cargo of the Ship Beulah had been unladed before she quitted this coast, the Committee of Observation of this Town met this evening, and made inquiry respecting the affair; and thereupon have to inform you, that it appears to them that a Boat belonging to this Town did, last Monday morning, sail from New-York to Sandy-Hook; that on Tuesday evening she returned here. Two of the witnesses examined were the boatmen, and the person who we suspect engaged the Boat, who refused to be sworn; but from their behaviour, and what they said on examination, and other circumstances, we believe that it was the Boat seen to be hovering about the Beulah, and took Mr. John Murray out of the Ship, and that Goods from said Ship were landed by the said Boat at Staten-Island. We are not able at present to furnish you with any further particulars. The Committee will make further inquiry into this matter, and if any thing further appears, will give you immediate information; in the mean time we thought proper to give the above early intelligence, to furnish you with a clue in all probability of making more important discoveries on Staten-Island, where we think the Goods were undoubtedly landed, at the East Ends, or in the Kills. Signed by order of the Committee:

JONATHAN HAMPTON, Chairman.

To the Committee of Observation of New-York.

The said Sub-Committee further report another Letter to this Committee, from the Committee of Elizabethtown, which is in the words following, viz:

Elizabethtown, March 11, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The Committee of Observation of this Town have this day used their endeavours to make a further discovery relating to the unlading part of the Cargo of the Ship Beulah, but are not able to give you the information they desire. Samuel Lee, a boatman of this Town, employed and accompanied by Ichabod B. Barnet, Esq., (son-in-law to Robert Murray,) appear, from very strong circumstances, to have been the persons concerned in that affair, who went from New-York on Monday last to the Ship.

We have had Lee before us. He appears greatly perplexed, but cannot be persuaded to give any clear information of the matter, he being under an apprehension that he, by that means, may be the ruin of some particular persons in New-York. The said Barnet was also before us, but refused to answer the questions proposed to him; he only offered to swear (if it would be any satisfaction to us) that no Goods from the Beulah were landed at this Town, which, however, we did not accept. And there is reason to believe that Lee would have given information, had it not been for said Barnet, who, it appears, has prevented him from making the desired discovery.

We have only to add, that the Boat employed on this occasion is the property of Isaac Woodruff, Esq., who, it clearly appears, was perfectly innocent, and knew nothing of the affair.

Signed by order of the Committee:

JONATHAN HAMPTON, Chairman.

To the Committee of Observation of New-York.

The Sub-Committee also report, that on the same evening, and before this Committee had received any further evidence respecting this matter, Messrs. Murrays voluntarily produced to this Committee, at their meeting on the 13th March, instant, a Letter in the words following:

To the General Committee for the City and County of NEW-YORK:

GENTLEMEN: Having been disappointed in our design of reshipping the Cargo of the Ship Beulah (lately arrived from London) in another bottom, by which we were great sufferers; and though we then conceived that such our design, if executed, would have been a compliance with the Resolution of the Congress; we acknowledge that, to alleviate in some measure the great loss we sustained, we have been induced to land a small part of her Cargo; and notwithstanding we are persuaded that it would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to obtain full and sufficient evidence of the fact, and that the Goods are secured in a place of safety where they cannot be discovered, yet, upon mature reflection, and with a view to satisfy the publick and this Committee, as well as to prevent the trouble of any further inquiries upon this subject, we are led to make this declaration, and to acknowledge that we are sorry for the imprudent step we have taken, and that we do condemn the same as an unjustifiable measure; and as a further proof of our willingness to conform to the Resolution of the Congress, as far as is now in our power, we do hereby engage to reship all the said Goods, according to the tenour of the Association, and to give the Committee full and satisfactory proof thereof, within seven days from this time.

Dated 13th March, 1775.

ROBERT MURRAY,
JOHN MURRAY.

And that they did then offer to make a full and ample confession of every fact relative to the unloading Goods from the Beulah, and to deliver to the Committee at their then next meeting, a full state of the case, under their oath and affirmation.

The said Sub-Committee further report, that Messrs. J. and R. Murray did accordingly deliver a statement of that transaction, which is in the words following, viz:

Inventory of Goods taken out of the Ship BEULAH, at SANDY-HOOK.

Eighty-four bolts of Russia Duck.
Twenty pieces of Raven Duck.
Two hundred and forty packs of Pins.
Five bales of Pepper, two of which are in hhds.
Sixty-five bolts Oznaburghs.
Ten pieces Blue Strouds.
Fourteen pieces Irish Linen.
Six pieces White Hessen.
Eleven pieces Irish Sheeting.
One paper bundle directed to Henry Van Vleck.
One bundle Straw, supposed a Case-maker's Cushear.
One small box of Books, Papers, &c.
Wrapper for the Strouds.
With wrappers for said Goods.

City of NEW-YORK, ss.

John Murray, of the City of New-York, Merchant, being duly sworn, saith, that the above is a full, just, and true inventory of all the Goods which were lately taken out of the Ship Beulah at Sandy-Hook, by the deponent, and were by him landed at Elizabethtown in New-Jersey. That the deponent did, yesterday, voluntarily make an acknowledgment to the Committee of Elizabethtown aforesaid, that he had so taken and landed the said Goods, and did this day deliver the whole of said Goods to the said Committee, who took the same into their custody and possession; where he believes the same now are. That the Boat in which the said Goods were taken out of the said Ship belonged to Isaac Woodruff, which the deponent hired for the purpose, of Samuel Lee, who was master of the said Boat. That Mr. Woodruff did not know (as this deponent believes) for what purpose the said Boat was hired, nor did the deponent inform the said Mr. Lee on what business he wanted the said Boat; nor did he appear to know at the time the Boat was hired, that he was employed on any business contrary to the Association. That the agreement with the said Lee was only to go with the Boat where he was directed, and to do what he was bid. That Mr. Ichabod Barnet, of Elizabethtown, and Samuel Reade, of this City, went with the said Samuel Lee in the said Boat down to the said Ship, at the time aforesaid. That Mr. Barnet was acquainted with the design of the Boat's going down to the said Ship; but the deponent does not know that Mr. Reade was previously acquainted with such design, though at the Vessel he assisted in taking the said Goods out by the direction of this deponent, in whose store he is an assistant. That John Graham, clerk to this deponent and his partner, was on board the Ship with the deponent, at the time when the Goods were taken out, but did not see the Goods taken out, being (as the deponent believes) asleep at that time in the cabin; and that his business on board was to copy invoices and letters; neither does this deponent know or believe that the said Graham ever heard any conversation between the deponent and any other person respecting the taking out the said Goods. That when the Goods were on board the Boat, the deponent, and all the other persons above-mentioned, proceeded with her for Elizabethtown, but stopped at Staten-Island, where they all went on shore; and Graham and Reade took passage from thence in the Staten-Island Ferry-Boat for New-York; and the deponent, with Lee and Mr. Barnet, proceeded from Staten-Island to Elizabethtown in the said Boat, where all the said Goods were landed by them, and put into Mr. Ichabod Barnet's store; that the said Ichabod Barnet had no interest in the said Goods, but what he did in the said business was merely at the request of this deponent and his said partner, and the deponent believes with an intention entirely to oblige them. That while the Ship lay at the watering-place, the Captain and this deponent took into Kipp's small sailing-boat sundry small articles, the principal of which the deponent believes were presents, but does not know the particulars. That the deponent at the same time took into the said little Boat, two small Cheeses, about two hundred Lemons and Oranges, and a dozen and nine bottles of Beer, and about two bushels of Potatoes for the use of the deponent and his brother, all which were brought up in the said Boat by this deponent and Captain Bussell; and the Cheeses, and the other aftermentioned articles, except the Beer, were presents from the Captain. That in the whole of this transaction, so far as respects the delivery of the Goods from on board the Ship at the Hook, Captain Bussell acted by the order and direction of this deponent and his partner, having no interest in the Goods so delivered. And this deponent further saith, that he neither knows nor believes that any Goods were taken out of the said Ship after her arrival here, nor since her sailing from Sandy-Hook, except the Baggage belonging to some passengers, and except the Goods herein before enumerated and mentioned; nor that any other persons than those above-mentioned, had any agency or concern in taking out or landing the said Goods, except the Ship's crew, and except also one Marsh, who, at Elizabethtown, accidentally passing by, was employed to assist in landing the same; but the deponent believes he did not know where the Goods came from. And further saith not.

JOHN MURRAY.

Sworn the 15th day of March, 1775, before me,

ANDREW GAUTIER.

City of NEW-YORK, ss.

Robert Murray, of the said City, being duly affirmed according to law, doth declare and affirm, that so far forth as he is acquainted with the facts contained in the foregoing Deposition, the same are true; and that he neither knows nor believes that any more or other Goods, or things were taken out of the said Ship Beulah, since her arrival here, than what are specified in the foregoing Deposition; and that he believes no other person to have been concerned in the said business, except those mentioned in this Deposition.

ROBERT MURRAY.

Affirmed the 15th March, 1775, before me,

ANDREW GAUTIER.

The said Sub-Committee further report, that the said Messrs. Robert and John Murray did write a Letter to this Committee, accompanying the said state of the case; which Letter is in the words following:

To the General Committee for the City and County of New-York:

GENTLEMEN: The annexed Depositions contain as full and candid an account of the transaction relative to the landing of the Goods from the Ship Beulah, as we are able to give; in the doing of which we have studied to give the Committee, and our fellow-citizens, the utmost satisfaction we are capable of.

John Murray being obliged to go to Elizabethtown to take an inventory of the Goods, found the Committee then sitting, and conceived it to be his duty, as the Goods were within their jurisdiction, to give them notice thereof, and to make a full acknowledgment to them: upon doing which, they took, with his consent, possession of the Goods as mentioned in the affidavit.

We still declare our readiness to reship the said Goods as nearly as is now in our power, agreeable to the tenour of the Association, or to do otherwise with them, as the Committee of Elizabethtown shall think proper to intimate or direct; and that we are also ready to give this Committee any further satisfaction respecting the said Goods, that they may recommend. Being desirous further to testify the sense we have of the imprudent measure we have taken, as well as our concern for the trouble and uneasiness it has given our fellow-citizens, we would wish to make such further satisfaction to the publick as might be most agreeable to them; and therefore do hereby cheerfully engage to give the sum of Two Hundred Pounds towards repairing the hospital in this City, lately destroyed by fire.

We are, gentlemen, very respectfully, your assured friends,

ROBERT MURRAY,
JOHN MURRAY.

New-York, March 15, 1775.

The said Sub-Committee further report another Letter from the Committee of Elizabethtown, enclosing an Affidavit of Samuel Lee; which Letter and Affidavit are in the words following, viz:

Elizabethtown, March 14, 1775.

SIR: Enclosed I send you the Affidavit of Samuel Lee, boatman, relative to the unlading part of the Cargo of the Ship Beulah, which needs no comment.

I am, however, particularly desired by our Committee, earnestly to request of your Committee to protect Mr. Lee, as far as lies in their power, from any insult on account of this affair. He is a person well known here to be of good character, and who, by his honesty and industry, has justly acquired the esteem of all the inhabitants of this Town; and it is the opinion of our Committee he was unwarily led to act the part he did, as will, in part, appear by his Affidavit. I will only add, that we should be glad that whenever the Affidavit shall be read, this Letter may be read also.

By order of the Committee:

JONATHAN HAMPTON, Chairman.

NEW-JERSEY, Borough of ELIZABETH, ss.

Samuel Lee, of Elizabethtown, boatman, being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, deposeth and saith, That on Sunday the 5th instant, he (at the request of Ichabod B. Barnet, Esquire) sailed from Elizabethtown aforesaid, to New-York, in the Boat or Sloop he usually goes in, the said Barnet going as a hand with him; that he arrived there the same evening; that while they were on their passage, said Barnet informed this deponent that he must make haste to unlade his Boat as soon as he should arrive at New-York, for that a Vessel was arrived at the Hook from the West-Indies, and that he wanted this deponent to go with him with his Boat, and take some Goods out of her; that said Boat was unloaded at New-York on Monday morning, and immediately thereafter this deponent, and the said Barnet, sailed with the said Boat for Sandy-Hook; that at the dusk of the evening of the same day they came along-side of a Ship, which this deponent believes was the Beulah, and about eight o'clock he was told he might go to bed, which he accordingly did, and went to sleep. About twelve, was awakened, and desired to put off from said Ship, and make sail, which accordingly was done; that he saw the said Barnet, with Mr. John Murray, and one Graham, his clerk, were then on board his Boat; that on Tuesday morning they touched on Staten-Island, where Mr. Graham landed, but no Goods were landed there; that on Wednesday morning, about one o'clock, they came along-side the store of said Barnet, at Elizabethtown, where the said John Murray, Ichabod B. Barnet, and this deponent, landed and stored in the said Barnet's store, as near as he can remember, the following Goods, to wit: a small bale, a box about three feet long, one box about a foot square, the contents of which are unknown to this deponent; also a quantity of Sail Duck, a number of bolts of Oznaburghs, about half a dozen pieces of Linen, and some pieces of Linen Cloth, which this deponent supposed to be Drilling; which Goods, in the whole, this deponent thinks were in quantity about one ton and a half, or not exceeding two tons. And this deponent saith, that said Goods must have been taken out of said Ship, and put on board said Boat, while he was below as aforesaid, as there were no Goods on board his Boat when he left New-York to go to said Ship; and further the deponent saith, that he did not sleep so sound but that he heard the noise of people working upon the deck, and that when he was called up as aforesaid, and had come upon deck, he perceived the hatches of his Boat open, and the said Goods then lying in the hatchway. And further the deponent saith not.

SAMUEL LEE.

Sworn at Elizabethtown, this 13th day of March, 1775, before me,

JOHN BLANCHARD, Alderman.

Which Report being read,

Resolved, That this Committee do approve thereof: and Ordered, That the same be published agreeable to the directions of the Eleventh Article of the Association.

By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, March 16, 1775.

BELOVED COUNTRYMEN: Let us read, hear, and endeavour rightly to understand the subsequent passages and injunctions of the most Holy Bible, that divinely perfect, infallible, and eternal rule of all our voluntary acts and moral behaviour. Read, heard rightly, fully understood, and with exact punctuality obeyed, they may, for aught any mortal knows to the reverse, by a divine benediction operate powerfully, and contribute much to the restoration of that union and harmony between Great Britain and her American Colonies, so essentially requisite to promote the prosperity, welfare, and felicity of the whole English Empire; and, therefore, so very ardently wished and longed for by all good Protestant, loyal subjects of our very gracious Sovereign, and most august Monarch, King George the Third.

The texts referred to, and recommended to a candid perusal, and attentive, exact deliberation, are these:

Exodus xxii. 28: Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people. See also Math. xxii. from the 17th to the 21st, inclusive. The words run thus, verbatim: Tell us, therefore, what thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cesar, or not? But Jesus perceived their weakness, and said, why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Show me the tribute money. And they brought unto him a penny; and he saith unto them, whose is this image and superscription? They say unto him, Cesar's. Then saith he unto them, render therefore unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. Also, Rom. xiii. 1-8: Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God.

Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. And (note well) they that resist shall receive unto themselves damnation: For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the Minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the Minister of God, a revenger, to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore, ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For this cause pay ye tribute also; for they are God's Ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour. Owe no man any thing; but to love one another. For he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. 2 Peter ii. 13, 14: Submit yourselves to every ordinance of men for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the King as supreme, or unto Governours, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. Prov. xx. 2: The fear of the King is as the roaring of the lion; whoso provoketh him to anger, sinneth against his soul. Be just, be free.

New-York, March 20, 1775.

MR. HOLT: In Rivington's Gazetteer of last week, I saw a collection of Scripture texts adduced to countenance the doctrines of passive obedience and non-resistance. This attempt reminded me of Satan's quoting Scripture to encourage presumption; and indeed absolute passive obedience and non-resistance in all cases, is as contrary to the word of God, as presumption. That your readers may be convinced of this, I here furnish you with the following texts of Scripture, which I desire you would publish the first opportunity.

Exodus i. 15—20: The Egyptian midwives disobeyed the cruel order of their King, to kill the male infants of the Israelites, and for this generous and humane refusal, they were signally blessed of the Lord. The Israelites, with reason, disobeyed the inhuman mandate of their Monarch. 1 Sam. xiv. 15. And his footman justly disobeyed him. Also, (1 Sam. xxii. 17,) Mordecai, Shadrach, Mischach, and Abednego. The Prophet Daniel, and the Apostles disobeyed the unlawful commands of Kings and Magistrates. Compare Esther iii. 1—9; Daniel iii. 15—18; Daniel vi. 7—10; Acts iv. 18—20; Acts v. 27—29. From these quotations, it appears that when resistance to the orders of Magistrates is forbidden in Scripture, it is meant of resistance to just and legal orders. To be convinced that oppression, tyranny, and unrighteous acts of Government, are odious to the Supreme Being, consider the following texts: 2 Sam. xxiii. 3: He that ruleth over man must be just, ruling in the fear of God. Jer. xxx. 20: I will punish all that oppress my people. Isaiah x. 1: Wo unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness, which they have prescribed to turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people. Ezek. xiv. 9: Thus saith the Lord God, remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice; take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord. Ecclesiastes vii. 7: Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad. Psalms lxxii. 4: He shall break in pieces the oppressor. Exodus iii. 7, 8, 9: And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people, which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry, by reason of their task-masters, for I know their sorrows and am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them up out of that land, unto a good land, and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey. Now, therefore, behold, the cry of the children of Israel is come up unto me, and I have also seen the oppression wherewith the Egyptians oppress them; and accordingly he brought them out of the house of bondage with an high hand and an outstretched arm, and drowned their oppressors, Pharaoh and his Egyptians, in the Red-Sea. Rehoboam took the council of the young men, and rejected the old men's advice; and answered the people roughly, and said he would add to their burdens, and not ease them; whereupon many of the tribes revolted, and the King thereupon going to fight against them to reduce them to submission, is forbidden of God. Compare 2 Chron. x. and 14, with 1 Kings xii., and 2 Chron. xi. Thus saith the Lord, ye shall not go up nor fight against your brethren. A good hint for the Army! Peruse the iii. iv. v. vi. and vii. chapters of the book of Esther. Chapter iii. 8: And Haman said unto King Ahasuerus, there is a certain people scattered abroad, and dispersed among the people in all the Provinces of thy Kingdom, and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the King's law; therefore, it is not for the King's profit to suffer them. If it please the King, let it be written, that they may be destroyed, and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business to bring it into the King's treasuries; and the King took the ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman, the Jew's enemy; and the King said unto Haman, the silver is given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee. Haman, however, failed in his bloody designs against the Jews; they were delivered from the meditated destruction, and he was hanged on a gallows of his own raising. A dreadful warning this to all vindictive and sanguinary Ministers! When the Jews were devoted to destruction by the edict of King Ahasuerus, all avenues to the throne were shut up, and free access to the Monarch prohibited, on pain of death. Queen Esther, urged by absolute necessity, ventured to petition the King in these dangerous circumstances, and succeeded. An apology this, for our glorious Congress, if it needs one. O that it may be an example of the success of their Petition. Bribery is expressly forbidden in the word of God. Exodus xxiii. 8: Thou shalt not take a gift, for a gift blindeth the eyes of the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous. Prov. xxix. 4: He that receiveth gifts overthroweth the land. See persons threatened for this sin, 1 Sam. viii. 3; Isaiah i. 23, v. 22; Jer. xxii. 17; Ezek. xxii. 27; Hos. iv. 18; Amos v. 12; and Mich. iii. 11.

The whole tenour of the Gospel is diametrically opposite to every species of tyranny and oppression; the love of mankind is its grand peculiarity. Our Saviour informs us that the love of our neighbour is the great commandment of the Law; and he exhorts his disciples to do to others whatsoever they would that others should do unto them; this, he says, is the law and the prophets. The celebrated Doctor Newton, now Bishop of Bristol, in his Dissertations on the Prophecies, having shewn how minutely and remarkably the predictions concerning the destruction of tyrants were accomplished, adds this remark: (vol. I. p. 312:) "But not only in this particular, but in the general, the Scriptures, though often perverted to the purpose of tyranny, are yet in their own nature calculated to promote the civil, as well as the religious liberties of mankind. True religion, and virtue, and liberty, are more nearly related, and more intimately connected with each other than people commonly consider. It is very true, as St. Paul saith, (2 Cor. iii. 17,) that where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty; or, as our Saviour expresseth it, (John viii. 31, 32,) If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." What a pity is it, that this learned and ingenious Bishop and all the rest of his Right Reverend brethren have not acted in the legislative capacity according to those liberal, generous, and noble sentiments!

I shall conclude with an extract from the polite, Catholic, and elegant Doctor Balguy's dedication of his Sermons to his Grace Doctor Thomas Herring, Archbishop of Canterbury, at the time of the last rebellion in Scotland in favour of the Pretender. "What follows, my Lord, not only seems to claim a place, but cannot be omitted without a crime—I mean that exemplary love of your Country, which burns so nobly in your own breast, and has kindled or spread that generous passion all around you. You teach us by all fit means and methods, not only to be good Clergymen, but good Englishmen; not only to be wise and virtuous, but brave and free. You set before us, in the strongest light, the charms of liberty, and execrable evils of tyranny and bondage; inflaming our minds with an ardent love for the one, and an unconquerable aversion to the other. From your Grace we learn how to oppose the arts and intrigues of modern Rome with the spirit of ancient Romans; and cheerfully to sacrifice our lives and fortunes to the preservation of our liberties, and the defence of our Country." Oh that the generous ardour which flames and shines in these lines animated the breasts of all the Bishops and Clergymen in England and America, and every Protestant heart in the world!

PHILALETHES.

DECLARATION OF THE GRAND-JURY AND MAGISTRATES, ETC., AT THE COURT OF QUARTER-SESSIONS, AT JOHNSTOWN, TRYON COUNTY, NEW-YORK, MARCH 16, 1775.

Whereas, the Supervisors of the several Districts in the County of Tryon, with the entire approbation of some of the most respectable persons in that County for character and property, did, so early as June last, by letters to the gentlemen of the New-York Committee, decline entering into the unhappy dispute between Great Britain and its Colonies; and therein assigned their reasons for so doing, as according to their humble conceptions it did not appear to tend to the violation of their civil or religious rights, but merely regarded a single article of Commerce, which no person was compelled to purchase, and which persons of real virtue and resolution might easily have avoided or dispensed with; instead of which the inhabitants of one capital had committed an outrageous and unjustifiable act on the private property of the India Company, and therefore appeared to be alone affected by or really interested in the measures then taken by the King and Parliament, in support of what was and is deemed by many persons of good abilities and integrity, its just right and prerogative, then necessarily asserted for the preservation of order and due obedience to Government.

And whereas, these Supervisors, at a subsequent publick meeting, called in their own vindication, had the satisfaction to find that their conduct met with the entire approbation of a large majority; and their former proceedings were signed as such, by those who had not before been consulted upon it. And they have, moreover, since had the additional pleasure to observe, that notwithstanding all the artifices used by violent and designing men to practise on the easy credulity of the good people of this Country, their conduct now stands justified, as well from the wise and temperate Resolves of the true Representatives of this Colony, as from the opinion of all good subjects and real lovers of order and subordination. Therefore, at a time when so many Districts, &c., are manifesting in a publick manner their loyal attachment to Government, in opposition to the specious illusion and independency with which they had been amused, the Grand-Jury of a County which had been foremost in avowing its sentiments, could not pass over the present opportunity that offers, of bearing testimony to the prudent conduct and invariable resolutions of their County, as a respectable part of which they declare in few and plain words, but in the language of truth, that they abhorred, and still do abhor, all measures tending, through partial representation, to alienate the affections of the subjects from the Crown; or by wresting the intent and meaning of a particular Act, to draw in the inhabitants of a wide and extensive Territory to a dangerous and rebellious opposition to the Parent State, when exerting itself to preserve that obedience, without which no State can exist; in which opinion they are strengthened by the certain knowledge that a large body of them have of the superior advantage of the British Constitution, not only over those under which so many of them were born, but with which they have been in any wise acquainted; and that this excellent Constitution does appear to be in more danger from the intemperate warmth and dangerous politicks of ignorant men, or crafty Republicans, than from any measures which it appears to be either the aim or interest of Government to enforce.

They do, therefore, resolve to bear faith and true allegiance to their lawful Sovereign King George the Third, "and that in the true and plain sense of the words," as they are or ought to be commonly understood, without the prevarication which has often accompanied the same expressions from his warmest opponents. And as these have been the sentiments of the most respectable people of this County from the beginning, His Majesty's faithful Grand-Jurors will, in any extremity, exert themselves in the support of Government, as men who, whilst they have a true sense of generous liberty, are equally sensible of the just claim he has to their warmest loyalty for the enjoyment of these blessings, which his gentle reign has afforded, and who are heartily disposed to give him the strongest marks of it.

REV. ELEAZER WHELOCK TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Dartmouth College, March 16, 1775.

MUCH HONOURED SIR: I think that a concern for my own and my Country's safety, may be esteemed sufficient excuse for my acting so much out of character as I may seem to do, in intermeddling in our present publick and distressing affairs; and relying upon your candour and friendship to accept this for excuse, and to suppress whatever you may think may disserve me or that cause which has long been, and still is, my object, I shall freely hint something which I don't know but may be useful, and consequently would be criminal to withhold.

You are not insensible, Sir, how calamitous and distressing the case of these new and defenceless settlements will likely be, if such a Northern Army of Savages, &c., as we have been threatened with should be prevailed upon to join European forces against these Colonies, and how much of the strength of the Country below us must necessarily be diverted from the sea-coast to defend and secure us, if such an event should take place. For this, among other reasons, I have this spring sent Mr. James Dean, (who, among other excellent qualifications, is a great master of the language of the Indians at Caghnewaga,) as a Missionary, to itinerate for a short time among the tribes in Canada, to keep the fire burning, and brighten the chain (as they speak) of that friendship lately commenced between those tribes and this Seminary, which at present seems to be high in the esteem of many of them, as their conduct has fully testified, by receiving our Missionaries, and treating them with respect; sending their children from time to time with cheerfulness to school, &c. I have ten of their sons now with me, eight of whom are descendants from English captives, and one a son of the chief Sachem at St. Francis, and another is brother to the youth who was lately elected and crowned Sachem at Caghnewaga, which young Sachem I expect also will come hither to receive an education, as his father, who was here with him, promised to send him to me as soon as certain rites, customary among them to ratify and publish his election to and investiture in said office, should be performed. A number who have been at school here, have returned on one occasion and another, and made favourable reports of the treatment they met with among the English, and an honourable representation of the kind design of this school. I expect a number more from those tribes soon, and likely may have more than I can at present find means to support. This connexion, Sir, I esteem, under God, our strongest bulwark, if such invasion from the northward should be made.

I would also further inform you that Mr. Dean was brought up and naturalized among the Six Nations; is a great master of their language, and much esteemed as an orator among them; and his influence among them I apprehend to be greater than any other man's, unless it be their present Superintendent, and is esteemed by the best judges to be a man of genius, learning, piety, and great prudence. He was of opinion, (though he thought nothing of any mention being made of it,) that if there should be occasion, and he should be properly authorized for it, he could influence all those Six Nations to join these Colonies against any invasion that should be made or attempted against them, and I don't think he did at all overrate his ability or influence for that purpose. Mr. Dean designed to return as soon as the Lake should be clear of ice, and the streams and roads should favour it, which will likely be in May.

If what I have hinted shall suggest the least advantage to the cause, I am well repaid for writing; and if none at all, yet you have a testimonial of the good wishes and desires of him who is, with much esteem and respect, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,

ELEAZER WHEELLOCK.

Governour Trumbull.

REMONSTRANCE PRESENTED BY THE SELECTMEN OF BILLERICA TO HIS EXCELLENCY GENERAL GAGE, MARCH 16, 1775.

May it please your Excellency:

We, the Selectmen of the Town of Billerica, beg leave to remonstrate to your Excellency that, on the 8th of this instant, (March), one Thomas Ditson, an inhabitant of said Town of Billerica, was tarred and feathered, and very much abused, by a party of His Majesty's Forty-Seventh Regiment, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Nesbit. As guardians for said Town, and from a regard to the liberties and properties of its inhabitants, we cannot but resent this procedure. Your Excellency must be sensible that this act is a high infraction on that personal security which every Englishman is entitled to, and without which his boasted Constitution is but a name.

It is sufficiently unhappy for us, that we find Troops quartered among us for the purpose of enforcing obedience to Acts of Parliament of Great Britain, in the highest sense iniquitous, cruel, and unjust. It is still more unhappy, if these Troops, instead of preserving the character which British Troops once had, should pour in additional insult, and be guilty of the most brutal outrages. We hope your Excellency will take some steps for accommodating this affair; for we assure you we cannot, consistent with our duty, pass this matter over. We have been told by your Excellency, that you never meant to disturb the intercourse between the Town and the Country; confiding in this, we have passed and repassed in our usual manner. We therefore hope your Excellency will make it evident, by your conduct, that you are determined the intercourse shall be preserved, and we be not buoyed up with promises which, in the end, we unhappily find not to be depended upon. Lieutenant Colonel Nesbit is an Officer under your Excellency's command; of you, therefore, we demand satisfaction for the insult committed by him; we think it is in your power. We beg your Excellency that the breach, now too wide between Great Britain and this Province, may not, by such brutality of the Troops, still be increased. We assure you, Sir, it always has been, and still is, our sentiment and prayer, that harmony may be restored, and that we may not be drove to the last distress of Nations.

But may it please your Excellency, we must tell you we are determined, if the innocent inhabitants of our Country Towns (for we must think this man innocent in this affair) must be interrupted by Soldiers in their lawful intercourse with the Town of Boston, and treated with the most brutish ferocity, we shall hereafter use a different style from that of petition and complaint.

If the grand bulwarks of our Constitution are thus violently torn away, and the powers on earth prove unfriendly to the cause of virtue, liberty, and humanity, we are still happy. We can appeal to Him who judgeth righteously, and to Him we cheerfully leave the event.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF VIRGINIA.

Williamsburgh, Virginia, March 17, 1775.

The addresses presented to their Lieutenant-Governour by the Council and eleven polluted Members of the Assembly of New-York, are, to every sensible thinking American, of infinitely a more alarming nature than the threats of the Minister, the brutum fulmen of the King's speech, (if that can properly be termed the King's speech which the Minister has publicly avowed to be his own composition,*) or the echoing back this speech by a hireling majority of the Peers to their paymaster; for as long as a spirit of union subsists through this Continent, and as long as the people at home have reason to think that this spirit does subsist, these threats of the Minister (although vibrated from the sounding-board of the Throne) and the echoing it back by a hired chorus of Peers, must cast more ridicule upon those by whom they are uttered, than give terror to those at whom they are levelled. But the suspicion or report of any defection amongst ourselves, is a matter of most serious concern; it behooves you, therefore, gentlemen; it behooves every Provincial Congress of the Continent, to consider immediately of some effectual means to prevent the mischievous consequences intended by these abandoned and senseless men. Have we then formed a General Association of our Provinces? Have we pledged ourselves to each other, to our posterity, to mankind? Have we made so great (temporary at least) sacrifices in Commerce? Have we solemnly engaged to make still greater sacrifices in the glorious cause of Liberty? Have we confounded our enemies by a strain of virtue scarcely credible in these modern ages, and with a spirit of harmony that has surpassed the most sanguine expectation? Have we acted this noble part? And shall the Council and eleven contemptible Assemblymen of New-York attempt to render all we have done abortive? Contemptible in all respects—in numbers, in understanding, in knowledge, and in principles! For what other tendency can their addresses to their Lieutenant-Governour possibly have but to counteract the Resolves of the Congress, and render every thing ye have done abortive? These compositions of pusillanimity, abject servility, and disgusting folly, amount simply to this: That the utmost exertions of this United Continent (consisting of half a million of fighting men) can have no effect; that all the resistance (civil or military) which they can make, must be in vain; but that redress alone must be sought, and can be expected from the magnanimity of the British Nation, and the known goodness and virtue of the King. Gracious Heaven! grant us patience for to be told that we are to expect any thing from the magnanimity of a people who, for twelve years successively, have suffered themselves to be insulted, disgraced, trampled upon, plundered, and butchered with impunity! Or to be told, that we are to look up to the goodness and virtue of a King who, for the same number of years, has been influenced to make incessant war upon the property, rights, privileges, laws, honour, and integrity of his people, in every part of the Empire, is enough to drive moderation itself into violence.

But, continue these admirable Senators, what opens still a surer prospect of redress is, that His Excellency Governour Tryon is now near the Throne. So it seems that what the petitions, supplications, and remonstrances of the whole Colonies; of the City of London; of the great commercial Towns of the leading Counties of England; what the voice of policy, reason, justice, and humanity, could not effect, Colonel Tryon's being in England will accomplish. I know not whether this Colonel Tryon is a man of so extraordinary talents, eloquence, and influence, as to work these mighty miracles. I never understood that he was; but I am sure, if he has common sense, and any manly feelings, he cannot help being somewhat disgusted at this ill-timed, impertinent flattery, and that he must conceive the greatest contempt for the parasites who, regardless of the most important concerns to their Country and humanity, and at the very crisis which is to determine whether themselves and their posterity are to be freemen or slaves, could step out of their way to offer up incense to an unimportant individual. It may be said, this is all declamation; it may be so, but it is a declamation which an honest zeal in the publick cause has forced me into. It is now time, gentlemen, to devise some means of putting a stop to this cancer before it spreads to any dangerous degree. You, gentlemen of Virginia, and your neighbours of Maryland have, perhaps, these means in your hands.

* The affected friends to Government often complain that His Majesty is not treated with the respect due to his character and station; but it appears to me, that a Minister's declaring in an open Senate that the speech from the Throne is not the King's, but is his own, is going beyond disrespect. It is a most outrageous insult; it is representing His Majesty as a mere puppet, that squeaks just as he, the prompter, breathes.

I would propose, then, that after a spirited manifesto, expressing your abhorrence of the Council* and prostitute eleven of New-York, you should proceed to punish the individuals of this wicked junto who are in your power. Some of them have great contracts for wheat and corn in these Provinces, from Norfolk, Alexandria, Chester, Baltimore, and other ports. They export prodigious quantities, and enrich themselves considerably by this commerce. I would propose, that all commerce with these assassins should be laid immediately under an interdict; that not a single Ship belonging to a counsellor of New-York, (unless he purges himself by oath from having consented to the address,) or of one of the prostitute eleven, should be furnished with a freight within the Capes Henry or Charles; and I have that opinion of the virtue of these Provinces to think your injunctions would be efficacious. But here I must beg leave to pause for an instant, and ask pardon of the publick for my apparent presumption. An individual who offers his thoughts to so respectable a body as a Congress, delegated by the voice of a whole people, has certainly the air of presumption; it is in some measure attributing to himself superiour lights and abilities. But, on the other hand, it is allowed that an individual has frequently been fortunate enough to chalk out lines in which the most sagacious and respectable bodies have not disdained to walk.

If his proposals or hints be weak and absurd, they will naturally be laughed at; but if his intentions be honest, the consciousness of having acted from motives of rectitude, and the love of his Country, will sufficiently compensate for any ridicule which his scheme can incur. I would therefore wish, that what I offer should rather be understood as hints than advice. If these hints are attended to, I shall reap no personal glory; if they are despised, I shall be no personal sufferer, as my name will probably never be known; for I have too great confidence in the integrity of the printer to apprehend he will insinuate, even the most remotely, his conjectures of the author. But to proceed with my proposals, or hints, in which latter light I am most desirous they should be considered: I could wish to the above-mentioned manifesto was subjoined the warmest letter of thanks to the virtuous ten of the Assembly of New-York, for their endeavours to stem the profligacy and wickedness of the majority, and for the noble part they have acted as true Americans and excellent citizens; that another address, not less warm, should be presented to the gentlemen and people of New-York at large, expressing your opinion of their honesty and publick spirit, and lamenting their peculiar circumstances, which, to those who are strangers to these circumstances, may inculcate a belief that they alone are exceptions to the character of patriotism which the Americans are now indisputably entitled to. But above all, I could wish that it were recommended to every Province of the Continent, more particularly to their immediate neighbours of Pennsylvania, the Jerseys, and Connecticut, not to suffer one of this depraved undecimvirate to set his foot on their territories, until he invokes the forgiveness of his Country, and solemnly engages that his future life shall be employed in making compensation for his present conduct, of so obviously a mischievous tendency.

P. S. The epithets prostitute, profligate, &c., which I have so freely made use of, may probably appear illiberal; but when we consider the mischievous consequences which the conduct of these Council and Assemblymen of New-York are fraught with, it must be allowed that no language can furnish opprobrious terms adequate to their delinquency. I am far indeed from apprehending that their weight and influence are sufficient to shake the virtue of the Continent, or occasion any defection. I do not believe that an individual (much less a set of men) will be found who will be stupid and wicked enough to tread in their steps, the infamous  of Philadelphia, and a small perverse drivelling knot of Quakers, who form his Senate and Court, excepted. This worthy lately fixed his residence at New-York, with the professed intention of work-

* I cannot persuade myself that the Council were unanimous in this infamous address; there are individuals amongst them of known probity, sense, and patriotism. But these gentlemen, so far from objecting to the obligation of purging themselves by oath of having had any share of the guilt, will rejoice in the opportunity of acquitting themselves.

ing with some congenial spirits in that City towards the ruin of the whole fabrick which the Congress had been raising. Indeed, it is most probable that he was the principal compiler, if not the dictator, of these wretched addresses. The style and sentiments are certainly his; the same mist, fog, and darkness, which overcast all his productions, envelop these addresses; and the same narrow, crooked politicks, low cunning, malignancy, and treachery, discoverable through the mist, fog, and obscurity of all his works and actions, betray themselves in these addresses. It may now be asked, as I have represented the character, weight, and credit of these eleven Assemblymen, of the majority of the Council of New-York, and their Philadelphia coadjutor, or more properly dictator, in so despicable a light, wherefore I should sound the alarm? What mischiefs can possibly result from the utmost such men can do? I answer, that although they can neither occasion any defection, nor present the least prospect of success to the enemies of America and liberty, they can do very considerable mischief. They can procrastinate the issue; they can (and most probably will) prolong the inconveniences which we must, more or less, feel during the contest. There is nothing more certain than that the Ministry have proceeded to the enormous lengths they have done upon the presumption that the attacks upon Boston would not have been taken up by the other Provinces, as the cause of the whole.* There is, therefore, nothing more certain than that the appearance of our firmness and unanimity must soon have overthrown them, or forced them into a total change of measures; but the least appearance that this firmness and unanimity no longer subsists, will encourage them to persist, and enable them to keep their ground some time longer. These addresses of New-York will give this appearance; so that whatever the gentlemen, the merchants, the tradesmen, the mechanicks, and the people of America at large suffer from the prolongation of the contest; whatever shall be added to the distresses and burden of the people at home; whatever shall farther impair the commerce, strength, credit, and reputation of the Mother Country, and bring her still nearer to total bankruptcy and ruin; whatever shall farther alienate the affections of the child from the parent, may justly be imputed to this abject Council and eleven prostitute Assemblymen of New-York.†

Boston, March 17, 1775.

The Massachusetts Gazette of February 23d, has given the publick a long and laboured account of the terrible mischiefs done by mobs in this Province, and the names of the persons who are said to have suffered by them.‡ I own I was not displeased at the particular mention of their names, nor would I have had one left out of this shining list: for the world ought to know, and posterity to remember the men who have taken so open and decisive a part against their Country, at a time when it was nobly exerting itself in one of the most important and severe contests that ever fell to the share of any community. That they have suffered, and will continue to suffer as long as any remains of honour and conscience, and feelings for the estimation and love of their fellow-subjects reside with them, I firmly believe. This is all the revenge their much injured Country has hitherto taken of them.

That they live, some of them in affluence and splendour, upon the revenue extorted from their much injured Country, live to combine their heads and hearts for enslaving America, is a striking proof of the moderation and

* That this is the principle they acted upon, is now put out of dispute by the conduct of Lord North in the House of Commons, and some speeches directed to him.

lenity of that people in whose power it was, had it been equally their inclination, to have taken another kind of revenge.

The Act for shutting up the Port of Boston, which the Tories themselves did not scruple at first to call unjust and cruel, and which the whole world regards with abhorrence and indignation, was received by the inhabitants of that Town in a manner that does them everlasting honour. Neither transported by resentment, nor sunk with fear, nor warped by a regard to their private interest, they have now for near nine months endured all the relentless rigour of that Act, and a total deprivation of the commerce upon which they subsisted, rather than set an example to America of a tame and base resignation of our invaluable rights. They calmly referred their cause to the whole Continent, knowing it to be a common one; they have accordingly been applauded and supported by all the Colonies, and are now waiting with a patience and fortitude that will never be forgotten, the final issue of this reference.

With respect to the other Acts of Parliament that soon followed, (for vacating our Charter, in the important article of appointing His Majesty's Council, a branch of our Legislature, and for altering the mode of administering justice,) it was impossible for the people of this Province to exhibit the same patience. They waited indeed till the moment these Acts were to take effect, when they found themselves reduced to this cruel alternative, either tamely to submit to a deprivation of privileges which they held dearer than life, or run the risk of an immediate opposition. Had they bowed their necks to the yoke at that important moment, it would have been riveted upon them forever; no resistance could afterwards have been made with any prospect of success. The force of humble petitions and complaints had been already tried for a succession of years, and the men who had distinguished themselves in defence of our inalienable rights would have felt all the resentment of Government, in its new and tyrannical form; and juries, pricked off by a Sheriff appointed and removable at the pleasure of the Chair, instead of acquitting, might only have given a sanction to the sufferings of the virtuous and loyal, though accused subject.

In this extremity, which they had been endeavouring by every means in their power to avoid, they determined upon a virtuous and brave opposition; an opposition, all circumstances considered, planned and conducted with great prudence, and a lenity not to be exampled. The freeholders of the several Counties, headed by men of the first estimation and character among them, peaceably assembled, and without doing injury to a single person, or any man's property, calmly, though resolutely prohibited the courts of justice from sitting and acting upon a plan that must have ruined the liberties of their Country, and destroyed every security for their property and lives. In the same manner the people demanded of the Mandamus Councilmen a resignation of an office totally inconsistent with their Charter rights. Those who resigned were restored to the good opinion of their fellow-citizens, and have had nothing to fear. Others deluded their honest open-hearted neighbours, who were ready to accept the slenderest pledges of an intention not to destroy their civil rights. When these men had gained the protection of the Army, they insulted the credulity of their countrymen, and have been incessant in their endeavours to bring military vengeance upon a people to whose tenderness and forbearance they owe their own safety.

After the well known Powder expedition, the general alarm consequent upon it, and the resolution of General Gage to reside, with all his Troops, in Boston, great pains were taken to induce all the friends of Government, that is, all the enemies to the claims of America, to remove to the same place, and claim the protection of the Army. Of such a measure the Commissioners of the Customs had before set an example, with no small success. Accordingly, some who might have remained at home in safety, and at ease too, had it not been for a consciousness that their own views and inclinations were directly opposite to what the whole community deemed its most important interests, removed with their families to Boston. It is easy to see with what views this measure was taken, and what consequences were expected and wished to follow from it.

History does not afford an instance of a people so long irritated by cruel and oppressive innovations in their Government, harassed by Fleets and Armies, and an unheard of Port Bill, and obliged by the last necessity to oppose the mere forms of law to preserve the spirit and blessings of the British Constitution, who have conducted their opposition with more caution and moderation, and with less damage to those who have all along obstructed them in every probable method they could devise for their safety. This will appear more remarkable, when we consider, that in such contests injuries from brethren, men born and bred in the community, and under every obligation to protect its rights, are more severely resented than from strangers, and that many of these unnatural children of the Massachusetts were known to be its most implacable enemies, most ready to expose it by their speeches and writings to the scorn and hatred of the world, and most eager to whet the sword that might deluge it in blood.

In all this exertion for publick safety not a life nor a limb has been taken away; not a field has been laid waste, nor a dwelling destroyed. Some indiscretions and violences may have been committed by boys and the lowest of the people, which cannot, in such circumstances as this community has unhappily been reduced to, be prevented or properly punished. But are these to be compared with the horrid scene exhibited a few years ago, in King-street, on the fifth of March; with the bloody and dangerous affrays with the soldiery since that time, notwithstanding the utmost caution and exertion of the Commander-in-Chief to prevent them? Are they to be compared with the loss of property sustained by the Port Bill, and the distress and anxious apprehensions brought upon a large community of merchants, mechanicks, and yeomanry, by large Fleets and Armies, in hostile array? Or with the painful solicitude with which all our bosoms have been agitated for those rights, without which life itself would be a burden? And yet all these evils have been brought upon their Country, chiefly by the very men and their connexions who would represent themselves in the world as suffering from it in the most inhuman manner. For it is plain, even to demonstration, that had these men, and their head, now residing in England, concurred with their Country in a love to its ancient Constitution, and its sacred rights; and had they honestly and steadily resolved to accept no commissions, nor to act from any under an innovated Government; had they done this at the beginning of our troubles, Administration must of necessity have given up the design of taxing America, and vacating our Charter; and all the distressing measures we have since endured for the purposes, would have been peaceably avoided. Instead of this, the Tories of this Province, under the auspices of Bernard and Hutchinson, have been the most zealous promoters, if not the original contrivers of this most injurious design, and the methods taken to effect it.

It is astonishing to observe how alienated these men are from the interest of the community in which they were born and educated, and still live; how inflexibly opposed to its prevailing sentiments and principles; and with what scorn and detestation they regard the united exertions of all America to defend itself from the attempts of a corrupt Administration to enslave it. In their account, the love of liberty is sedition; a claim of the rights of Englishmen, which are no more than the rights of human nature, is treason; and a deliberate united determination to defend them, is rebellion. If the people, the fountain of all civil honour and authority, and of whom the first rulers are indeed servants; if the people, I say, assemble and consult for the preservation of their rights, these men immediately cry out in a rage, a mob! and seem to wish, like Nero, that the whole Province had but one neck, that they might divide it at a stroke. They will plead in excuse for the Quebeck Bill, which establishes the Roman Catholic Religion and a French Government in a British Colony, that it is tenderly accommodated to the prejudices of the majority in that Colony; but for the prejudices and misapprehensions of their brethren in the Protestant Colonies, allowing them to be in an error, they have no indulgence. It is humane and just that the Canadians should claim and enjoy the tyranny of French laws; but for the British inhabitants of the other Colonies to urge their claim for British privileges, deserves confiscation of estate and a halter.

Let these men, if they please, go on to call the orderly assembling of the freeholders of this Province in defence of their unalienable rights, a mob. It is such a kind of mob as has more than once preserved the British Constitution from absolute ruin; such a mob as rose in England, in the reign of James the Second, consisting of the body of the people, and the first characters in every literary and honourable department; a mob which the two Universities, the Clergy, and even the Army itself did not hesitate to join, and of which the great Churchill, afterwards John Duke of Marlborough, was a principal ringleader. The difference is, they opposed an arbitrary Monarch, while we are only defending ourselves against the unconstitutional, despotick power of our fellow-subjects—the Lords and Commons of Great Britain. They took the field. We have not yet been reduced, and I hope never shall, to that cruel necessity. May American mobs be crowned with the same success, and all posterity will revere them as the glorious conservators of the rights of mankind. LUCIUS.

TO GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH.

Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, March 17, 1775.

MUCH DELUDED SIR: As I have no desire to detract from the merit of your former actions, I readily allow, that for many years your prudent conduct gained you the affections of almost all the people in this and the neighbouring Colonies. No man in your station could be more honoured and revered; no person could exert himself more in favour of the Province, or exceed you in promoting the true interest of it. You did not prostitute commissions, but endeavoured to add dignity to your Courts and honour to your Militia. You caused harmony to subsist between the several officers and soldiers throughout the Province; and doubtless felt that satisfaction yourself, which ever results from the consciousness of having done well. You well know what effects this produced; and with pleasure saw the zeal with which the people espoused and defended your cause against the rage and malice of some who have since become your bosom friends. But, Sir, let me ask you, whether your late conduct has not been totally different? Have you not, without provocation, risen up against your native Country, and done all in your power to enslave it? Have you not used your utmost endeavours to enforce those unconstitutional Acts, against which America has made so violent an opposition? Have you not arbitrarily deprived the people from any share in their own Government for near twelve months, and reduced your people to the sad necessity of being governed by the Crown, or its immediate servants; or of being reduced to a state of anarchy? Have you not devised various methods to divide and weaken the people, that their opposition to Parliamentary measures might be less powerful? Have you not issued your writs for the election of Representatives to Towns where the number of inhabitants were inconsiderable, when compared with others, which you chose to pass by without the least notice? Have you not executed your vengeance on all those who have stood forth to defend the liberties of their Country, upon the members of the late Congress; upon Civil Magistrates and Military Officers? You have. How then can you expect to rule in the hearts of this people? Can you conceive that they take no notice of these things? Be not deceived. A few fawning sycophants may endeavour to flatter you; but believe me, Sir, the affections of the people will never be possessed by you in future. They well know that you were the only person who endeavoured to procure workmen to build barracks for the enemies of America; they are fully sensible, that the officers who have been foremost in disciplining their men, and fitting them for action; and the men who have been engaged for the preservation of the sacred rights of the people, who have warned the people of their danger and exhorted each to shun it, have been made the objects of your resentment, these men you have dismissed from every civil and military employment. But what is the consequence? You already see that numbers of officers have resigned, nobly refusing to hold commissions when nothing can secure them but consenting to the ruin of their Country; and you will soon find that the same spirit will discover itself to every part of the Government; and, of course, the militia will be in the same state as that of the Massachusetts, Maryland, &c.

I suppose that in excuse for this conduct, you will say that you were expressly ordered to do this, and could by no means avoid it, and secure your own standing; which perhaps may be the case. But then I must beg leave to observe, that if those orders were from General Gage, and you can by no means secure your standing but by obeying them, you can claim but little merit for any acts you may do in future; as General Gage, with his nod, can direct the publick affairs of this and every other Colony upon the Continent. If it proceeded from the mandates of a Minister, then it is immaterial whether we are governed by Lord North or any other person, as every thing is to be regulated by his arbitrary will and pleasure.

I however incline to think that this is our deplorable situation, that the person who presides over us has little more to do than echo the voice of a despotick Minister, and see that his mandates are obeyed; I must therefore pity the person appointed to preside, and the unhappy people who are called to obey. No situation can be more unhappy; no slavery can be more complete. I think myself acquainted with the natural goodness of your heart, and will venture to affirm, that you would not (if left to yourself) make such a wanton use of the prerogative, or deprive the people for such a length of time from having a share in their own Government. You well know that by the same kind of conduct, the people may be deprived of the inestimable right of representation, whenever and for whatever length of time an arbitrary Minister may think proper. I shall conclude, by assuring you that I am far from being your enemy; and that I sincerely grieve for you, and a number of others, who I am persuaded must, if they retain their commissions, owe their future greatness to their Country's ruin.

THE SPECTATOR.

TO D  C , ESQ.

New Jersey, March 18, 1775.

DEAR SIR: You expect my sentiments on our publick affairs, and, indeed, I can with freedom unburden my full heart to one whom I esteem a true friend to George the Third, our rightful Sovereign, to the Protestant succession in his family, and to the real interest and greatest good of the whole British Empire. And were such as truly the character of every British subject as it is yours, and every mind properly informed, all our unhappy differences would soon be amicably settled, and every disagreeable commotion and unfriendly passion subside. But a strong party too near the Throne, of a quite opposite character, are opposing the general good of the Nation, to the great danger of the King, the Protestant succession and interest, and even the very existence of the Empire as such.

You need not be told, Sir, the many well known facts on which this great danger is founded. Have not that party invaded the rights of mankind in every part of the Empire? Hath not that invasion stirred up a spirit of jealousy, disaffection, and opposition to those hateful measures, more or less, in almost every City, County, and Colony in the British Dominions? For instance, the noble spirit and manly opposition shewn by the citizens of London, and the electors of Middlesex, when their right of election was trodden under foot by that party, in the case of Wilkes and Luttrell. And the many Petitions and Remonstrances from every quarter, are so many instances of the like kind. Hence it appears that America is not singular in her opposition. He must be ignorant of the present state of our Nation, who is not sensible that there are still millions in Great Britain and Ireland, who are possessed of the same virtuous principles with us; and who have shown, or soon must show themselves on the side of Liberty, Protestantism, and the Constitution. Their eyes are opening. They see more and more, this great truth, that the ruin of the whole Empire is involved in that of America. In short, such is the state of our publick affairs, that should the friends of despotism carry their point a little higher, and begin with the sword to enforce submission to tyranny, the whole Empire would fall into the most dreadful convulsions, and shake to the very centre. Then, when these convulsions shall have subsided, through the loss of much blood; then (may Heaven prevent it) the Atlantick Ocean, the Irish Sea, and the River Tweed, will probably be what the English Channel is now—a divider of Kingdoms, or the whole to be swallowed up by Bourbon.

Nor can Stuart himself, whom America abhors, expect more than a part of the Empire. For France and Spain, now grown stronger, will, no doubt, at such a time, do all that in them lies to divide and weaken the British Empire; when the Romish religion in Ireland, the love of Stuart in Scotland, and the lust of gold in England, will forward their design: for what but the love of money could have calculated the present ministerial plan so exactly to suit the meridian of Paris?

Some may imagine that America may be subjugated without any such ill consequences to the European part of the British Dominions, and that the Americans, were the case once to be put, sword in hand, would make but a feeble resistance; because, they say, many in hopes of present profit or future favours, and many through fear of punishment, will join the ministerial party, and thereby so divide as to destroy, in a great measure, every mode of opposition; and that those who still continue their opposition will be so disheartened and unsupported as to fall an easy prey to their enemies. On which let it be remarked, that those who hold and endeavour to propagate such slavish anti-American doctrines, betray in themselves either ignorance, cowardice, or treachery; which are directly opposite to the true character of America in general. The Americans are a sensible, learned, brave, loyal, free, Protestant people. And though there are some who are otherwise, yet they are a diminutive number, so comparatively few, that they never have, and it is to be hoped they never will take the lead in our publick affairs. Those who think England may be safe while in an open rupture with America, do not duly consider their danger from their internal and external enemies—the French, Spaniards, Catholics, Jacobites, and Tories; of which it is hard to say who are the greatest enemies of the British Constitution, and the Protestant interest. Be that as it may, it has been openly declared in Parliament, that were the banners of rebellion once spread in America, England would be a ruined people. And many of the most sensible Britons have given it as their opinion, that Great Britain and her Colonies must stand or fall together. They are therefore often calling upon us to stand firm and united in our virtuous opposition; adding, that thereby we shall save ourselves and them. This is doubtless true; and it is allowed by friends and foes, that our danger principally, if not wholly lies in our being divided among ourselves. What punishment, therefore, is adequate to their guilt, who use every vile artifice to deceive and divide us, and thereby ruin the whole Empire? And yet, these same traitorous vermin would cloak all their foul conduct under the specious pretence of loyalty, and curse the honest Whigs for traitors; whose loyalty, in fact, is the very thing that vexes them. Would it then be any wonder, if under such provocations, the friends of the Constitution should, in some instances, through their zeal for the publick good, go beyond the line of duty.

The Americans are, of all His Majesty's subjects, the greatest admirers of the British Constitution; because they esteem it the grand charter of their liberties, civil and religious, which they love as they do their lives; and their loyalty to the present reigning family is as pre-eminent as their love of liberty, and always has been; because they esteem that family as the proper guardians of the Constitution on which alone their throne is built, and under the protection of which we hold our liberties. In this view of things, no wonder if we should esteem those traitors to the King who are using their utmost efforts to undermine his throne by destroying its basis—the Constitution. Hence loyalty itself justifies us in opposing such men and such measures.

This view justifies all the military preparations now making in America. The stronger we are in these, the safer is the Empire. We mean to act only on the defensive. We ought by no means to strike the first blow, nor to provoke those who would. This is certainly a great point to carry against those who call us Rebels, and would make us so if they could. I know you will strictly adhere to the wise directions of our loyal Congress, according to which, while you encourage the doubtful and instruct the ignorant, you will punish the guilty, and thereby greatly oblige your humble friend,

ESSEX.

DR. FRANKLIN TO ARTHUR LEE.

Craven-Street, London, March 19, 1775.

DEAR SIR: I leave directions with Mrs. Stephenson to deliver you all the Massachusetts papers, when you please to call for them. I am sorry that the hurry of preparing for my voyage, and the many hinderances I have met with, prevented my meeting with you and Mr. Bollan, and conversing a little more on our affairs before my departure. I wish to both of you health and happiness, and shall be glad to hear from you by every opportunity.

I shall let you know how I find things in America. I may possibly return again in the autumn, but you will, if you think fit, continue henceforth the Agent for Massachusetts, an office which I cannot again undertake. I wish you all happiness, and am ever yours, affectionately,

B. FRANKLIN.

Charlestown, South-Carolina, March 20, 1775.

Last Tuesday, March 14th, Mr. Robert Smyth, Merchant, Master Smyth, his son, and Master Ward, son of John Ward, Esquire, returned here from London, in the Snow Proteus, Captain Papley, having touched at Falmouth and St. Christopher's by the way.

The said vessel having on board, (besides seven cases of merchandise, said to be Globes and Mathematical Instruments, consigned to Mr. Robert Wells, one hogshead, one puncheon, seven casks, thirteen cases, five crates, and one bottle, said to contain Drugs and Medicines, consigned to Mr. Edward Gunter,) two puncheons, one box, one tierce, forty bundles, nine cases, and seven hampers, said to contain Household Furniture, and two Horses, belonging to Mr. Smyth, all which he declared were brought out by him on the supposition that it was not meant by the Continental Association to prohibit the importation of such articles, and had been in use in his family in England. The Committee of Observation requested the sense of the General Committee respecting said Horses and Furniture. This matter accordingly came under the consideration of the General Committee on Wednesday evening, thirty-three members present; when, after a long debate whether the landing the said Horses and Furniture might not be construed a violation of the Association, there appeared to be an equal number for and against that opinion. And the question being put, whether Mr. Smyth's Horses, under the circumstances they had been represented, might be landed, it was carried in the affirmative by the Chairman's casting vote. It was at the same time resolved, without a division upon the question, that such part of Mr. Smyth's Furniture as, upon inspection by the Committee of Observation, should appear to them to have been in use in his family, (but no other,) might also be landed.

The next morning a great number of the inhabitants appeared extremely uneasy, lest, from the admission of the Horses, it should be suggested that there was an inclination in this Colony to depart from the Association; they feared that the conduct of the people, which had always been consistent, and who continued remarkably strict in their adherence to the Resolves and recommendations of the Congress, might, in this instance, be misrepresented abroad. Their zeal for the reputation of their Country threw them into great agitation; none meant the least reflection on the conduct of their Committee, but all wished that the Horses might not be landed; yet they were then at a loss what measure might be most proper to pursue. On Friday morning, however, a Petition was agreed on, and, after having two hundred and fifty-six names subscribed thereto, presented to the Chairman of the General Committee, in the following words:

"We, a number of the inhabitants of Charlestown, conceive that our liberties at this time depend on our unanimity and confidence in our Committee, who, we doubt not, in all things will act according to the best of their judgment for the publick good. But your Petitioners are informed that, by a vote carried by a very small majority, divers Horses and Furniture are permitted to be landed, which many persons, who have the liberty of America much at heart, think an infringement of the Association entered into by the General Congress. In order, therefore, to quiet the minds of the people, we pray that there may be a reconsideration of the said matter in a full Committee."

In consequence of this Petition, the said Committee was summoned to meet that evening; but no more than forty-two members then attending, it was thought advisable to adjourn till Monday morning, nine o'clock, in order that, if it should be thought necessary to reconsider the matter, it might be done at a very full meeting. Accordingly this morning a very full Committee met, not less than seventy members being present, when the above Petition was taken into consideration; the Resolves of Wednesday, respecting the Horses, rescinded, by a majority of one vote; and a Resolution entered into, that they should be sent back, with the Merchandise and Furniture (if any) that should appear not to have been in use. A general satisfaction was expressed upon this occasion, and the quiet of the community seems to be perfectly restored.*

GENTLEMEN: Although we are fully assured that the worthy gentlemen who lately represented us in General Congress were actuated by motives not to be reprehended, and in their proceedings against the designs of Parliament, have recommended to us a mode of opposition, in their

* In South-Carolina the Association was punctually complied with; no goods from England being allowed to be landed, nor were any other importations, contrary to the provisions of that instrument, permitted. About this time the Ship Charming Sally had arrived from Bristol, in England, with three thousand eight hundred and forty-four bushels of Salt, thirty-five chaldrons of Coal, and forty thousand five hundred Tiles; all of which were (25th February, 1775,) thrown into Hog-Island Creek, by the proprietors or their agents, rather than they would be at the charge and trouble of sending them back to England, in pursuance of the tenth article of the Association. So, also, a cargo of near three hundred Slaves was sent out of the Colony by the consignee, as being interdicted by the second article of the Association. In short, the publick regulations were duly and patriotically observed. A case, however, arose, which called forth the spirit of the people, and evinced their determination to support and enforce the Association, in all its various provisions.

A respectable family had been residing in England for some time, and were returning home; in which removal it was expected the household furniture and horses, which had been in use, would also be brought over. Some attempts had therefore been made to declare the importation of household furniture and horses, that had been in use, and might be imported from England, not to be within the meaning of the tenth article of the Association, as relating to goods or merchandise, but they had been unsuccessful. At length the horses and furniture arriving from thence, application was made on the 15th day of March for their being landed; and after a long contest in a thin General Committee of only thirty-three members, the motion was carried by the voice of the Chairman. This permission occasioned a ferment among the citizens, and they almost generally exclaimed "The Association was broken," and that the horses at least should not be landed. Some hundreds of the inhabitants assembled, and many active and influential members of the Committee endeavoured to satisfy them respecting the vote of permission which had passed, but in vain. On the contrary, they continued in their opposition, and supported it with a representation signed by a considerable number of persons, and which was presented to the Chairman of the General Committee, desiring the Committee would reconsider their late vote. In pursuance of this request the Committee was convened on the 17th day of March, 1775, and the room of meeting was crowded with people. Edward Rutledge, who had been one of the most active in the affair, now commenced censuring the people, in thus questioning the vote which had been given, but he was received with a clamour. The General Committee now began to think their authority insulted. Some members accordingly departed in anger, others became vociferous in rage, and for a few minutes all was in confusion. At length tranquillity prevailed; the consideration of the subject was postponed until a more full Committee could be procured; and the third day after was appointed for a final decision. To procure the presence of all the members of the Committee within reach, was now an object of importance, and great exertions for that purpose were made by both parties.

When the appointed time arrived the General Committee convened, and great was the press of people who attended; for the Town was in universal commotion, and application had even been privately made to the incorporated armed companies to cover the landing of the horses. Some individuals of the companies agreed to do so, but the majority of them refused; and the people declared if the horses were landed, they would put them to death. Under these unpleasant aspects the debates began, when Mr. Gadsden moved to reverse the former determination, relative to landing the horses. He urged the vote had been carried in a thin Committee; that it was contrary to the Association; that it would alarm the Northern Colonies in a most lively manner; and that our people were highly dissatisfied with it. And he contended this last of itself was a cogent reason to reverse such a determination. The Rev. Mr. Tennent next addressed the Committee to the same purpose; as did Mr. Rugely, who, in addition, urged that, as the horses paid a duty, they ought not to be landed. These gentlemen, in speaking, spoke immediately after each other. On the other side Edward Rutledge, Rawlins Lowndes, Thomas Bee, and Thomas Lynch, contended that the vote of the General Committee ought not to be reversed, but on the contrary ought to be maintained, otherwise the Committee would fall into contempt. That the opinions of the General Committee, now sitting, ought not to be influenced by the petition, as the spirit and not the letter of the Association ought to be attended to.

opinions, the most efficacious and salutary: Nevertheless, as we are entitled to determine upon the propriety of any measures whereby we are bound, and upon the success of which our political and civil interests depend; we must, after expressing all deference and respect for our honest countrymen, who have by their councils and advice stood forth in our cause, beg leave to dissent from them in such points as we think exceptionable. We desire, gentlemen, inviolably to adhere to the civil obligation binding us to our Sovereign, and by no means to assent to any measures that may ultimately affect the faith we owe to our King, or the duty we owe to his people. We desire you neither to censure or patronise the proceedings of those people who destroyed the property of the East-India Company, in the Port of Boston; this we deem a breach of civil order, and an invasion of private right. But as we know not what circumstances might induce, or cause impel the perpetration of that act, it is too delicate a case, too foreign for us to meddle with. The grand principles for which we contend are, the rights of legislation and taxation; of legislation respecting our internal police, and of taxation independent of every power on earth. These inestimable privileges we will maintain at the risk of our lives and fortunes; but we will justify no proceedings inconsistent with our duty to our King, repugnant to the rights of individuals,

That temporizing did not become honest men and statesmen, who ought to declare their opinions according to their consciences. That if we adhered to the letter of the Association, no arms or ammunition could be received from England; and when the letter of the law bore hard against an individual, Lord Chief Justice Hale allowed him to escape by any subterfuge; and that it was never the idea of Congress to exclude such articles.

William Henry Drayton was the only person who rose in reply. He contended that because an error had been committed, it was no reason it should be continued; that the people thought an error had been committed, and it was our duty to satisfy our constituents, as we were only servants of the publick. That such conduct was evinced by every day's practice in Parliament, therefore it could not be disgraceful to reverse the vote of the Committee, as on such occasions Parliament had often done so. That our present application to the King was for such a purpose; and if we defended ourselves on the principle of falling into contempt, might it not be as reasonable for the King to retort the same argument upon us? That it was always safer to follow the letter than to explore the spirit of a law. That in the case of the St. John's people of Georgia, we preferred the letter to the spirit of the Association, as was evident by our refusal and advice; then why not adhere to the letter of that instrument now? That temporizing ever was practised in publick affairs by the most honest men, witness Cato, of Utica, in Cesar's election to the Consulship; and by the best statesmen, witness Cicero's letter to Atticus, relating to a good pilot's shifting his helm, if he could not reach his port by a direct course; witness the conduct of the Long Parliament, and all history in general. That to discharge a statesman's conscience was to aim at the publick good, and not be pertinacious of his own opinion. That even if there had been an article in the Association, that we should not receive arms and ammunition from England, the publick necessity would cause it to be a dead letter, as self-preservation was the first obligation, and fas est, ab hoste doceri. He farther contended that Lord Hale's principle was just, when applied to an individual, in the event of whose case the publick could not be interested; but it never could be applicable to such a case as the present, where the convenience of the individual and the national interests of the publick were in direct opposition; and that he could not hold the understanding of the late General Congress in so trivial a light, as to entertain a thought of looking for the sense in direct opposition to the words of one of the principal articles of the Association.

He farther said the present case stood divided into two points—the spirit of the regulations, and the union of the people; and that the latter was infinitely of the greater consequence. That the letter of the Association was clearly in support of the motion, and in the present situation of affairs the spirit of that instrument was equally in favour of it. That union was the rock upon which the American political edifice was founded; and whatever hazards its existence, is to militate against the ground-work of the Association. Hence it was evident, landing the horses hazarded our union, for the people were in commotion against it. Upon all publick and general questions, the people ever are in the right; so said Lord Mansfield, in the House of Commons; and the people now think the late vote was wrong. Can it be prudent to oppose our constituents? In civil commotions the common people ever struck those blows which were of any effect. If you retract, there can be no just cause of fearing contempt; as it is not reasonable those should condemn you who have ever honoured you, and whose opinions would be in favour of your retraction. The Roman Senate were a wise body; they often yielded to the people; but nobody supposed their concessions brought them into contempt, and they continued illustrious during the existence of the Commonwealth. Let us imitate, on this occasion, so great, so successful an example, and endeavour, by the same means, to call forth the affections of our fellow-citizens, and to bind them to us by the same ties.

John Rutledge now rose and endeavoured to take off the force of the arguments which had been urged, but failing in his endeavours, he only added to the many instances he had previously given of his ability as a good speaker. The debate was then closed; and the question being put, was carried in the affirmative. It is worthy of remark, that this is the first instance of a point of importance and controversy being carried against those, by whose opinions the people had been long governed. And such was the powerful effect of habit, that this important question was carried only by a majority of one voice—thirty-five against thirty-four.—Drayton.

or the laws of society. We are greatly alarmed at the resolution to suspend our commercial intercourse with Great Britain. To stop her imports must be fatal to her; but to retain from her our exports, by which alone we can be enabled to discharge the heavy debt we owe her, by which the balance of trade might in a few years preponderate in our favour, by which alone we can be kept in peace, or armed for war, is a measure not to be justified by the laws of morality or the rights of policy. We, therefore, especially require of you to procure this resolution of the Congress to be rescinded. It is a duty you owe us, to obtain a proper representation of the Tobacco planters in this Colony, for we must deem a license to any of the inhabitants in America to export Wheat, Rice, or any other commodity a partial exemption in their favour, and a sacrifice of our interest to a general cause, which should only be affected in an equal degree with all other object of commercial intercourse. You need not interfere with the Quebeck Bill; a law respecting that conquered Country is without our policy, and beyond our ideas. We hear daily of personal insults, and invasions upon private property, from those little Democracies erected in every precinct through this extensive Continent. Reduce these men, we pray you, to the rank of citizens, and let them lord it over their fellows no longer!

Pursue, gentlemen, with prudence and fortitude the cause of your Country, and you may always depend upon the protection of your constituents.

The Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, was unanimously elected President of this Convention, and Mr. John Tazewell, Clerk thereof.

The President then recommended it to the Convention to proceed in the deliberation and discussion of the several important matters which should come before them, with that prudence, decency, and order which had distinguished their conduct on all former occasions; and laid before the Convention the proceedings of the Continental Congress, together with a letter from Benjamin Franklin, *William Bolla*n, and Arthur Lee, Esquires, advising that the Petition to His Majesty had been presented and graciously received.

Ordered, That the consideration of the Proceedings of the Continental Congress be postponed till to-morrow.

Resolved, That the Reverend Mr. Selden be desired to read prayers to the Convention, every morning, at nine o'clock.

Resolved, That this Convention will observe, in their debates, the same rules and orders as are established in the House of Burgesses in this Colony.

Adjourned till to-morrow 10 o'clock.

Tuesday, March 21, 1775.

A Letter from the Inhabitants of that part of Augusta County which lies to the westward of the Alleghany Mountain, desiring that John Nevill and John Harvie, Esquires, may be admitted into this Convention as their Delegates, being read; upon a motion, Resolved, That the said John Nevill and John Harvie be admitted as Delegates for the County of Augusta.

The Convention then took into their consideration the Proceedings of the Continental Congress, agreeably to the order of yesterday; but not having time to go through the same, postponed the further consideration thereof till to-morrow.

Adjourned till to-morrow 10 o'clock.

Wednesday, March 22, 1775.

The Convention then, pursuant to the order of yesterday, resumed the consideration of the Proceedings of the Continental Congress; and, after the maturest deliberation, came to the following Resolutions:

Resolved unanimously, That this Convention doth entirely and cordially approve the Proceedings and Resolutions of the American Continental Congress, and that they consider this whole Continent as under the highest obligations to that very respectable body, for the wisdom of their counsels, and their unremitting endeavours to maintain and preserve inviolate the just rights and liberties of His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects in America.

Resolved unanimously, That the warmest thanks of this Convention, and all the inhabitants of this Colony, whom they represent, are particularly due, and that this just tribute of applause be presented to the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, Richard Henry Lee, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Junior, Richard Bland, Benjamin Harrison, and Edmund Pendleton, Esquires, the worthy Delegates deputed by a former Convention to represent this Colony in General Congress, for their cheerful undertaking, and faithful discharge of the very important trust reposed in them.

Adjourned till to-morrow 10 o'clock.

Thursday, March 23, 1775.

A copy of the Petition and Memorial of the Assembly of Jamaica to the King's most Excellent Majesty, was laid before the Convention, and being read, and maturely considered:

Resolved, That the unfeigned thanks, and most grateful acknowledgments of this Convention be presented to that very respectable Assembly, for the exceeding generous and affectionate part they have so nobly taken in the unhappy contest between Great Britain and her Colonies, and for their truly patriotick endeavours, to fix the just claims of the Colonists upon the most permanent constitutional principles.

That the Assembly be assured, that it is the most ardent wish of this Colony (and we are persuaded of the whole Continent of North America) to see a speedy return of those halcyon days when we lived a free and happy people.

Resolved, That the President be desired to transmit these Resolutions to the Speaker of the Jamaica Assembly, by the earliest opportunity.

Resolved, That a well regulated Militia, composed of Gentlemen and Yeomen, is the natural strength, and only security of a free Government; that such a Militia in this Colony would for ever render it unnecessary for the Mother Country to keep among us, for the purpose of our defence, any Standing Army of mercenary forces, always subversive of the quiet, and dangerous to the liberties of the people, and would obviate the pretext of taxing us for their support.

That the establishment of such a Militia is at this time peculiarly necessary, by the state of our laws for the protection and defence of the Country, some of which have already expired, and others will shortly do so; and that the known remissness of Government, in calling us together in a legislative capacity, renders it too insecure, in this time of danger and distress, to rely, that opportunity will be given of renewing them in General Assembly, or making any provision to secure our inestimable rights and liberties from those farther violations with which they are threatened.

Resolved therefore, That this Colony be immediately put into a posture of defence; and that Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, Robert Carter Nicholas, Benjamin Harrison, Lemuel Riddick, George Washington, Adam Stephen, Andrew Lewis, William Christian, Edmund Pendleton, Thomas Jefferson, and Isaac Zane, Esquires, be a Committee to prepare a plan for the embodying, arming, and disciplining such a number of men as may be sufficient for that purpose.

Adjourned till to-morrow 10 o'clock.

Friday, March 24, 1775.

The Committee appointed for that purpose reported a plan for embodying, arming, and disciplining the Militia of this Colony; the consideration whereof is postponed till to-morrow.

Certain paragraphs in the publick Papers, said to be votes of the House of Representatives of New-York, being read,

The Convention, taking into their consideration that the said Province of New-York did, by their Delegates in General Congress, solemnly accede to the compact of Association there formed for the preservation of American rights, that a defection from such their compact would be a perfidy too atrocious to be charged on a sister Colony but on the most authentick information, and also doubting whether, from some radical defect in the Constitution of that Government, the sense of their House of Representatives, on questions of this nature, should be considered as the sense of the people in general, came to the following Resolutions:

Resolved, That it be an instruction to the Committee of Correspondence for this Colony, that they procure authentick information from the Committee of Correspondence in the Province of New-York, or otherwise, whether their House of Representatives, by any vote or votes whatsoever, have deserted the union with the other American Colonies, formed in General Congress, for the preservation of their just rights; whether the other Colonies are to consider such vote or votes as declaring truly the sense of the people of their Province in general, and as forming a rule for their future conduct; and, if they are not to be so considered, that then they inform us, by their names and other sufficient descriptions, of the individuals who may have concurred in such vote or votes; and that the said Committee lay such their information before the next Convention, or Assembly.

Resolved unanimously, That the Committees of the several Counties and Corporations in this Colony do exert themselves in procuring and continuing Contributions, for supplying the necessities and alleviating the distresses of our brave and worthy fellow-subjects of Boston, now suffering in the common cause of American freedom, in such manner, and so long as their occasions may require.

Resolved unanimously, In compliance with the recommendation of the late Continental Congress, that Delegates ought to be appointed to represent this Colony at the approaching Congress, to be held in the City of Philadelphia, the 10th day of May next.

Resolved, That the delegation from this Colony do consist of seven Members, and that they be chosen by ballot.

Adjourned till to-morrow, 10 o'clock.

Saturday, March 25, 1775.

Resolved, As the opinion of this Convention, that, on account of the unhappy disputes between Great Britain and the Colonies, and the unsettled state of this Country, the lawyers, suitors, and witnesses, ought not to attend the prosecution or defence of civil suits at the next General Court; and it is recommended to the several Courts of Justice not to proceed to the hearing or determination of suits on their dockets, except attachments; nor to give judgments but in the case of Sheriffs or other collectors for Money or Tobacco received by them; in other cases, where such judgment shall be voluntarily confessed, or upon such amicable proceedings as may become necessary for the settlement, division, or distribution of estates. And, during this suspension of the administration of justice, it is earnestly recommended to the people to observe a peaceable and orderly behaviour; to all creditors to be as indulgent to their debtors as may be, and to all debtors to pay as far as they are able; and where differences may arise which cannot be adjusted between the parties, that they refer the decision thereof to judicious neighbours, and abide by their determination.

The Convention then took into their consideration, according to the order of yesterday, the plan for embodying, arming, and disciplining the Militia; which, being read, and amended, was unanimously agreed to, as follows:

The Committee propose that it be strongly recommended to the Colony, diligently to put in execution the Militia Law passed in the year 1738, entitled "An Act for the better regulating of the Militia," which has become in force by the expiration of all subsequent Militia Laws.

The Committee are further of opinion that, as from the expiration of the above-mentioned latter laws, and various other causes, the legal and necessary disciplining the Militia has been much neglected, and a proper provision of Arms and Ammunition has not been made, to the evident danger of the community in case of invasion or insurrection, it be recommended to the inhabitants of the several Counties of this Colony that they form one or more volunteer Companies of Infantry and Troops of Horse, in each County, and to be in constant training and readiness to act on any emergency.

That it be recommended, particularly to the Counties of Brunswick, Dinwiddie, Chesterfield, Henrico, Hanover, Spotsylvania, King George, and Stafford, and to all Counties below these, that out of such, their volunteers, they form each of them one or more Troops of Horse; and to all the Counties above these, it is recommended that they pay a more particular attention to the forming a good Infantry.

That each Company of Infantry consist of sixty-eight rank and file, to be commanded by one Captain, two Lieutenants, one Ensign, four Sergeants, and four Corporals; and that they have a Drummer, and be furnished with a Drum and Colours; that every man be provided with a good Rifle, if to be had, or otherwise with a common Firelock, Bayonet, and Cartouch-box, and also with a Tomahawk, one pound of Gunpowder, and four pounds of Ball, at least, fitted to the bore of his Gun; that he be clothed in a Hunting Shirt, by way of uniform; and that all endeavour, as soon as possible, to become acquainted with the military exercise for Infantry, appointed to be used by His Majesty in the year 1764.

That each Troop of Horse consist of thirty, exclusive of Officers; that every Horseman be provided with a good Horse, Bridle, Saddle, with Pistols and Holsters, a Carbine, or other short Firelock, with a Bucket, a Cutting Sword, or Tomahawk, one pound of Gunpowder, and four pounds of Ball, at the least, and use the utmost diligence in training and accustoming his Horse to stand the discharge of fire-arms, and in making himself acquainted with the military exercise for Cavalry.

That, in order to make a further and more ample provision of Ammunition, it be recommended to the Committees of the several Counties, that they collect from their Constituents, in such manner as shall be most agreeable to them, so much money as will be sufficient to purchase half a pound of Gunpowder, one pound of Lead, necessary Flints and Cartridge Paper, for every tithable person in their County; that they immediately take effectual measures for the procuring such Gunpowder, Lead, Flints, and Cartridge Paper, and dispose thereof, when procured, in such place or places of safety as they may think best: and it is earnestly recommended to each individual to pay such proportion of the money necessary for these purposes as by the respective Committees shall be judged requisite.

That as it may happen that some Counties, from their situation, may not be apprized of the most certain and speedy method of procuring the articles before-mentioned, one General Committee should be appointed, whose business it should be to procure, for such Counties as may make application to them, such articles, and so much thereof as the moneys wherewith they shall furnish the said

Committee will purchase, after deducting the charges of transportation, and other necessary expenses.

Resolved, That Robert Carter Nicholas, Thomas Nelson, and Thomas Whiting, Esquires, or any two of them, be a Committee for the purpose afore-mentioned.

Resolved unanimously, That the most cordial thanks of the people of this Colony are a tribute justly due to our worthy Governour, Lord Dunmore, for his truly noble, wise, and spirited conduct on the late expedition against our Indian enemy; a conduct which at once evinces his Excellency's attention to the true interests of this Colony, and a zeal in the Executive Department which no dangers can divert or difficulties hinder from achieving the most important services to the people who have the happiness to live under his administration.

Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this Convention be presented to the gentlemen Officers and Soldiers who lately so nobly defended this Colony from the savage enemy on our frontiers, and by their bravery, not only procured success to our arms, but must have convinced the enemy it will be their true interest to preserve the peace on the terms stipulated by his Excellency Lord Dunmore; that we sincerely condole with the relations and acquaintance of those brave men who so nobly fell in battle on that mournful event, and assure all who have rendered such important services to this Colony that, so soon as opportunity permits, we will most cheerfully do every thing on our part to make them ample satisfaction.

Resolved, That Robert Carter Nicholas, Richard Bland, James Mercer, Edmund Pendleton, Archibald Cary, Charles Carter of Stafford, Benjamin Harrison, Richard Henry Lee, Josias Clapham, George Washington, Patrick Henry, James Holt, and Thomas Newton, Esquires, be a Committee to prepare a plan for the encouragement of Arts and Manufactures in this Colony.

The Convention then proceeded to the election of Delegates by ballot, to represent this Colony in General Congress, to be held at the City of Philadelphia, on the 10th day of May next; when the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Richard Henry Lee, Edmund Pendleton, Benjamin Harrison, and Richard Bland, Esquires, were chosen for that purpose.

Resolved, That Robert Carter Nicholas, Esquire, be desired to lay before the Convention, on Monday next, an account of the Money received from the several Counties and Corporations in this Colony, for the use of the Delegates sent to represent this Colony in General Congress.

Adjourned till Monday, 10 o'clock.

Monday, March 27, 1775.

The Committee appointed to prepare a plan for the encouragement of Arts and Manufactures, reported the following Resolutions; which, being severally read, were unanimously agreed to.

Whereas, it hath been judged necessary for the preservation of the just rights and liberties of America, firmly to associate against Importations; and as the freedom, happiness, and prosperity of a State greatly depend on providing within itself a supply of articles necessary for subsistence, clothing, and defence; and whereas, it is judged essential, at this critical juncture, to form a proper plan for employing the different inhabitants of this Colony, providing for the poor, and restraining vagrants and other disorderly persons, who are nuisances to every society; a regard for our Country, as well as common prudence, call upon us to encourage Agriculture, Manufactures, economy, and the utmost industry: Therefore, this Convention doth Resolve as follows:

Resolved unanimously, That it be earnestly recommended to the different Magistrates, Vestries and Churchwardens throughout this Colony, that they pay a proper attention, and strict regard to the several Acts of Assembly made for the restraint of vagrants and the better employing and maintaining the poor.

Resolved unanimously, That from and after the first day of May next, no person or persons whatever ought to use, in his or their families, unless in case of necessity, and on no account sell to butchers, or kill for market, any Sheep under four years old; and where there is a necessity for using any mutton in his, her, or their families, it is recommended to kill such only as are least profitable to be kept.

Resolved unanimously, That the setting up and promoting Woollen, Cotton, and Linen Manufactures ought to be encouraged in as many different branches as possible, especially Coating, Flannel, Blankets, Rugs, or Coverlids, Hosiery, and coarse Cloths, both broad and narrow.

Resolved unanimously, That all persons having proper lands for the purpose, ought to cultivate and raise a quantity of Flax, Hemp, and Cotton, sufficient not only for the use of his or her own family, but also to spare to others on moderate terms.

Resolved unanimously, As Salt is a daily and indispensable necessary of life, and the making of it amongst ourselves must be deemed a valuable acquisition, it is therefore recommended that the utmost endeavours be used to establish Salt Works, and that proper encouragement be given to Mr. James Tait, who hath made proposals, and offered a scheme to the publick, for so desirable a purpose.

Resolved unanimously, That Saltpetre and Sulphur, being articles of great and necessary use, the making, collecting, and refining them to the utmost extent, be recommended, the Convention being of opinion that it may be done to great advantage.

Resolved unanimously, That the making of Gunpowder be recommended.

Resolved unanimously, That the manufacturing of iron into Nails and Wire, and other necessary articles, be recommended.

Resolved unanimously, That the making of Steel ought to be largely encouraged, as there will be a great demand for this article.

Resolved unanimously, That the making of different kinds of Paper ought to be encouraged; and as the success of this branch depends on a supply of old Linen and Woollen Rags, the inhabitants of this Colony are desired, in their respective families, to preserve these articles.

Resolved unanimously, That whereas Wool Combs, Cotton and Wool Cards, Hemp and Flax Heckles, have been for some time made to advantage in some of the neighbouring Colonies, and are necessary for carrying on Linen and Woollen Manufactures, the establishing such Manufactures be recommended.

Resolved unanimously, That the erecting Fulling Mills and mills for breaking, swingling, and softening Hemp and Flax, and also that the making Grindstones be recommended.

Resolved unanimously, That the brewing Malt Liquors in this Colony would tend to render the consumption of foreign Liquors less necessary. It is therefore recommended that proper attention be given to the cultivation of Hops and Barley.

Resolved unanimously, That it be recommended to all the inhabitants of this Colony, that they use, as the Convention engageth to do, our own Manufactures, and those of other Colonies, in preference to all others.

Resolved unanimously, That for the more speedily and effectually carrying these Resolutions into execution, it be earnestly recommended that Societies be formed in different parts of this Colony; and it is the opinion of this Convention, that proper Premiums ought to be offered in the several Counties and Corporations, to such persons as shall excel in the several branches of Manufactures, and it is recommended to the several Committees of the different Counties and Corporations, to promote and encourage the same to the utmost of their power.

The Members of the Convention then, in order to encourage Mr. James Tait, who is about to erect Salt Works, undertook, for their respective Counties, to pay the sum of Ten Pounds to Robert Carter Nicholas, Esquire, for the use of the said James Tait, on or before the 10th day of May next.

His Excellency the Governour having, by Proclamation bearing date the 21st day of March, in the present year, declared that His Majesty hath given orders, that all vacant Lands within this Colony shall be put up in lots at publick sale, and that the highest bidder for such lots shall be the purchaser thereof, and shall hold the same subject to a reservation of one-half penny sterling per acre, by way of annual quitrent, and of all Mines of gold, silver, and precious stones, which terms are an innovation on the established usage of granting Lands within this Colony:

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to inquire whether His Majesty may, of right, advance the terms of granting Lands in this Colony, and make report thereof to the next General Assembly or Convention; and that, in the mean time, it be recommended to all persons whatever to forbear purchasing or accepting grants of Lands on the conditions before-mentioned; and that Patrick Henry, Richard Bland, Thomas Jefferson, Robert Carter Nicholas, and Edmund Pendleton, Esquires, be appointed of the said Committee.

Resolved, That the Delegates from the several Counties in this Colony, as also from the City of Williamsburgh, and Borough of Norfolk, do, without delay, apply to their respective Counties and Corporations for Fifteen Pounds, current money, and transmit the same, so soon as collected, to Robert Carter Nicholas, Esquire, for the use of the Deputies sent from this Colony to the General Congress.

On a motion made,

Resolved, That Thomas Jefferson, Esquire, be appointed a Deputy to represent this Colony in General Congress, in the room of the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, in case of the non-attendance of the said Peyton Randolph, Esquire.

Resolved, That the said Deputies, or any four of them, be a sufficient number to represent this Colony in General Congress.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention be presented to the Rev. Mr. Selden, for performing Divine Service, and for his seasonable and excellent Sermon yesterday.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention are justly due to the Town of Richmond and the neighbourhood, for their polite reception and entertainment of the Delegates.

Mr. Alexander Purdie having offered to print the proceedings of this Convention, for the use of the Members thereof, it is ordered, that the Clerk deliver him a copy of the said proceedings for that purpose.

Resolved, That this Convention doth consider the delegation of its members as now at an end; and that it be recommended to the People of this Colony to choose Delegates to represent them in Convention for one year, as soon as they conveniently can.

PEYTON RANDOLPH, President.

JOHN TAZEVELL, Clerk of the Convention.

FIELD OFFICERS, FOR NEW-CASTLE COUNTY, DELAWARE.

On Monday, the 20th of March, agreeable to appointment, the Captains and Subaltern Officers of New-Castle County (Delaware) met at Christiana Bridge to choose commanders, when the following gentlemen were chosen, viz: For the Upper Division, James McKinley, Esquire, Colonel; James Latimer, Esq., Lieutenant Colonel; Thomas Duff, Esq., Major. For the Lower Division: Thomas Cooch, Esq., Colonel; Samuel Patterson, Lieutenant Colonel; Gunning Bedford, Major.

CHESTER-COUNTY (PENNSYLVANIA) COMMITTEE.

March 20, 1775.

Pursuant to adjournment, and publick notice given, the Committee of Chester County met at the house of Richard Cheyney, in East-Calm.

On motion, Ordered, That Mr. Hockley, Mr. Johnston, Mr. Gronow, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Frazer, Mr. Moore, and Mr. Taylor, be, and they are hereby appointed a Committee to essay a draught of a Petition to present to the General Assembly of this Province, with regard to the manumission of Slaves; especially relating to the freedom of infants hereafter born of black women within this Colony; and do make report of the same to this Committee at their next meeting.

On motion, Ordered, That each member in this Committee will use his utmost diligence in collecting the several sums of money subscribed for the use of Boston, and pay the same into the hands of Anthony Wayne, Esq., Treasurer, at the next meeting of this Committee.

The Committee then adjourned to meet at the house of Mr. David Coupland, in the Borough of Chester, on Wednesday, the 31st of May next.

By order of the Committee:

FRANCIS JOHNSTON, Secretary.

LETTER FROM BOSTON TO NEWPORT, RHODE-ISLAND,
DATED MARCH 20, 1775.

We are constantly agitated by hearing complaints from different persons, of the more than savage barbarity of the Soldiers, encouraged, and often joined and headed by the Officers. They are now become so insolent; that it is hardly safe to walk the streets at noon-day, and there seems to be no check or control; but they are rather countenanced and encouraged by their superiours in their lawless outrage. They appear to me to be a banditti of licensed free-booters, just let loose upon us, for the innocent and laudable purposes of robberies, rapes, and murders; nor can I at present see any prospect of avoiding these calamities, but by a general evacuation of the Town. The late news seems to increase their insolence, which was barely tolerable before. The reason is obvious: the common soldiers and their wives have frequently and loudly complained of the fallacy and injustice of the officers, who promised them fine houses, rich plunder, and a thousand other gratifications, which they hoped to be in possession of long before this, the expectation of which has, in my opinion, prevented the desertion of hundreds; but they grow more and more impatient, so that I fear violence will sooner or later take place, let what will be the determinations in England, unless some method can be adopted to prevent or restrain them, tantamount to leaving the Town, as the people in general do not seem inclined to go out.

On Thursday last a friend of mine was beat stone blind by some soldiers on the Neck, in presence of their commanding officer, who seemed to be highly gratified, and on Saturday I saw three men (two white and one black) who had just before been most barbarously cut and mangled by a gang of those military highwaymen, who have for a long time infested our out-passage to and from the Town. Their method is for a large party, some with swords or cutlasses, others with guns and bayonets fixed, to surround an unarmed man, and order him to deliver, after which they mangle the poor wretch till their malice is sufficiently glutted, then suffer him, if able, to crawl away.

LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN THE SERVICE OF AN OFFICER OF STATE AT PARIS, TO HIS FRIEND IN NEWPORT, RHODE-ISLAND.

MY DEAR CHEVALIER: You are nearly of my opinion respecting the affairs between Great Britain and her Colonies. Believe me, some years have elapsed since the scheme was projected for the alteration of Government. As soon as the project was resolved upon the Cabinet of Great Britain used all possible means to procure peace with her neighbouring Nations. The fall of the Duke de Ch—l was a mark of the highest complaisance to her. It is well known that this Minister (though in disgrace) directed all, or at least the greater part of the business of our Cabinet. Britain was well enough assured that they could keep the House of Bourbon still; but Spain had given such instructions to her Ambassador as would have caused a rupture, had they been observed. But Prince Masserano was recalled.

The death of Louis the Fifteenth, set the spirits of our people in agitation, the old Parliament made remonstrances, and our clergy murmurs, on account of the new regulations against them. It was then Lord North caused a report to circulate at London, of his being ill, that he might come to Paris incog. in order to ascertain himself of the disposition of our Court. He remained there but two days, which time he spent in conference with the Ministry, who, like another Danaë, were tempered by the British gold scattered by Jupiter North. His policy was seducing, and retained us in the same state of inaction we now continue, that he might be at liberty to set your part of the world in confusion.

Assure yourself that Great Britain is not much more quiet than you are. It is almost the general opinion here that a revolt will take place in England, if the trade be interrupted between that Kingdom and the Colonies.

The Royal family of England is too numerous for the taxes of the Nation to maintain them alone. Besides the great debt under which they now labour, they expend much for the support of Hanover; this accounts why King George thinks himself obliged to deal with America as Frederick does with his neighbours.

Orders are given to Isle of Rhé for the transport of four thousand men, in two Frigates and three Ships-of-the-Line, to our Colonies: I cannot tell you their destination.

We are busy to complete all the Regiments that are deficient. The King has caused a general state of his Marine Force to be laid before him; and, to conclude, I assure you that a rupture between Spain and England is at no great distance.

By His Excellency the Right Honourable JOHN EARL OF DUNMORE, His Majesty's Lieutenant and Governour-General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice-Admiral of the same:

A PROCLAMATION.

VIRGINIA to wit:

Whereas His Majesty did, at the request of the Assembly of this Colony permit the Western Boundary thereof to be extended as the same has been run and ascertained by Colonel Donelson, and other surveyors deputed for the purpose; and whereas, His Majesty hath for the greater convenience of, and the preventing of litigation and disputes among such persons as shall be inclined to settle upon any of his vacant Lands, ordered that all that tract of Land included within the aforesaid boundary, and all other vacant Lands within this Colony be surveyed in districts, and laid out in lots of from one hundred to one thousand acres, and as fast as the said surveys shall be completed by the surveyors duly authorized, and the surveys thereof returned, that the Lands so surveyed and allotted be put up to publick sale, at such time and place as shall be appointed by publick notice; and that the highest bidder for such lots and parcels of Land at such sales, be the purchaser thereof, and be entitled to a grant in fee simple of the Land so purchased as aforesaid, by letters patent under the great seal of the Colony, subject to no conditions or reservations whatever, other than the payment of the annual quitrent of one half-penny sterling per acre; and also of all mines of gold, silver, and precious stones. And whereas advice has been received, that one Richard Henderson, and other disorderly persons, his associates, under pretence of a purchase made from the Indians, contrary to the aforesaid orders and regulations of His Majesty, do set up a claim to the Lands of the Crown within the limits of this Colony; I have thought fit, therefore, to issue this my Proclamation, strictly charging all Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, and other officers, civil and military, to use their utmost endeavours to prevent the unwarrantable and illegal designs of the said Henderson, and his abettors; and if the said Henderson, or others concerned with him, shall take possession of, or occupy any Lands within the limits of His Majesty's Government of Virginia, merely under any purchase, or pretended purchase made from Indians, without any other title; that he or they be required in His Majesty's name forthwith to depart, and relinquish the possession so unjustly obtained; and in case of refusal, and of violent detaining such possession, that he or they be immediately fined and imprisoned in the manner the laws in such cases direct.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the Colony, this 21st day of March, in the fifteenth year of His Majesty's reign.

DUNMORE.

God save the King.

Committee Chamber, Norfolk, Va., March 21, 1775.

TO THE PUBLICK.

We, the Committee for Norfolk Borough, find ourselves under the disagreeable necessity of publishing to the world the conduct of Captain Sampson, Master of the Snow Elizabeth, from Bristol. It is not in one instance alone that he has discovered his opposition to the measures adopted for the security of our rights and liberties, nor can he, on any account, justify his repeated prevarications. It is not our business to take notice of his passionate and disrespectful behaviour towards this Committee, nor his indiscreet conduct without doors. We shall confine ourselves to the relation of the following facts: On the 13th day of February he informed the Committee of his arrival with a quantity of Salt, that his Snow wanted repairs, and as he should find it necessary to heave her down here, he demanded the consent of this Committee to store the Salt till the Snow could be refitted. The Committee, after careful inquiries, (some of his answers to which we find to be false,) did, at length, consent, upon condition the Salt should be taken on board again as soon as possible, which Captain Sampson promised to do. Thus matters rested till the 8th of March, when this Committee were surprised with information, that he had given bond at the Custom-House, and was taking in Lumber without the Salt. He was sent for, and after discovering a great degree of heat, did, at length, give his repeated promise to take the Salt on board as soon as possible, and that he would begin the next day. More than a week, however, has elapsed, and he has as yet complied with no part of his promise, nor taken any of the Salt on board again, but has actually applied for protection to the Ship-of-War now in this harbour, under whose stern the Snow lies, where it appears he intends to load with Grain. We, the Committee, do therefore declare Captain Sampson a violator of the Association, and an enemy to American liberty; and we trust the Merchants, Planters, and Skippers of Vessels in this Colony, will make him feel their righteous indignation, by breaking off all kinds of dealings with him, and that they will, in no wise, be aiding or assisting in procuring a cargo for a man, who, from the whole tenour of his late conduct, has openly set the good people of this Country at defiance, and contributed his utmost endeavours to destroy their most essential interests.

TALBOT COUNTY (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

March 21, 1775.

A meeting of the Committee of Observation for Talbot County being requested by Mr. Charles Crookshanks, on Tuesday, the 21st of March, 1775, the following gentlemen did accordingly meet at Mr. Brascup's Tavern, viz: James Lloyd Chamberlaine, Esq., Chairman, James Hindman, Dr. Moses Allen, John Stevens, John Cochran, Nathaniel Cooper, John Gibson, Jacob Hindman, Francis Baker, William Hindman, Robert Lloyd Nicols, Samuel Thomas, Thomas Ray, Thomas Martin, Jun., Samuel Sharp, Dr. John Troup.

Mr. Crookshanks thereupon made the following Report: That the Ship Baltimore, James Longmuir, consigned to himself by Messrs. Spier, French & Co., had arrived the evening before, with two bales of Goods on board, which, as would appear by letters he was ready to produce from the said gentlemen, had been shipped at Glasgow, November 10th, 1774, and were part of a cargo intended to have been sent by a former Ship; that the said Longmuir came by the way of Rotterdam, and had been there detained by the ice, which had protracted his voyage. The Committee, upon examination, being satisfied of the truth of the above report, were of opinion that no imputation ought to be thrown upon the said Company, of an intention to contravene the Non-Importation Agreement entered into by the Colonies, as it was not possible for them to receive an account of the proceedings of the Continental Congress, at the time of shipping the said Goods; and as Mr. Crookshanks voluntarily proposed, and solemnly plighted his honour, that the said bales should not be landed, but sent back in the same bottom, the Committee were much pleased with his readiness to comply with the Resolution of the Continental Congress, accepted the proposal, and resolved unanimously that the said Goods be sent back to Glasgow in the same Ship without landing.

CHARLES TROUPE, Clerk pro tem.

ALBANY (NEW-YORK) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Correspondence for the City and County of Albany, held the 21st day of March, 1775:

Resolved unanimously, That Abraham Yates, Jun., Esq., Walter Livingston, Esq., Colonel Schuyler, Colonel Ten Broeck, and Colonel Peter R. Livingston, are appointed to represent the City and County of Albany at the intended Provincial Congress to be held at the City of New-York, the 20th day of April next, for the purpose of appointing Delegates to represent this Colony at the next Continental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia the 10th day of May next. By order of the Committee:

JOHN N. BLEECKER, Clerk.

RENSSELAERWYCK MANOR (NEW-YORK) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Inspection for the Manor of Rensselaerwyck, held the 21st of March, 1775, it was unanimously resolved, that the thanks of this Committee be given to Colonel Abraham Ten Broeck, Colonel Philip Schuyler, and Colonel Peter Livingston, for their faithful services in the cause of liberty, in the last session of the General Assembly of this Colony.

By order of the Committee:

ABRAHAM J. LANSING, Chairman.

Poughkeepsie, Dutchess County, N. Y., March 23, 1775.

On the 21st of March, a few friends to liberty met at the house of Mr. John Bailey, about two or three miles from Poughkeepsie; and erected a pole on his land, with a flag on it, bearing on one side the King, and on the other the Congress and Liberty; but the Sheriff of Dutchess County the next day, attended by a Judge of the Inferiour Court, two of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and a Constable, with some others, friends to constitutional liberty and good order, cut the same down, as a publick nuisance.

FAIRFIELD (CONNECTICUT) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Inspection for the Town of Fairfield, in Connecticut, held in Fairfield, on the 21st day of this instant March:

Daniel Wheeler, Obadiah Platt, and Ebenezer Hall, all of said Fairfield, being duly notified to appear before said Committee, and answer to the complaints made against them, did not appear.

Whereupon the Committee proceeded to examine the evidences, and upon a full and impartial hearing of them, they were unanimously of opinion that the said Wheeler, Platt, and Hall, were guilty of a breach of the Association of the Continental Congress; and that, pursuant to the directions of the County Congress, all connections, commerce, and dealings, ought to be withdrawn from them by every friend to his Country.

And ordered, That the Clerk of this Committee make this judgment publick, that they may be dealt with accordingly.

THADDEUS BURR, Clerk to the Committee.

SAMUEL ADAMS TO R. H. LEE.

Boston, March 21, 1775.

SIR: I am much obliged to you for your favour of 4th of February last, by Captain Layton. From the beginning of this great contest with the Mother Country, I have seen Virginia distinguishing herself in the support of American liberty; and in the liberal donations received from all parts of that Colony for the sufferers in this Town, we have had abundant testimonies of their unanimity and zeal for that all-important cause. I have the pleasure to assure you, that the people of this Colony, (saving a few detestable men, most of whom are in this Town,) are also firm and united. General Gage is still here, with eleven Regiments, besides several detachments; yet, it is generally supposed, that there are not more than two thousand five hundred effective men in all. They have been very sickly through the winter past; many have died, and many others have deserted. I have seen a joint list, and I believe it to be a true one, of the Royal Irish, and the detachments from the Fifty-Sixth, in which the whole number was one hundred and sixty-seven, and only one hundred and two of them effective. But though the number of the Troops is diminished, the insolence of the Officers (at least some of them) is increased. In private rencontres, I have not heard of a single instance of their coming off other than second best. I will give you several instances of their behaviour in publick. On the 6th instant there was an adjournment of one of our Town-meetings, when an oration was delivered in commemoration of the massacre on the 5th of March, 1770. I had long expected that they would take that occasion to beat up a breeze, and, therefore, (seeing many of the Officers present before the orator came in,) as moderator of the meeting, I took care to have them treated with civility, inviting them into convenient seats, &c., that they might have no pretence to behave ill; for it is a good maxim, in politicks as well as in war, to put and keep the enemy in the wrong. They behaved tolerably well until the oration was finished, when, upon a motion made to appoint another orator, as usual, they began to hiss, which irritated the assembly to the greatest degree, and confusion ensued; they, however, did not gain their end, which was apparently to break up the meeting, for order was soon restored, and we proceeded regularly and finished the business. I am persuaded, that were it not for the danger of precipitating a crisis, not a man of them would have been spared. It was provoking enough to the whole corps, that while there were so many Troops stationed here, with the design of suppressing Town-meetings, there should yet be one for the purpose of delivering an oration to commemorate a massacre perpetrated by Soldiers, and to show the danger of Standing Armies; they, therefore, it seems, a few days after, vented their passion on a poor simple countryman, the state of whose case is drawn up by himself, and sworn to before a Magistrate, as you will see by the enclosed; thus you see, that the practice of tarring and feathering, which has so often been exclaimed against by the Tories, and even in the British House of Commons, as inhuman and barbarous, has, at length, been revived by some of the polite Officers of the British Army, stationed in this place professedly to prevent riots. Some gentlemen of the Town waited on the General on this occasion; he appeared to be angry at it, and declared that he knew nothing about any such design; he said that he had, indeed, heard an irregular beat of the drum, (for they passed by his house,) but thought they were drumming a bad woman through the streets! This, to be sure, would not have been a riot. The Selectmen of Billerica, an inland Town, about thirty miles distant, to which the abused man belonged, have made a remonstrance to the General, a copy of which is enclosed. The General promised them that he would inquire into the matter, but we hear nothing more about it. Some say that he has lost the command over his Officers, and is afraid of displeasing them; how this may be I cannot say.

SAMUEL ADAMS.

COLONEL E. DOOLITTLE TO JOHN HANCOCK.

Petersham, March 21, 1775.

SIR: Please to communicate the following to your body. Having received a requisition from the honourable Congress, directing of me to make a return of my Regiment, their numbers and equipments for war, I have accordingly applied myself to the business, but have not as yet obtained a return of but two or three companies, and if I can obtain a full account before the Congress rises, shall forward it immediately. But we are in a most lamentable situation, for want of a sanction of Government on our establishments, our Tory enemies using all their secret machinations to divide us and break us to pieces. Add to this the difficulties that arise by ambitious men, who are endeavouring to break our companies to pieces, in order to get promotion; for as there is no establishment but what arises in the breasts of individuals, we are continually breaking to pieces, and a number of companies in my Regiment are now in such circumstances; and I fear if we are not soon called to action, we shall be like a rope of sand, and have no more strength. If it may be received with candour, I should be exceedingly glad if our Continental Committee might be instructed to lay the difficulties we labour under for want of a Civil Constitution before that body, and that they endeavour to obtain their voice in justification of this Province in establishing one. God give you all grace and wisdom to direct you in the important affairs of American liberty. I remain your and the publick's well wisher and humble servant,

EPHRAIM DOOLITTLE.

To the Honourable John Hancock, President of the Honourable Provincial Congress of Massachusetts.

Frankfort, March, 1775.

To the Right Honourable JOHN WILKES, Lord Mayor of the City of LONDON, at the Mansion House.

MY LORD: I am not informed of any person who has business with some merchants in Maryland or Pennsylvania. I read the London Chronicle, but I do not find out any direction; therefore I think it very excusable for a stranger to take the liberty to address these lines to you, as the Chief Magistrate of all the British Dominions, especially as it gives me at the same time the opportunity to pay you my respects, and to tell you that I admired and defended in our Germany, (where slavery prevails,) always your spirit and intrepidity towards bad Ministers, being a great lover and well wisher of true English liberty. I live in a great City of Germany. Some weeks ago a printer came to me, and showed me two Bank-notes,* (not knowing the language nor the contents,) which two foreigners brought to him, to reprint them exactly; I found the one to be a Bank-note of Annapolis, in Maryland, and the other of Pennsylvania, of Fifty and of Five Shillings, both of 1774. I was surprised, and told the printer he should not at all meddle with the rascals who brought him these papers. Afterwards I heard that they have been at two engravers, to get two others counterfeited, and they refused likewise. But I don't doubt they will find out in another Town some ignorant or hungry engraver or printer. I beg your Lordship to communicate these contents of my letter to the publick, in the London Chronicle, to prevent any mischief and imposition on the honest Americans, vexed not only by taxes, but also by bad Bank-notes. It will give me great pleasure to read in this paper my notice to frustrate the designs of these impostors.

I have the honour to be, with the greatest respect, my Lord, your most humble and obedient servant,

BRITANNOPHILUS.

The above is a true copy of an original letter, delivered to me by the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor of London.

ARTHUR LEE.

London, March 22, 1775.

PRIVATE NEGOTIATIONS OF DR. FRANKLIN IN LONDON, RELATED IN A LETTER TO HIS SON, DATED AT SEA, MARCH 22, 1775.

On board the Pennsylvania Packet, Captain Osborne, bound to Philadelphia, March 22, 1775.

DEAR SON: Having now a little leisure for writing, I will endeavour, as I promised you, to recollect what particulars I can of the negotiations I have lately been concerned in, with regard to the misunderstandings between Great Britain and America.

During the recess of the last Parliament, which had passed the severe Acts against the Province of Massachusetts Bay, the minority having been sensible of their weakness as an effect of their want of union among themselves, began to think seriously of a coalition. For they saw in the violence of these American measures, if persisted in, a hazard of dismembering, weakening, and perhaps ruining the British Empire. This inclined some of them to propose such an union with each other, as might be more respectable in the ensuing session, have more weight in opposition, and be a body out of which a new Ministry might easily be formed, should the ill success of the late measures, and the firmness of the Colonies in resisting them, make a change appear necessary to the King.

I took some pains to promote this disposition, in conversation with several of the principal among the minority of both Houses, whom I besought and conjured most earnestly not to suffer, by their little misunderstandings, so glorious a fabrick as the present British Empire to be demolished by these blunderers; and for their encouragement assured them, as far as my opinions could give any assurance, of the firmness and unanimity of America, the continuance of which was what they had frequent doubts of, and appeared extremely apprehensive and anxious concerning it.

From the time of the affront given me at the Council Board in January, 1774, I had never attended the levee of any Minister. I made no justification of myself from the charges brought against me; I made no return of the injury by abusing my adversaries, but held a cool sullen silence, reserving myself to some future opportunity; for which conduct I had several reasons, not necessary here to specify. Now and then I heard it said, that the reasonable part of the Administration was ashamed of the treatment they had given me. I suspected that some who told me this, did it to draw from me my sentiments concerning it, and perhaps my purposes; but I said little or nothing upon the subject. In the mean time, their measures with regard to New-England failing of the success that had been confidently expected, and finding themselves more and more embarrassed, they began (as it seems) to think of making use of me, if they could, to assist in disengaging them. But it was too humiliating to think of applying to me openly and directly, and therefore it was contrived to obtain what they could of my sentiments through others.

The accounts from America, during the recess, all manifested that the measures of Administration had neither divided nor intimidated the people there; that, on the contrary, they were more and more united and determined, and that a Non-Importation Agreement was likely to take place. The Ministry thence apprehending that this, by distressing the trading and manufacturing Towns, might influence votes against the Court in the elections for a new Parliament, (which were in course to come on the succeeding year,) suddenly and unexpectedly dissolved the old one, and ordered the choice of a new one within the shortest time admitted by law, before the inconveniences of that agreement could begin to be felt, or produce any such effect.

When I came to England in 1757, you may remember I made several attempts to be introduced to Lord Chatham, (at that time first Minister,) on account of my Pennsylvania business, but without success. He was then too great a man, or too much occupied in affairs of greater moment. I was therefore obliged to content myself with a kind of non-apparent and unacknowledged communication through Mr. Potter and Mr. Wood, his Secretaries, who seemed to cultivate an acquaintance with me by their civilities, and drew from me what information I could give relative to the American war, with my sentiments occasionally on measures that were proposed or advised by others, which gave me the opportunity of recommending and enforcing the utility of conquering Canada. I afterwards considered Mr. Pitt as an inaccessible; I admired him at a distance, and made no more attempts for a nearer acquaintance. I had only once or twice the satisfaction of hearing, through Lord Shelburne, and I think Lord Stanhope, that he did me the honour of mentioning me sometimes as a person of respectable character.

But towards the end of August last, returning from Brighthelmston, I called to visit my friend, Mr. Sargent, at his seat, Halsted, in Kent, agreeably to a former engagement. He let me know that he had promised to conduct me to Lord Stanhope's, at Chevening, who expected I would call on him when I came into that neighbourhood. We accordingly waited on Lord Stanhope that evening, who told me that Lord Chatham desired to see me, and that Mr. Sargent's house, where I was to lodge, being in the way, he would call for me there the next morning, and carry me to Hayes. This was done accordingly. That truly great man received me with abundance of civility, inquired particularly into the situation of affairs in America, spoke feelingly of the severity of the late laws against the Massachusetts, gave me some account of his speech in opposing them, and expressed great regard and esteem for the people of that Country, who he hoped would continue firm and united in defending, by all peaceable and legal means, their constitutional rights. I assured him that I made no doubt they would do so; which he said he was pleased to hear from me, as he was sensible I must be well acquainted with them. I then took occasion to remark to him, that in former cases great Empires had crumbled first at their extremities, from this cause; that Countries remote from the seat and eye of Government, which therefore could not well understand their affairs, for want of full and true information, had never been well governed, but had been oppressed by bad Governours, on presumption that complaint was difficult to be made and supported against them at such a distance; hence such Governours had been encouraged to go on, till their oppressions became intolerable. But that this Empire had happily found, and long been in the practice of a method, whereby every Province was well governed, being trusted in a great measure with the government of itself; that hence had risen such satisfaction in the subjects, and such encouragement to new settlements, that had it not been for the late wrong politics, (which would have Parliament to be omnipotent, though it ought not to be, unless it could at the same time be omniscient,) we might have gone on extending our western Empire, adding Province to Province, as far as the South Sea. That I lamented the ruin which seemed impending over so fine a plan, so well adapted to make all the subjects of the greatest Empire happy; and I hoped that if his Lordship, with the other great and wise men of the British Nation, would unite and exert themselves, it might yet be rescued out of the mangling hands of the present set of blundering Ministers; and that the union and harmony between Britain and her Colonies, so necessary to the welfare of both, might be restored. He replied, with great politeness, that my idea of extending our Empire in that manner was a sound one, worthy of a great, benevolent, and comprehensive mind; he wished with me for a good understanding among the different parts of the Opposition here, as a means of restoring the ancient harmony of the two Countries, which he most earnestly desired; but he spoke of the coalition of our domestick parties as attended with difficulty, and rather to be desired than expected. He mentioned an opinion prevailing here, that America aimed at setting up for itself as an independent State, or at least to get rid of the Navigation Acts. I assured him that, having more than once travelled almost from one end of the Continent to the other, and kept a great variety of company, eating, drinking, and conversing with them freely, I never had heard in any conversation from any person, drunk or sober, the least expression of a wish for a separation, or a hint that such a thing would be advantageous to America; and as to the Navigation Act, the main material part of it, that of carrying on trade in British or Plantation bottoms, excluding foreign Ships from our Ports, and navigating with three quarters British seaman, was as acceptable to us as it could be to Britain. That we were even not against regulations of the general Commerce by Parliament, provided such regulations were bona fide for the benefit of the whole Empire, not for the small advantage of one part to the great injury of another, such as the obliging our Ships to call in England with our wine and fruit from Portugal or Spain; the restraints on our Manufactures, in the woollen and hat-making branches, the prohibiting of slitting-mills, steel-works, &c. He allowed that some amendment might be made in those Acts; but said those relating to the slitting-mills, trip-hammers, and steel-works, were agreed to by our Agents in a compromise on the opposition made here to abating the duty.

In fine, he expressed much satisfaction in my having called upon him, and particularly in the assurances I had given him that America did not aim at independence, adding that he should be glad to see me again as often as might be. I said I should not fail to avail myself of the permission he was pleased to give me, of waiting upon his Lordship occasionally, being very sensible of the honour, and of the great advantages and improvement I should reap from his instructive conversation, which indeed was not a mere compliment.

The new Parliament was to meet the 29th of November, 1774. About the beginning of that month, being at the Royal Society, Mr. Raper, one of our members, told me there was a certain lady who had a desire of playing with me at chess, fancying she could beat me, and had requested him to bring me to her; it was, he said, a lady with whose acquaintance he was sure I should be pleased, a sister of Lord Howe's, and he hoped I would not refuse the challenge. I said I had been long out of practice, but would wait upon the lady when he and she should think fit. He told me where her house was, and would have me call soon, and without further introduction, which I undertook to do; but thinking it a little awkward, I postponed it; and on the 30th, meeting him again at the feast of the Society election, being the day after the Parliament met, he put me in mind of my promise, and that I had not kept it, and would have me name a day, when, he said, he would call for me and conduct me. I named the Friday following. He called accordingly; I went with him, played a few games with the lady, whom I found of very sensible conversation and pleasing behaviour, which induced me to agree most readily to an appointment for another meeting a few days afterwards, though I had not the least apprehension that any political business could have any connexion with this new acquaintance.

On the Thursday preceding this chess party Mr. David Barclay called on me, to have some discourse concerning the meeting of merchants to petition Parliament. When that was over, he spoke of the dangerous situation of American affairs, the hazard that a civil war might be brought on by the present measures, and the great merit that person would have who could contrive some means of preventing so terrible a calamity, and bring about a reconciliation. He was then pleased to add, that he was persuaded, from my knowledge of both Countries, my character and influence in one of them, and my abilities in business, no man had it so much in his power as myself. I naturally answered, that I should be very happy if I could in any degree be instrumental in so good a work, but that I saw no prospect of it; for though I was sure the Americans were always willing and ready to agree, upon any equitable terms, yet I thought an accommodation impracticable, unless both sides wished it; and by what I could judge from the proceedings of the Ministry, I did not believe they had the least disposition towards it; that they rather wished to provoke the North American people into an open rebellion, which might justify a military execution, and thereby gratify a grounded malice which I conceived to exist here against the Whigs and dissenters of that Country. Mr. Barclay apprehended I judged too hardly of the Ministers; he was persuaded they were not all of that temper, and he fancied they would be very glad to get out of their present embarrassment on any terms, only saving the honour and dignity of Government. He wished, therefore, that I would think of the matter, and he would call again, and converse with me further upon it. I said I would do so, as he requested it, but I had no opinion of its answering any purpose. We parted upon this. But two days after I received a letter from him, enclosed in a note from Dr. Fothergill, both which follow.

Youngsbury, near Ware, 3d 12 mo. 1774.

ESTEEMED FRIEND: After we parted on Thursday last, I accidentally met our mutual friend Doctor Fothergill, in my way home, and intimated to him the subject of our discourse; in consequence of which, I received from him an invitation to a further conference on this momentous affair, and I intend to be in Town to-morrow accordingly, to meet at his house between four and five o'clock; and we unite in the request of thy company. We are neither of us insensible, that the affair is of that magnitude as should almost deter private persons from meddling with it; at the same time we are respectively such well-wishers to the cause, that nothing in our power ought to be left undone, though the utmost of our efforts may be unavailable. I am thy respectful friend,

DAVID BARCLAY.

Doctor Franklin, Craven Street.

DOCTOR FOTHERGILL presents his respects to Doctor Franklin, and hopes for the favour of his company in Harper Street to-morrow evening, to meet their mutual friend David Barclay, to confer on American affairs. As near five o'clock as may be convenient.

Harper Street, 3d inst.

The time thus appointed was the evening of the day on which I was to have my second chess party with the agreeable Mrs. Howe, whom I met accordingly. After playing as long as we liked, we fell into a little chat, partly on a mathematical problem,* and partly about the new Parliament then just met, when she said, "And what is to be done with this dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies? I hope we are not to have a Civil War." They should kiss and be friends, said I; what can they do better? Quarrelling can be of service to neither, but is ruin to both. "I have often said," replied she, "that I wished Government would employ you to settle the dispute for them; I am sure nobody could do it so well. Do not you think that the thing is practicable?" Undoubtedly, madam, if the parties are disposed to reconciliation; for the two Countries have really no clashing interests to differ about. It is rather a matter of punctilio, which two or three reasonable people might settle in half an hour. I thank you for the good opinion you are pleased to express of me; but the Ministers will never think of employing me in that good work; they choose rather to abuse me. "Aye," said she, "they have behaved shamefully to you. And indeed some of them are now ashamed of it themselves." I looked upon this as accidental conversation, thought no more of it, and went in the evening to the appointed meeting at Doctor Fothergill's, where I found Mr. Barclay with him.

The Doctor expatiated feelingly on the mischiefs likely to ensue from the present difference, the necessity of accommodating it, and the great merit of being instrumental in so good a work; concluding with some compliments to me; that nobody understood the subject so thoroughly, and had a better head for business of the kind; that it seemed therefore a duty incumbent on me, to do every thing I could to accomplish a reconciliation; and that as he had with pleasure heard from David Barclay, that I had promised to think of it, he hoped I had put pen to paper, and formed some plan for consideration, and brought it with me. I answered, that I had formed no plan; as the more I thought of the proceedings against the Colonies, the more satisfied I was that there did not exist the least disposition in the Ministry to an accommodation; that therefore all plans must be useless. He said, I might be mistaken; that whatever was the violence of some, he had reason, good reason, to believe others were differently disposed; and that if I would draw a plan which we three upon considering should judge reasonable, it might be made use of, and answer some good purpose, since he believed that either himself or David Barclay could get it communicated to some of the most moderate among the Ministers, who would consider it with attention; and what appeared reasonable to us, two of us being Englishmen, might appear so to them. As they both urged this with great earnestness, and when I mentioned the impropriety of my doing any thing of the kind at the time we were in daily expectation of hearing from the Congress, who undoubtedly would be explicit on the means of restoring a good understanding, they seemed impatient, alleging that it was uncertain when we should receive the result of the Congress, and what it would be; that the least delay might be dangerous; that additional punishments for New-England were in contemplation, and accidents might widen the breach, and make it irreparable; therefore, something preventive could not be too soon thought of and applied. I was, therefore, finally prevailed with to promise doing what they desired, and to meet them again on Tuesday evening at the same place, and bring with me something for their consideration.

Accordingly, at the time, I met with them, and produced the following paper:

Hints for Conversation upon the subject of terms that might probably produce a durable Union between BRITAIN and the Colonies.

1. The Tea destroyed to be paid for.
2. The Tea-duty Act to be repealed, and all the duties that have been received upon it to be repaid into the treasuries of the several Provinces from which they have been collected.
3. The Acts of Navigation to be all re-enacted in the Colonies.
4. A Naval Officer appointed by the Crown to reside in each Colony, to see that those Acts are observed.

* This lady (which is a little unusual in ladies) has a good deal of mathematical knowledge. [Note of Dr. Franklin.]

5. All the Acts restraining Manufactures in the Colonies, to be repealed.

6. All Duties arising on the Acts for regulating Trade with the Colonies, to be for the publick use of the respective Colonies, and paid into their Treasuries. The Collectors and Custom-House Officers to be appointed by each Governour, and not sent from England.

7. In consideration of the Americans maintaining their own Peace Establishment, and the monopoly Britain is to have of their Commerce, no requisition to be made from them in time of peace.

8. No Troops to enter and quarter in any Colony, but with the consent of its Legislature.

9. In time of war, on requisition made by the King, with the consent of Parliament, every Colony shall raise money by the following rules or proportions, viz: If Britain, on account of the war, raises Three Shillings in the Pound to its Land Tax, then the Colonies to add to their last general Provincial Peace Tax a sum equal to one-fourth thereof; and if Britain on the same account pays Four Shillings in the Pound, then the Colonies to add to their said last Peace Tax a sum equal to half thereof; which additional tax is to be granted to His Majesty, and to be employed in raising and paying men for land or sea service, furnishing provisions, transports, or for such other purposes as the King shall require and direct: and though no Colony may contribute less, each may add as much by voluntary grant as they shall think proper.

10. Castle William to be restored to the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay, and no fortress built by the Crown in any Province, but with the consent of its Legislature.

11. The late Massachusetts and Quebeck Acts to be repealed, and a free Government granted to Canada.

12. All Judges to be appointed during good behaviour, with equally permanent salaries, to be paid out of the Province revenues by appointment of the Assemblies: or, if the Judges are to be appointed during the pleasure of the Crown, let the salaries be during the pleasure of the Assemblies, as heretofore.

13. Governours to be supported by the Assemblies of each Province.

14. If Britain will give up its monopoly of the American Commerce, then the aid above-mentioned to be given by America in time of peace, as well as in time of war.

15. The extension of the Act of Henry VIII., concerning treasons, to the Colonies, to be formally disowned by Parliament.

16. The American Admiralty Courts reduced to the same powers they have in England, and the Acts establishing them to be re-enacted in America.

17. All powers of internal legislation in the Colonies to be disclaimed by Parliament.

In reading this paper a second time, I gave my reasons at length for each article.

On the first I observed, that when the injury was done, Britain had a right to reparation, and would certainly have had it on demand, as was the case when injury was done by mobs in the time of the Stamp Act: or she might have a right to return an equal injury, if she rather chose to do that; but she could not have a right both to reparation and to return an equal injury, much less had she a right to return the injury ten or twenty fold, as she had done by blocking up the Port of Boston: all which extra injury ought, in my judgment, to be repaired by Britain: that therefore if paying for the Tea was agreed to by me, as an article fit to be proposed, it was merely from a desire of peace, and in compliance with their opinion expressed at our first meeting, that this was a sine qua non, that the dignity of Britain required it, and that if this were agreed to, every thing else would be easy: this reasoning was allowed to be just; but still the article was thought necessary to stand as it did.

On the second, That the Act should be repealed, as having never answered any good purpose, as having been the cause of the present mischief, and never likely to be executed. That the Act being considered as unconstitutional by the Americans, and what the Parliament had no right to make, they must consider all the money extorted by it as so much wrongfully taken, and of which therefore restitution ought to be made; and the rather as it would furnish a fund, out of which the payment for the Tea destroyed might best be defrayed. The gentlemen were of opinion, that the first part of this article, viz: the repeal, might be obtained, but not the refunding part, and therefore advised striking that out: but as I thought it just and right, I insisted on its standing.

On the third and fourth articles I observed, we were frequently charged with views of abolishing the Navigation Act. That, in truth, those parts of it which were of most importance to Britain, as tending to increase its Naval strength, viz: those restraining the Trade, to be carried on only in Ships belonging to British subjects, navigated by at least three quarters British or Colony seamen, &c., were as acceptable to us as they could be to Britain, since we wished to employ our own Ships in preference to foreigners, and had no desire to see foreign Ships enter our ports. That indeed the obliging us to land some of our commodities in England before we could carry them to foreign markets, and forbidding our importation of some Goods directly from foreign Countries, we thought a hardship, and a greater loss to us than gain to Britain, and therefore proper to be repealed: but as Britain had deemed it an equivalent for her protection, we had never applied or proposed to apply for such repeal; and if they must be continued, I thought it best (since the power of Parliament to make them was now disputed) that they should be re-enacted in all the Colonies, which would demonstrate their consent to them: and then if, as in the sixth article, all the duties arising on them were to be collected by officers appointed and salaried in the respective Governments, and the produce paid into their treasuries, I was sure the Acts would be better and more faithfully executed, and at much less expense, and one great source of misunderstanding removed between the two Countries, viz: the calumnies of low officers appointed from home, who were for ever abusing the people of the Country to Government, to magnify their own zeal, and recommend themselves to promotion. That the extension of the admiralty jurisdiction, so much complained of, would then no longer be necessary; and that besides its being the interest of the Colonies to execute those Acts, which is the best security, Government might be satisfied of its being done, from accounts to be sent home by the Naval Officers of the fourth article. The gentlemen were satisfied with these reasons, and approved the third and fourth articles; so they were to stand.

The fifth they apprehended would meet with difficulty. They said, that restraining manufactures in the Colonies was a favourite idea here; and therefore they wished that article to be omitted, as the proposing it would alarm and hinder perhaps the considering and granting others of more importance: but as I insisted on the equity of allowing all subjects in every Country to make the most of their natural advantages, they desired I would at least alter the last word from repealed to reconsidered, which I complied with.

In maintaining the seventh article (which was at first objected to, on the principle that all under the care of Government should pay towards the support of it,) my reasons were, that if every distinct part of the King's Dominions supported its own Government in time of peace, it was all that could justly be required of it; that all the old or confederated Colonies had done so from their beginning; that their taxes for that purpose were very considerable; that new Countries had many publick expenses which old ones were free from, the works being done to their hands by their ancestors, such as making roads and bridges, erecting churches, court-houses, forts, quays, and other publick buildings, founding schools and places of education, hospitals and alms-houses, &c., &c.; that the voluntary and the legal subscriptions and taxes for such purposes, taken together, amounted to more than was paid by equal estates in Britain. That it would be best for Britain, on two accounts, not to take money from us as contribution to its publick expense, in time of peace; first, for that just so much less would be got from us in Commerce, since all we could spare was already gained from us by Britain in that way; and secondly, that coming into the hands of British Ministers, accustomed to prodigality of publick money, it would be squandered and dissipated, answering no good general purpose. That if we were to be taxed towards the support of Government in Britain, as Scotland has been since the union, we ought then to be allowed the same privileges in trade as she has been allowed. That if we are called upon to give to the sinking fund or the national debt, Ireland ought to be likewise called upon; and both they and we, if we gave, ought to have some means established of inquiring into the application, and securing a compliance with the terms on which we should grant. That British Ministers would perhaps not like our meddling with such matters; and that hence might arise new causes of misunderstanding. That upon the whole, therefore, I thought it best on all sides, that no aids shall be asked or expected from the Colonies in time of peace; that it would then be their interest to grant bountifully, and exert themselves vigorously in time of war, the sooner to put an end to it. That specie was not to be had to send to England in supplies, but the Colonies could carry on war with their own paper money; which would pay Troops, and for Provisions, Transports, Carriages, Clothing, Arms, &c. So this seventh article was at length agreed to without further objection.

The eighth the gentlemen were confident would never be granted. For the whole world would be of opinion that the King, who is to defend all parts of his Dominions, should have of course a right to place his Troops where they might best answer that purpose. I supported the article upon principles equally important in my opinion to Britain as to the Colonies; for that if the King could bring into one part of his Dominions, Troops raised in any other part of them, without the consent of the Legislatures of the part to which they were brought, he might bring Armies raised in America into England without consent of Parliament, which probably would not like it, as a few years since they had not liked the introduction of the Hessians and Hanoverians, though justified by the supposition of its being a time of danger. That if there should be at any time real occasion for British Troops in America, there was no doubt of obtaining the consent of the Assemblies there; and I was so far from being willing to drop this article, that I thought I ought to add another, requiring all the present Troops to be withdrawn, before America could be expected to treat or agree upon any terms of accommodation; as what they should now do of that kind might be deemed the effect of compulsion, the appearance of which ought as much as possible to be avoided, since those reasonable things might be agreed to, where the parties seemed at least to act freely, which would be strongly refused under threats, or the semblance of force. That the withdrawing the Troops was therefore necessary to make any treaty durably binding on the part of the Americans, since proof of having acted under force, would invalidate any agreement: and it could be no wonder that we should insist on the Crown's having no right to bring a Standing Army among us in time of peace; when we saw now before our eyes a striking instance of the ill use to be made of it, viz: to distress the King's subjects in different parts of his Dominions, one part after the other, into a submission to arbitrary power, which was the avowed design of the Army and Fleet now placed at Boston. Finding me obstinate, the gentlemen consented to let this stand, but did not seem quite to approve of it: they wished, they said, to have this paper or plan, that they might show as containing the sentiments of considerate impartial persons, and such as they might as Englishmen support, which they thought could not well be the case with this article.

The ninth article was so drawn, in compliance with an idea of Dr. Fothergill's, started at our first meeting, viz: that Government here would probably not be satisfied with the promise of voluntary grants in time of war from the Assemblies, of which the quantity must be uncertain; that therefore it would be best to proportion them in some way to the Shillings in the Pound raised in England; but how such proportion could be ascertained he was at a loss to contrive; I was desired to consider it. It had been said, too, that Parliament was become jealous of the right claimed and heretofore used by the Crown, of raising money in the Colonies without Parliamentary consent; and therefore, since we would not pay Parliamentary taxes, future requisitions must be made with consent of Parliament, and not otherwise. I wondered that the Crown should be willing to give up that separate right, but had no objection to its limiting itself, if it thought proper: so I drew the article accordingly, and contrived to proportion the aid by the tax of the last year of peace. And since it was thought that the method I should have liked best would never be agreed to, viz: a Continental Congress to be called by the Crown, for answering requisitions and proportioning aids; I chose to leave room for voluntary additions by the separate Assemblies, that the Crown might have some motive for calling them together, and cultivating their good will, and they have some satisfaction in showing their loyalty and their zeal in the common cause, and an opportunity of manifesting their disapprobation of a war, if they did not think it a just one. This article, therefore, met with no objection from them; and I had another reason for liking it, viz: that the view of the proportion to be given in time of war, might make us the more frugal in time of peace.

For the tenth article, I urged the injustice of seizing that Fortress, (which had been built at an immense charge by the Province, for the defence of their Port against National enemies,) and turning it into a citadel for awing the Town, restraining their Trade, blocking up their Port, and depriving them of their privileges: that a great deal had been said of their injustice in destroying the Tea; but here was a much greater injustice uncompensated, that Castle having cost the Province Three Hundred Thousand Pounds: and that such a use made of a Fortress they had built, would not only effectually discourage every Colony from ever building another, and thereby leave them more exposed to foreign enemies, but was a good reason for their insisting that the Crown should never erect any hereafter in their limits without the consent of the Legislature: the gentlemen had not much to say against this article; but thought it would hardly be admitted.

The eleventh article it was thought would be strongly objected to; that it would be urged the old Colonists could have nothing to do with the affairs of Canada, whatever we had with those of the Massachusetts; that it would be considered as an officious meddling merely to disturb Government; and that some even of the Massachusetts Acts were thought by Administration to be improvements of that Government, viz: those altering the appointment of Counsellors, the choice of Jurymen, and the forbidding of Town-meetings. I replied, that we having assisted in the conquest of Canada, at a great expense of blood and treasure, had some right to be considered in the settlement of it: that the establishing an arbitrary Government on the back of our settlements might be dangerous to us all; and that loving liberty ourselves, we wished it to be extended among mankind, and to have no foundation for future slavery laid in America. That as to amending the Massachusetts Government, though it might be shown that every one of these pretended amendments were real mischiefs, yet that Charters being compacts between two parties, the King and the People, no alteration could be made in them, even for the better, but by the consent of both parties. That the Parliament's claim and exercise of a power to alter our Charters, which had always been deemed inviolable but for forfeiture, and to alter laws made in pursuance of these Charters which had received the Royal approbation, and thenceforth deemed fixed and unchangeable but by the powers that made them, had rendered all our Constitutions uncertain, and set us quite afloat: that as by claiming a right to tax us ad libitum, they deprived us of all property, so by this claim of altering our Laws and Charters at will, they deprived us of all privilege and right whatever, but what we should hold at their pleasure: that this was a situation we could not be in, and must risk life and every thing rather than submit to it. So this article remained.

The twelfth article I explained, by acquainting the gentlemen with the former situation of the Judges in most Colonies, viz: that they were appointed by the Crown, and paid by the Assemblies: that the appointment being during the pleasure of the Crown, the salary had been during the pleasure of the Assembly: that when it has been urged against the Assemblies, that their making Judges dependant on them for their salaries, was aiming at an undue influence over the Courts of Justice, the Assemblies usually replied, that making them dependant on the Crown for continuance in their places, was also retaining an undue influence over those Courts; and that one undue influence was a proper balance for the other; but that whenever the Crown would consent to Acts making the Judges during good behaviour, the Assemblies would at the same time grant their salaries to be permanent during their continuance in office. This the Crown has, however, constantly refused: and this equitable offer is now again here proposed; the Colonies not being able to conceive why their Judges should not be rendered as independent as those in England: that, on the contrary, the Crown now claimed to make the Judges in the Colonies dependant on its favour for both place and salary, both to be continued at its pleasure: this the Colonies must oppose as inequitable, as putting both the weights into one of the scales of justice: if, therefore, the Crown does not choose to commission the Judges during good behaviour, with equally permanent salaries, the alternative proposed, that the salaries continue to be paid during the pleasure of the Assemblies as heretofore. The gentlemen allowed this article to be reasonable.

The thirteenth was objected to, as nothing was generally thought more reasonable here, than that the King should pay his own Governour, in order to render him independent of the people, who otherwise might aim at influencing him against his duty, by occasionally withholding his salary. To this I answered, that Governours sent to the Colonies were often men of no estate or principle, who came merely to make fortunes, and had no natural regard for the Country they were to govern: that to make them quite independent of the people, was to make them careless of their conduct, whether it was beneficial or mischievous to the publick, and giving a loose to their rapacious and oppressive dispositions: that the influence supposed could never extend to operate any thing prejudicial to the King's service, or the interest of Britain: since the Governour was bound by a set of particular instructions, which he had given surety to observe; and all the laws he assented to were subject to be repealed by the Crown if found improper: that the payment of the salaries by the people was more satisfactory to them, as it was productive of a good understanding, and mutual good offices between Governour and governed, and therefore the innovation lately made in that respect at Boston and New-York had in my opinion better be laid aside. So this article was suffered to remain.

But the fourteenth was thought totally inadmissible. The monopoly of the American Commerce could never be given up, and the proposing it would only give offence without answering any good purpose. I was therefore prevailed on to strike it wholly out.

The fifteenth was readily agreed to.

The sixteenth it was thought would be of little consequence, if the duties were given to the Colony Treasuries.

The seventeenth it was thought could hardly be obtained, but might be tried.

Thus having gone through the whole, I was desired to make a fair copy for Dr. Fothergill, who now informed us, that having an opportunity of seeing daily Lord Dartmouth, of whose good disposition he had a high opinion, he would communicate the paper to him, as the sentiments of considerate persons who wished the welfare of both Countries. Suppose, said Mr. Barclay, I were to show this paper to Lord Hyde; would there be any thing amiss in so doing? He is a very knowing man, and though not in the Ministry, properly speaking, he is a good deal attended to by them. I have some acquaintance with him; we converse freely sometimes, and perhaps if he and I were to talk these articles over, I should communicate to him our conversation upon them some good might arise out of it. Dr. Fothergill had no objection; and I said I could have none. I knew Lord Hyde a little, and had an esteem for him. I had drawn the paper at their request, and it was now theirs to do with it what they pleased. Mr. Barclay then proposed, that I should send the fair copy to him, which, after making one for Dr. Fothergill and one for himself, he would return to me. Another question then arose, whether I had any objection to their mentioning that I had been consulted? I said, none that related to myself; but it was my opinion, if they wished any attention paid to the propositions, it would be better not to mention me; the Ministry having, as I conceived, a prejudice against me and every thing that came from me. They said on that consideration it might be best not to mention me, and so it was concluded. For my own part, I kept this whole proceeding a profound secret; but I soon after discovered that it had taken air by some means or other.

Being much interrupted the day following, I did not copy and send the paper. The next morning I received a note from Mr. Barclay, pressing to have it before twelve o'clock. I accordingly sent it to him. Three days after I received the following note from him:

D. BARCLAY presents his respects, and acquaints Dr. Franklin, that being informed a pamphlet, entitled "A Friendly Address," has been dispersed to the disadvantage of America, (in particular by the Dean of Norwich,) he desires Dr. Franklin will peruse the enclosed, just come to hand from America; and if he approves of it, republish it, as D. Barclay wishes something might be properly spread at Norwich. D. Barclay saw to-day a person with whom he had been yesterday, (before he called on Dr. Franklin,) and had the satisfaction of walking part of the way with him to another noble person's house, to meet on the business, and he told him, that he could say, that he saw some light.

Cheapside, 11th instant.

The person so met and accompanied by Mr. Barclay, I understood to be Lord Hyde, going either to Lord Dartmouth's or Lord North's, I knew not which.

In the following week arrived the proceedings of the Congress, which had been long and anxiously expected, both by the friends and adversaries of America.

The Petition of Congress to the King was enclosed to me, and accompanied by the following letter from their President, addressed to the American Agents in London, as follows:*

The first impression made by the proceedings of the American Congress on people in general, was greatly in our favour. Administration seemed to be staggered, were impatient to know whether the Petition mentioned in the proceedings was come to my hands, and took roundabout methods of obtaining that information, by getting a ministerial merchant, a known intimate of the Solicitor-General, to write me a letter, importing that he heard I had received such a petition, that I was to be attended in presenting it by the merchants, and begging to know the time, that he might attend "on so important an occasion, and give his testimony to so good a work." Before these proceedings arrived, it had been given out, that no Petition from the Congress could be received, as they were an illegal body; but the Secretary of State, after a day's perusal, (during which a Council was held,) told us it was a decent and proper Petition, and cheerfully undertook to present it to His Majesty, who, he afterwards assured us, was pleased to receive it very graciously, and to promise to lay it, as soon as they met, before his two Houses of Parliament; and we had reason to believe that at that time the Petition was intended to be made the foundation of some change of measures; but that purpose, if such there was, did not long continue.

About this time I received a letter from Mr. Barclay, then at Norwich, dated December 18th, expressing his opinion, that it might be best to postpone taking any further steps in the affair of procuring a meeting and petition of the Merchants, (on which we had had several consultations,) till after the holidays, thereby to give the proceedings of Congress more time to work upon men's minds, adding, "I likewise consider that our superiours will have some little time for reflection, and perhaps may contemplate on the propriety of the Hints in their possession." By a few lines I have received from Lord Hyde, he intimates his hearty wish that they may be productive of what may be practicable and advantageous for the Mother Country and the Colonies." On the 22d, Mr. Barclay was come to Town, when I dined with him, and learned that Lord Hyde thought the propositions too hard.

On the 24th I received the following note from a considerable merchant in the City, viz:

MR. WILLIAM NEATE presents his most respectful compliments to Dr. Franklin, and as a report prevailed yesterday evening, that all the disputes between Great Britain and the American Colonies were, through his application and influence with Lord North, amicably settled, conformable to the wish and desire of the late Congress, W. N. desires the favour of Dr. Franklin to inform him by a line, per the bearer, whether there is any credit to be given to the report?

* See Vol. I. Fol. 929, and Fol. 934.

St. Mary Hill, 24th December, 1774.

My answer was to this effect, that I should be very happy to be able to inform him that the report he had heard had some truth in it; but I could only assure him that I knew nothing of the matter. Such reports, however, were confidently circulated, and had some effect in recovering the Stocks, which had fallen three or four per cent.

On Christmas day, visiting Mrs. Howe, she told me as soon as I went in, that her brother, Lord Howe, wished to be acquainted with me; that he was a very good man, and she was sure we should like each other. I said, I had always heard a good character of Lord Howe, and should be proud of the honour of being known to him. He is just by, said she; will you give me leave to send for him? By all means, madam, if you think proper. She rang for a servant, wrote a note, and Lord Howe came in a few minutes.

After some extremely polite compliments as to the general motives for his desiring an acquaintance with me, he said he had a particular one at this time, which was the alarming situation of our affairs with America, which no one, he was persuaded, understood better than myself; that it was the opinion of some friends of his, that no man could do more towards reconciling our differences than I could, if I would undertake it; that he was sensible I had been very ill treated by the Ministry, but he hoped that would not be considered by me in the present case; that he himself, though not in opposition, had much disapproved of their conduct towards me; that some of them, he was sure, were ashamed of it, and sorry it had happened: which he supposed must be sufficient to abate resentment in a great and generous mind; that if he were himself in Administration, he should be ready to make me ample satisfaction, which he was persuaded would one day or other be done; that he was unconnected with the Ministry, except by some personal friendships, wished well however to Government, was anxious for the general welfare of the whole Empire, and had a particular regard for New-England, which had shown a very endearing respect to his family; that he was merely an independent Member of Parliament, desirous of doing what good he could, agreeably to his duty in that station; that he therefore had wished for an opportunity of obtaining my sentiments on the means of reconciling our differences, which he saw must be attended with the most mischievous consequences, if not speedily accommodated; that he hoped his zeal for the publick welfare would, with me, excuse the impertinence of a mere stranger, who could have otherwise no reason to expect, or right to request me to open my mind to him upon these topics; but he did conceive, that if I would indulge him with my ideas of the means proper to bring about a reconciliation, it might be of some use; that perhaps I might not be willing myself to have any direct communication with this Ministry on this occasion; that I might likewise not care to have it known that I had any indirect communication with them, till I could be well assured of their good dispositions; that being himself upon no ill terms with them, he thought it not impossible that he might, by conveying my sentiments to them, and theirs to me, be a means of bringing on a good understanding, without committing either them or me, if his negotiation should not succeed; and that I might rely on his keeping perfectly secret every thing I should wish to remain so.

Mrs. Howe here offering to withdraw, whether of herself or from any sign from him, I know not, I begged she might stay, as I should have no secret in a business of this nature that I could not freely confide to her prudence, which was truth; for I had never conceived a higher opinion of the discretion and excellent understanding of any woman on so short an acquaintance. I added, that though I had never before the honour of being in his Lordship's company, his manner was such as had already engaged my confidence, and would make me perfectly easy and free in communicating myself to him. I begged him, in the first place, to give me credit for a sincere desire of healing the breach between the two Countries; that I would cheerfully and heartily do every thing in my small power to accomplish it; but that I apprehended from the King's speech, and from the measures talked of, as well as those already determined on, no intention or disposition of the kind existed in the present Ministry, and therefore no accommodation could be expected till we saw a change. That as to what his Lordship mentioned of the personal injuries done me, those done my Country were so much greater, that I did not think the other, at this time, worth mentioning; that besides it was a fixed rule with me, not to mix my private affairs with those of the publick; that I could join with my personal enemy in serving the publick, or, when it was for its interest, with the publick in serving that enemy; these being my sentiments, his Lordship might be assured that no private considerations of the kind should prevent my being as useful in the present case as my small ability would permit. He appeared satisfied and pleased with these declarations, and gave it me as his sincere opinion, that some of the Ministry were extremely well disposed to any reasonable accommodations, preserving only the dignity of Government; and he wished me to draw up in writing some propositions containing the terms on which I conceived a good understanding might be obtained and established, and the mode of proceeding to accomplish it; which propositions, as soon as prepared, we might meet to consider, either at his house or at mine, or where I pleased; but as his being seen at my house, or me at his, might he thought occasion some speculation, it was concluded to be best to meet at his sister's, who readily offered her house for that purpose, and where there was a good pretence with her family and friends for my being often seen, as it was known that we played together at chess. I undertook, accordingly, to draw up something of the kind; and so for that time we parted, agreeing to meet at the same place again on the Wednesday following.

I dined about this time, by invitation, with Governour Pownall. There was no company but the family, and after dinner we had a tête-à-tête. He had been in the opposition, but was now about making his peace, in order to come into Parliament on Ministerial interest, which I did not then know. He told me what I had before been told by several of Lord North's friends, that the American measures were not the measures of that Minister, nor approved by him; that, on the contrary, he was well disposed to promote a reconciliation upon any terms honourable to Government; that I had been looked upon as the great fomentor of the opposition in America, and as a great adversary to any accommodation; that he, Governour Pownall, had given a different account of me, and had told his Lordship that I was certainly much misunderstood. From the Governour's further discourse I collected that he wished to be employed as an Envoy or Commissioner to America, to settle the differences, and to have me with him; but as I apprehended there was little likelihood that either of us would be so employed by Government, I did not give much attention to that part of his discourse.

I should have mentioned in its place, (but one cannot recollect every thing in order,) that, declining at first to draw up the propositions desired by Lord Howe, I alleged its being unnecessary, since the Congress, in their Petition to the King, just then received and presented through Lord Dartmouth, had stated their grievances, and pointed out very explicitly what would restore the ancient harmony; and I read a part of the Petition, to show their good dispositions, which, being very pathetically expressed, seemed to affect both the brother and sister. But still I was desirous to give my ideas of the steps to be taken, in case some of the propositions in the Petition should not be thought admissible; and this, as I said before, I undertook to do.

I had promised Lord Chatham to communicate to him the first important news I should receive from America. I therefore sent him the proceedings of the Congress as soon as I received them; but a whole week passed after I received the Petition before I could, as I wished to do, wait upon him with it, in order to obtain his sentiments on the whole; for my time was taken up in meetings with the other Agents to consult about presenting the Petition, in waiting three different days with them on Lord Dartmouth, in consulting upon and writing letters to the Speakers of Assemblies, and other business, which did not allow me a day to go to Hayes. At last, on Monday, the 26th, I got out, and was there about one o'clock; he received me with an affectionate kind of respect, that from so great a man was extremely engaging; but the opinion he expressed of the Congress was still more so. They had acted, he said, with so much temper, moderation, and wisdom, that he thought it the most honourable assembly of statesmen since those of the ancient Greeks and Romans, in the most virtuous times. That there was not, in their whole proceedings, above one or two things he could have wished otherwise; perhaps but one, and that was their assertion that the keeping up a Standing Army in the Colonies in time of peace, without consent of their Legislatures, was against law; he doubted that was not well founded, and that the law alluded to did not extend to the Colonies. The rest he admired and honoured; he thought the Petition decent, manly, and properly expressed. He inquired much and particularly concerning the state of America, the probability of their perseverance, the difficulties they must meet with in adhering, for any long time, to their resolutions; the resources they might have to supply the deficiency of Commerce; to all which I gave him answers, with which he seemed well satisfied. He expressed a great regard and warm affection for that Country, with hearty wishes for their prosperity, and that Government here might soon come to see its mistakes, and rectify them; and intimated that possibly he might, if his health permitted, prepare something for its consideration, when the Parliament should meet after the holidays, on which he should wish to have previously my sentiments. I mentioned to him the very hazardous state I conceived we were in, by the continuance of the Army in Boston; that whatever disposition there might be in the inhabitants to give no just cause of offence to the Troops, or in the general to preserve order among them, an unpremeditated, unforeseen quarrel might happen, between perhaps a drunken porter and a soldier, that might bring on a riot, tumult, and bloodshed, and its consequences produce a breach impossible to be healed; that the Army could not possibly answer any good purpose there, and might be infinitely mischievous; that no accommodation could be properly proposed and entered into by the Americans, while the bayonet was at their breasts; that to have any agreement binding, all force should be withdrawn. His Lordship seemed to think these sentiments had something in them that was reasonable.

From Hayes I went to Halsted, Mr. Sargent's place, to dine, intending thence a visit to Lord Stanhope, at Chevening; but hearing there that his Lordship and the family were in Town, I staid at Halsted all night, and the next morning went to Chiselhurst, to call upon Lord Camden, it being in my way to Town. I met his Lordship and family in two carriages just without his gate, going on a visit of congratulation to Lord Chatham and his lady, on the late marriage of their daughter to Lord Makon, son of Lord Stanhope. They were to be back to dinner; so I agreed to go in, stay dinner, and spend the evening there, and not return to Town till next morning. We had that afternoon and evening a great deal of conversation on American affairs, concerning which he was very inquisitive, and I gave him the best information in my power. I was charmed with his generous and noble sentiments, and had the great pleasure of hearing his full approbation of the proceedings of the Congress, the Petition, &c., &c., of which, at his request, I afterwards sent him a copy. He seemed anxious that the Americans should continue to act with the same temper, coolness, and wisdom, with which they had hitherto proceeded in most of their publick assemblies, in which case he did not doubt they would succeed in establishing their rights, and obtain a solid and durable agreement with the Mother Country; of the necessity and great importance of which agreement, he seemed to have the strongest impressions.

I returned to Town the next morning, in time to meet at the hour appointed by Lord Howe. I apologized for my not being ready with the paper I had promised, by my having been kept longer than I intended in the Country. We had, however, a good deal of conversation on the subject, and his Lordship told me he could now assure me of a certainty, that there was a sincere disposition in Lord North and Lord Dartmouth to accommodate the differences with America, and to listen favourably to any propositions that might have a probable tendency to answer that salutary purpose. He then asked me what I thought of sending some person or persons over, commissioned to inquire into the grievances of America upon the spot; converse with the leading people, and endeavour with them to agree upon some means of composing our differences. I said that a person of rank and dignity, who had a character of candour, integrity, and wisdom, might possibly, if employed in that service, be of great use. He seemed to be of the same opinion, and that whoever was employed should go with a hearty desire of promoting a sincere reconciliation, on the foundation of mutual interests and mutual good-will; that he should endeavour not only to remove their prejudices against Government, but equally the prejudices of Government against them, and bring on a perfect good understanding, &c. Mrs. Howe said, I wish, brother, you were to be sent thither on such a service; I should like that much better than General Howe's going to command the Army there. I think, madam, said I, they ought to provide for General Howe some more honourable employment. Lord Howe here took out of his pocket a paper, and offering it to me said, smiling, if it is not an unfair question, may I ask whether you know any thing of this paper? Upon looking at it, I saw it was a copy, in David Barclay's hand, of the Hints before recited, and said that I had seen it; adding, a little after, that since I perceived his Lordship was acquainted with a transaction, my concern in which I had understood was to have been kept a secret, I should make no difficulty in owing to him that I had been consulted on the subject, and had drawn up that paper. He said he was rather sorry to find that the sentiments expressed in it were mine, as it gave him less hopes of promoting, by my assistance, the wished-for reconciliation, since he had reason to think there was no likelihood of the admission of these propositions. He hoped, however, that I would reconsider the subject, and form some plan that would be acceptable here. He expatiated on the infinite service it would be to the Nation, and the great merit in being instrumental in so good a work; that he should not think of influencing me by any selfish motive, but certainly I might with reason expect any reward in the power of Government to bestow. This to me was what the French vulgarly call spitting in the soup. However, I promised to draw some sketch of a plan at his request, though I much doubted, I said, whether it would be thought preferable to that he had in his hand. But he was willing to hope that it would, and as he considered my situation, that I had friends here and constituents in America to keep well with, that I might possibly propose something improper to be seen in my handwriting; therefore, it would be better to send it to Mrs. Howe, who would copy it, send the copy to him to be communicated to the Ministry, and return me the original. This I agreed to, though I did not apprehend the inconvenience he mentioned. In general I liked much his manner, and found myself disposed to place great confidence in him on occasion, but in this particular the secrecy he proposed seemed not of much importance.

In a day or two I sent the following paper, enclosed in a cover, directed to the honourable Mrs. Howe:

"It is supposed to be the wish on both sides, not merely to put a stop to the mischief at present threatening the general welfare, but to cement a cordial union, and remove not only every real grievance, but every cause of jealousy and suspicion.

"With this view the first thing necessary is, to know what is, by the different parties in the dispute, thought essentially necessary for the obtaining such an union.

"The American Congress, in their Petition to the King, have been explicit, declaring that, by a repeal of the oppressive Acts therein complained of, 'the harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies, so necessary to the happiness of both, and so ardently desired of them, will, with the usual intercourse, be immediately restored.'

"If it has been thought reasonable here to expect that, previous to an alteration of measures, the Colonies should make some declaration respecting their future conduct, they have also done that, by adding, 'that when the causes of their apprehensions are removed, their future conduct will prove them not unworthy of the regard they have been accustomed in their happier days to enjoy.'

"For their sincerity in these declarations, they solemnly call to witness the Searcher of all hearts.

"If Britain can have any reliance on these declarations, (and perhaps none to be extorted by force can be more relied on than these which are thus freely made,) she may, without hazard to herself, try the expedient proposed, since, if it fails, she has it in her power at any time to resume her present measures.

"It is, then, proposed,

"That Britain should show some confidence in these declarations, by repealing all the laws or parts of laws that are requested to be repealed in the Petition of the Congress to the King.

"And that at the same time orders should be given to withdraw the Fleet from Boston, and remove all the Troops to Quebeck or the Floridas, that the Colonies may be left at liberty in their future stipulations.

"That this may, for the honour of Britain, appear not the effect of any apprehension from the measures entered into and recommended to the people by the Congress, but from good will, and a change of disposition towards the Colonies, with a sincere desire of reconciliation; let some of their other grievances, which, in their Petition, they have left to the magnanimity and justice of the King and Parliament, be at the same time removed, such as those relating to the payment of Governours' and Judges' salaries, and the instructions for dissolving Assemblies, &c., with the declarations concerning the Statute of Henry VIII.

"And to give the Colonies an immediate opportunity of demonstrating the reality of their professions, let their proposed ensuing Congress be authorized by Government, (as was that held at Albany in 1754,) and a person of weight and dignity of character be appointed to preside at it on behalf of the Crown.

"And then let requisition be made to the Congress, of such points as Government wishes to obtain, for its future security, for aids, for the advantage of general Commerce, for reparation to the India Company, &c., &c.

"A generous confidence thus placed in the Colonies, will give ground to the friends of Government there, in their endeavours to procure from America every reasonable concession or engagement, and every substantial aid that can fairly be desired."

On the Saturday evening I saw Mrs. Howe, who informed me she had transcribed and sent the paper to Lord Howe in the country, and she returned me the original. On the following Tuesday, January 3d, I received a note from her, (enclosing a letter she had received from Lord Howe the last night,) which follows:

"Mrs. Howe's compliments to Dr. Franklin; she encloses him a letter she received last night, and returns him many thanks for his very obliging present,* which has already given her great entertainment. If the Doctor has any spare time for chess, she will be exceedingly glad to see him any morning this week, and as often as will be agreeable to him, and rejoices in having so good an excuse for asking the favour of his company.

"Tuesday."

[Letter enclosed in the foregoing.]

Porter's Lodge, January 2d, 1775.

I have received your packet; and it is with much concern that I collect, from sentiments of such authority as those of our worthy friend, that the desired accommodation threatens to be attended with much greater difficulty than I had flattered myself, in the progress of our intercourse, there would be reason to apprehend.

I shall forward the propositions as intended. Not desirous of trespassing further on our friend's indulgence; but returning sentiments of regard, which his candid and obliging attention to my troublesome inquiries, will render ever permanent in the memory of your affectionate, &c.

I ought to make excuses likewise to you. Howe.

Hon. Mrs. Howe, Grafton Street.

His Lordship had, in his last conversation with me, acknowledged a communication between him and the Ministry, to whom he wished to make my sentiments known. In this letter from the country he owns the receipt of them, and mentions his intentions of forwarding them, that is, as

* His philosophical writings.

I understood it, to the Ministers; but expresses his apprehensions that such propositions were not likely to produce any good effect. Some time after, perhaps a week, I received a note from Mrs. Howe, desiring to see me. I waited upon her immediately, when she showed me a letter from her brother, of which, having no copy, I can only give from the best of my recollection the purport of it, which I think was this: that he desired to know from their friend, meaning me, through her means, whether it might not be expected that, if that friend would engage for the payment of the Tea as a preliminary, relying on a promised redress of their grievances on future petitions from their Assembly, they would approve of his making such engagement; and whether the proposition in the former paper, (the Hints,) relating to aids, was still in contemplation of the author. As Mrs. Howe proposed sending to her brother that evening, I wrote immediately the following answer, which she transcribed and forwarded:

"The proposition in the former paper relating to aids, is still in contemplation of the author, and, as he thinks, is included in the last article of the present paper.

"The people of America, conceiving that Parliament has no right to tax them, and that, therefore, all that has been extorted from them by the operation of the Duty Acts, with the assistance of an armed force, preceding the destruction of the Tea, is so much injury, which ought, in order of time, to be first repaired, before a demand on the Tea account can be justly made of them; are not, he thinks, likely to approve of the measure proposed, and pay in the first place the value demanded, especially as twenty times as much injury has since been done them by blocking up their Port; and their Castle also seized before by the Crown, has not been restored, nor any satisfaction offered them for the same."

At the meeting of Parliament, after the holidays, which was on the 19th of January, (1775,) Lord Howe returned to town, when we had another meeting, at which he lamented that my propositions were not such as probably could be accepted; intimated that it was thought I had powers or instructions from the Congress to make concessions on occasion that would be more satisfactory. I disclaimed the having any of any kind but what related to the presenting of their Petition. We talked over all the particulars in my paper, which I supported with reasons; and finally said, that if what I had proposed would not do, I should be glad to hear what would do; I wished to see some propositions from the Ministers themselves. His Lordship was not, he said, as yet fully acquainted with their sentiments, but should learn more in a few days. It was, however, some weeks before I heard any thing further from him.

In the meanwhile, Mr. Barclay and I were frequently together on the affair of preparing the Merchants' Petition, which took up so much of his time that he could not conveniently see Lord Hyde; so he had no information to give me concerning the Hints, and I wondered I heard nothing of them from Dr. Fothergill. At length, however, but I cannot recollect about what time, the Doctor called on me, and told me he had communicated them, and with them had verbally given my arguments in support of them, to Lord Dartmouth, who, after consideration, had told him some of them appeared reasonable, but others were inadmissible or impracticable; that having occasion to see frequently the Speaker,* he had also communicated them to him, as he found him very anxious for a reconciliation: that the Speaker had said it would be very humiliating to Britain to be obliged to submit to such terms: but the Doctor told him she had been unjust; and ought to bear the consequences, and alter her conduct; that the pill might be bitter, but it would be salutary, and must be swallowed: that these were the sentiments of impartial men, after thorough consideration and full information of all circumstances, and that sooner or later these or similar measures must be followed, or the Empire would be divided and ruined: the Doctor, on the whole, hoped some good would be effected by our endeavours.

On the 19th of January, I received a card from Lord Stanhope, acquainting me, that Lord Chatham having a motion to make on the morrow in the House of Lords, concerning America, greatly desired that I might be in the House, into which Lord S. would endeavour to procure me admittance. At this time it was a rule of the House that no person could introduce more than one friend. The next morning, his Lordship let me know by another card, that if I attended at two o'clock in the lobby, Lord Chatham would be there about that time, and would himself introduce me. I attended and met him there accordingly. On my mentioning to him what Lord Stanhope had written to me, he said, "Certainly; and I shall do it with the more pleasure, as I am sure your being present at this day's debate will be of more service to America than mine;" and so taking me by the arm, was leading me along the passage to the door that enters near the throne, when one of the Doorkeepers followed and acquainted him that, by the order, none were to be carried in at that door but the eldest sons or brothers of Peers; on which he limped back with me to the door near the bar, where were standing a number of gentlemen waiting for the Peers who were to introduce them, and some Peers waiting for friends they expected to introduce; among whom, he delivered me to the Doorkeepers, saying aloud, this is Doctor Franklin, whom I would have admitted into the House; when they readily opened the door for me accordingly. As it had not been publickly known that there was any communication between his Lordship and me, this I found occasioned some speculation. His appearance in the House, I observed, caused a kind of bustle among the officers, who were hurried in sending messengers for Members, I suppose those in connection with the Ministry, something of importance being expected when that great man appears; it being but seldom that his infirmities permit his attendance. I had great satisfaction in hearing his motion and the debate upon it, which I shall not attempt to give here an account of, as you may find a better in the papers of the time. It was his motion for withdrawing the Troops from Boston, as the first step towards an accommodation. The day following, I received a note from Lord Stanhope, expressing that, "at the desire of Lord Chatham, was sent me enclosed, the motion he made in the House of Lords, that I might be possessed of it in the most authentick manner, by the communication of the individual paper which was read to the House by the mover himself." I sent copies of this motion to America, and was the more pleased with it, as I conceived it had partly taken its rise from a hint I had given his Lordship in a former conversation. It follows in these words:

Lord Chatham's Motion, January 20, 1775.

"That an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, most humbly to advise and beseech His Majesty, that, in order to open the way towards a happy settlement of the dangerous troubles in America, by beginning to allay ferments and soften animosities there; and above all, for preventing in the mean time any sudden and fatal catastrophe at Boston, now suffering under daily irritation of an Army before their eyes, posted in their Town; it may graciously please His Majesty, that immediate orders may be despatched to General Gage, for removing His Majesty's Forces from the Town of Boston, as soon as the rigour of the season and other circumstances, indispensable to the safety and accommodation of the said Troops, may render the same practicable."

I was quite charmed with Lord Chatham's speech in support of his motion. He impressed me with the highest idea of him as a great and most able statesman. Lord Camden, another wonderfully good speaker and close reasoner, joined him in the same argument, as did several other Lords, who spoke excellently well; but all availed no more than the whistling of the winds. This motion was rejected. Sixteen Scotch Peers, and twenty-four Bishops, with all the Lords in possession or expectation of places, when they vote together unanimously, as they generally do for Ministerial measures, make a dead majority, that renders all debating ridiculous in itself, since it can answer no end. Full of the high esteem I had imbibed for Lord Chatham, I wrote back to Lord Stanhope the following note, viz:

Dr. FRANKLIN presents his best respects to Lord Stanhope, with many thanks to his Lordship and Lord Chat- ham, for the communication of so authentick a copy of the motion. Dr. F. is filled with admiration of that truly great man. He has seen in the course of his life, sometimes eloquence without wisdom, and often wisdom without eloquence; in the present instance he sees both united, and both, as he thinks, in the highest degree possible.

Craven Street, Jan. 23, 1775.

As in the course of the debate, some Lords in the Administration had observed, that it was common and easy to censure their measures, but those who did so proposed nothing better; Lord Chatham mentioned that he should not be one of those idle censurers, that he had thought long and closely upon the subject, and proposed soon to lay before their Lordships the result of his meditation, in a plan for healing our differences, and restoring peace to the Empire, to which his present motion was preparatory: I much desired to know what his plan was, and intended waiting on him to see if he would communicate it to me; but he went the next morning to Hayes, and I was so much taken up with daily business and company, that I could not easily get out to him. A few days after, however, Lord Mahon called on me, and told me Lord Chatham was very desirous of seeing me; when I promised to be with him the Friday following, several engagements prevented my going sooner. On Friday, the 27th, I took a post-chaise about 9 o'clock, and got to Hayes about eleven, but my attention being engaged in reading a new pamphlet, the postboy drove me a mile or two beyond the gate. His Lordship being out on an airing in his chariot, had met me before I reached Hayes, unobserved by me, turned and followed me, and not finding me there concluded, as he had seen me reading, that I had passed by mistake, and sent a servant after me. He expressed great pleasure at my coming, and acquainted me, in a long conversation, with the outlines of his plan, parts of which he read to me. He said he had communicated it only to Lord Camden, whose advice he much relied on, particularly in the law part; and that he would, as soon as he could get it transcribed, put it into my hands for my opinion and advice, but should show it to no other person before he presented it to the House; and he requested me to make no mention of it, otherwise parts might be misunderstood and blown up beforehand, and others perhaps adopted and produced by Ministers as their own. I promised the closest secrecy, and kept my word; not even mentioning to any one that I had seen him. I dined with him, his family only present, and returned to Town in the evening.

On the Sunday following, being the 29th, his Lordship came to Town, and called upon me in Craven Street. He brought with him his plan transcribed, in the form of an Act of Parliament, which he put into my hands, requesting me to consider it carefully, and communicate to him such remarks upon it as should occur to me. His reason for desiring to give me that trouble was, as he was pleased to say, that he knew no man so thoroughly acquainted with the subject, or so capable of giving advice upon it; that he thought the errors of Ministers in American Affairs had been often owing to their not obtaining the best information: that, therefore, though he had considered the business thoroughly in all its parts, he was not so confident of his own judgment, but that he came to set it right by mine, as men set their watches by a regulator. He had not determined when he should produce it in the House of Lords; but in the course of our conversation, considering the precarious situation of his health, and that if presenting it was delayed, some intelligence might arrive which would make it seem less seasonable, or in all parts not so proper; or the Ministry might engage in different measures, and then say, if you had produced your plan sooner, we might have attended to it; he concluded to offer it the Wednesday following, and, therefore, wished to see me upon it the preceding Tuesday, when he would again call upon me, unless I could conveniently come to Hayes. I chose the latter, in respect to his Lordship, and because there was less likelihood of interruptions: and I promised to be with him early, that we might have more time. He staid with me near two hours, his equipage awaiting at the door; and being there while people were coming from church, it was much taken notice of and talked of, as at that time was every little circumstance that men thought might possibly any way affect American affairs. Such a visit from so great a man, on so important a business, flattered not a little my vanity; and the honour of it gave me the more pleasure, as it happened on the very day twelve months that the Ministry had taken so much pains to disgrace me before the Privy Council.

I applied myself immediately to the reading and considering the plan, of which, when it was afterwards published, I sent you a copy, and therefore need not insert it here. I put down upon paper, as I went along, some short memorandums for my future discourse with him upon it, which follow, that you may, if you please, compare them with the plan; and if you do so, you will see their drift and purpose, which otherwise would make me much writing to explain:

Tuesday, January 31, 1775.

Notes for discourse with Lord Chatham on his plan:

Voluntary grants and forced taxes, not to be expected of the same people at the same time.

Permanent revenue will be objected to; would not a temporary agreement be best, suppose for one hundred years?

Does the whole of the rights claimed in the Petition of Rights relate to England only?

The American Naturalization Act gives all the rights of natural born subjects to foreigners residing there seven years. Can it be supposed that the natives there have them not?

If the King should raise Armies in America, would Britain like their being brought hither? as the King might bring them when he pleased.

An Act of Parliament requires the Colonies to furnish sundry articles of provision and accommodation to Troops quartered among them; this may be made very burdensome to Colonies that are out of favour.

If a permanent revenue, why not the same privileges in trade with Scotland?

Should not the lands conquered by Britain and the Colonies in conjunction, be given them (reserving a quitrent) whence they might form funds to enable them to pay.

Instructions about Agents to be withdrawn.

Grants to be for three years, at the end of which a new Congress—and so from three to three years.

Congress to have the general defence of the frontiers, making and regulating new settlements.

Protection mutual.

We go into all your wars.

Our settlements cost you nothing.

Take the plan of union.

“Defence, extension, and prosperity of”—The late Canada Act prevents their extension, and may check their prosperity.

Laws should be secure as well as Charters.

Perhaps if the legislative power of Parliament is owned in the Colonies, they may make a law to forbid the meeting of any Congress, &c.

I was at Hayes early on Tuesday, agreeably to my promise, when we entered into consideration of the plan; but though I staid near four hours, his Lordship, in the manner of, I think, all eloquent persons, was so full and diffuse in supporting every particular I questioned, that there was not time to go through half my memorandums; he is not easily interrupted, and I had such pleasure in hearing him, that I found little inclination to interrupt him; therefore, considering that neither of us had much expectation that the plan would be adopted entirely as it stood; that in the course of its consideration, if it should be received, proper alterations might be introduced; that before it would be settled, America should have opportunity to make her objections and propositions of amendment; that to have it received at all here, it must seem to comply a little with some of the prevailing prejudices of the Legislature; that if it was not so perfect as might be wished, it would at least serve as a basis for treaty, and in the mean time prevent mischiefs, and that as his Lordship had determined to offer it the next day, there was not time to make changes and another fair copy. I therefore ceased my querying; and though afterwards many people were pleased to do me the honour of supposing I had a considerable share in composing it, I assure you, that the addition of a single word only was made at my instance, viz: “Constitutions” after “Charters”; for my filling up at his request a blank with the titles of Acts proper to be repealed, which I took from the proceedings of the Congress, was no more than might have been done by any copying clerk.

On Wednesday, Lord Stanhope, at Lord Chatham’s request, called upon me, and carried me down to the House of Lords, which was soon very full. Lord Chatham, in a most excellent speech, introduced, explained, and supported his plan. When he sat down, Lord Dartmouth rose, and very properly said, it contained matter of such weight and magnitude as to require much consideration, and he therefore hoped the noble Earl did not expect their Lordships to decide upon it by an immediate vote, but would be willing it should lie upon the table for consideration. Lord Chatham answered readily, that he expected nothing more. But Lord Sandwich rose, and in a petulant vehement speech, opposed its being received at all, and gave his opinion, that it ought to be immediately rejected with the contempt it deserved; that he could never believe it to be the production of any British Peer; that it appeared to him rather the work of some American; and, turning his face towards me, who was leaning on the bar, said, he fancied he had in his eye the person who drew it up, one of the bitterest and most mischievous enemies this Country had ever known. This drew the eyes of many Lords upon me: but as I had no inducement to take it to myself, I kept my countenance as immoveable as if my features had been made of wood. Then several other Lords of the Administration gave their sentiments also for rejecting it, of which opinion also was strongly the wise Lord Hillsborough; but the Dukes of Richmond and Manchester, Lord Shelburne, Lord Camden, Lord Temple, Lord Lyttleton and others, were for receiving it, some through approbation, and others for the character and dignity of the House. One Lord mentioning with applause the candid proposal of one of the ministers, Lord Dartmouth, his Lordship rose again, and said, that having since heard the opinions of so many Lords against receiving it to lie upon the table for consideration, he had altered his mind, could not accept the praise offered him, for a candour of which he was now ashamed, and should therefore give his voice for rejecting the plan immediately. I am the more particular in this, as it is a trait of that Nobleman’s character, who, from his office, is supposed to have so great a share in American affairs, but who has in reality no will or judgment of his own, being, with dispositions for the best measures, easily prevailed with to join in the worst. Lord Chatham, in his reply to Lord Sandwich, took notice of his illiberal insinuation, that the plan was not the person’s who proposed it: declared that it was entirely his own, a declaration he thought himself the more obliged to make, as many of their Lordships appeared to have so mean an opinion of it; for if it was so weak or so bad a thing, it was proper in him to take care that no other person should unjustly share in the censure it deserved. That it had been heretofore reckoned his vice not to be apt to take advice; but he made no scruple to declare, that if he were the first Minister of this Country, and had the care of settling this momentous business, he should not be ashamed of publicly calling to his assistance a person so perfectly acquainted with the whole of American affairs as the gentleman alluded to, and so injuriously reflected on; one, he was pleased to say, whom all Europe held in high estimation, for his knowledge and wisdom, and ranked with our Boyles and Newtons, who was an honour, not to the English Nation only, but to human nature! I found it harder to stand this extravagant compliment, than the preceding equally extravagant abuse, but kept as well as I could an unconcerned countenance, as not conceiving it to relate to me.

To hear so many of these hereditary Legislators declaiming so vehemently against, not the adopting merely, but even the consideration of a proposal so important in its nature, offered by a person of so weighty a character, one of the first Statesmen of the age, who had taken up this Country when in the lowest despondency, and conducted it to victory and glory, through a war with two of the mightiest Kingdoms in Europe; to hear them censuring his plan, not only for their own misunderstandings of what was in it, but for their imaginations of what was not in it, which they would not give themselves an opportunity of rectifying by a second reading; to perceive the total ignorance of the subject in some, the prejudice and passion of others, and the wilful perversion of plain truth in several of the Ministers; and, upon the whole, to see it so ignominiously rejected by so great a majority, and so hastily too, in breach of all decency, and prudent regard to the character and dignity of their body, as a third part of the National Legislature, gave me an exceeding mean opinion of their abilities, and made their claim of sovereignty over three millions of virtuous sensible people in America seem the greatest of absurdities, since they appeared to have scarce discretion enough to govern a herd of swine. Hereditary Legislators! thought I. There would be more propriety, because less hazard of mischief, in having (as in some University of Germany) hereditary professors of mathematicks! But this was a hasty reflection, for the elected House of Commons is no better, nor ever will be while the electors receive money for their votes, and pay money wherewith Ministers may bribe their Representatives when chosen.

After this proceeding I expected to hear no more of any negotiation for settling our difference amicably; yet in a day or two, I had a note from Mr. Barclay, requesting a meeting at Dr. Fothergill's, the 4th of February in the evening. I attended accordingly, and was surprised by being told that a very good disposition appeared in Administration; that the Hints had been considered, and several of them thought reasonable, and that others might be admitted with small amendments. The good Doctor, with his usual philanthropy, expatiated on the miseries of war; that even a bad peace was preferable to the most successful war; that America was growing in strength, and whatever she might be obliged to submit to at present, she would in a few years be in a condition to make her own terms. Mr. Barclay hinted how much it was in my power to promote an agreement; how much it would be to my honour to effect it, and that I might expect, not only restoration of my old place, but almost any other I could wish for, &c. I need not tell you, who know me so well, how improper and disgusting this language was to me. The Doctor's was more suitable. Him I answered, that we did not wish for war, and desired nothing but what was reasonable and necessary for our security and well-being. To Mr. Barclay I replied, that the Ministry, I was sure, would rather give me a place in a cart to Tyburn, than any other place whatever. And to both, that I sincerely wished to be serviceable; that I needed no other inducement than to be shown how I might be so; but saw they imagined more to be in my power than really was. I was then told again that conferences had been held upon the Hints; and the paper being produced was read, that I might hear the observations that had been made upon them separately, which were as follows:

1. The first Article was approved.
2. The second agreed to, so far as related to the repeal of the Tea Act. But repayment of the Duties that had been collected, was refused.
3. The third not approved, as it implied a deficiency of power in the Parliament that made those Acts.
4. The fourth approved.
5. The fifth agreed to, but with a reserve, that no change prejudicial to Britain was to be expected.
6. The sixth agreed to, so far as related to the appropriation of the Duties: but the appointment of the Officers and their salaries to remain as at present.
7. The seventh, relating to aids in time of peace, agreed to.
8. The eighth, relating to the Troops, was inadmissible.
9. The ninth could be agreed to, with this difference, that no proportion should be observed with regard to preceding Taxes, but each Colony should give at pleasure.
10. The tenth agreed to, as to the restitution of Castle William; but the restriction on the Crown in building fortresses refused.
11. The eleventh refused absolutely, except as to the Boston Port Bill, which would be repealed; and the Quebeck Act might be so far amended, as to reduce that Province to its ancient limits. The other Massachusetts Acts, being real amendments of their Constitution, must for that reason be continued, as well as to be a standing example of the power of Parliament.
12. The twelfth agreed to, that the Judges should be appointed during good behaviour, on the Assemblies providing permanent salaries, such as the Crown should approve of.

13. The thirteenth agreed to, provided the Assemblies make provision as in the preceding article.

15. The fifteenth agreed to.

16. The sixteenth agreed to, supposing the Duties paid to the Colony Treasuries.

17. The seventeenth inadmissible.

We had not at this time a great deal of conversation upon these points, for I shortened it by observing, that while the Parliament claimed and exercised a power of altering our Constitutions at pleasure, there could be no agreement; for we were rendered unsafe in every privilege we had a right to, and were secure in nothing. And it being hinted how necessary an agreement was for America, since it was so easy for Britain to burn all our sea-port Towns, I grew warm, said that the chief part of my little property consisted of houses in those Towns; that they might make bonfires of them whenever they pleased; that the fear of losing them would never alter my resolution to resist to the last that claim of Parliament, and that it behooved this Country to take care what mischief it did us, for that sooner or later it would certainly be obliged to make good all damages with interest! The Doctor smiled, as I thought, with some approbation of my discourse, passionate as it was, and said he would certainly repeat it to-morrow to Lord Dartmouth.

In the discourse concerning the Hints, Mr. Barclay happened to mention, that going to Lord Hyde's, he found Lord Howe with him, and that Lord Hyde had said to him, "you may speak any thing before Lord Howe, that you have to say to me, for he is a friend in whom I confide;" upon which he accordingly had spoken with the same freedom as usual. By this I collected how Lord Howe came by the paper of Hints which he had shown me: and it being mentioned as a measure thought of, to send over a Commissioner with powers to inquire into grievances and give redress on certain conditions, but that it was difficult to find a proper person; I said, why not Lord Hyde? he is a man of prudence and temper; a person of dignity, and I should think very suitable for such an employment: or, if he would not go, there is the other person you just mentioned, Lord Howe, who would, in my opinion, do excellently well. This passed as mere conversation, and we parted.

Lord Chatham's rejected plan being printed for the public judgment, I received six copies from Lord Mahon, his son-in-law, which I sent to different persons in America.

A week and more passed, in which I heard nothing further of the negotiation, and my time was much taken up among the Members of Parliament, when Mr. Barclay sent me a note to say, that he was indisposed, but desirous of seeing me, and should be glad if I would call on him. I waited upon him the next morning, when he told me that he had seen Lord Hyde, and had some further discourse with him on the Articles; that he thought himself now fully possessed of what would do in this business; that he therefore wished another meeting with me and Doctor Fothergill, when he would endeavour to bring prepared a draught conformable chiefly to what had been proposed and conceded on both sides, with some propositions of his own. I readily agreed to the meeting, which was to be on Thursday evening, February 16th.

We met accordingly, when Mr. Barclay produced the following paper, viz:

A Plan, which it is believed would produce a permanent union between GREAT BRITAIN and her Colonies.

1. The Tea destroyed to be paid for; and, in order that no time may be lost to begin the desirable work of conciliation, it is proposed that the Agent or Agents, in a petition to the King, should engage that the Tea destroyed shall be paid for, and in consequence of that engagement, a Commissioner to have authority, by a clause in an Act of Parliament, to open the port (by a suspension of the Boston Port Act) when that engagement shall be complied with.

2d. The Tea-Duty Act to be repealed, as well for the advantage of Great Britain as the Colonies.

3d. Castle William to be restored to the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay, as formerly, before it was delivered up by Governor Hutchinson.

4th. As it is believed that the commencement of conciliatory measures will in a considerable degree quiet the minds of the subjects in America, it is proposed that the inhabitants of the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay should petition the King, and state their objections to the said Act.* And it is to be understood that the said Act shall be repealed. Interim, the Commissioner to have power to suspend the Act, in order to enable the inhabitants to petition.

5th. The several Provinces who may think themselves aggrieved by the Quebeck Bill, to petition in their legislative capacities; and it is to be understood that so far of the Act as extends the limits of Quebeck beyond its ancient bounds, is to be repealed:

6th. The Act of Henry VIII. to be formally disclaimed by Parliament,

7th. In time of peace the Americans to raise within their respective Provinces, by Acts of their own Legislatures, a certain sum or sums, such as may be thought necessary for a Peace Establishment, to pay Governours, Judges, &c.

Vide—Laws of Jamaica.

8th. In time of war, on requisition made by the King, with consent of Parliament, every Colony shall raise such sums of money, as their Legislatures may think suitable to their abilities and the publick exigency, to be laid out in raising and paying men, for land or sea service, furnishing provisions, transports, or such other purposes as the King shall require and direct.

9th. The Acts of Navigation to be re-examined, in order to see whether some alterations might not be made therein, as much for the advantage of Great Britain, as the ease of the Colonies.

10th. A Naval Officer to be appointed by the Crown to reside in each Colony, to see those Acts observed.

N. B. In some Colonies they are not appointed by the Crown.

11th. All Duties arising on the Acts for regulating Trade with the Colonies, to be for the publick use of the respective Colonies, and paid into their Treasuries, and an Officer of the Crown to see it done.

12th. The Admiralty Courts to be reduced to the same powers as they have in England.

13th. All Judges in the King's Colony Governments to be appointed during good behaviour, and to be paid by the Province, agreeable to article seventh.

N. B. If the King chooses to add to their salaries, the same to be sent from England.

14th. The Governours to be supported in the same manner.

Our conversation turned chiefly upon the first article. It was said that the Ministry only wanted some opening to be given them, some ground on which to found the commencement of conciliating measures, that a petition, containing such an engagement, as mentioned in this article, would answer that purpose; that preparations were making to send over more Troops and Ships, that such a petition might prevent their going, especially if a Commissioner were proposed; I was therefore urged to engage the Colony Agents to join with me in such a petition. My answer was, that no Agent had any thing to do with the Tea business but those for Massachusetts-Bay, who were, Mr. Bollan for the Council, myself for the Assembly, and Mr. Lee, appointed to succeed me when I should leave England; that the latter, therefore, could hardly yet be considered as an Agent; and that the former was a cautious exact man, and not easily persuaded to take steps of such importance without instructions or authority; that therefore if such a step were to be taken, it would lie chiefly on me to take it; that indeed, if there were, as they supposed, a clear probability of good to be done by it, I should make no scruple of hazarding myself in it; but I thought the empowering a Commissioner to suspend the Boston Port Act, was a method too dilatory, and a mere suspension would not be satisfactory; that if such an engagement were entered into, all the Massachusetts Acts should be immediately repealed.

They laid hold of the readiness I had expressed to petition on a probability of doing good, applauded it, and urged me to draw up a petition immediately. I said it was a matter of importance, and, with their leave, I would take home the paper, consider the propositions as they now stood, and give them my opinion to-morrow evening. This was agreed to, and for that time we parted.

Weighing now the present dangerous situation of affairs in America, and the daily hazard of widening the breach there irreparable, I embraced the idea proposed in the paper, of sending over a Commissioner, as it might be a means of suspending military operations, and bring on a treaty, whereby mischief would be prevented, and an agreement by degrees be formed and established; I also concluded to do what had been desired of me as to the engagement, and essayed a draught of a memorial to Lord Dartmouth, for that purpose, simply; to be signed only by myself. As to the sending of a Commissioner, a measure which I was desired likewise to propose, and express my sentiments of its utility, I apprehended my colleagues in the agency might be justly displeased if I took a step of such importance without consulting them, and therefore I sketched a joint petition to that purpose for them to sign with me if they pleased; but apprehending that would meet with difficulty, I drew up a letter to Lord Dartmouth, containing the same proposition, with the reasons for it, to be sent from me only. I made also upon paper some remarks on the propositions; with some hints on a separate paper of further remarks to be made in conversation, when we should meet in the evening of the 17th. Copies of these papers (except the first, which I do not find with me on shipboard) are here placed as follows, viz:

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

The Petition and Memorial of W. BOLLAN, B. FRANKLIN, and ARTHUR LEE,

Most humbly sheweth:

That your Petitioners, being Agents for several Colonies, and deeply affected with the apprehension of impending calamities that now threaten your Majesty's subjects in America, beg leave to approach your throne, and to suggest with all humility, their opinion, formed on much attentive consideration, that if it should please your Majesty to permit and authorize a meeting of Delegates from the different Provinces, and appoint some person or persons of dignity and wisdom from this Country, to preside in that meeting, or to confer with the said Delegates, acquaint themselves fully with the true grievances of the Colonies, and settle the means of composing all dissensions; such means to be afterwards ratified by your Majesty, if found just and suitable; your Petitioners are persuaded, from their thorough knowledge of that Country and People, that such a measure might be attended with the most salutary effects, prevent much mischief, and restore the harmony which so long subsisted, and is so necessary to the prosperity and happiness of all your Majesty's subjects in every part of your extensive Dominions; which that Heaven may preserve entire to your Majesty and your descendants, is the sincere prayer of your Majesty's most dutiful subjects and servants.

To the Right Honourable Lord DARTMOUTH, &c.:

MY LORD: Being deeply apprehensive of the impending calamities that threaten the Nation and its Colonies, through the present unhappy dissensions, I have attentively considered by what possible means those calamities may be prevented. The great importance of a business which concerns us all, will, I hope, in some degree excuse me to your Lordship, if I presume unasked to offer my humble opinion, that should His Majesty think fit to authorize Delegates from the several Provinces to meet, at such convenient time and place as in his wisdom shall seem meet, then and there to confer with a Commissioner or Commissioners to be appointed and empowered by His Majesty, on the means of establishing a firm and lasting union between Britain and the American Provinces, such a measure might be effectual for that purpose. I cannot, therefore, but wish it may be adopted, as no one can more ardently and sincerely desire the general prosperity of the British Dominions, than, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient, &c.,

B. FRANKLIN.

Remarks on the Propositions.

Article 1. In consequence of that engagement all the Boston and Massachusetts Acts to be suspended, and in compliance with that engagement to be totally repealed.

By this amendment Article 4th will become unnecessary.

Articles 4 and 5. The numerous Petitions heretofore sent home by the Colony Assemblies, and either refused to be received, or received and neglected, or answered harshly, and the petitioners rebuked for making them, have, I conceive, totally discouraged that method of application, and if even their friends were now to propose to them the recurring again to petitioning, such friends would be thought to trifle with them. Besides, all they desire is now before Government, in the Petition of the Congress, and the whole or parts may be granted or refused at pleasure. The sense of the Colonies cannot be better obtained by petition from different Colonies, than it is by that general petition.

Article 7, Read, such as they may think necessary.

Article 11, As it stands, of little importance. The first proposition was, that they should be repealed as unjust. But they may remain, for they will probably not be executed.

Even with the amendment proposed above to Article 1, I cannot think it stands as it should do. If the object be merely the preventing present bloodshed, and the other mischiefs to fall on that Country in war, it may possibly answer that end; but if a thorough hearty reconciliation is wished for, all cause of heart-burning should be removed, and strict justice be done on both sides. Thus the Tea should not only be paid for on the side of Boston, but the damage done to Boston by the Port Act should be repaired, because it was done contrary to the custom of all Nations, savage as well as civilized, of first demanding satisfaction.

Article 14, The Judges should receive nothing from the King.

As to the other two Acts, the Massachusetts must suffer all the hazards and mischiefs of war, rather than admit the alteration of their Charters and Laws by Parliament. "They who can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety."

B. FRANKLIN.

Hints.

I doubt the regulating Duties will not be accepted, without enacting them, and having the power of appointing the Collectors in the Colonies.

If we mean a hearty reconciliation, we must deal candidly, and use no tricks.

The Assemblies are many of them in a state of dissolution. It will require time to make new elections; then to meet and choose Delegates, supposing all could meet. But the Assembly of the Massachusetts-Bay cannot act under the new Constitution, nor meet the new Council for that purpose, without acknowledging the power of Parliament to alter their Charter, which they never will do. The language of the proposal is, Try on your fetters first, and then if you don't like them, petition and we will consider.

Establishing salaries for Judges may be a general law. For Governours not so, the Constitution of Colonies differing. It is possible Troops may be sent to particular Provinces, to burden them when they are out of favour.

Canada.—We cannot endure despotism over any of our fellow-subjects. We must all be free, or none.

That afternoon I received the following note from Mrs. Howe, enclosing another from Lord Howe, viz:

Mrs. Howe's compliments to Dr. Franklin; she has just received the enclosed note from Lord Howe, and hopes it will be convenient to him to come to her either to-morrow or Sunday, at any hour most convenient to him which she begs he will be so good to name.

Grafton-Street, Friday, February 17, 1775.

[Enclosed in the foregoing.]

To the Honourable Mrs. Howe:

I wish you to procure me an opportunity to see Dr. Franklin, at your house, to-morrow, or on Sunday morning, for an essential purpose.

Grafton-Street, Friday, 4 o'clock.

Received Friday, 5 o'clock, February 17, 1775.

I had not heard from his Lordship for some time, and readily answered, that I would do myself the honour of waiting upon him at her house to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Barclay, Dr. Fothergill, and myself, met according to appointment at the Doctor's house. I delivered to them the Remarks I had made on the paper, and we talked them over. I read, also, the sketches I had made of the Petitions and Memorials; but they being of opinion, that the repeal of none of the Massachusetts Acts could be obtained by my engaging to pay for the Tea, the Boston Port Act excepted, and I insisting on a repeal of all, otherwise declining to make the offer, that measure was deferred for the present, and I pocketed my draughts. They concluded, however, to report my sentiments, and see if any further concession could be obtained. They observed, that I had signed my remarks, on which I said, that understanding by other means as well as from them, that the Ministers had been acquainted with my being consulted in this business, I saw no occasion for further mystery; and since in conveying and receiving through second hands their sentiments and mine, occasioned delay, and might be attended with misapprehension, something being lost or changed by mistake in the conveyance, I did not see why we should not meet, and discuss the points together at once; that if this was thought proper, I should be willing and ready to attend them to the ministerial persons they conferred with. They seemed to approve the proposal, and said they would mention it.

The next morning I met Lord Howe according to appointment. He seemed very cheerful, having, as I imagine, heard from Lord Hyde what that Lord might have heard from Mr. Barclay the evening of the 16th, viz: that I had consented to petition and engage payment for the Tea; whence it was hoped, the ministerial terms of accommodation might take place. He let me know that he was thought of to be sent Commissioner for settling the differences in America, adding, with an excess of politeness, that sensible of his own unacquaintedness with the business, and of my knowledge and abilities, he could not think of undertaking it without me; but with me, he should do it most readily; for he should found his expectation of success on my assistance; he therefore had desired this meeting to know my mind upon a proposition of my going with him in some shape or other, as a friend, an assistant, a secretary; that he was very sensible, if he should be so happy as to effect any thing valuable, it must be wholly owing to the advice and assistance I should afford him; that he should therefore make no scruple of giving me upon all occasions the full honour of it; that he had declared to the Ministers his opinion of my good dispositions towards peace, and what he now wished was to be authorized by me to say, that I consented to accompany him, and would co-operate with him in the great work of reconciliation; that the influence I had over the minds of people in America, was known to be very extensive; and that I could, if any man could, prevail with them to comply with reasonable propositions. I replied, that I was obliged to his Lordship for the favourable opinion he had of me, and for the honour he did me in proposing to make use of my assistance; that I wished to know what propositions were intended for America; that if they were reasonable ones in themselves, possibly I might be able to make them appear such to my countrymen; but if they were otherwise, I doubted whether that could be done by any man, and certainly I should not undertake it. His Lordship then said, that he should not expect my assistance without a proper consideration. That the business was of great importance, and if he undertook it, he should insist on being enabled to make generous and ample appointments for those he took with him, particularly for me; as well as a firm promise of subsequent rewards; and, said he, that the Ministry may have an opportunity of showing their good disposition towards yourself, will you give me leave, Mr. Franklin, to procure for you previously some mark of it; suppose the payment here of the arrears of your salary as agent for New-England, which I understand they have stopped for some time past? My Lord, said I, I shall deem it a great honour to be in any shape joined with your Lordship in so good a work; but if you hope service from any influence I may be supposed to have, drop all thoughts of procuring me any previous favours from Ministers; my accepting them would destroy the very influence you propose to make use of; they would be considered as so many bribes to betray the interest of my Country: but only let me see the propositions, and if I approve of them, I shall not hesitate a moment, but will hold myself ready to accompany your Lordship at an hour's warning. He then said, he wished I would discourse with Lord Hyde upon the business, and asked if I had any objection to meet his Lordship? I answered none, not the least; that I had a great respect for Lord Hyde, and would wait upon him whenever he should please to permit it. He said he would speak to Lord Hyde, and send me word.

On the Monday following I received a letter from Lord Howe. To understand it better, it is necessary to reflect, that in the mean time there was opportunity for Mr. Barclay to communicate to that Nobleman the remarks I had made on the plan, the sight of which had probably changed the purpose of making any use of me on the occasion. The letter follows:

Grafton-Street, February 20, 1775.

Not having had a convenient opportunity to talk with Lord Hyde until this morning, on the subject I mentioned when I had, my worthy friend, the pleasure to see you last, I now give you the earliest information of his Lordship's sentiments upon my proposition.

He declares he has no personal objection, and that he is always desirous of the conversation of men of knowledge, consequently, in that respect, would have a pleasure in yours. But he apprehends, that on the present American contest, your principles and his, or rather those of Parliament, are as yet so wide from each other, that a meeting merely to discuss them, might give you unnecessary trouble. Should you think otherwise, or should any propitious circumstances approximate such distant sentiments, he would be happy to be used as a channel to convey what might tend to harmony, from a person of credit to those in power: and I will venture to advance, from my knowledge of his Lordship's opinion of men and things, that nothing of that nature would suffer in the passage. I am, with a sincere regard, your most obedient servant,

HOWE.

To Dr. Franklin.

As I had no desire of obtruding myself upon Lord Hyde, though a little piqued at his declining to see me, I thought it best to show a decent indifference, which I endeavoured in the following answer:

Craven-Street, February 20, 1775.

Having nothing to offer on the American business, in addition to what Lord Hyde is already acquainted with from the papers that have passed, it seems most respectful not to give his Lordship the trouble of a visit; since a mere discussion of the sentiments contained in those papers is not, in his opinion, likely to produce any good effect. I am thankful, however, to his Lordship, for the permission of waiting on him, which I shall use if any thing occurs that may give a chance of utility in such an interview.

With sincere esteem and respect, I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

B. FRANKLIN.

Lord Howe.

On the morning of the same day, February 20, it was currently and industriously reported all over the Town, that Lord North would that day make a pacifick motion in the House of Commons, for healing all differences between Britain and America. The House was accordingly very full, and the members full of expectation. The Bedford party, inimical to America, and who had urged severe measures, were alarmed, and began to exclaim against the Minister for his timidity, and the fluctuation of his politicks; they even began to count voices, to see if they could not, by negating his motion, at once unhorse him, and throw him out of Administration. His friends were therefore alarmed for him, and there was much caballing and whispering. At length a motion, as one had been promised, was made, but whether that originally intended, is with me very doubtful: I suspect, from its imperfect composition, from its inadequateness to answer the purpose previously professed, and from some other circumstances, that when first drawn it contained more of Mr. Barclay's plan, but was curtailed by advice, just before it was delivered. My old proposition of giving up the regulating duties to the Colonies, was in part to be found in it, and many who knew nothing of that transaction, said it was the best part of the motion: it was as follows:

Lord North's Motion, February 20, 1775.

"That it is the opinion of this Committee, that when the Governour, Council, and Assembly, or General Court of His Majesty's Provinces or Colonies, shall propose to make provision according to their respective conditions, circumstances, and situations, for contributing their proportion to the common defence; such proportion to be raised under the authority of the General Court, or General Assembly of such Province or Colony, and disposable by Parliament; and shall engage to make provision also for the support of the Civil Government, and the administration of justice in such Province or Colony, it will be proper if such proposal shall be approved by His Majesty in Parliament, and for so long as such provision shall be made accordingly, to forbear in respect of such Province or Colony, to levy any duties, tax, or assessment, or to impose any further duty, tax, or assessment, except only such duties as it may be expedient to impose for the regulation of Commerce; the net produce of the duties last mentioned, to be carried to the account of such Province, Colony, or Plantation exclusively."

After a good deal of wild debate, in which this motion was supported upon various and inconsistent principles by the ministerial people, and even met with an opposition from some of them, which showed a want of concert, probably from the suddenness of the alterations above supposed, they all agreed at length, as usual, in voting it by a large majority. Hearing nothing all the following week from Messrs. Barclay and Fothergill, (except that Lord Hyde, when acquainted with my willingness to engage for payment of the Tea, had said it gave him new life,) nor any thing from Lord Howe, I mentioned his silence occasionally to his sister, adding, that I supposed it owing to his finding what he had proposed to me was not likely to take place; and I wished her to desire him, if that was the case, to let me know it by a line, that I might be at liberty to take other measures. She did so as soon as he returned from the country, where he had been for a day or two; and I received from her the following note; viz:

Mrs. Howe's compliments to Doctor Franklin: Lord Howe not quite understanding the message received from her, will be glad to have the pleasure of seeing him, either between twelve and one this morning; (the only hour he is at liberty this day,) at her house, or at any hour to-morrow most convenient to him.

Grafton-Street, Tuesday.

I met his Lordship at the hour appointed. He said that he had not seen me lately, as he expected daily to have something more material to say to me than had yet occurred; and hoped that I would have called on Lord Hyde, as I had intimated I should do when I apprehended it might be useful, which he was sorry to find I had not done. That there was something in my verbal message by Mrs. Howe, which perhaps she had apprehended imperfectly; it was the hint of my purpose to take other measures. I answered, that having since I had last seen his Lordship heard of the death of my wife at Philadelphia, in whose hands I had left the care of my affairs there, it was become necessary for me to return thither as soon as conveniently might be; that what his Lordship had proposed, of my accompanying him to America, might, if likely to take place, postpone my voyage to suit his convenience; otherwise, I should proceed by the first ship. That I did suppose, by not hearing from him, and by Lord North's motion, all thoughts of that kind were laid aside, which was what I only desired to know from him. He said my last paper of remarks by Mr. Barclay, wherein I had made the indemnification of Boston for the injury of stopping its Port, a condition of my engaging to pay for the Tea, (a condition impossible to be complied with,) had discouraged further proceeding on that idea. Having a copy of that paper in my pocket, I showed his Lordship that I had proposed no such condition of my engagement, nor any other than the repeal of all the Massachusetts Acts; that what followed relating to the indemnification was only expressing my private opinion that it would be just, but by no means insisting upon it. He said the arrangements were not yet determined on; that as I now explained myself, it appeared I had been much misapprehended; and he wished of all things I would see Lord Hyde, and asked if I would choose to meet him there, at Mrs. Howe's, or that he should call upon me: I said that I would by no means give Lord Hyde that trouble. That since he (Lord Howe) seemed to think it might be of use, and wished it done soon, I would wait upon Lord Hyde: I knew him to be an early riser, and would be with him at eight o'clock the next morning; which Lord Howe undertook to acquaint him with: but I added, that from what circumstances I could collect of the disposition of Ministry, I apprehended my visit would answer no material purpose. He was of a different opinion, to which I submitted.

The next morning, March 1st, I accordingly was early with Lord Hyde, who received me with his usual politeness. We talked over a great part of the dispute between the Countries. I found him ready with all the newspaper and pamphlet topics, of the expense of settling our Colonies, the protection afforded them, the heavy debt under which Britain laboured, the equity of our contributing to its alleviation; that many people in England were no more represented than we were, yet all were taxed and governed by Parliament, &c., &c. I answered all, but with little effect; for though his Lordship seemed civilly to hear what I said, I had reason to believe he attended very little to the purport of it, his mind being employed the while in thinking on what he himself purposed to say next. He had hoped, he said, that Lord North's motion would have been satisfactory; and asked what could be objected to it. I replied, the terms of it were, that we should grant money till Parliament had agreed we had given enough, without having the least share in judging of the propriety of the measure for which it was to be granted, or of our own abilities to grant; that these grants were also to be made under a threat of exercising a claimed right of taxing us at pleasure, and compelling such taxes by an armed force, if we did not give till it should be thought we had given enough; that the proposition was similar to no mode of obtaining aids that ever existed, except that of a highwayman, who presents his pistol at a coach window, demanding no specific sum, but if you will give all your money, or what he is pleased to think sufficient, he will civilly omit putting his own hand into your pockets: if not, there is his pistol: that the mode of raising contributions in an enemy's country was fairer than this, since there an explicit sum was demanded, and the people who were raising it knew what they were about, and when they should have done: and that, in short, no free people could ever think of beginning to grant upon such terms: that, besides, a new dispute had now been raised, by the Parliament's pretending to a power of altering our Charters and established Laws, which was of still more importance to us than their claim of taxation, as it set us all adrift, and left us without a privilege we could depend upon, but at their pleasure; this was a situation we could not possibly be in, and as Lord North's proposition had no relation to this matter, if the other had been such as we could have agreed to, we should still be far from a reconciliation. His Lordship thought I misunderstood the proposition; on which I took it out and read it: he then waived that point, and said he should be glad to know from me what would produce a reconciliation. I said that his Lordship, I imagined, had seen several proposals of mine for that purpose. He said he had; but some of my articles were such as would never be agreed to: that it was apprehended I had several instructions and powers to offer more acceptable terms, but was extremely reserved, and perhaps from a desire he did not blame, of doing better for my constituents; but my expectations might deceive me, and he did think, I might be assured, I should never obtain better terms than what were now offered by Lord North; that Administration had a sincere desire of restoring harmony with America, and it was thought if I would co-operate with them the business would be easy: that he hoped I was above retaining resentment against them, for what nobody now approved, and for which satisfaction might be made me: that I was, as he understood, in high esteem among the Americans; that if I would bring about a reconciliation on terms suitable to the dignity of Government, I might be as highly and generally esteemed here, and be honoured and rewarded perhaps beyond my expectation.

I replied, that I thought I had given a convincing proof of my sincere desire of promoting peace, when, on being informed that all wanted for the honour of Government was to obtain payment for the Tea, I offered, without any instruction to warrant my so doing, or assurance that I should be reimbursed, or my conduct approved, to engage for that payment, if the Massachusetts Acts were to be repealed; an engagement, in which I must have risked my whole fortune, which I thought few besides me would have done. That, in truth, private resentments had no weight with me in public business; that I was not the reserved man imagined, having really no secret instructions to act upon. That I was certainly willing to do every thing that could reasonably be expected of me. But if any supposed I could prevail with my countrymen to take black for white, and wrong for right, it was not knowing either them or me; they were not capable of being so imposed on, nor was I capable of attempting it. He then asked my opinion of sending over a Commissioner, for the purpose mentioned in a preceding part of this account, and my answer was to the same effect. By the way, I apprehend that to give me an opportunity of discoursing with Lord Hyde on that point, was a principal motive with Lord Howe for urging me to make this visit. His Lordship did not express his own sentiments upon it. And thus ended this conversation.

Three or four days after, I received the following note from Mrs. Howe:

"Mrs. Howe's compliments to Dr. Franklin; Lord Howe begs to have the pleasure of meeting him once more before he goes, at her house; he is at present out of Town, but returns on Monday, and any day or hour after that, that the Doctor will name, he will be very glad to attend him.

"Grafton-Street, Saturday, March 4 & 5."

I answered that I would do myself the honour of waiting on Lord Howe at her house the Tuesday following, at eleven o'clock. We met accordingly. He began, by saying, that I had been a better prophet than himself, in foreseeing that my interview with Lord Hyde would be of no great use; and then said that he hoped I would excuse the trouble he had given me, as his intentions had been good both towards me and the publick. He was sorry that at present there was no appearance of things going into the train he had wished, but that possibly they might yet take a more favourable turn; and as he understood I was going soon to America, if he should chance to be sent thither on that important business, he hoped he might still expect my assistance. I assured him of my readiness at all times of co-operating with him in so good a work; and so taking my leave, and receiving his good wishes, ended the negotiation with Lord Howe. And I heard no more of that with Messrs. Fothergill and Barclay. I could only gather from some hints in their conversation, that neither of them were well pleased with the conduct of the Ministers respecting these transactions; and a few days before I left London, I met them, by their desire, at the Doctor's house, when they desired me to assure their friends from them, that it was now their fixed opinion, that nothing could secure the privileges of America, but a firm, sober adherence to the terms of the Association made at the Congress, and that the salvation of English liberty depended now on the perseverance and virtue of America.

During the whole, my time was otherwise much taken up, by friends calling continually to inquire news from America; members of both Houses of Parliament, to inform me what passed in the Houses, and discourse with me on the debates, and on motions made or to be made; merchants of London, and of the manufacturing and port towns, on their petitions; the Quakers upon theirs, &c., &c.; so that I had no time to take notes of almost any thing. This account is therefore chiefly from recollection, in which doubtless much must have been omitted, from deficiency of memory; but what there is I believe to be pretty exact, except that discoursing with so many different persons about the same time, on the same subject, I may possibly have put down some things as said by or to one person, which passed in conversation with another. A little before I left London, being at the House of Lords, when a debate in which Lord Camden was to speak, and who indeed spoke admirably on American affairs, I was much disgusted, from the ministerial side, by many base reflections on American courage, religion, understanding, &c., in which we were treated with the utmost contempt, as the lowest of mankind, and almost of a different species from the English of Britain; but particularly the American honesty was abused by some of the Lords, who asserted that we were all knaves, and wanted only, by this dispute, to avoid paying our debts. That if we had any sense of equity or justice, we should offer payment of the Tea, &c. I went home somewhat irritated and heated; and partly to retort upon this Nation, on the article of equity, drew up a memorial to present to Lord Dartmouth before my departure; but consulting my friend, Mr. Thomas Walpole, upon it, who is a member of the House of Commons, he looked at it and at me several times alternately, as if he apprehended me a little out of my senses. As I was in the hurry of packing up, I requested him to take the trouble of showing it to his neighbour, Lord Camden, and ask his advice upon it, which he kindly undertook to do; and returned it me with a note, which here follows the proposed memorial:

A Memorial of BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Agent of the Province of MASSACHUSETTS-BAY.

Whereas an injury done, can only give the party injured a right to full reparation, or, in case that be refused, a right to return an equal injury; and whereas the blockade of Boston, now continued nine months, hath, every week of its continuance, done damage to that Town equal to what was suffered there by the India Company, it follows that such exceeding damage is an injury done by this Government, for which reparation ought to be made. And whereas reparation of injuries ought always (agreeably to the custom of all Nations, savage as well as civilized) to be first required before satisfaction is taken by a return of damage to the aggressors, which was not done by Great Britain in the instance above-mentioned, I, the underwritten, do therefore, as their agent, in the behalf of my Country and the Town of Boston, protest against the continuance of the said blockade; and I do hereby solemnly demand satisfaction for the accumulated injury done them, beyond the value of the India Company's Tea destroyed. And whereas the conquest of the Gulf of St. Laurence, the coasts of Labrador and Nova-Scotia, and the Fisheries possessed by the French there and on the Banks of Newfoundland, so far as they were more extended than at present, was made by the joint forces of Britain and the Colonies, (the latter having nearly an equal number of men in that service with the former,) it follows that the Colonies have an equitable and just right to participate in the advantage of those Fisheries: I do therefore, in the behalf of the Colony of the Massachusetts-Bay, protest against the Act now under consideration in Parliament for depriving that Province, with others, of that Fishery, (on pretence of their refusing to purchase British commodities,) as an Act highly unjust and injurious. And I give notice, that satisfaction will probably one day be demanded for all the injury that may be done and suffered in the execution of such Act; and that the injustice of the proceeding is likely to give such umbrage to all the Colonies, that in no future war, wherein other conquests may be meditated, either a man or a shilling will be obtained from any of them to aid such conquests, till full satisfaction be made as aforesaid.

B. FRANKLIN.

Given in London, this 16th day of March, 1775.

To Dr. FRANKLIN:

DEAR SIR: I return you the memorial, which it is thought might be attended with dangerous consequences to your person, and contribute to exasperate the Nation.

I heartily wish you a prosperous voyage, a long health, and am, with the sincerest regard, your most faithful and obedient servant,

THOMAS WALPOLE.

Lincoln's Inn Fields, 16th March, 1775.

Mr. Walpole called at my house the next day, and hearing I was gone to the House of Lords, came there to me, and repeated more fully what was in his note; adding, that it was thought my having no instructions directing me to deliver such a protest, would make it appear still more unjustifiable, and be deemed a national affront. I had no desire to make matters worse, and, being grown cooler, took the advice so kindly given me.

The evening before I left London I received a note from Dr. Fothergill, with some letters to his friends in Philadelphia. In that note he desires me to get those friends, "and two or three more together, and inform them, that whatever specious pretences are offered, they are all hollow; and that to get a larger field on which to fatten a herd of worthless parasites, is all that is regarded. Perhaps it may be proper to acquaint them with David Barclay's and our united endeavours, and the effects. They will stun at least, if not convince, the most worthy that nothing very favourable is intended, if more unfavourable articles cannot be obtained." The Doctor, in the course of his daily visits among the great, in the practice of his profession, had full opportunity of being acquainted with their sentiments, the conversation every where turning upon the subject of America.

DR. WHEELOCK TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Dartmouth College, March 22, 1775.

MUCH HONOURED SIR: I wrote you a few days ago by a stranger belonging to Simsbury, but fearing it may have miscarried, and not knowing but the contents may be of importance to the Colonies, as they appear to be to us in these frontiers, I don't seem to be excusable unless I have assurance that you are availed of the matter, and therefore trouble you with this line by my bookkeeper, Mr. Storrs.

Your honour well understands what a feeble, defenceless state this Seminary and all these frontier Towns are in; how near to the Canadians, and what an easy prey we may be to such a Northern army of Savages, &c., as we are threatened with.

We hear of preparations making for an invasion, and that some of the Warriours among the Indians were in high spirits to engage on the one side or the other in the present controversy; and if they shall not be secured in our interests they will likely join on the other side.

I have hitherto been secure and easy, as I have some of their children, from the most respectable tribes in Canada, whom I consider as hostages, and trust they will send for them before they will proceed to hostilities towards us.

I have also (notwithstanding my means of supporting the expense from abroad are wholly stopped) thought the importance of the case to be so great, that I have sent Mr. James Dean, a young gentleman of the most excellent and thorough accomplishments for the purpose, to itinerate as Missionary among those tribes this spring, for a few months, to strengthen that friendship and cultivate that acquaintance which has lately commenced between those tribes and this school; and to bring more of those boys hither with him if he can—among whom I expect the young Sachem, who was lately elected and crowned at Caghna-waga, (and who is a descendant from captivated parents,) as his father, who was here twelve months ago to visit his little son, who is with me, promised to send him as soon as certain rites, customary to ratify and publish such election and investiture, should be performed. I look upon this connection and friendship lately commenced between us and them to be at present our surest bulwark against an invasion, if it should be attempted.

Mr. Dean is thorough master of the languages of the Six Nations, and can also speak the Huron language. He is a young gentleman of learning, virtue, and great prudence; was early naturalized among the Indians; well understands their customs; is much esteemed by them as an orator, and has great interest in their affections, and is, in my opinion, the fittest man I know on earth to be employed, if there should be occasion for one among the Western and Northern Tribes. He was of opinion (though he had no thought of its being mentioned) that it would likely be in his power, if he should be properly encouraged and authorized thereto, to attach all the Six Nations firmly to the interest of these Colonies; and I don't think he misjudged his ability or influence for that purpose. What I have wrote you will naturally understand to have been only from a principle of self-preservation, and it will be injurious to me and the cause which is my object if it should be represented as militating against the Crown.

With confidence in your prudence and friendship, and with much respect and esteem, your honour's most obedient and very humble servant,

ELEAZAR WHELOCK.

I expect Mr. Dean here in May.

LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED BOSTON, MARCH 22, 1775.

We are still without any of your favours, we suppose for the same reason as was mentioned in our last. Since the Army have found that the season is past for nature's forming a bridge from hence, they become abusive and insulting. They are now finishing their fortifications on the Neck, by picketing on each side. We propose to give you an account of the manœuvres of our adversaries as they may occur.

The 16th instant, (being recommended by the Provincial Congress to be observed as a day of fasting and prayer;) on the morning of this day the society at the west end of Boston were greatly disturbed by a party of Officers and Soldiers of the Fourth, or King's own Regiment. When the people were assembling, they brought two marquee tents, and pitched them within about ten yards of the meeting-house; then sent for three drums and three fifes, and kept them beating and playing till service was over; Colonel Maddison was present part of the time.

17th. In the evening Colonel Hancock's elegant seat, situate near the Common, was attacked by a number of Officers, who, with their swords, cut and hacked the fence before his house in a most scandalous manner, and behaved very abusively, by breaking people's windows, and insulting almost every person they met.

18th. The Neck Guard seized 13,425 musket cartridges with ball, (we suppose through the information of some dirty scoundrel, of which we now have many among us,) and about three hundred pounds of ball, which they were carrying into the country; this was private property. The owner applied to the General first, but he absolutely refused to deliver it. They abused the teamster very much, and run a bayonet into his neck. The same evening a number of Officers, heated with liquor, (as is said,) with drawn swords, ran through the streets, like what they really were, madmen, cutting every one they met; the stage coach just arrived from Providence passing by, they attacked it, broke the glass, and abused the passengers; the driver, being a smart fellow, jumped off his seat, caught one of them, (Captain Gore, of the Fifth,) and some blows passed; when the Officer retired, not much to his credit.

19th. Colonel Hancock was again much insulted by a number of inferior Officers and Privates, who entered his enclosures, and refused to retire after his requesting them so to do, telling him that his house, stables, &c., would soon be theirs, and then they would do as they pleased. However, on his application to the General, he immediately sent one of his Aids-de-Camp to the Officer of the Guard, at the bottom of the Common, to seize any Officer or Private who should molest Colonel Hancock or any inhabitant in their lawful calling. Yours, &c.

TO JOHN DICKINSON, ESQUIRE,

One of the reputed Authors of the PENNSYLVANIA FARMER'S LETTERS, published on occasion of the AMERICAN Revenue Acts, in Mr. GRENVILLE's Administration.

New-York, March 23, 1775.

SIR: I live at least two hundred and twenty miles from Philadelphia, and am frequently a fortnight without receiving a Newspaper. That happens to be the case at present, as I have only just now read the Resolves of your Convention.* This letter, Sir, shall be publick, only because the people of Pennsylvania are taught to believe the author of the Farmer's Letters is infallible. Nasce te ipsum, is the advice of a wise man, and as difficult to be attained by some, as to be translated by others. I am a plain, honest man, Sir, who never received a favour from the hand of power. My composition is simple, and easily defined. I have been at a great deal of pains to learn the true character of Mr. Dickinson; have asked it repeatedly from Whig and Tory; and as I know myself to be void of prejudice on account of difference in opinion, will take the liberty to mention what I have been able to discover. You are a gentleman of good natural understanding, great reading, and engaging address. You early found yourself possessed of knowledge, and the means by which you first obtained popularity were in many instances laudable. But the praises of the multitude are dangerous, even to a virtuous man; they gain his confidence by their applause, and feed the innocent vanity of the human mind, until he at last surrenders up his judgment, joins in the popular error, and finds, when too late, he was wedded to his wo. If I am rightly informed, Sir, (and my authority is not bad,) you are worth at least Forty Thousand Pounds Sterling; entertain elegantly, as often as your constitution will admit of; and are blest with as sweet a tongue as ever delivered the language of profusion; a lawyer, too. I wish I had forgot that circumstance; ignorance of the laws might plead in mitigation of the breach of them; but how are we to account for the late conduct of the highly lettered, the accomplished Mr. Dickinson? In your Farmer's Letters, you breathe the gentle accents of order and decorum; you positively pronounce that the King is the ruling power, in whom is justly vested the regulations of Trade, &c. You wrote then, Sir, as if you thought your Country injured; I am sorry to say you now act as if you repented of propriety. I have not those Letters by me at present, but I read them as they came out, with great attention. I was told the author was a young man, who loved, like other men of abilities, to be known and admired; and notwithstanding I perceived many sentiments calculated to feed the popular appetite, yet almost every line told the admiring reader they were the production of a gentleman. Now, Sir, let me request of you to turn over once more those leaves of genius; compare your words at that time with your present actions; though much you are altered, you cannot read those papers without recollecting what you were; and I think that modesty which marks your character, must make you blush for what you are. I perfectly remember your asserting the dependance of the Colonies on Great Britain in the most positive terms, and you have now set your seal to a resolution of taking up arms against your Sovereign, unless King, Lords, and Commons relinquish their claim to the very privileges which, seven years ago, you spent whole pages in defending their right to. It is true that mad resolve contains a proviso; but permit me to assure you, it would have done your understanding more honour to have omitted it. What! deliver a petition to the greatest monarch on earth with one hand, and hold a sword in the other, with a paper on the point of it, containing the following words: "If you do not give up your legal authority over the Colonies, we will break off all connexion with you, and, by withholding certain articles, we will drive Great Britain, Ireland, and the West-Indies into such convulsions, as will shake your Throne, and enable us to command our own terms." I appeal to your heart, is not this a fair representation? The best and most sensible men are often easy and unsuspecting, and (pardon the expression) too often the dupes of aspiring villany. It is difficult to write on this subject, without transgressing the bounds of delicacy. Your private character, Sir, is amiable, and incapable of deliberate error; so that the censure which your political one justly merits, ought to be tenderly and politely administered. This I have endeavoured to observe, notwithstanding truth frequently loses its weight when destitute of severity. Is it possible, Sir, that a man of your penetration should expect or wish that Great Britain should be bullied into abject submission? My hand trembles at the next sentence. If you love or honour her, your prayers now are, that every resolve of the Congress (except to keep sheep to a proper age) may be treated with the utmost contempt; if you do not love her, I am sorry for it. You have too much sense to join in the idle opinion which some have adopted, that to obtain enough, you must demand too much. You are a man of spirit, I dare say, and I beg leave to ask, if you had been so unfortunate as to offend a gentleman, and offered to make an apology, would you submit to acknowledge yourself a fool or a coward? Inexpediency and right are two different things; but if Parliament thought proper to relax, it would be very immaterial to the Colonies through which channel they enjoyed the blessings of peace. But, alas! Peace, with all her loveliness, has few admirers. Sedition, that battered hag, steps forth with all the frippery of delusive tinsel—the admiring crowd pursue with eager eyes—to all she promises the wished event. “Fear not, my faithful sons, my bold Republicans, the time draws nigh when honours shall be dealt out with a liberal hand; my spiritual agents in New-England shall roll in chariots; my favourite Adams shall be head of their mightinesses; the name of King shall not be known among us; our Troops shall be commanded by the famous wanderer, Lee; and you, Mr. Dickinson, shall be Prime Council to the States General.” Whether you believe this or not, I will be answerable it is the creed of your morning star in Market-Street, and of your new puritanick relation, Charles Thomson, who grins horribly on all a ghastly smile.

* January 23 to 28, 1775.

Now, Sir, permit a man who has been an eye witness to the unhappy consequences of one rebellion, to warn you of impending misery. You are too well acquainted with the human heart not to know that an English Senator is as capable of resenting an injury, as any member of the Grand Continental Congress. Consider, Sir, when the people of England speak, it comes from the mouths of cannon, backed by men whose approved courage and ardour have rendered them the terror of those enemies, a few of whom (were it not for the protection of Old England last war) would have laid your estates, as well as those of your neighbours, under heavy contributions.

I am at a loss what name to give your boasted intentions of wounding the commercial interest of Great Britain. If you really mean what you say, it is the grossest infatuation. The Island of Teneriffe might, with as great a prospect of success, threaten to ruin Willing and Morris, by not trading with them, when every other corner of the habitable globe pants for their correspondence.

Let an old man entreat you, Sir, to consider the people who look to you; the lower order of men in Pennsylvania are as bigoted to you, as the deluded papists to their Priests in Ireland.

Our gracious Sovereign, ever watchful over the lives and happiness of his subjects, has made choice of a man, whose persevering humanity and unshaken steadiness in the discharge of his present complicated and important command, reflect the highest honour on the judgment of his master, and will stand unparalleled in the records of merit. And would you, Sir, wish to counteract the godlike work of preventing bloodshed in the Colonies, and a disgraceful submission on the part of the Mother Country? Figure to yourself the sword unsheathed; a soldiery (who knows no stop) let loose at men, women, and children, with the word rebellion ringing in their ears; and to complete the dreadful picture, the Lords of the Ocean thundering the resentment of the British Nation through your houses and the cradles of your guiltless offspring. This, Sir, is not chimerical; I believe the probability of it as much as I do proofs of Holy Writ. From your private character, I suppose there is no man who would more readily dry up the tears of the widow, and pour balm into the wounds of the infant; but remember, Sir, if you are a principal in promoting them, your good offices will be considered as a death-bed repentance.

SENEX.

TO THE COMMITTEE OF INSPECTION FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, March 23, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: While the late Committee of fifty-one acted as a Committee of Correspondence for the City, the generality of its inhabitants, particularly the most sensible and judicious part of them, were happy in reposing the trust with so respectable a body, composed as it was of the principal citizens; but when the present Committee was formed out of the ruins, as I may say, of the old Committee, was there a cool, considerate man among us who did not forebode evil?

It has been remarked, that we have but one Press in this Colony which has been at all times strictly impartial. Now an impartial Press is observed, for reasons best known to themselves, to be extremely obnoxious to a certain party; they have not failed to persecute their supporters in all parts of America. And that we have had our share of the same persecuting spirit, may be seen in the Republican Resolves at and near Elizabethtown—Resolves that are subversive of the very idea of freedom. You, gentlemen, who compose our City Committee, to show that you are as highly seasoned with the old leaven, seem only to have waited for an opportunity of playing the same game; and before the occasion could well be said to have arrived,* you greedily descend, like a hawk upon his prey, and seize the poor Printer in your talons; meanly condescending to be the echo of little, piddling, Country Committees. But let me caution you to beware how you tread upon this hal-lowed ground, lest, instead of the Printer's, you work your own downfall.

The liberty of the Press is a sacred privilege; it is the only means in the hands of the people, that can be safely used to check the growth of arbitrary power. Should those who have fixed themselves as sentinels upon the watch-tower of liberty, to give notice of all invaders, be the first to curtail this darling immunity, will it not give the people cause to suspect that they themselves are about to establish a power more arbitrary and tyrannical than any thing we have hitherto complained of? Will not a severe reprehension for what can be scarcely called a crime in a Printer, coming from a quarter that could have been the least suspected, raise alarming apprehensions in the minds of their fellow-citizens? The tenour of your publication speaks for itself, and needs no comment; it does not appear as barely intended to rectify the errors of the Press, but it breathes a spirit of intimidation towards the Printer. Were I to put the same sentiment into plainer language, I should translate it thus: “Beware, Mr. Printer, we, the Grand Committee of New-York, are not to be trifled with! Ours is a sacred body! and must not be made the sport of Printers or their devils. Abuse the Parliament as much as you list, glut your spleen upon the House of Assembly, but come not within the verge of our jurisdiction, at your utmost peril.”

In your eagerness to censure the Printer, you forgot to inform us what you had done; we are only told what you have not done, but are left in the dark as to the foundation for the report in question, though it is still believed that something passed in your Committee respecting the nomination or election of Delegates, but what this was is artfully concealed from us.

If you are afraid of your conduct being misrepresented, why are not your proceedings published? Your office is of so extraordinary a nature, that your conduct will be canvassed by thousands who never converse with any of your members. It is the peculiar excellency of the British Constitution, that the proceedings of all publick bodies should be freely discussed; and amidst so many inquirers, it is scarcely possible to avoid some misrepresentations; to guard against which, nothing is more necessary than to lay the particulars before the publick, and if any censure is due at all, it is to a neglect of this precaution.

ANTI-TYRANNICUS.

New-York, Thursday, March 23, 1775.

On Monday afternoon, expresses arrived in Town from the County of Cumberland, in this Province, who bring accounts from thence of a very extraordinary and alarming nature, on the Monday afternoon preceding, March 13th, the day for holding the Inferiour Courts, several rioters and disorderly persons, to the number of between eighty and ninety, assembled at the Court-House, of which they took possession, with an avowed intent of preventing the Court from being held the next day; many of them had arms, and those who were unprovided for were collecting both arms and ammunition with all possible despatch. Many of the Magistrates having come to Town, it was thought advisable that the Sheriff should make the usual proclamation against riotous assemblies, and demand possession of the

* The reader is requested to compare the Resolves of the Committee with those of Parliament, on the subject of common report, and then he will see clearly the dangerous tendency of all assumed powers.

Resolved, That common report is not a sufficient authority for any Printer in this City to publish any matters as facts relative to this Committee, &c.

1 Car. I, 1625.—Resolved, That common fame is a good ground of proceedings for this House, either by inquiry, or presenting the complaint (if the House find cause) to the King and Lords.

Vide Lex Parliamentaria, where it is recited by the authority of Rushworth, one of the Republican party, and Secretary to Lord Fairfax.

Court-House and Jail, which being refused several times, about nine o'clock at night a party assembled in order to disperse the rioters; these proceeded with the Sheriff and some Magistrates to the Court-House where proclamation was again made by the Sheriff for the rioters to disperse, and sundry attempts were made to get in, without using fire-arms, but this proving ineffectual, three guns were fired over the door in hopes the rioters would be intimidated and retire; but so determined were they in their undertaking, that the fire was immediately returned from the Court-House, by which one of the Magistrates was slightly wounded, and another person shot through his clothes. The Magistrates seeing the imminent danger they were in, so well exerted themselves, that they forced the front door, and after a very smart engagement, wherein one of the rioters was killed, and many persons on both sides wounded, the Court-House was cleared, and proper measures taken to preserve the peace for that night. The next morning all was tumult and disorder; the Judges, however, opened the Court at the usual hour, and adjourned till three o'clock in the afternoon; but by this time, the body of rioters beginning to assemble in large parties from New-Hampshire, and places adjacent, and particularly from Bennington, in the neighbouring County of Albany, with a hostile appearance, and the Court foreseeing no probability of being able to proceed to business, adjourned till next June term. The body of rioters, which soon amounted to upwards of five hundred, surrounded the Court-House, took the Judges, the Justices, the Sheriff, the Clerk, and as many more of their friends as they could find, into close custody, and sent parties out, who were daily returning with more prisoners; the roads and passages were guarded with armed men, who indiscriminately laid hold of all passengers against whom any of the party intimated the least suspicion; and the mob, stimulated by their leaders to the utmost fury and revenge, breathed nothing but blood and slaughter against the unfortunate persons in their power. The only thing which suspended their fate was a difference of opinion as to the manner of destroying them. And from the violence and inhumanity of the disposition apparent in the rioters, it is greatly to be feared that some of the worthy men in confinement will fall a sacrifice to the brutal fury of a band of ruffians, before timely aid can be brought to their assistance.

TO THE WORTHY INHABITANTS OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, March 23, 1775.

Permit a stranger expelled from his habitation, and inhumanly abused by an insolent and persecuting rabble, who have long dealt destruction around them with impunity, to submit his unmerited sufferings to your compassionate attention. Seized, like the vilest malefactor, without the shadow of offence; condemned by a mock tribunal; severely and ignominiously beaten; stripped of his whole substance; compelled to abandon his wife and children in a distant County to the care of Providence; and plunged into want and distress, he has no place of refuge but in this hospitable City. It is his only consolation, amidst the most painful reflections, to flatter himself, that when this unhappy case is made publick, he will not only receive from Government the protection due to an innocent and much injured subject, but will partake of that benevolence from individuals for which the citizens of New-York are justly celebrated. He wishes to make no comment on the circumstances related in the following deposition; they admit of no aggravation.

BENJAMIN HOUGH.

City of New-York, ss.

Benjamin Hough, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Charlotte, being duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, deposeth and saith: That on or about the 26th day of January last past, about eight o'clock in the morning, this deponent being at some distance from his dwelling-house, but in view thereof, observed three persons stop at his door, and enter his said house, this deponent's whole family (except a child of about six years of age) being absent; that immediately thereafter this deponent was attacked by about thirty persons, a number of whom were armed with firelocks, swords, and hatchets; that upon their approach this deponent attempted to get into his house to secure his arms and stand upon his defence; but that this deponent observing that Winthrop Hoyt, of Bennington, one of the three persons this deponent had observed going into his house, stood at the threshold of this deponent's door, with this deponent's sword and pistol in his hands, he, this deponent, found it would be to no purpose either to attempt to escape or to make resistance; that thereupon Peleg Sunderland, of the said County of Charlotte, came up to this deponent with a hatchet in his hand, and slapping this deponent on the shoulder, told him he was his prisoner; that he, the said Peleg Sunderland, and the other persons who were with him, forced this deponent into a sleigh, and carried him about fifty miles to the southward of this deponent's place of residence, to a place by them called Sunderland, where they kept this deponent until the 30th day of the said month of January in close confinement, part of the time bound, and always under a strong guard, with drawn swords. That Sylvanus Brown, James Meed, Samuel Campbell, one Dwinels, one Powers, Stephen Meed, one Booley, and one Lymen, were among the persons who so seized and detained this deponent; and with respect to the rest of them, they were either strangers to this deponent, or he cannot recollect their names at present; that while they had this deponent so in custody at Sunderland, some of the said rioters informed this deponent that he could not have his trial till the Monday following, because they intended to send for Ethan Allen and Seth Warner, who were then at Bennington, and who are two of the principal ringleaders of the Bennington mob. That on the said 30th day of January, the said rioters appointed a Court for the trial of this deponent, which consisted of the following persons, to wit: The said Ethan Allen, Seth Warner, Robert Cochran, Peleg Sunderland, James Meed, Gideon Warren, and Jesse Sawyer, and they being seated, ordered this deponent to be brought before them; that he was accordingly brought before them as a prisoner, guarded by persons with drawn swords; that thereupon the said Ethan Allen laid the three following accusations to the charge of this deponent, to wit:

1st. That this deponent had complained to the Government of New-York of their (the said rioters) mobbing and injuring Benjamin Spencer, Esq., and other persons.

2d. That the deponent had dissuaded and discouraged the people from joining the mob in their proceedings; and,

3d. That the deponent had taken a commission of the peace under the Government of New-York, and exercised his office as a Magistrate for the County of Charlotte; alleging that this deponent well knew that they (the mob) did not allow of any Magistrate there.

And that after the said accusations were so made, the said Ethan Allen told the deponent that he was at liberty to plead for himself, if he had any thing to say; that this deponent then demanded of him, the said Ethan Allen, and the rest of his pretended Judges, whether he, this deponent, had ever done injustice to any man in the execution of his office as a Magistrate? To which they answered, that they could not charge him with any injustice in the execution of his office, nor had they any complaint of that kind to make against him; Warner, in particular, declaring that he would as willingly have him for a Magistrate as any man whatever; but that they would not, under their present circumstances, suffer any Magistrate at all. That the deponent then asked the said pretended Judges, whether they could accuse this deponent of busying himself or intermeddling with respect to titles of lands? To which the said Ethan Allen answered in the negative; and that they had not heard, nor did they pretend to charge him with any thing of that kind; that the deponent then added, that with respect to their three charges against him, he admitted them to be true; that he had made such complaint to the Government of New-York of the proceedings of the said rioters against the said Benjamin Spencer and others; that he had used his endeavours to dissuade people from joining the said rioters in their proceedings; and that he has accepted a commission from the said Government for, and exercised the office of, a Magistrate for the said County of Charlotte; and that all this he had a good right to do, and looked upon as his duty. That after some further argumentation, the said pretended Judges withdrew to another house to consider of their judgment, and in about two or three hours returned to the door of the house where the deponent remained, and ordered him to be brought out near a tree, where the said pretended Judges had placed themselves, encircled by a number of armed men, into the midst of which circle this deponent was conducted as a prisoner, by four men with drawn swords; and that thereupon the said Ethan Allen, who all along acted as the chief or principal Judge, pronounced the following sentence against this deponent, which he read from a paper which he held in his hand, to wit: That they had erected a combination of judicious men for his trial, and had accused him in the manner before mentioned, [repeating the accusations,] that the deponent had pleaded self-justification, which they, the said pretended Judges, had found insufficient to excuse him from punishment; and that therefore their judgment was, that the deponent should be tied up to a tree, and receive two hundred lashes on the naked back, and then, as soon as he should be able, should depart the New-Hampshire Grants, and not return again upon pain of receiving five hundred lashes; that upon some persons observing that he, this deponent, ought not to be suffered to return while matters remained in their present condition, the said Allen added, no—not till His Majesty's pleasure shall be known in the premises. That thereupon this deponent immediately had his clothes taken off, and he was stripped to the skin, and four persons being, by the said pretended Court, appointed to carry the said sentence into execution, this deponent accordingly received the two hundred lashes upon his naked back, with whips of cords, which lashes were inflicted by each of the said executioners, giving the deponent alternately a number of lashes, though at the close he thinks he received from each of them ten; that the said Robert Cochran, who declared himself to be Adjutant of the rioters, stood, during the whole scene, near this deponent, and frequently urged the said executioners to lay on the blows well and strike harder, and particularly repeated such directions with respect to the last ten inflicted by each of the said executioners; that it was often mentioned by some of the rioters, that if any of this deponent's friends should intercede, or in any manner favour him, they should share the same fate. That the aforesaid Winthorp Hoyt, of Bennington, who professed himself to be Drum-Major, Abel Benedict, of Arlington, and one John Sawyer, and a person whose name this deponent could not learn, were the four persons who so whipped this deponent; that this deponent was very much wounded, and bled considerably by the said abuse; and the deponent being very faint, was put into the care of Dr. Washburn, who conducted him into a house; that the deponent declared to the said rioters, that it was a great hardship that he was not suffered to go home to take care of his interest and child, who was left without father or mother, the deponent's wife being absent on a distant visit to her parents. That the rioters notwithstanding insisted that the sentence should be put in execution, and the deponent leave the country accordingly. And the deponent further saith, that after he had been so abused, the said Ethan Allen delivered him a paper in writing, signed by him and Seth Warner, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"This may certify the inhabitants of the New-Hampshire Grants, that Benjamin Hough hath this day received a full punishment for his crimes committed heretofore against this Country, and our inhabitants are ordered to give him, the said Hough, a free and unmolested passport toward the City of New-York, or to the westward of our Grants, he behaving as becometh. Given under our hands the day and date aforesaid.

ETHAN ALLEN,
SETH WARNER."

And he, this deponent, having received his strength, the next day proceeded on foot on his journey toward the City of New-York; that while this deponent was in custody of the said rioters, he heard the said Ethan Allen say, that he expected that they should be obliged to drive off all the damned Durhamites, [meaning the inhabitants of the Town of Durham, in the County of Charlotte,] that this deponent frequently heard the said rioters declare that they would have little Walker [meaning Daniel Walker,] and Thomas Bratea, (the Constable who served under this deponent) if they could be found above ground; and that they further threatened that they would, for the future, be more severe with the damned Yorkers, [meaning persons who would not join with them in their riotous proceedings,] and would whip them within an inch of their lives; that for the future, they would not be at the trouble and expense of giving them a trial, but that the persons who met with them should punish them immediately; that this deponent, while he was so confined, heard the said rioters further declare, that they were sorry they had not inflicted upon Doctor Adams [who lived in Arlington, and against whom they had taken offence] five hundred lashes, instead of hoisting him up and exposing him upon landlord Fay's sign-post, where was fixed a dead catamount; and that this deponent also heard the said Ethan Allen declare in the said mob, that he expected shortly to have a fight with the damned Yorkers, for that they would hear how the mob had abused their Magistrates; but that he believed them to be damned cowards, or that they would have come out against them long before; that this deponent, on his way to New-York, called at the house of Bliss Willoughby and Ebenezer Cole, Esquires, two of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the County of Albany, residing near Bennington; that he found them armed, in great distress and danger, and having people in their houses ready to take arms for their defence in case they should be attacked by the rioters, which, as they assured this deponent, they hourly expected; that this deponent, on his way to New-York, also called at Pownall Town, part of which lies within the Manor of Rensselaerwyck, (as this deponent has been informed by the inhabitants of the said Town,) that he found the said inhabitants in great commotion and uneasiness on account of the said rioters; that he understood from some of the said inhabitants, that they had agreed to take leases for their possessions under the proprietors of the said Manor, but that they dared not for fear of the said rioters, who had threatened them severely; and one of the said inhabitants in particular, told this deponent that he had taken a lease for his farm of the said proprietor, but should, on that account, be obliged to give it up; that when this deponent left the said Pownall Town, he met George Gardiner, Esquire, of Pownall Town aforesaid, also one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said County of Albany, who told the deponent that the state of the said Town was very dangerous and difficult; that he expected every day to be prevented by the rioters from exercising his office; that he was apprehensive that unless Government should give them some protection, many of the inhabitants of the said Town would join the said rioters, and earnestly entreated this deponent to exert his utmost endeavours to procure such protection; that this deponent, on his way to New-York, conversed with James Clark, [who was in his employ,] and who informed this deponent (and which this deponent verily believes to be true) that since this deponent was so seized by the said mob, John Lord, Joseph Randel, and Clark, three of this deponent's neighbours, had been very much abused and insulted by the said mob, and that the said John Law was turned out of his possession and obliged to fly the Country. And the deponent further says, that the said mob robbed him of his arms, to wit: a hanger and pistol, which he has not been able since to procure; and the deponent further saith that he hath frequently been informed, and believes it to be true, that the said rioters have a design to put an end to law and justice in the County of Cumberland, and that they went so far as to appoint a day upon which to make the attempt, but it did not then take place; and further this deponent saith not.

B. HOUGH.

Sworn before me, the 7th day of March, 1775.

DAN. HORSMANDEN.

A RELATION OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTY OF CUMBERLAND, AND PROVINCE OF NEW-YORK.

Cumberland County, March 23, 1775.

In June, 1774, there were some Letters came to the Supervisors of said County from the Committee of Correspondence at New-York, signed by their Chairman, Mr. Low; which Letters said Supervisors, through ignorance or intention, kept until September, when they had another meeting; and it is supposed that they intended always to have kept them; and the good people would have remained in ignorance about them until this time had it not been by accident that it was whispered abroad, so that Doctor Reuben Jones, of Rockingham, and Captain Azariah Wright, of Westminster, heard of it, and took proper care to notify those Towns.

A meeting was called in the two Towns aforesaid, and a Committee was chosen by each Town to wait on the Supervisors at their meeting in September, to see if there were any papers that should be laid before the several Towns in the County, and they found that there were papers come from the Committee of Correspondence that should have been laid before the Towns in June. The Supervisors made many excuses for their conduct; some plead ignorance, and some one thing and some another: but the most of them did seem to think that they could send a return to the Committee at New-York, without ever laying them before their constituents, which principle, at this day, so much prevails, that it is the undoing of the people. Men at this day are so tainted with the principles of tyranny, that they would fain believe that as they are chosen by the people to any kind of office, for any particular thing, that they have the sole power of that people by whom they are chosen, and can act in the name of that people in any matter or thing, though it is not in any connection with what they were chosen for. But the Committees would not consent to have a return made, until every Town in the County had Mr. Low's letters laid before them, which was done, and a County Congress was called, return was made, a Committee was chosen to see that it was put in print, but, through interest or otherwise, it never was published in any of the papers.

Immediately after the people of the County aforesaid received the Resolves of the Continental Congress, they called a County Congress, and did adopt all the Resolves of the Continental Congress as their Resolves, promising religiously to adhere to that Agreement or Association. There was a Committee of Inspection moved for, to be chosen by the County according to the second Resolve of the Association aforesaid; but being much spoken against by a Justice and an Attorney, and looked upon by them as a childish, impertinent thing, the Delegates dared not choose one. At this time there were Tory parties forming, although they were under disguise, and had laid a plan to bring the lower sort of the people into a state of bondage and slavery. They saw that there was no cash stirring, and they took that opportunity to collect debts, knowing that men had no other way to pay them than by having their estates taken by execution and sold at vendue. There were but very few men among us that were able to buy, and those men were so disposed that they would take all the world into their own hands without paying any thing for it, if they could by law, which would soon bring the whole Country into slavery. Most or all of our men in authority, and all that wanted Court favours, seemed much enraged, and stirred up many vexatious lawsuits, and imprisoned many contrary to the laws of this Province and the statutes of the Crown. One man they put into close prison for high treason, and all that they proved against him was, that he said if the King had signed the Quebeck Bill, it was his opinion that he had broke his coronation oath. But the good people went and opened the prison door and let him go, and did no violence to any man's person or property.

Our men in office would say that they did like the Resolutions of the Continental Congress, and they ought to be strictly adhered to until our General Assembly voted against them. Then they said that this would do for the Bay-Province, but it was childish for us to pay any regard to them. Some of our Court would boldly say that the King had a just right to make the Revenue Acts, for he had a supreme power, and he that said otherwise was guilty of high treason, and they did hope that they would be executed accordingly. The people were of opinion that such men were not suitable to rule over them, and as the General Assembly of this Province would not accede to the Association of the Continental Congress, the good people were of opinion that if they did accede to any power from or under them, they should be guilty of the breach of the 14th Article of that Association, and may justly be dealt with accordingly by all America. When the good people considered that the General Assembly were for bringing them into a state of slavery, (which did appear plain by their not acceding to the best method to procure their liberties, and the Executive power so strongly acquiescing in all that they did, whether it was right or wrong,) the good people of said County thought it time to look to themselves; and they thought that it was dangerous to trust their lives and fortunes in the hands of such enemies to American liberty, but more particularly unreasonable that there should be any Court held, since thereby we must accede to what our General Assembly had done, in not acceding to what the whole Continent had recommended, and that all America would break off all dealings and commerce with us, and bring us into a state of slavery at once. Therefore, in duty to God, ourselves, and posterity, we thought ourselves under the strongest obligations to resist and to oppose all authority that would not accede to the Resolves of the Continental Congress. But knowing that many of our Court were men that neither feared or regarded men, we thought that it was most prudent to go and persuade the Judges to stay at home. Accordingly there were about forty good true men went from Rockingham to Chester, to dissuade Colonel Chandler, the Chief Judge, from attending Court. He said he believed it would be for the good of the County not to have any Court as things were, but there was one case of murder that they must see to, and if it was not agreeable to the people they would not have any other case. One of the Committee told him that the Sheriff would raise a number with arms, and that there would be bloodshed. The Colonel said that he would give his word and honour that there should not be any arms brought against us, and he would go down to Court on Monday the 13th of March instant, which was the day that the Court was to be opened. We told him that we would wait on him if it was his will. He said that our company would be very agreeable; likewise he returned us his hearty thanks for our civility, and so we parted with him.

We heard from the Southern part of the State that Judge Sabin was very earnest to have the Law go on, as well as many petty officers. There were but two Judges in the County at that time, Colonel Wells being gone to New-York. There was a great deal of talk in what manner to stop the Court, and at length it was agreed on to let the Court come together, and lay the reasons we had against their proceeding before them, thinking they were men of such sense that they would hear them. But on Friday we heard that the Court was going to take the possession of the house on the 13th instant, and to keep a strong guard at the doors of said house, that we could not come in. We being justly alarmed by the deceit of our Court, though it was not strange, therefore we thought proper to get to Court before the armed guards were placed, for we were determined that our grievances should be laid before the Court before it was opened. On Monday the 13th of March instant, there were about one hundred of us entered the Court-House about four o'clock in the afternoon. But we had but just entered before we were alarmed by a large number of men, armed with guns, swords and pistols. But we in the house had not any weapons of war among us, and were determined that they should not come in with their weapons of war except by the force of them.

Esquire Patterson came up at the head of his armed company, within about five yards of the door, and commanded us to disperse; to which he got no answer. He then caused the King's Proclamation to be read, and told us that if we did not disperse in fifteen minutes, by God he would blow a lane through us. We told him that we would not disperse. We told them that they might come in if they would unarm themselves, but not without. One of our men went out at the door and asked them if they were come for war; told them that we were come for peace, and that we should be glad to hold a parley with them. At that, Mr. Gale, the Clerk of the Court, drew a pistol, held it up, and said, d—n the parley with such d—d rascals as you are; I will hold no parley with such d—d rascals but by this—holding up his pistol. They gave us very harsh language; told us we should be in hell before morning, but after a while they drew a little off from the house and seemed to be in consultation. Three of us went out to treat with them; but the most, or all that we could get from them was, that they would not talk with such d—d rascals as we were, and we soon returned to the house and they soon went off.

Colonel Chandler came in and we laid the case before him, and told him that we had his word that there should not be any arms brought against us. He said that the arms were brought without his consent, but he would go and take them away from them, and we should enjoy the house undisturbed until morning, and that the Court should come in the morning without arms, and should hear what we had to lay before them, and then he went away. We then went out of the house and chose a Committee, which drew up Articles to stand for, and read them to the company, and they were voted nem. con. dis., and some of our men went to the neighbours, and as many as the Court and their party saw they bound.

About midnight, or a little before, the sentry at the door espied some men with guns, and he gave the word to man the doors and the walk was crowded. Immediately the Sheriff and his company marched up fast, within about ten rods of the door, and then the word was given, take care, and then, fire! Three fired immediately. The word fire was repeated; G—d d—n you, fire; send them to hell, was most or all the words that were to be heard for some time; on which there were several men wounded; one was shot with four bullets, one of which went through his brain, of which wound he died next day. Then they rushed in with their guns, swords, and clubs, and did most cruelly mammock several more, and took some that were not wounded, and those that were, and crowded them all into close prison together, and told them that they should all be in hell before the next night, and that they did wish that there were forty more in the same case with that dying man. When they put him into prison they took and dragged him as one would a dog, and would mock him as he lay gasping, and make sport for themselves at his dying motions. The people that escaped took prudent care to notify the people in the County, and also in the Government of New-Hampshire and the Bay, which being justly alarmed at such an unheard-of and aggravated piece of murder, did kindly interpose in our favour.

On Tuesday, the 14th instant, about twelve o'clock, nearly two hundred men, well armed, came from New-Hampshire Government, and before night there were several of the people of Cumberland County returned and took up all they knew of, that were in the horrid massacre, and confined them under a strong guard; and afterwards they confined as many as they could get evidence against, except several that did escape for their lives. On the 15th instant, the body formed chose a Moderator and Clerk, and chose a Committee to see that the Coroner's Jury of inquest were just, impartial men; which Jury, on their oath, did bring in, that W. Patterson, &c., &c., did, on the 13th of March instant, by force and arms, make an assault on the body of William French, then and there lying dead, and shot him through the head with a bullet, of which wound he died, and not otherwise. Then the criminals were confined in close prison, and, on the evening of the same day, and early the next morning, a large number came from the Southern part of the County of Cumberland and the Bay Province. It is computed that in the whole there were five hundred good martial soldiers, well equipped for war, that had gathered. On the 16th instant the body assembled, but being so numerous that they could not do business, there was a vote passed to choose a large Committee to represent the whole, and that this Committee should consist of men who did not belong to the County of Cumberland, as well as of those that did belong thereto: which was done. After the most critical and impartial examination of evidence, voted, that the heads of them should be confined in Northampton Jail, till they could have a fair trial, and those that did not appear so guilty, should be under bonds, holden to answer at the next Court of Oyer and Terminer, in the County aforesaid; which was agreed to. On the 17th instant, bonds were taken for those that were to be bound, and the rest set out under a strong guard for Northampton.

We, the Committee aforesaid, embrace this opportunity to return our most grateful acknowledgments and sincere thanks to our truly wise and patriotick friends in the Government of New-Hampshire and the Massachusetts-Bay, for their kind and benevolent interposition in our favour, at such a time of distress and confusion aforesaid; strongly assuring them that we shall be always ready for their aid and assistance, if by the dispensation of Divine Providence we are called thereto.

Signed by order of the Committee:

REUBEN JONES, Clerk.

TO THE HONOURABLE JAMES WALLACE, ESQ., COMMANDER OF HIS MAJESTY'S SHIP ROSE, NEWPORT.

Freetown, March 23, 1775.

HONOURABLE SIR: Since my writing the lines on the 21st, by Mr. Phillips, many insults and threats are, and have been made against those soldiers which have taken our arms and train, and exercise in the King's name; and on Monday next the Captains muster at the south part of the Town, when we have great reason to fear thousands of the rebels will attack them, and take our lives, or the King's arms, or perhaps both. I, Sir, ask the favour of one of His Majesty's Tenders, or some other vessel of force might be at or near Bowers', in order if any of our people should be obliged to retreat, they may be taken on board. Nothing but the last extremity will oblige them to quit the ground. I am your obedient, humble servant,

THOMAS GILBERT.

GUILFORD (CONNECTICUT) COMMITTEE.

Whereas there is inserted in the Connecticut Journal, of February 22d, 1775, an extract of a letter from Martinico, dated December 21st, 1774, mentioning Captain Griffin's arrival there, in a vessel of Mr. Morgan's, belonging to Killingsworth, with fourteen Sheep; by which it is represented said Griffin has violated the American Association; notwithstanding he has endeavoured to satisfy the publick, by stating the several matters of fact in said Journal of March the 8th, 1775, (to which no answer has appeared,) yet he is concerned to clear his character in said affair; and therefore has this day called on the Committee of Inspection for this place, from whence he last sailed, to consider the matter, as to the time and circumstances attending his carrying said Sheep, and on hearing the whole, we are of opinion, that said Griffin has not violated said Association; and therefore do acquit and recommend him to the favourable acceptance of the publick.

Dated in Guilford, this 23d day of March, 1775.

DAVID LANDON, Clerk.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS-BAY.
NO. VI.

Boston, March 23, 1775.

My Friends and Countrymen:

It is common for the solicitous, and honest inquirer after truth, to suspend his judgment until he becomes acquainted with the arguments on both sides of the question. But to demonstrative certainty there can be but one side only. And this, I think, we have already seen, to be plain, smooth, and as conspicuous as the beaming of the sun at noon-day. In matters of probability there are often counter arguments, mutually destroying each other, where the less being deducted from the greater, the assent of the mind is strong in proportion to the excess of evidence. If there are, in the nature of things, any real objections to our claim of Parliamentary independence, as defined in a past number, we may reasonably expect to find them in the publications of the torystical champion, Massachusettensis. Like a veteran in the service, he has erected a fortress, and played briskly from his batteries, upon this subject, in three successive papers. From the great roar, and little execution, there is reason to expect his design was to raise a smoke, which might conceal a forlorn party from the enemy's eye, and so secure a difficult retreat. Persuaded I am, if we can once reach his strong holds, by removing the rubbish and lumber which is artfully strewed to embarrass access, with a small force we can soon force his intrenchments.

To avoid prolixity, I shall not dwell upon such matters as fall within the reasoning and principles which we have already established, leaving you to your own recollection, and natural penetration upon a bare reference.

It may be of use to premise, that the question we have been examining, and which is still under consideration, is, whether we are in truth a part of the British Empire, in such a sense, as to be subject to her supreme authority in all cases whatever? Whether this subjection is fit and necessary on principles of rectitude and policy, is a distinct matter. Admitting this to be true, it is a good reason why we should immediately unite, but no evidence that we are already united. Nor is the question, whether a submission to ministerial measures be dangerous and ruinous, or forcible opposition to the regulating laws eligible and effectual. These matters are worthy your serious consideration. Our first attention ought to be to the justice of our cause; then, if prudence leads us to contend, we may reasonably expect, He who is higher than the highest, will look down with gracious approbation upon our righteous struggle, and by breaking the jaws of proud oppressors, take the prey even from between their teeth. It is necessary that the above distinctions be kept constantly in view, as they will secure us from a confusion of ideas on the one hand, and enable us to distinguish between reasoning and fallacy on the other, in publications where they are artfully confounded.

After a long parade upon miscellaneous subjects our designing reasoner fairly opens to the point. Says he, "the Colonies are a part of the British Empire." In support of which, he produces the opinion of the best writers upon the Law of Nations: that when a Nation takes possession of a distant country and settles there, that country, though separated from the principal establishment, or mother country, naturally becomes a part of the state, equal with its ancient possessions." The truth of this principle may be allowed with safety to our argument. For the conclusion, that a country, though separated from the principal establishment, becomes a part of the mother state, is general, depending upon an antecedent reason resulting from a particular state of facts in a number of similar instances, and therefore cannot be applied to cases not only dissimilar in general, but also in those particular circumstances upon which alone its whole force depends. The antecedent state of facts, which is assigned as a reason, by the civilians themselves, in support of their conclusion, is "a Nation's taking possession of a country, and settling there." It is an invariable rule in logic, which our sophister is well acquainted with, that if the antecedent position of the argument is untrue or contradicted, the conclusion of course depending thereon falls to the ground. We have already shown that this Country was taken possession of by individuals, and by them settled at their own risk and private expense, and not by the Nation as a Nation. So that this principle carries meat in its mouth, as is sometimes said; and in the application of our logical genius, to use his own language, is felo de se, destroys itself; for being without the reason, we cannot be within his conclusion.

The above-cited opinion not only fails of proving our connection in any degree whatever; but no argument can be adduced pertinent to our present subject from any precedents in ancient history, as the settlement of the American Colonies was undertaken from views, and accompanied with circumstances, singular, and perfectly dissimilar to those which influenced colonization in the more early ages of the world. We have not yet done with the above-cited opinion. Something worse is still behind. It not only fails of serving the purpose of him who adduced it, but so far as it applies to the subject, it descends with its whole force directly against him. For the implication is violent, by a fair construction, that the opinion of the best writers on the Law of Nations is in favour of our being separate from the Mother Country, if this Colony was not taken possession of and settled by the English Nation as such. This is apparent, not only from the force of words, and thread of reasoning as explained above; but also from their express positions, that individuals have a right to abandon the jurisdiction of a State, and settle in some vacant part of the world, and thereby recover their natural freedom. The argument holds still stronger where the country moved to was in the prior occupancy of a foreign Nation, and honestly purchased of the occupants by the persons emigrating, as in the present instance. Therefore the authority of those writers, if they are consistent with themselves, is clearly in support of the doctrine of independence. For I appeal to every man's private knowledge of the rise and progress of this Country. You have heard, my dear countrymen, you well know, your fathers have told you, nor will it be hid from your children, or the generations to come, the wonderful transactions of our virtuous predecessors; who, under the blessing of Providence, after they had been from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people, came and took possession of this land, wandering in it hungry and thirsty, naked and cold, finding no city to receive them, no house to repose in, no aid from their forsaken parent, a few in number surviving the accumulated hardships, they and their posterity settled and defended it, in their own right, at their own risk and expense against the horrid attacks of nations, savage, heathen, delighting in havoc and in blood. Nay, I will venture to appeal to Massachusettsensis himself, to his oracle of infallibility, the author of the history of this Province; these are his words, speaking of the war with Philip, in which many valuable lives were lost. Says he, "Fighting made soldiers. As soon as the inhabitants had a little experience of the Indian way of fighting, they became a match for them. An addition to their numbers they did not want. Be that as it may, this is certain, that as the Colony was at first settled, so it was now preserved from ruin without any charge to the Mother Country." What are your feelings? Does not strong conviction arrest your minds? Does not reason and passion join their voice? Look to the graves of our slaughtered ancestors; they will open their mouths, and teach us freedom's price in serious lessons wrote with blood.

Thus our silver-tongued disputant, (I had almost said doubled-tongued,) imagining that he had, or that a particular class of courtfidians would believe he had, proved, that the Colonies were a part of the British Empire, by an argument that concludes directly in his teeth, so far as it applies; he justly observes that two supreme independent authorities cannot exist in the same state, as it would be imperium in imperio, the height of political absurdities; and thence infers, as well he might, our entire subjection to the uncontrollable power of the parent State. We may, in our turn, retort this argument with additional force, and, in his own way, prove we are not a part of the British Empire, by the following plain demonstrated position, viz: The Colonies are not subject to the supreme authority of Great Britain. The greatest statesmen and sages in the law of the past and present age, tell us that representation is commensurate with legislation—that they are inseparably joined by God himself in an eternal league. Two supreme independent authorities cannot exist in the same State. The Colonies are not represented in the supreme legislative court of the Parent Country. If then we are not subject to the superlative power of the British State, we are not part of the British Realm or Empire. What, my friends, becomes of this famous argument urged by Massachusettsensis, which is introduced with so much pomposity, with such artful encomiums on the British Constitution, as would, he seems to hope, reconcile one to slavery for the sake of being governed by King, Lords, and Commons; which is managed with such a career of words, and backed with such argumentative similes, taken from the economy of the human body, as would, he may think, induce the Colonists cheerfully to become the slaves of British subjects, if not the servants of British slaves.

To remove all scruples respecting the matter, our writer in his next paragraph, without attempting to prove it, boldly asserts: It is beyond a doubt that it was both the sense of the Parent Country and our ancestors, that they were to remain subject to Parliament. It is evident, says he, from the Charter itself, and this authority has been exercised by Parliament from time to time, almost ever since the first settlement of the Country, and has been expressly acknowledged by our Provincial Legislatures. I presume he never has, nor ever will he, or his posterity find a single instance where the authority of Parliament to bind us in all cases whatsoever has been acknowledged by our Provincial Assemblies. They have, and do now, admit the right of regulating trade, from the necessity of the case, and the fitness and rectitude of the measure. And if his ipse dixit is to be the rule of political faith, he might as well have told us, that it was the sense of our ancestors, and the Parent State, that we should be subject to the Grand Seignior of Turkey, where the people, as well as the country, are the property of the Emperour, every man's fortune and life being solely at his disposal, without the least check or restraint. "But it is evident from the Charter itself," says he. Where is the evidence? Is it not as evident from the Alcoran or Church Liturgy? These matters we have already considered in other papers, to which I refer you.

He then admits there is one specious argument in our favour; but, says he, it leads to such absurdities as demonstrate its fallacy. It is this: "The Americans are entitled to all the privileges of an Englishman; it is the privilege of an Englishman to be exempt from all laws that he does not consent to, in person, or by representative; the Americans are not represented in Parliament, and therefore are not subject to its authority." I suspect, my countrymen, we have not been conversant enough in the school of absurdities to be able to detect the fallacy of this obstinate, this unwieldy argument. However, nil desperandum Massachusetts duce. "If (says our arch reasoner) the Colonies are not subject to the authority of Parliament, Great Britain and the Colonies must be distinct States, as completely so as England and Scotland were before the union, or as Great Britain and Hanover are now." Where, in the name of common sense, is the absurdity of Great Britain and the Colonies being distinct States, united under one common Sovereign, seeing Scotland was so once, and Hanover is so now? The very instances that he adduces to illustrate his absurdities with, prove to demonstration that there is no absurdity in the supposition. "An absurdity consists in a supposition or declaration inconsistent with the truth of fact, or the possible relation of things. But, says he, "in this case the Colonies will owe no allegiance to the imperial Crown, and perhaps not to the person of the King." Our subtle manager has not told us, and I dare say never will, where the inconsistency is in not owing allegiance to the King, or point out the absurdities deducible from thence. Finding he could not get along with his reductio ad absurdum, he, like a person thoroughly acquainted with the futility of his argument, prudently chose to waive the subject. There is not only no absurdities deducible from the supposition of our owing no allegiance to the imperial Crown, but it is not true that this consequence follows from his premises, there being no connexion between our being independent of Parliament, and the inference drawn from thence. Let us examine it. A King of England, as such, is a political entity. He has two distinct capacities, or bodies; the one natural, in common with other men, and subject to like passions; the other a body politick, consisting of those constitutional powers, prerogatives, and capacities which he derives from his subjects as their Sovereign. This latter body never dies. Upon the dissolution of the natural, which is called the demise of the King, the body political is transferred or conveyed over from the deceased to another natural body; the name of King being a term of continuance. He forms one of the three distinct powers, or bodies, which are entirely independent of each other, composing the supreme power or legislative authority of the Empire. The Lords spiritual and temporal is another, and aristocratical branch, distinct and independent. The House of Commons is a third democratical power, freely chosen by the people from among themselves. These three constitute that aggregate body called the British Parliament, whose sovereignty is constitutionally over all its constituents. By what principle in logick, then, by what hair-breadth argument, can be inferred a subjection to the two last of those powers, or to all three in concert, from an allegiance to the first? Where is the middle term that enforces the conclusion? Where the intermediate idea that shows the connexion? If there are none, (and I defy him to show any,) where, upon his own principles, is the mighty absurdity of Great Britain and the Colonies being distinct States, having one common Sovereign? To strengthen the supposition, I would ask, whether the Peers of the Realm, who sit in the House of Lords, are Peers of America? This noble independent order are the Representatives of all the Commons in the Kingdom; and, like the House of Commons, can give their assent to no law which does not bind themselves equally with all the other members of the community. This is one of the principal securities to the people against oppression. But where is the American's security? On their supposition, avarice and ambition unchecked, is the guardian of his property; arbitrary will, and perhaps sportive caprice, the tenure by which he draws his breath.

The next inference that our indefatigable writer makes against us is, that by possibility we may owe no allegiance to the person of the King, that is, to the King of England, in no capacity whatever. Where he gets this conclusion, or how he draws it, I dare not hazard a conjecture, unless it be that he conjured it up with that huge group of verbose absurdities through which we have just now forced our way. Admitting it to be deducible from a state of facts, there is no inconsistency in the whole affair. And I will venture to say, that he who possesses such a facility at drawing of consequences, fas vel nefas, well knows that premises established are not to be invalidated by deductions therefrom. It is therefore unnecessary at this time to inquire, whether allegiance be in fact due to the person of the King, or to the British Crown. This is the less necessary, as Massachusetts himself seemed to think there was no difficulty in getting over his own objection, after he had made it. It was the opinion of Lord Coke and others, the first in fame, that allegiance is due to the former. Either supposition is perfectly consistent with the American plan of independence. The latter we have above shown to be so. Allegiance to the person of the King is admitted to be so. Charles the First, who titled himself at the head of our former Charter, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c., stipulated for himself and his Royal successors, by which the inhabitants of this Colony became his liege subjects, and he their acknowledged Sovereign. Now, although personal allegiance may be due, yet it is evident, both from the words of the Charter, its design and subject-matter, which is the best key for construction, that British royalty was a necessary qualification, and an English Crown an essential appendage of the person who is constitutionally the Sovereign of this Province. The person upon the Throne of England, by virtue of the British Constitution, is our rightful Sovereign, by virtue of our Provincial Charters, not because he is King of England, but because our Constitution vests the sovereignty of this Province in the person who is designated by a British Crown and an English Sceptre.

It is obvious to observe here, that when our Charter was granted, and after, until the reign of Queen Anne, England and Scotland were two perfectly distinct and totally independent States, the supreme power of each being lodged in a Parliament of its own. Charles the First being a Prince common to both States, formed one branch of the supreme legislative authority in both Kingdoms. If, therefore, our becoming subject to this Prince brought us within the jurisdiction of the English Parliament, upon the principles of the Tories, for the same reason it subjected us to the sovereign power of the Scottish legislators, and of consequence exposed us to the service of two masters, to the distraction and misery of double legislation and complicated taxation—as great a political curse as can be in reserve in the store of Heaven for any people under its broad canopy. I have something further to say on this curious paper.

FROM THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

NANSEMOND COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

March 24, 1775.

However disagreeable and unhappy it is to hold up for publick censure the conduct of any man, yet when we consider the present unfortunate disputes between the Mother Country and her Colonies would probably, in the result, be the ruin of both, if some timely, judicious, and wise methods were not contrived to effect a reconciliation, and adjust the lamentable differences; we cannot but think that all those who endeavour to frustrate, and labour to counteract such laudable ends, are enemies to America, no friends to the excellent Constitution of England, and strictly merit the censure and disesteem of all lovers of their Country, freedom, and just rights. We, therefore, the Committee for the County of Nansemond aforesaid, in obedience to the eleventh Article of the Association, as well as for the above-mentioned reasons, think it our duty to publish the behaviour (respecting the Association, &c.) of the Reverend John Agnew, Rector of Suffolk Parish, in this County, as it appeared from the testimony of William Cowper and Solomon Shepherd, Esquires, Messrs. James Murdaugh, Willis Hardgraves, Thomas Minton, Jonathan Smith, and Major Thomas Godwin, taken before us this 6th day of March, at Suffolk.

Mr. Agnew being first summoned to attend, but refused, Mr. Shepherd declared, that upon his remonstrating to the said Agnew how disagreeable it was to his audience in general, and to himself in particular, to hear the Association, and those who had come into it, abused from the pulpit in the sermons he there preached, desired that he would in future desist therefrom. His answer was, "If you do not like such sermons, you can only leave your seat;" and to the same gentleman said, that the Delegates of the Provincial Congress had rebelled in all their Resolves. In presence of Major Thomas Godwin and Captain William Cowper, he asserted, as his opinion, that it was no hardship to be carried beyond sea for trial of crimes committed here. Mr. Hardgraves has frequently heard him (when speaking of the Congress) declare that all such combinations and associations were detestable. Mr. Minton says, that after condemning the present Association, he produced one of his own, and in his presence offered it for signing. In a conversation his Reverence had with Mr. Smith, he affirmed our gentlemen (meaning, as Smith took it, the gentlemen of the General Congress) knew not what they were about; that to resist the King and Parliament was rebellion, and that the proceedings of the General Congress were resisting the King and Parliament; that the designs of the great men were to ruin the poor people; and that, after a while, they would forsake them, and lay the whole blame on their shoulders, and by this means make them slaves. Upon Smith's doubting how all this extraordinary villany could be brought about, "Why (says the parson) they have already begun; for the Committee of Suffolk has invaded private property; they have taken goods from a man of Carolina, and sold them against his will." He likewise informed Mr. Smith there was an Association of the other party up the Country, and the people signing it very fast; that they had discovered their error in signing the present one, and that he would see this fact published in the Norfolk paper shortly.

We have now related the substance of what the above named gentlemen declared upon their oaths, and here we could wish to end this narrative; but we have too much regard for our own characters to suffer them to be injured by so barefaced a slander as appears in Smith's testimony, respecting the Carolina gentleman and his goods. The truth of that transaction is precisely this: Mr. Samuel Donaldson, merchant, and one of the Committee of this County, informed some of the members that his friend, Mr. John Thompson, merchant of North-Carolina, had imported some goods into this Colony, which come under the tenth Article of the Association, and desired that a Committee might be held to determine what should be done with them; and Mr. Donaldson (that Mr. Thompson might suffer as little inconvenience as possible from the detention of the goods) advertised them to be sold on the same day that the Committee was to sit. At the time appointed we met, when Mr. Thompson was present, and, on examining him and some letters he produced, we found that by the importation of these goods he had not violated any of the articles of the Association. And although we were not entirely pleased with Mr. Donaldson's advertising the sale of the goods before he had orders from us so to do, yet we ordered them to be sold under the care and direction of three gentlemen of the Committee. Mr. Thompson bought the goods, expressed himself highly satisfied, and insisted on our partaking of a cheerful bowl with him.

Upon the whole the publick will plainly discover the principles this reverend gentleman entertains, and in what light he views the general Resolutions adopted and entered into for our relief from the oppressive hand of power. Had this zealous advocate for despotick rule been as assiduous in the discharge of the several duties of his function as he has been industrious in propagating false and erroneous principles, not only in private discourse, but in blending detestable tenets in his angry orations from the pulpit, in order to gain a party in opposition to the common cause, and thereby lending his little aid to seduce the very people that gave him bread to a state of wretchedness, this Committee had not been at the trouble to examine the eleventh Article of the Association, and opening his conduct to the censure of the world.

JOHN GREGORIE, Clerk of the Committee.

VOTE PASSED BY THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE
OF WORCESTER COUNTY, (MASS.) MARCH 24, 1775.

As a number of Towns in this County have not been publickly represented in this Convention, it is therefore recommended that the attendance of one or more members of the several Towns therein be given at their future meetings; and that they do not depart without leave when assembled, until an adjournment or dissolution thereof.

The Convention of the Committees of Correspondence of this County stands adjourned to the second Tuesday of June instapt, at ten o'clock, A. M., at the Court-House, Worcester. By order of the County Committee:

WILLIAM YOUNG, Chairman.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

Worcester, March 24, 1775.

Having seen a publication* in the Massachusetts Gazette of the 9th instant, relative to my conduct in resigning my command as Colonel of a Regiment, &c., I think it not improper to give the publick the following true state of the matter, viz: I was some time ago chosen Lieutenant-Colonel of a Regiment, whereof Mr. Thomas Dennie, of Leicester, was chosen Colonel. It was not without some persuasion that I accepted of the office, being very diffident of my abilities to discharge the duties of it with that propriety and martial dignity that the importance of the occasion required. But putting great dependance upon the abilities of the Colonel, I was prevailed upon to accept of the office; but very unfortunately for me, (as well as for the publick,) that very worthy gentleman was soon after suddenly taken away by death. I was then chosen Colonel of the Regiment, and was at that time determined absolutely to have refused, but was over-persuaded to accept of the office. From that time I was much burdened with the thoughts of our publick affairs, and the part I had to act in them. At this time some persons, whom I now think enemies to American liberty, and not friends to me, discovered my uneasiness, and set themselves to work to increase it, by painting the horrors of civil war and rebellion in the most frightful colours, which they pretended I was plunging myself into; and unless I immediately renounced the cause I was engaged in, I was ruined and undone; and I being (as I now think) thoroughly infatuated by their delusions and insidious conduct, was led to say, that I thought the people were wrong in the opposition they were making against the Acts of Parliament, &c. And at the same time declared I would have nothing further to do in the matter as Colonel of the Regiment, &c. I have accordingly resigned my command, and made such satisfaction to Officers of the Regiment for my behaviour as they kindly accepted of. At which time they proceeded to the choice of a much better man than myself, to take my place; and the Regiment now is well-officered, as far as I know, which gives me greater pleasure than I ever felt by being at the head of it. But before I conclude, I would just remark, that the publication of the 9th instant, first mentioned, in some respects, is not consistent with truth. First, the representation of my having been concerned in mobs and riots, or violent measures, is invidious, and a false calumny, for which I appeal to all that know my general conduct, both Whigs and Tories. And secondly, to represent me as converted, when in truth and reality

* A correspondent informs us, "That Mr. Thomas Wheeler, Colonel of a new-fangled Regiment in the County of Worcester, is so sensible of his error in being any ways concerned in the violent measures now pursuing by our Sons of Liberty, that he has declared he will never be concerned any further, and has resigned his command. Two of his neighbours, namely, Captain Palmer Goulding, and Lieutenant Cornelius Spawell, both of said Town, on the evening of the 2d instant, returning home from a visit they had made said Wheeler, were suddenly attacked and knocked down by two men, and most grievously beat and wounded, and for no other reason but their being true friends to Government, and supposed by the Sons of Liberty to be instrumental in converting their neighbour Wheeler."

I was perverted, was a misrepresentation I would have mended by your inserting an erratum, to read in the said publication perverting, instead of converting, which will make the passage much more agreeable to truth; this, with an amendment of the spelling of one of the names,* make the latter part of the said publication tolerable enough. However wrong I have been in any part of my conduct or words, it is now my real opinion, that the people's cause is good, and that the measures that they are taking and carrying into execution, are the best and most likely means for obtaining the redress of our grievances. And if a redress cannot be had without our making the last appeal, I stand ready and heartily willing to be one of the appellants, to prosecute the appeal to final judgment, while I have estate or life left. The foregoing I am induced to publish, that the cause of liberty may not suffer by my means; and I have done it of my own free will and accord, and do assure the publick I have not been constrained to do it by force, or the threats of any man, or body of men, but have been extremely well and kindly treated by all men that I have had any concern with since resigning my office; and now enjoy the esteem and friendship of my neighbours, and the true Whigs, which I esteem as one of the greatest blessings in this life, and to deserve the same shall ever be the endeavour of

TO THE PRINTER OF THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

Worcester County, Massachusetts, March 24, 1775.

I was always sorry that our County Convention undertook to say any thing against the reading of the productions which appear on the contrary side of the question, for many reasons that I could offer, if there were any need of it. But one special reason why I think it was a pity they did it, is, it so much intimated to the people as though they thought there was something of force in what was said by our opposers; when, for my part, there appears to me so little force in what they say, that I heartily wish every one who gives any attention to publick affairs to make any judgment upon them, would read all they can upon that side, that it might more fully confirm them in their opposition to the present measures of Administration; when they see that all the advocates for it can produce in favour of it is pregnant with reproaching of us, as being both fools and knaves, and at the same time asserting things to be matters of fact which we know to the contrary. When they, in their abundant affection and professed kindness, tell us, that all we complain of is owing to our ignorance, distempered brains, heated imaginations, infatuated blindness and delusion, &c., it does not work in us any gratitude to them, for complimenting of us as such distracted fools.

When they tell us, that the grievances enumerated by the Continental Congress are barefaced falsehoods, and that we neither see nor feel any grievances; at the same time our senses tell us, that what the Congress have said are manifest truths, the Tories, thus giving our senses the lie, do not induce us to give credit to those writers who forbid us believing our own senses. When those writers assert facts which we know to the contrary, it gives us good reason to believe every thing they say is false. This, in the enumeration of grievances of the friends of Government, (as they fondly call themselves,) in your paper of the 23d of February last, what is said about so many appearing in arms at Worcester; what was said about Colonel Putnam and Colonel Chandler being obliged to flee to Boston, we absolutely know was not as there represented. So also many things said by Phileirene, in your paper of the 2d of March instant, we don't at all believe. But especially his saying, "that all parties join in esteeming General Gage as the most amiable of men, and the best of Governours," we absolutely know to be very far from the truth, both by the publick prints and by private observation. Whatever General Gage may in fact be, I don't pretend to say; but that he is not so esteemed by all parties, as Phileirene pretends, is a most manifest fact. And I cannot comprehend how he should have a face to say it, unless upon the same principle before-mentioned of forbidding our believing our own senses! If the publick will not take it as an affront upon their understandings, to illustrate that which is so plain, I will offer a few words, showing the perverseness of Phileirene's remarks on the Petition of the Congress. I will only observe on what he says about the Mandamus Counsellors in your paper of the 9th instant. There he pretends to make out that it is best they should be so appointed, because, he says, if the Council chosen by the Representatives should adopt any unpopular measures, they were in danger the next year of losing their places; as if this were a reason to convince the people that it is best they should have no hand in choosing them. The same reason (if I may be allowed to scandalize the word so much as to call it reason) will show, that our Representatives ought to be appointed by Mandamus; or, more properly, that we should have no Representatives at all to assist in legislating for us. And this is evidently what they are after; none can avoid the imputation, so long as they urge that the British Parliament have a right to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever, or indeed in any case whatsoever, and plead for the justice and right of the Parliament in their making laws to set aside and make void our laws. So that nothing can be more manifest, than that this Phileirene is for having us have no voice whatsoever in choosing a legislative body for ourselves. And it is beyond all comprehension to understand why he is not ashamed to treat us as such asses, telling us that we are not fit to have any voice in electing any of our Officers or Legislators; and in earnest propose to us, to give it all up, because we are not fit to have any thing to do with choosing them; unless he is so mad upon his own vanity as to persuade himself, that we will hearken to him, rather than our own feelings and senses.

But yet it is inconceivable why he should drive so hard to make us believe that we are such fools, that it is best for us to give up all pretensions to any part in governing ourselves, so much as choosing our own guardians; for the very moment we should do this, it would be such an evidence that we were grossly non compos mentis, that the very act of this giving up would not be binding; and I hope that all such as do give up to these principles of Phileirene, will every where be so far considered non compos as not to be admitted to any office or trust whatsoever; and why it is not the duty of the Selectmen, in their respective Towns, according to the Laws of this Province, to render all such non compos, so as to prevent their doing any mischief, and people from trading with them, I presume no good reason can be given. Those that are so insane as to run about, and are proper only for Bedlam, let them run there themselves, as many have already. But suppose we are such dunces that we must have guardians without our choosing of them, I defy this Phileirene or any one else to shew who made the people of Great Britain our guardians, or how they ex-officio are such, any more than the people of France, or even of Africa, or any other place. As for this Phileirene, I am well satisfied who he is by his language; and if I rightly guess, he has left off hunting silver by his hazle-rods of late years, and found a more successful way of obtaining of it, and is now roused against the Congress and Liberty, by the same spirit that the old silversmith, Demetrius, was against the Apostles and Christianity—Acts xix. The craft by which this modern Demetrius gets his wealth is called in question, and in danger of being set at nought. Old Demetrius's complaint was, that not only at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, people were persuaded to believe that they were no gods that were made with hands. And so now not only at Boston, but almost throughout all America, it is urged, that of right there are no laws, where there are no representation of the people for whom they are pretended to be made. And it seems this modern Demetrius has got those of his own occupation together, and is endeavouring to set the City in an uproar; but I hope he will avail no farther than to have those of his own craft cry, great is Diana of the Ephesians, or rather, according to the modern craftsmen, great is the Parliament of Great Britain; but I hope those disturbers of the peace will in due time be called in question for their uproar.

As for the Converted Whig, in your paper of the 9th instant, we none of us believe that it is any other than a fiction of some Tory; he don't speak as one that ever understood Whiggism, and I defy any one to show any such person who was ever reputed as a true Whig, that indited that piece. If he has made a change so much for the better, as there pretended, and to give his experiences to the world, why don't he, as the repenting Tories so many have done, give his name with his repentance or recantation. However, if it be really as there pretended, I don't expect he will ever return, but it will be with him as the wise man says it is with those that go after the strange woman, Prov. ii. 19: "None that go unto her return again, neither take they hold of the paths of life."

I had many things more that I thought to have wrote, but I will defer them for the present, and subscribe as before;

A FREEHOLDER IN THE COUNTY OF WORCESTER.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CANADA, DATED MONTREAL, MARCH 24, 1775.

The Address from the Continental Congress attracted the notice of some of the principal Canadians; it was soon translated into very tolerable French. The decent manner in which the religious matters were touched; the encomiums on the French Nation, flattered a people fond of compliments. They begged the translator, as he had succeeded so well, to try his hand on that Address to the People of Great Britain. He had equal success in this, and read his performance to a numerous audience. But when he came to that part which treats of the new modelling of the Province; draws a picture of the Catholic Religion, and the Canadian manners, they could not contain their resentment, nor express it but in broken curses. "Oh! the perfidious, double-faced Congress; let us bless and obey our benevolent Prince, whose humanity is consistent, and extends to all Religions; let us abhor all who would reduce us from our loyalty, by acts that would dishonour a Jesuit, and whose Addresses, like their Resolves, are destructive of their own objects."

TO THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND.

London, March 24, 1775.

The man who set fire to a stately temple was a singular instance of those villains who wish to be distinguished only by their crimes, though he was by no means a rare instance of those whom posterity can distinguish by no other traces.

By what means the late Governour of Boston may hereafter be remembered, we shall not venture to predict; but we may safely affirm, that if his publick vices and publick virtues should be weighed in a balance, the latter would kick the beam! From early symptoms of ambition and dissimulation, it was predicted of him that, like Paris, he was born to be the pest of his Country. He subsisted by merchandise, but did not thrive by it, for the business was not suited to his temper. By the appearance of extraordinary zeal for the religion and liberties of his Country, he wrought himself into publick favour. Thus he was chosen a Member of the Assembly, of the Council, an Assistant Judge, and Chief Justice. After some time he was appointed Lieutenant-Governour. He now coveted the Chair. With this object in view, he made himself necessary to Governour Bernard; he was his counsellor and inseparable friend. He knew very well what the people would bear and what they would not; he cajoled and instigated poor Bernard, till a flame was kindled about his ears. The Seat of Government became too warm for him; he was obliged to flee. Governour Hutchinson succeeded to the Chair, but Bernard had kept it too long; it was now too hot even for a man who seems to have been made for the flames. I should have observed, that the character of a Merchant, especially that of a Tea Dealer, not comporting with that of a Governour, he had resigned trade into the hands of his sons. In this manner he and his family were situated when the ill-fated Tea arrived at Boston. The people had lately obtained full proof of what they had for some time suspected, that he was their greatest enemy, and they had petitioned to have him removed. What was now to be done? Unhappily his duty as Governour and the friend of his Country was opposed to his ambition and the interest of his family. He had made interest to have the Tea consigned to his sons; by suffering it therefore to come back to England, as other Governours did, he would have saved the Tea, and might have prevented all the calamities that have since happened to that Country, and are soon like to fall on the whole Nation. But then his son would have lost a valuable commission, and what is worse, he would have missed a fine opportunity of proving, what he had lately asserted in one of his letters, that the people could not be governed but by an infringement of their liberties: By refusing to suffer the Tea to be sent back, as the people requested, one of these events was certain—either that it would be landed, and his sons reap the commission, or that it would be destroyed, and himself promoted. The latter has taken place. The City in which Governour Hutchinson was born is become a garrison; the inhabitants are ruined; but he himself is pensioned. Is there a human breast that would not feel for the wretched inhabitants of Boston? Poor labourers and tradesmen, with their wives and children, suffering under the general calamity, and perishing by thousands, or else protracting a miserable life by licking the cold hand of charity. But one should imagine Governour Hutchinson thought that misery was dealt out with too sparing a hand. Does he wish to see the whole Country involved in the fate of Boston? Would he do more? Would he filch the beggar's scrip, and give him the coup de grace?

I am not so little acquainted with the present Administration, as to imagine that any thing is either too cruel, or too iniquitous for them to attempt; but the present Fish Bill, or rather the Starving Bill, is one that they certainly would never have attempted, unless Governour Hutchinson had recommended it as a measure that would produce certain obedience. His former predictions have not been verified; the change of Government, and an Army into the bargain, have not mended matters, but made them worse. What shall be the next expedient? His friendly advice was still ready: "Send over a few more Regiments, and let them exert themselves properly. Take off a few of the inhabitants by the sword, and a few by famine; the rest will sign a charte blanche."

I am aware that the creature I have been describing is so different from the common form of humanity, that it may be questioned whether I have fairly copied the original: but I write history, not fables. I have given only the outlines; was it necessary, I could finish the piece, with many other striking lines and shades; I could tell how early and how often he has visited Mr. Jenkinson, and every one of the junto, within the last three months; but I despise such indirect proof. Not three weeks ago I heard him say, in a large company, "that the New-England people do not yet believe that Government is in earnest; that they have only been blustering; and that General Gage's inactivity has flattered their pride; but, as soon as the other Troops shall arrive, when His Majesty's standard shall be erected, and the Province declared to be in rebellion, and a few of the leaders taken up, he would stake his life that the people would surrender, and submit to any kind of discipline."

When we know what part this man has acted, as if to hasten the present catastrophe; when we consider what advice he continues to give, and hear him talking in such strains, as if to promote sanguinary measures against the Country that gave him birth; we are tempted to hope that some one of his ancestors was an Indian, and that Indians are a different race of men.

NESTOR.

TO D * * * C * * * * *, ESQ.

New-Jersey, March 25, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Since the writing of my former letter, we have been agreeably entertained with intelligence from London, favourable to the good cause, in which not only these Colonies, but Great Britain and all her other dependencies are so deeply interested. I congratulate you, and the rest of the friends to the Constitution on the receipt of these, and every other appearance in our favour. Permit me to enumerate a few of these; for a proper and general attention to them would do much toward strengthening our union, and defeating the base designs of those who oppose the general good. And the first thing to be remarked is, the greatness of the union subsisting among ourselves, on which, under Providence, depends our greatest hope of success. This union appeared remarkably in the sentiments of all the Colonies respecting the propriety and necessity of appointing Delegates to meet in General Congress; and since, in their appointing so many men, who, when met, were so exactly suited to one another in sentiments, as they in fact were. For when Representatives are properly chosen, without bribery or any other undue influence, they naturally carry with them the sentiments of their electors, from whom they also receive the outlines of their conduct in general directions. When these Delegates met, they began their solemn and important business by bowing themselves before the great Sovereign of the Universe, to whom they could, with a pure conscience, appeal as to the justice of their cause, and on whom they, in the use of proper means, depended for all that assistance which was necessary to ensure success; and for this they humbly implored the Divine clemency and goodness. At the same time, or as near it as the Provinces could judge, there were many hundreds of congregations of their constituents beseeching Almighty Goodness for the same divine aid. They believed their cause was His, and could therefore go boldly to the Throne of Grace.

Here, Sir, is union. A Continent on their knees, imploring the alliance of God! This is an appearance favourable to us. And in this view the enemies of America might do well to remember the advice of Gabalriel. Let us revolve in our minds the proceedings of this Congress, and see what appearances here are favourable to us. Caution, justice, loyalty, knowledge, moderation, wisdom, benevolence, deliberation, humanity, resolution, fortitude, self-denial, self-defence, piety; and to crown the whole, a remarkable union in all these. Ancient Rome, in her highest pitch of power and glory, never produced an assembly of worthies better qualified to govern an Empire than these. The desire of this Congress appears evidently to be, that all the disturbances, divisions, confusions, ill-will, and oppression in the whole of His Majesty's Dominions should cease; and that peace, union, and harmony, with constitutional liberty, and a just dependance of one part on the other, should exist throughout the whole of this great Empire, which they desire should be governed in all its parts by his present Majesty George the Third, and a Protestant succession in his family, together with such legislative powers, as are, by the British Constitution and Provincial Charters, established.

No wise and good man, I conceive, when once truly and sufficiently acquainted with their designs, as stated above, can wish that they should be defeated. If we pursue this union in the resolutions of the Congress, to their being put into execution in the several united Provinces, we shall find that it prevails against all opposition, and that the opposers of congressional measures are comparatively but very few. I do not at present recollect more than three Towns in the opposition in all the four Provinces of New-England, and those none of the most considerable. The pames, in tenderness to the virtuous part of their inhabitants, are here omitted. However, considering the measures taken with them by their wiser neighbours, it is very probable they will soon be brought to a sense of their error, and will return to their duty.

In this and the Southern Provinces, I believe the Opposition is full as small. Some few places in the Province of New-York are delinquent; but they appear to be returning to their duty. The City and County of New-York have been esteemed by far the most so: but by a late fair trial, it appears that there are more than five to one in favour of the Congress. And this probably will break the heart of all the Opposition in America. The news from Great Britain and the West-India Islands, so favourable to us, will contribute much to the same valuable purpose. Some indeed have lately attempted to land goods in America contrary to the Association of the Congress; but such is the vigilance of those excellent inspectors, the Committees of New-York and Elizabethtown, and such the awful guilt of the delinquents, that they could not be hid. They have confessed their fault, and laid a heavy fine upon themselves for their base conduct. Another person concerned in the same dark affair is also detected, and will, it is thought, be sufficiently punished. In fine, if we continue to pursue the whole measures of the Congress, the merchants and manufacturers in England, and the West-India islanders will do all in their power to procure a redress of all our grievances. And we have great, great reason to hope that, by the favourable interposition of Divine Providence, their united endeavours will soon produce the desired effect.

I remain, dear Sir, yours and the Constitution's friend, Essex.

Marblehead, March 25, 1775.

Whereas, I the subscriber, in open violation of the Continental Association, did, on the 25th current, purchase of Simon Tufts, of Boston, a small quantity of Tea, and thereby justly brought on myself the resentment of the publick: I do now in this publick manner ask their pardon, and do solemnly promise I will not in future be guilty of a like offence. The Tea I have voluntarily committed to the flames in presence of a respectable number of my townsmen.

THOMAS LILLY.

The Committee of Inspection of this Town, from the penitent behaviour of the above Thomas Lilly, and the above confession, which he himself publishes, determine that he may be justly entitled to the esteem and employ of all persons as heretofore.

By order of the Committee of Inspection:

JOHN SPARHAWK, Clerk.

Committee Chamber, Boston, March 31, 1775.

Information having been given to the Committee of Inspection of this Town, that Mr. Simon Tufts, of this Town, merchant, had broke the Continental Association, by selling Tea to Thomas Lilly, of Marblehead, on the 25th of March current, the Committee made inquiry into the truth of said report, and after a strict examination of said Tufts of three credible persons, could obtain no other account but the following, which we have caused to be published under oath, for the satisfaction of the publick, agreeable to the design of our appointment.

"Whereas an advertisement appeared in the Essex Gazette of the 28th instant, signed Thomas Lilly, informing that he purchased a small quantity of Tea of me, the subscriber: For the justification of my character, and satisfaction of the publick, I think proper to give the following state of the affair, and do solemnly declare that the said Lilly had the same, without my knowledge or privity, of the person who attended at my store, and which he has since confessed was no more than a pound and a quarter. I have purchased no Tea since the first of March. What I bought was so immediately connected with an article absolutely necessary for the Country to be possessed of, and which they are in actual possession of, thought it justifiable to purchase it with the incumbrance, and let my friends, whose advice I had taken, partake with me therein, esteeming the friendship of my countrymen of more consequence than any benefit that could accrue to me thereby. I had no intention, from the beginning, of militating with the Association of the Continental Congress, and I declare I will not buy or sell any more of said article till a general permission therefore takes place. If, by the above imprudent step with Lilly, any offence is given to my countrymen, I am sorry therefor, and hope for a restoration to their favour and confidence.

SIMON TUFTS.

"Boston, 30th March, 1775."

SUFFOLK, ss.—BOSTON, April 1, 1775.

Then the above named Mr. Simon Tufts made oath to the truth of the above-written declaration subscribed by him. Before me, BELCHER NOYES, Justice of the Peace.

ORANGE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

March 27, 1775.

The Committee of Orange County being informed that the Reverend Mr. John Wingate had in his possession several pamphlets containing very obnoxious reflections on the Continental Congress and their proceedings, and calculated to impose on the unwary; and being desirous to manifest their contempt and resentment of such writings and their authors, assembled on Saturday, the 25th of March, 1775, at the Court-House of the said County. The Committee were the rather induced to meet for this purpose, as it had also been reported that there were a considerable number of these performances in the Country, introduced amongst us in all probability to promote the infamous ends for which they were written; that they were to be sold indiscriminately at Purdie's office in Williamsburgh, and that unfavourable impressions had been made on some people's minds by the confident assertions of falsehoods and insidious misrepresentations of facts contained in them. The intentions of the Committee were made known to Mr. Wingate, and a delivery of the pamphlets requested in the most respectful manner, without the least suspicion that Mr. Wingate had procured them with a design to make an ill use of them, or that he would hesitate a moment as to a compliance; but, to their great surprise, he absolutely refused, urging that they belonged to Mr. Henry Mitchell, of Fredericksburgh, and he could do nothing without his express permission. The Committee then proceeded to expostulate with him on the subject, and to insist upon him that, as he regarded his association-engagements, the favour of the Committee, or the good of the publick, he would not deny so reasonable a request. They told him they would engage to make ample satisfaction to Mr. Mitchell for any damage he might sustain, and that there could not be the least reason to fear that Mr. Mitchell would be displeased, who was well known to be an associator, and acknowledged by himself to be a hearty friend to the cause which these pamphlets were intended to disparage and counteract; and that if Mr. Mitchell was not this hearty friend we hoped him to be, it must be an additional argument for the Committee to press their request, and for him to comply with it. Mr. Wingate still persisted in his refusal to deliver them up, but added that he would let the Committee have a sight of them, if they would promise to return them unhurt. This could by no means be agreed to, as they were justly apprehensive that it would be their duty to dispose of the pamphlets in a manner inconsistent with such a promise. At length the Committee, finding there was no prospect of working on Mr. Wingate by arguments or entreaties, peremptorily demanded the pamphlets, with a determination not to be defeated in their intentions. In consequence of which they were produced to the Committee, who deferred the full examination and final disposal of them till the Monday following.

On Monday, the 27th instant, they again met at the same place, according to adjournment, and after a sufficient inquiry into the contents of five pamphlets under the following titles, viz: 1st, "The Congress Canvassed, &c.," by A. W. Farmer; 2d, "A View of the Controversy between Great Britain and her Colonies," by the same; 3d, "Free Thoughts on the Proceedings of the Continental Congress, &c." by A Farmer; 4th, "Short Advice to the Counties of New-York," by A Country Gentleman; 5th, "An Alarm to the Legislature of the Province of New-York, &c.," most of them printed by Rivington, of New-York:

Resolved, That as a collection of the most audacious insults on that august body (the grand Continental Congress) and their proceedings, and also on the several Colonies from which they were deputed, particularly New-England and Virginia, of the most slavish doctrines of Provincial Government, the most impudent falsehoods and malicious artifices to excite divisions among the friends of America, they deserved to be publicly burnt, as a testimony of the Committee's detestation and abhorrence of the writers and their principles.

Which sentence was speedily executed in the presence of the Independent Company and other respectable inhabitants of the said County, all of whom joined in expressing a noble indignation against such execrable publications, and their ardent wishes for an opportunity of inflicting on the authors, publishers, and their abettors, the punishment due to their insufferable arrogance and atrocious crimes.

Published by order of the Committee:

FRANCIS TAYLOR, Clerk.

PLYMOUTH (MASSACHUSETTS) COMMITTEE TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Plymouth, March 27, 1775.

The Selectmen and Committee of Correspondence of the Town of Plymouth beg leave to represent the peculiar circumstances of this Town, and to desire such aid and protection as you in your wisdom shall think proper to direct.

We have an open harbour, on which lay the Towns of Plymouth, Kingston, and Duxbury, extending twelve or fifteen miles, in almost every part of which it is extremely easy for Troops to land, commit ravages, and retreat, unless a sufficient force is continually on duty to watch and report them. Ever since the late alarm, the inhabitants of this Town (apprehensive of danger) have been on almost constant duty, without being able to attend to their private affairs, the consequence of which must produce great distress, if not ruin, unless they can be relieved. Another very peculiar circumstance attending us is, that in case we should be attacked, no immediate aid can come to our assistance from the back country, we being surrounded by a wilderness, extending several miles, without any inhabitants at all, and several more miles with very few and scattering ones.

We therefore pray your consideration of these matters, and that you would order the Minute Regiment under the command of Colonel Cotton, be posted here, and that proper provision be made for them.

We are, gentlemen, with great respect, your very humble servants. By order of the Committee and Selectmen of the Town of Plymouth.

JOHN TORREY, Chairman.

To the Honourable Committee of Safety for the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay.

By His Excellency the Right Honourable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, His Majesty's Lieutenant and Governour General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

A PROCLAMATION.

VIRGINIA, to wit:

Whereas certain persons, styling themselves Delegates of several of His Majesty's Colonies in America, having presumed, without His Majesty's authority or consent, to assemble together at Philadelphia in the months of September and October last, have thought fit, among other unwarrantable proceedings, to resolve that it will be necessary that another Congress should be held at the same place on the 10th of May next, unless redress of certain pretended grievances be obtained before that time, and to recommend that all the Colonies in North America should choose Deputies to attend such Congress, I am commanded by the King, and I do accordingly issue this my Proclamation, to require all Magistrates and other Officers to use their utmost endeavours to prevent any such appointments of Deputies, and to exhort all persons whatever within this Government to desist from such an unjustifiable proceeding, so highly displeasing to His Majesty.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Colony, this 28th day of March, in the fifteenth year of His Majesty's reign.

DUNMORE.

God save the King.

REMARKS ON LORD DARTMOUTH'S CIRCULAR LETTER DATED JANUARY 4, 1775.

London, March, 1775.

The publication of Lord Dartmouth's Circular Letter to the several Governours on the Continent of America, excites an alarm amongst the friends of liberty; for in that letter the battery is unmasked, the design openly avowed. Permit me, Sir, to consider the words, the meaning, the design, and the consequence of Lord Dartmouth's letter.

His Lordship begins thus: "Certain persons styling themselves Delegates of His Majesty's Colonies, having presumed."—Observe, gentle reader, the official term formerly used in general warrants: "certain," is a word of great uncertainty when not applied to individuals, and, as it is not descriptive of individuals, Lord Dartmouth will find that these "certain persons, styling themselves Delegates," are not to be intimidated by his uncertain nonsense.

But what mighty crime have these uncertain persons presumed to commit? Why, they have not asked His Majesty's permission to assemble at Philadelphia in order to consult about their own affairs! This is the crime of omission laid to their charge; that of commission consists in their having thought fit, amongst other unwarrantable things, (no other unwarrantable acts are mentioned,) to resolve "to meet again on the 10th of May." What power is there lodged in any branch of our Legislature which can control and hinder a body of men from assembling in order to consider of the most effectual methods for alleviating their own distresses? If neither of the branches of the Legislature are vested with such a power, the Congress in September was not assembled unlawfully; and if it was not unlawfully assembled, by what authority, besides that of impudence, shall any of the King's Ministers prevent a meeting, not forbidden by the laws of the land? Lord Dartmouth may be an excellent divine, but he is a miserable politician; Mr. Whitfield may have qualified him for a field preacher, but as for his politicks they are of the Butean cast, and therefore detestable.

The Secretary goes on, and says: "Unless redress for certain pretended grievances be obtained, the Delegates are to meet on the 10th of May." This would be the style of every Secretary to every arbitrary tyrant in Europe. Pretended grievances! What, are we fallen so low as to be told we cannot feel, or if we can, that we are not competent judges of the oppression? This is what all tyrants aim at; this hath been accomplished in the several Monarchies of the world; and this doctrine is intended to be inculcated in England and America. The meaning of the words in Lord Dartmouth's letter is, that though the Americans feel, yet shall they not dare to complain, or endeavour by legal measures to obtain alleviation or redress; this is adding cruelties and insult to injuries intolerable. When a man is by oppression wilfully tormented, to increase his pain because his sensations are exquisite and his complaints loud, would characterize a being worse even than what our imaginations can form in idea; yet this character the pious, the preaching, the saint-like Lord Dartmouth assumes throughout his whole letter! Is it necessary in becoming a Minister to cease to feel as a man? And must every tender sensation be obliterated because a man holds an office, the exercise of the functions of which are supposed to be directed to publick utility?

Let us next observe the style of Lord Dartmouth's letter: "I am commanded by the King to signify to you his pleasure, that you do your utmost to prevent any such appointment of Deputies within the Colony under your Government."

We have had too much reason to perceive, that publick utility has given little pleasure, and therefore all meetings to promote that must occasion great displeasure. The Governours, however, though willing to execute the orders, will find themselves incapable to effect what is commanded so imperatively by this Minister of Christian meekness. In a meeting held for the preservation of civil liberty, nothing can be unwarrantable, unless the defeat of despotism, in which all good men, who understand the dispute, and are well-wishers to their species, must wish the Americans success. Those who can dream of an English Parliament having a right to take the money out of the pockets of the Americans, are but ill-instructed in the principles of our Constitution, which forbid that any man should be taxed by an assembly wherein he is not represented. A ministerial champion has inculcated the reverse of the doctrine; but when it is known that he is retained for the purpose, little regard will be paid to any argument such a writer advances. Sir William Meredith and his wand, Doctor Johnson and his pension, are alike beneath the notice of independent men.

We are next to consider the design of Lord Dartmouth's letter, which is to destroy the Constitution in America, and to institute a mode of arbitrary Government like that in Canada, of a Governour and Council. When that is accomplished, the people will be under the immediate subjection of the Crown, and thus the vast extension of kingly power must obliterate every remaining vestige or trace of liberty. An establishment of this kind once effected, will produce more evils than can be at present foreseen, though the consequences of those evils may be deduced from comparison and analogy. Such of the Americans as are at present strenuous asserters of liberty, may, from a corruption of manners, or out of resentment of our ill treatment in suffering them to be enslaved, join the conspirators against the Constitution, and thus destroy what has been the envy and the admiration of the European world.

The Secretary for America we have been taught to look on as a zealous, pious, and devout disciple of Christ; yet we see this man of holiness, not having the fear of God before his eyes, joining with his coadjutors in an attempt to enslave our fellow-subjects in America! Who that regarded the welfare of human kind would aid in an attempt to set up the power of any part of the Legislature over the Constitution? But to talk of good Government, civil justice, or liberty, whilst Tories are at the helm, would be like talking of righteousness in the dominions of Satan.

IGNOTUS.

New-York, March 28, 1775.

MR. RIVINGTON: As your paper has hitherto supported the character of an impartial one, I send the enclosed for publication; if you cannot insert it, return it by the bearer. But while a Junius can attack a Prime Minister, and a Tribunus the King, I hope it will not be deemed treason for an Englishman or an American to attack the petty tyrants to whom this is with deference and respect most humbly dedicated by the author.

TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE OF PHILADELPHIA.

GENTLEMEN: You appear in a publick character, and if the reins of Government are not devolved on you by common consent, you have at least usurped the legislative authority. I shall not, then, deem it any violation of the liberty of the Press, in this publick manner personally to address you, and to animadvert on the contents of your letter (dated February 16) to the Committee of this City, lately published—an epistle which I could not peruse without a mixture of indignation and astonishment.

The body from whence you derive your authority emboldens and warrants me freely to canvass all matters on the administration of Government; and if the liberty of the Press be not denied me, as an Englishman I will claim the privilege, and undaunted by your frowns, your threats, or your inquisition, will boldly pass such strictures on your conduct as I conceive it merits. Your names, gentlemen, are well known; they are, I believe, respectable, and would give weight to your assertions, were they not contradicted by the most notorious and the most obstinate facts. Pardon me if in this address I should take the liberty to relate a few truths, truths which I well know will sound ungrateful in your ears.

Your ridiculous argument of holding up an union, cannot justify your allegations, for such an union does not exist. It would have afforded me signal pleasure to observe men of characters, dignified as yours are, enrolled as Committee men, and delegated by the rest, for the special purpose of communicating intelligence to your neighbours, disposed to exhibit a state of things founded on the strictest truth. But your letter to our Committee is replete with misrepresentation and deception, calculated rather to hoodwink the people of this Province, than to give them a just state of publick affairs; you present us with a prison to peep through, to give a glare to every object we behold.

You tell us you have seen frequent publications from this City, containing false representations, and holding up ideas of dissensions among you, which you have the assurance to say do not exist.

How can you, in the face of the world, make this bold assertion? You must know that it is totally destitute of foundation; and I will venture to tell you that you must all have had better information!

No dissensions among you! Have not the loyal Friends in your and the adjacent Province published their dissent [January 24, 1775] from the mad independent Resolves of your Republican Congress, and all your illegal and unwarrantable combinations?

Is not this Society very numerous throughout your Province, and at least as respectable as any other?

Some of your Committee have idly pretended that this was the act of a very few, and disapproved of by the Society in general. This is a shameful reflection on the character of the gentleman who subscribed their protest on behalf of the whole Society.

This gentleman has too much honour to be guilty of so ungenerous an act, and fortunately for him his reputation is too well established to be impaired by your feeble darts. I challenge you to find a man of more integrity throughout all your democracy. Are you not then ashamed to declare these dissensions are only encouraged by a few interested persons, who take a malignant pleasure in exciting discords?

Let me address myself to one of you who is a member of that honourable community, which he has most daringly and impudently insulted by subscribing his name to that calumniating letter. Let me call upon him to erase his name from amongst you as a small atonement for the unpardonable insinuations he has thrown out against his brethren. He has publicly attacked them, and publicly charged them with taking a malignant pleasure in exciting discords and dissensions, and has dared to assert that this state is founded on the strictest truth; what a strange perversion!

You, gentlemen, have the confidence to declare, that your Committee have not found the least difficulty in carrying into execution any one Resolution of the Continental Congress. If this be true, I have, I confess, been strangely deceived. Let us inquire into this matter. Do not the Congress bind themselves by the sacred ties of virtue, honour, and love of liberty, that no advantage shall be taken of the non-importation, but that goods shall be sold as they have been for the last twelve months? Have not the dry-goods Merchants, without the least opposition, generally broke through this agreement, and is not your Committee apprized of it? Have they not made inquiry into the prices of various articles, and did they not find the Merchants had advanced the prices on some goods twenty-five, on others fifty, seventy-five, nay! one hundred per cent., and did not the Committee acquiesce in this? These facts are too stubborn for you to controvert; the reasons were obvious; the Resolve was too tyrannical to be borne; it better suited the slaves of Russia than the freemen of America. As a Committee you knew this, and you knew you dare not attempt to enforce it; and as some on your Committee were in the dry-goods trade, it was your interest, and you thought it too your duty, to pass it over. How then can you declare, and palm your declaration on the publick as the strictest truth, that the Committee have met with no difficulty in carrying into execution any one Resolution of the Congress? Do not the Congress bind themselves by the same sacred ties to encourage frugality and economy, and to discourage every species of dissipation and extravagance?

Are not the Assemblies continued in your City as usual, under your own immediate notice, and is not your interdum Secretary officious therein? Did your Committee find no difficulty in carrying into execution what you had foolishly resolved was the sense of the Congress respecting Sheep? Yes. You disgraced yourselves by your scandalous conduct; you invaded private property, and some of your body committed daring robberies in the face of the day, and in the sight of the whole world. You forced people to carry their own goods on their backs to the Jail of your City; you intimidated a helpless old woman for no other offence than innocently offering her goods for sale, and would have obliged her to take the same measures you had forced others to before, without law, without justice, reason, or mercy, had not a Magistrate, whose presence and commands struck terror into your dastardly souls, rescued her and her property from your domineering threats. Here, too, I might touch on the article of Tea, and tell of the clemency and mercy of some of your monsters relative to importations of this baneful weed, but it is an affair of too nice delicacy, we will not take up its ashes.

Yet you have declared your Committee have met with no difficulty in carrying into execution any one Resolution of the Continental Congress. I tell you this assertion is an imposition on the people of this Province. Perhaps you call this novel species of procedure rather a pleasure than a difficulty. I believe it; so fond are you of power, and so impatient of bearing rule, that at some rate or other you are determined on the possession of it; and while your rest secure in the idea of enforcing your mandates by a lawless mob, you no doubt glory in the acquisition of your usurpation.

Some of you, though active in the most atrocious violences, by artifice, would persuade the world that these proceedings have not been done by the Committee as a body; but if individuals of you will repeatedly commit such extraordinary depredations on the property of your countrymen, in defiance of all laws, why do ye not discharge them? Why do ye not publish your disapprobation of their proceedings? Why not demand an acknowledgment of their errors? Instead of this, you tacitly applaud them; appoint them to new offices; and while you thus tamely acquiesce, you are parties in the guilt, and deserve the severest reprehension.

You tell us the number of dissentients with you are very small. You are strangely deluded. If you had made the necessary inquiry, you would have found their numbers were great, and by far the most respectable of the community. They do not consist of the noisy, blustering and bellowing patriots, but the cool, deliberate, and thinking men, renowned for probity, integrity, and honour, unlike your Adams, Hancock, and your Lee.

The inhabitants of your Province have too much good sense to consider the least infraction of the proceedings of the Continental Congress as productive of their political ruin. The more sensible part are shocked at many of their Resolves. They consider a compliance with them as likely to overwhelm all America with destruction; they look upon them as setting up a total independence of the parent state, and consider the leaders of the present measures as leaders of a rebellion and faction, which portend the most miserable calamities.

The disputes between the State and its Members, at the meeting of the Congress, were easily adjusted. They had not arrived to such an alarming length as to throw us into a state of despair. Many able and prudent writers among us, as well as you, recommend the adoption of moderation and temper. Your Farmer, your versatile Farmer, was one of this number. He did not know on which side the balance would preponderate; he played the Vicar's part; he was Jack on both sides; he waited the event of the farce; violence rose victorious; he embraced her cause, and in derision of the reputation he had acquired by his former Letters, he parted with it to gain fresh laurels. But the doctrines he had advanced formerly, very much cramped his soaring genius. He could not form his new edifice with grandeur, without demolishing his old fabric, and in his attempt to form a fresh wreath, his old one decayed, and his new was blasted. The fast friends to our constitutional liberties pointed out, and laboured hard for a firm and dutiful Petition, and a spirited, but decent Remonstrance, as the most probable means of establishing peace and harmony. They warmly recommended the drawing a rational line of Parliamentary jurisdiction and American allegiance, on the principles of the British Constitution. How a conduct like this would in all human probability have terminated, I leave to your own candour, though you seem to be divested of the smallest share. We find, from every account, his most gracious Majesty (warmly attached to the interest of all his subjects, however remote) is ready to hear our prayers. Every friend to America in England urged us to moderation; and had their advice been regarded, the unnatural dispute ere this day, might have been brought to the most happy issue. The advocates for these wise and moderate measures daily meet with the grossest insults and abuse from every paltry Republican pen, to whose inconsistent jargon your partial Presses were ever free and easy of admission; and while the independent Incendiary, now known throughout America by the name of the "lean and grinning Cassius," found the most inviting access for his lucubrations, wisdom, prudence, and reason were excluded an audience. Your papers were kept under an undue influence, and filled with fabricated letters and paragraphs, culled from every fiery publication, to alarm and inflame. These are truths which can be solidly supported, and if you will revert to the papers of that period you will not deny. One of your Printers, of your true Republican cast, published the most vile and treasonable performance that was ever exhibited to the world, and this same Printer rejected a moderate and pertinent reply. Another of your weak and blustering Printers stands impeached for a forgery, and there is great reason to believe he continues in the same practice. This same Printer, as a reward for his exhibition of scandal, was by your society of pedagogues, made a Committee-man, the more effectually to secure his press, the engine of rebellion and abuse; and there is nothing so dirty, nothing so base, but he will give it a conveyance. This was a grand stroke of policy, worthy of the jesuitical Cassius. Your Committee have since made a most flagrant attack upon the liberty of the press, to the eternal disgrace of your cause and your City, and but for their noble stand, and the virtuous intrepidity of one of your citizens, nothing in future could have appeared amongst you without a license from traitors and insurgents. But, fortunately for America, and to the lasting honour of a single man, you are stopped in your career, and stand as objects for the world to gaze and laugh at.

But though things have been carried to this elevated pitch, the sons of sedition have, with unabated ardour and unceasing zeal, circulated the most palpable falsehoods to mislead the unwary and unsuspecting; witness that bastard Act of Parliament, framed pro tempore by one of your Secretaries, so full of falsehoods that one would scarce have believed a fool could have been found that would credit it; yet sorry I am to say, it was greedily swallowed by the ignorant, for the factious, who are scattered, like the Jews, over every part of the earth, did not hesitate to declare it was authentick; and on a late excursion into the interior parts of your Province, I found a difficulty to persuade many deluded Germans that it was totally false; they told me of a gentleman in an exalted station (whose name for the present I shall conceal, though one of your Committee) who had repeatedly assured them, that if they did not unite with the Congress, that very act would take place the ensuing summer. But notwithstanding these artful devices; notwithstanding the almost infinite pains taken by your party to stop the circulation of moderate publications, (appointing two patriotick shoemakers to wait on Mr. Airey to deter him from selling pamphlets of a free complexion;) notwithstanding the pains taken by one of your Committee to prevent the circulation of Rivington's Gazetteer; I can with great truth declare, that the eyes of the Pennsylvanians are opening very fast; they begin to see the independent designs of their demagogues; they see a Republick growing fast into form, and they begin to abhor your destructive manœuvres. I can speak with great confidence, because I do not speak from the partial information of a few individuals, nor from the improbable accounts of interested Committees. My accounts are the result of various and mature information, confirmed by what I myself have seen in your City and Province. I have, with the most pleasing satisfaction, beheld an astonishing alteration in the opinions and in the conduct of the good people with you.

I know that the number of loyal subjects are increasing with a rapid progress; the Friends have nobly took the lead; they will, I hope, be followed by almost every class of people. Yet your gentlemen assert that a cheerful acquiescence has been manifested by all orders and ranks of people. It would have been more manly to have joined Edes and Gill of Boston, in declaring their protest was published ten years ago; and as you have the presses under your own influence, it would be easy to forbid them to publish a contradiction; there would be no difficulty in this, though there will in making people believe a dissension does not exist with you.

Let the same patriot who threatened to pull down the doors of one of your Churches if the wardens would not suffer the bells to be rung on Colonel Putnam's alarm; let this gentleman tell the printer, if he dare to contradict what you put in, his house shall be demolished; this would be showing the weight of an argument he deduced in his laboured harangue at a certain patriotick meeting, that it was "absolutely necessary a very large Committee should be appointed; for who knows but we may have property to destroy." He omitted pointing out another advantage of having a large Committee, viz: extending the number of our worthy fellow-citizen John Holt's subscriptions; for, I hear, with expanded hearts you have exerted your influence in his favour, (in consequence of his decline here,) and have procured him not less than fifty subscribers; so that we shall now have him like a new phoenix, arising on this fresh pile, with new life, strength, and vigour.

Suffer me now, gentlemen, to take my leave of you for the present. It was with reluctance I took up the pen; and I shall lay it down with pleasure, after hoping that you will not take what I have said amiss. I only want these facts to wound in the sore places. I had the good of this Province too much at heart to let them be deluded by your publication. If I have inserted one thing which will not bear the strictest scrutiny, I will cheerfully recant it, and ask pardon for my offence; but I have, to the best of my knowledge, without aggravation, laid down the above for your perusal, and intend, when leisure permits, to inform you of as true a state of affairs in this Province as the above is of yours.

FOURTH SERIES.—VOL. II.

AN ENGLISHMAN.

WORCESTER COUNTY (MASSACHUSETTS) COMMITTEE.

March 28, 1775.

The Convention met according to adjournment.

Voted, That the Reverend Mr. Chaplain be requested to open this Convention with prayer.

Voted, That the Convention do now proceed to the Meeting-House, to attend the Sermon by the Rev. Elisha Fish, and the other exercises.

The Convention being again met in the afternoon:

Voted, That the thanks of the Convention be presented to the Reverend Mr. Fish, for the Discourse preached before them, and that the Standing Committee wait upon him and request a copy thereof for the Press.

Voted, That the Standing Committee print as many copies of said Discourse as they judge fit for circulation.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON, TO HIS FRIEND IN NORTH-CAROLINA, DATED MARCH 29, 1775.

The gloomy aspect of your Country, and America in general, mentioned in your last, is truly alarming. I feel for Mr. * * * *, and wish he would make this his retreat. Let me advise you to leave your uncertain situation, and bring your family over. If you object to this, pray sell your slave-estate at any rate. This early hint will give you an opportunity of doing this to advantage. Last week a friend wished me joy on having the good fortune to sell my slaves and American estate; for, says he, "I was lately whispered by the Minister, that all slaves on the Continent would be seized as forfeited by the Provinces, and sold in the French and Spanish Islands, the profits arising to reimburse the great expense of Ships, Troops, &c., sent to America." This will tend to the great disappointment of our West-India Planters, who will expect to stock the sugar-works from the Continent. Your lands must be cultivated by the poor, as in these Kingdoms.

NEW-YORK COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee, for the City of New-York, in the Committee Chamber, on the 29th of March, 1775, present—

Isaac Low, Chairman ,	Francis Lewis,	Jeremiah Platt,
John Jay,	John Lasher,	Comfort Sands,
Isaac Sears,	Joseph Totten,	William W. Gilbert,
David Johnston,	Thomas Ivers,	Nicholas Roosevelt,
Alexander McDougall,	John Anthony,	Edward Fleming,
Abraham Walton,	Francis Basset,	Frederick Jay,
Peter T. Curtenius,	Victor Bicker,	George Janeway,
Abraham Brasher,	William Goforth,	Lindley Murray,
Abraham P. Lott,	Isaac Roosevelt,	Lancaster Burling :
Abraham Duryee,

The following advertisement, which was drawn in consequence of an application to this Committee at their last meeting, was read, viz:

To the respectable Inhabitants of the City and County of NEW-YORK:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: In times so critical as the present, it becomes the duty of every citizen to pay particular attention to the welfare of the community, and to counteract every measure that may tend to injure its interest.

Influenced by these considerations, we view with concern the uneasiness occasioned in this City, by the late unusual exportation of Nails; and perceive with anxiety the distress to which a monopoly of this or any other article may expose many among us.

For what purpose, or with what design, such a quantity has, in so short a time, been purchased and exported, we neither know nor can we conceive. The clamour raised among the Mechanicks, by the scarcity of Nails during the continuance of the last Non-Importation Agreement, is recent in our memories; and though the manufactories which have since been established will supply more than sufficient for our own consumption, we apprehend it would be imprudent thus rashly to part with what we have in store, especially as this sudden exportation has given just grounds for suspicion and alarm.

It is not within the limits of our appointment to provide against the evil tendency of this circumstance, by any regulation; but considering ourselves as fellow-citizens with you, and deeply interested in every thing that respects the public weal, and the support of the great cause in which our all is at stake, we take the liberty of declaring our sentiments upon the occasion; and recommend to you to avoid drawing the people of this City into any difficulties or discontents, by exporting or encouraging the monopoly of such great quantities of Nails as may leave a provision for our own consumption precarious, especially as it is not certain whether these Nails, so hastily bought up and exported, are designed to be used, or to be stored.

Permit us also to submit to your consideration the propriety of supplying the Troops at Boston with implements of war, and articles essential to hostilities. We cannot forbear observing, that the duty we owe to our interest and reputation should lead us to withhold such supplies from the Troops, at least till we have assurances that nothing hostile is intended against us.

And debates arising on the propriety of publishing the same as a Committee; and the question being put thereon, it was carried in the affirmative, in the manner following, viz:

For the Question.

Mr. J. Jay,
Mr. F. Jay,
Mr. Platt,
Mr. J. Anthony,
Mr. N. Roosevelt,
Mr. Basset,
Mr. Brasher,
Mr. I. Roosevelt,
Mr. Sands,

Against the Question.

Mr. Duryee,
Mr. Johnston,
Mr. Goforth,
Mr. Totten,
Mr. A. Walton,
Mr. Curteneus,
Mr. Bicker.

The Chairman entered his dissent against the above act.

By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

LETTER FROM J. BROWN TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE IN BOSTON.

Montreal, March 29, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: Immediately after the reception of your letters and pamphlets, I went to Albany to find the state of the Lakes, and established a correspondence with Dr. Joseph Young. I found the Lakes impassable at that time. About a fortnight after I set out for Canada, and arrived at St. John's in fourteen days, having undergone almost inconceivable hardships, the Lake Champlain being very high, the small streams and rivers, and great part of the Country for twenty miles each side the Lake, especially towards Canada, under water. The Lake Champlain was partly open and partly covered with dangerous ice, which breaking loose for miles in length, our crafts drove us against an island, and froze us in for two days, after which we were glad to foot it on land.

I delivered your letters to Messrs. Thomas Walker and Blake, and was very kindly received by the Committee of Correspondence at Montreal, from whom I received the following state of affairs in the Province of Quebeck. Governour Carleton is no great politician, a man of sour, morose temper, a strong friend to Administration and the late Acts of the British Parliament which respect America, particularly the Quebeck Bill; has restrained the liberty of the Press; that nothing can be printed without examination and license. Application has been made to him for printing the Address from the Continental Congress, and a refusal obtained. All the Troops in this Province are ordered to hold themselves in readiness for Boston, on the shortest notice. Four or five hundred snow-shoes are prepared, for what use they know not. Mr. Walker has wrote you about three weeks since, and has been very explicit. He informs you that two regular Officers (Lieutenants) have gone off in disguise, supposed to be gone to Boston, and to make what discovery they can through the Country.

I have the pleasure and satisfaction to inform you that, through the industry and exertions of our friends in Canada, our enemies are not at present able to raise ten men for Administration. The weapons that have been used by our friends to thwart the constant endeavours of the friends of Government (so called) have been chiefly in terrorem. The French people are (as a body) extremely ignorant and bigoted, the Curates or Priests having almost the entire government of their temporal as well as spiritual affairs. In La Prairie, a small village about nine miles from Montreal, I gave my landlord a letter of address, and there being four Curés in the village praying over the dead body of an old Friar, the pamphlet was soon handed them, who sent a messenger to purchase several of them. I made them a present of each of them one, and was desired to wait on them in the Nunnery with the holy sisters. They appeared to have no disposition unfriendly toward the Colonies, but chose rather to stand neuter.

Two men from the New-Hampshire Grants accompanied me over the Lakes. The one was an old Indian hunter, acquainted with the St. Francois Indians and their language; the other was a captive many years among the Caghnawaga Indians, which is the principal of all the Canadian Six Nations and Western tribes of Indians, whom I sent to inquire and search out any intrigues carrying on among them. These men have this minute returned, and report that they were very kindly received by the Caghnawaga Indians, with whom they tarried several days. The Indians say they have been repeatedly applied to, and requested to join with the King's Troops to fight Boston, but have peremptorily refused, and still intend to refuse. They are a very simple, politic people, and say that if they are obliged, for their own safety, to take up arms on either side, that they shall take part on the side of their brethren, the English in New-England; all the chiefs of the Caghnawaga tribe being of English extraction, captivated in their infancy. They have wrote a friendly letter to Colonel Israel Putnam, of Pomfret, in Connecticut, in consequence of a letter which Colonel Putnam sent them, in which letter they give their brother Putnam assurance of their peaceable disposition. Several French gentlemen of Montreal have paid the Governour a visit, and offered him their services, as Officers, to raise a Canadian Army, and join the King's Troops. The Governour told them he could get Officers in plenty, but the difficulty consisted in raising Soldiers.

There is no prospect of Canada sending Delegates to the Continental Congress. The difficulty consists in this: should the English join in the Non-Importation Agreement, the French would immediately monopolize the Indian trade. The French in Canada are a set of people who know no other way of procuring wealth and honour but by becoming Court sycophants; and as the introduction of the French laws will make room for the French gentry, they are very thick about the Governour. You may depend that, should any movement be made among the French to join against the Colonies, your friends here will give the shortest notice possible, and the Indians, on their part, have engaged to do the same; so that you have no occasion to expect to be surprised without notice, should the worst event take place.

I have established a channel of correspondence through the New-Hampshire Grants, which may be depended on. Mr. Walker's letter comes by the hand of Mr. Jeffers, once of Boston, now on his way thither, which, together with this, is a full account of affairs here. I shall tarry here some time, but shall not go to Quebeck, as there are a number of their Committee here.

One thing I must mention, to be kept as a profound secret. The Fort at Tyconderoga must be seized as soon as possible, should hostilities be committed by the King's Troops. The people on New-Hampshire Grants have engaged to do this business, and in my opinion they are the most proper persons for this job. This will effectually curb this Province, and all the Troops that may be sent here.

As the messenger to carry this letter has been waiting some time with impatience, I must conclude, by subscribing myself, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servant,
J. BROWN.

To Mr. Samuel Adams, } Com'tee of Correspondence in Boston.
Dr. J. Warren,

I am this minute informed that Mr. Carleton has ordered that no Wheat go out of the River until further order; the design is obvious.

LANCASTER COUNTY (PENNSYLVANIA) COMMITTEE.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Observation for Lancaster County, at Lancaster, on the 30th of March, 1775:

The Committee took into consideration, amongst other things, the conduct of George Ross, Esquire, one of the Representatives of this County, in the late interesting debate in the House of Assembly of this Province, respecting an answer to his Honour the Governour's Message, recommending a separate Petition from the Assembly to His Majesty for redress of grievances, and do unanimously approve of the active part taken by the said Mr. Ross in opposition to the measures proposed, as the same would tend to introduce a disunion amongst the different Colonies, and defeat the salutary regulations of the Continental Congress. And it being put to vote, it is Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the thanks of this Committee be rendered to Mr. Ross and the other worthy Members of the honourable House, who have evinced their steady attention and virtuous adherence to the true welfare of their Country, by pursuing the only probable means of redress; in supporting and preserving entire the union of the Colonies, so absolutely necessary for the common safety of America.

EBERHART MICHAEL, Clerk pro tem.

New-York, March 30, 1775.

The chiefs of the Six Nations, who, during the course of the winter, held several Congresses with Colonel Guy Johnson, the Superintendent, are, we hear, at present with him in consultation respecting the conduct of the several tribes to the Southward, and the steps to be further taken for preventing future quarrels in that quarter; to which end it is said they propose to use every means in their power for collecting their scattered people from amongst the several Nations, and fixing them in a place where they will be more immediately under the direction of their proper confederacy. And we are likewise informed that Colonel Johnson, who was greatly indisposed through cold he caught attending on one of the conferences, is now much better.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS-BAY.

NO. VII.

Boston, March 30, 1775.

My Friends and Countrymen:

Without any introduction, preface, or apology, I shall reassume the paper which was the subject of our examination in my last, beginning where we then ended. This last column of our writer is curious enough. I can hardly determine whether profound silence, smiling neglect, or a serious refutation would be its best answer.

When he tells us, with the air of an argument, "if allegiance be due to the person of the King, (he might have added, or to the British Crown,) he then appears in a new capacity, as King of America, or rather, in several new capacities, as King of Massachusetts, of Rhode-Island, of Connecticut, &c., &c." He might have still added, and if these Colonies are three thousand miles from the King's palace, from Kew, or his place of residence, wherever it be, he must govern them by Deputies or Viceroys. And what does all this amount to? Where is the difficulty? What is his inference? Is it to the point?

But if our connection with Great Britain, by the Parliament, be dissolved, the Colonies will have none among themselves, their having one and the same person for their Sovereign being no union at all; as he must govern each State by its own Parliament, which would pursue its own particular interest, notwithstanding any possible efforts of the King for the general good. Admitting all this, and as much more of the kind as our wanderer pleases, to be true, it is no evidence of our connection with the Parent

State. They may be good reasons why we should, by some means or other, especially at the present day, consolidate into a closer union among the Colonies, that a common interest might govern the whole. We might therefore pass it by as nothing to the purpose. But let us attend a moment to the state of facts. The only way to govern States, and direct their movements, is by the edict of a Monarch, or the laws of a Legislative Assembly. Such is the Constitution of Government in most of the British Colonies, that no law can be passed but by the consent of the King's representative, who, as he is appointed by His Majesty, and holds his office during his pleasure, observes such a line of conduct as is pointed out by his Royal master, or the mandate of his Minister. In all the Colonies, unless Connecticut is an exception, their laws are sent home and laid before His Majesty for his approbation, who has it in his power, within a limited time, entirely to disannul them. Considering this, and that the appointment of all executive officers is either mediately or immediately in the Crown; excepting in one or two of the Colonies; it is scarcely supposable that any one could pursue its own interest to the detriment of another; or that a course of conduct could be adopted inconsistent with the best welfare of the Parent State, so long as the powers of the Crown, and the checks of prerogatives are directed by constitutional motives.

The next argument of our substantial reasoner is, I believe, entirely new, and would have been so a thousand years hence, had not he, in the labours of invention, stumbled upon it; it is all his own; no one will envy him the honour of this mighty discovery: "If the King of Great Britain has really these new capacities, they ought to be added to his titles; and another difficulty will arise—the prerogatives of these new Crowns have never been defined or limited. Is the monarchical part of the several Provincial Constitutions to be nearer, or more remote from absolute monarchy, in an inverted ratio to each one's approaching to or receding from a Republic?" The Royal title is, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c." Where, then, will this titular argument carry us? What mighty revolutions, junctions, and disjunctions will it accomplish? If it proves any thing in the application of its inventor, it proves that all the Kings of England, from Henry the Sixth to the reigning Prince, were Kings of France. That Ireland and Great Britain are distinct States, in a different sense from what the Colonies are; and that Henry the Eighth and King George the Third (God bless him) were both Defenders of the Faith, though the one a Papist, and the other a Protestant. The prerogatives of the Crown are defined and limited with convenient certainty by our several Charters, the ends of Government being confined within the circle of doing good. Prerogatives are not, nor ever will be defined with mathematical nicety, "or inverted ratios;" humanity itself forbids it. The dividing line between day and night, light and darkness, has never been drawn, nor can it be. You may therefore as well argue from the want of such a line, the non-existence of light and darkness, as from indefinite prerogatives, the coalition of States.

But, says our pleasant amuser, if we are not subject to the supreme authority of the Mother Country, "where shall we find the British Constitution, that, we all agree, we are entitled to? We shall seek for it in vain in our Provincial Assemblies. Charter Governments have no more power than what is expressly granted by their several Charters. The first Charter granted to this Province did not empower the Assembly to tax the people at all. Our Council Boards are destitute of the authority of the House of Lords, and its members of the splendid appendages of peerage. Thus the supposition of our being independent States, or exempt from the authority of Parliament, destroys the very idea of our having a British Constitution." And further, "the argument drawn from the first principle of our being entitled to English liberties, destroys the principle itself; it deprives us of the Bill of Rights, and all the benefits resulting from the Revolution, of English Laws and the British Constitution." Our patriots, says he, have been so intent upon building up American rights, that they have overlooked the rights of Great Britain and our own interest, and instead of proving that we are entitled to the same privileges that a subject in Great Britain enjoys, they have been arguing away our most essential rights. Upon reading this paragraph I could not but wonder who it was "that suffered his pen to run so freely." Can it be an honest native of this Province, with such a stand in the community as to be able to see distinctly all its political manœuvres?

If our position be true, which I think we have abundantly confirmed, that previous to the Colonies receiving their several Charters they were in a natural state compared with Great Britain; it undeniably follows, that they possess every power or right that is not expressly given into the hands of the King by those Charters, they being the original source of power, it passing from them to the King, and vice versa.

Our first Charter enabled this Colony expressly "from time to time to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes, ordinances, directions, and instructions necessary for the well ordering and governing the same." This most certainly included in it the right of making laws for taxation, as well as those for any other purpose.

In order to determine whether the argument drawn from the principle of our being entitled to English liberties, destroys itself, deprives us of the Bill of Rights, and all the benefits resulting from the Revolution, the English laws, and the British Constitution, it may be necessary to call to mind their chief excellencies, and their essential and principal characteristics.

The freedom of the English Constitution, says the great Montesquieu, which has directly for its end political liberty, consists in a certain distribution of the legislative, executive, and judiciary powers of the State, or the fundamental laws. The freedom of the subject consists in his standing in such a relation to this Constitution, and the laws originating from it, as to be secure in his person and property. In general, then, for the Americans to have British Constitutions they must have free ones: and they must stand in the same relation to them, as to their valuable and essential purposes, that the Britons form with theirs.

The King, who is the third branch in the Legislative Assembly, and the first magistrate in the Kingdom, is dependant on the people for his supplies. The Royal authority is a kind of invisible entity, a spring that ought to move easily, without noise and attrition, giving motion to the political machine, and having the publick good for its standing regulator. It can do no wrong. And if it should happen to get impaired, or deviate from foreign attractions, the effectual and constitutional remedy is tight purse-strings. To have then a British Constitution, is to have the third branch of our Legislative Assembly, and first officer in the Province, dependant on the people for his salary. The officers of the Crown in England must see to the legality of their conduct; if they violate the laws, even by Royal direction, they cannot take shelter behind the Throne, or plead in justification an illegal command. A Provincial Governour ought then to make the law of the land, and the fundamental principles of society, the rule of conduct, and not the mandate from a Minister of State. The House of Lords have a negative voice on all Acts of the Commons; so have our Council Board on all Bills of our Representatives. In fact they have, in substance, constitutionally, all the authority of the House of Peers.

A British Constitution knows of no laws binding upon its subjects but what were made, or consented to by themselves, or their substitutes, and what the legislators themselves are subject to, in common with every individual in the community: this is a grand security, a constitutional bulwark of liberty. "Liberty of man, in society, (says the immortal Locke,) is to be under no other legislative power but that established by consent in the commonwealth; nor under the dominion of any will, or restraint of any law, but what this legislative shall enact according to the trust reposed in it." "Freedom of men in Government, (says the same author,) is to have a standing rule to live by, common to all and every one in that society, and made by the legislative power erected in it; and not to be subject to the arbitrary will of another. This freedom from absolute arbitrary power is so necessary to, and closely joined with a man's preservation, that he cannot part with it but by what forfeits his preservation and life together."

Indulge me in adding a few more lines, from this consummate reasoner; lines which ought to be wrote in letters of gold, and sunk to the centre of every man's heart. "The supreme power cannot take from any man part of his property without his own consent; for the preservation of property being the end of Government, and that for which men enter into society, it necessarily supposes and requires that the people should have property, without which they must be supposed to lose that by entering into society, which was the end for which they entered into it: too gross an absurdity for any man to own. Men therefore in society, having property, they must have such a right to the goods which by the laws of the community are theirs, that no body hath a right to take their substance, or any part of it from them without their consent. Without this they have no property at all; for I have no property in that which another can by right take from me when he pleases, against my consent. Hence it is a mistake to think that supreme or legislative power of a community can do what it will, or dispose of the estates of the subject arbitrarily, or take any part of them at pleasure. For Government is constituted with this condition, and for this end, that men might have and secure their properties."

A British Constitution, then; which Massachusettsensis says is agreed on all hands we are entitled to, knows of no authority to make laws for more than three millions of subjects, but such as is erected among themselves, in which they are represented, to which the law makers themselves are subjected, and which is consistent with the enjoyment of private property. Compare, on the one hand, the assumed principles of Parliament and ministerial measures, with the above criterions, and on the other the natural and constitutional authority of our Assemblies, and draw your conclusions.

The fundamental laws of England, which are laws of mercy, and the precepts of reason, of improved artificial reason, are severally declarations of the rights of Englishmen. They are emanations from the Constitution, are blended with it, are a part of it. They principally and with vigilant jealousy regard and secure life, liberty, and property. Next to a man's life, (if not before it,) the nearest and dearest enjoyment is freedom; a deprivation of this being a sort of civil death, or living misery. Anglicæ jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem. Magna Charta, or the great Charter of the liberties of the Kingdom, which was made in the ninth year of Henry the Third, was declaratory of the fundamental laws and ancient liberties of the subject. By the twenty-ninth chapter of this revered piece of antiquity, no man can be taken, or imprisoned, dispossessed of his freehold, of his lands, of his liberties, (not even by Parliament,) but by the verdict of his equals, or by the law of the land,* or condemned without lawful trial by a jury. A Statute of the 25 Edw. I. was a confirmation of this great Charter, by the sixth chapter of which no aid or tax can be taken on any occasion whatever, but by the common consent of the Realm, and for the common benefit thereof. By another foundation-statute in the 34 Edw. I. no tallage or aid can be taken or levied, but by grant and common consent of Parliament; tallage, according to Lord Coke, being a general word including all taxes, subsidies, &c., whatever; and Parliament, meaning an assembly, composed of the Representatives of the people. Within this Act are all new offices erected with new fees, or old offices with additional fees; for this is a tax upon the subject. By the famous Habeas Corpus Act, which is founded in common right, and on common law, which is the birth-right of every Englishman, no person can be sent prisoner out of England or Wales into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or to any other place beyond seas. The Bill of Rights, which passed the British Parliament upon the accession of William the Third to the throne, after reciting the declaration of the Lords and Commons, and the endeavours of James the Second to subvert and extirpate the Protestant religion, and the laws and liberties of the Kingdom, declares, among a number of other articles for vindicating and asserting the ancient rights and liberties of the people:

"4thly: That levying money without consent and grant of Parliament is illegal.

* How much property is taken from the subject and given to the Crown by the operation of the unparalleled Port Bill, and that without any trial, pretensions of forfeiture, law, or justice.

"5thly: That it is the right of the subject to petition the King.

"6thly: That the raising or keeping a Standing Army within the Kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of Parliament, is against law.

"7thly: That the subjects which are Protestants, may have arms for their defence, suitable to their conditions, and as allowed by law.

"13th: That for the redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening, and preserving the laws, Parliament ought to be held frequently."

These articles, with others, are declared, claimed, and asserted to be the true, ancient, and indubitable rights and liberties of the people of the Kingdom; and so ought to be esteemed, adjudged, allowed, and taken. Accordingly it was enacted by the King, Lords, and Commons, that this Bill should stand, remain, and be the law of the Realm forever. None of those Acts gave any new rights to the subject; they are only declarative of what were their unresigned, inherent, ancient rights as Englishmen, as Britons. If, then, we are entitled to British liberties, we are entitled to all those rights, privileges, and securities which we have been surveying. These are the essential qualities; the first principles, and capital characteristics of the British Government, the props and checks which have enabled it to stand so many ages the rude shocks of foreign invasions; domestick feuds, civil commotions, and of time itself; and would secure it from falling, but with the pillars of nature; were it not for the sappings of bribery and corruption at its roots, and the gnawings of ambition and avarice on its branches.

Therefore to enjoy the benefits resulting from the Revolution, the Bill of Rights, the English Laws, and the British Constitution, we can be taxed by no Assembly but our Provincial ones, in which we are represented; cannot be sent home for trial, according to a late law; can be dispossessed of our property only by the judgment of our Peers; can have Soldiers quartered upon us only by the consent of our General Courts, &c., &c., &c. This is the essence of the British Constitution. The appellations, Kings, Peers of the Realm, Knights of the Shire, &c., as well as Governours, Counsellors, and Representatives, are but secondary qualities, or mere formalities. The same Constitution in substance may appear under a thousand different forms, and the same valuable purposes be answered by them all. It is for the above substantial rights that our patriots (whom America we trust will hail, as Rome did Cicero, the fathers and saviours of their country) have been arguing. It is in defence of these social blessings that they have sacrificed their ease, their health, and their wealth, and now stand, when the bolts are just ready to burst upon our heads.

We are next told: "If there be any grievance, it does not consist in being subject to the authority of Parliament, but in our not having an actual representation in it; and this is withheld by the first principles of Government, and the immutable laws of nature." That is, to speak plain English, if one community is oppressed by another, the grievance does not consist in the oppressive act, but in the want of a right to act in the manner which is oppressive; and if this right is withheld by the immutable laws of nature; or by God himself, who is the Author of immutabilities in nature; these laws must be trampled upon and faulted, and the immaculate oppressor go free. Thus you see that grievances must be imputed to the God of Nature, and the rectitude of Heaven questioned, rather than the propriety and equity of ministerial measures disputed. The truth is, the grievance consists in being subject to the authority of a Parliament in which we are not and cannot be represented.

We are next presented with a passage from Governour Hutchinson's letters, which were sent to solicit the vengeance of a Kingdom upon this unhappy Colony, and to drag down the resentments of an incensed Court upon individuals. I shall not at present dispute upon the merits or demerits of the characters and measures which were the subject matter of these letters. "There must be an abridgment of what is called English liberties," is the famous sentence which we are told has rung through the Continent. We have already seen what Locke, Montesquieu, Magna Charta, uncorrupted Parliaments, the fundamental laws, the Bill of Rights, the English Constitution, the Britons and the Americans call English liberties. These, these are the liberties that must be abridged. I have no fondness for aspersions and calumnies of any kind. This gentleman possesses, and has exercised, undoubtedly, in various departments, some amiable private virtues and useful accomplishments. But such have been his notorious principles and exertions in many instances of public conduct, that it must give pain to a good mind to be acquainted with his political character. I forbear; for I would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil himself, were I, like Michael, brought to contend with him.

After saying it is for the interest of the Colonists to continue part of the British Empire, and their duty to remain subject to the authority of Parliament, both of which are favourite objects of their wishes, upon the good old plan, which the experience of a century has proved to be mutually beneficial; our declaimer, in the full career of rhetorical flourish, suffers, I believe, the real principles of his practice to escape him, perhaps unguardedly, which gives a key to his refined system of politicks: "After many more centuries," says he, "have rolled away, long after they who are now building upon the stage of life shall have been, received to the bosom of mother earth, the Colonies may have the balance of wealth, numbers, and power in their favour, and some future George may cross the Atlantick and rule Great Britain by an American Parliament." A most sublime scheme of Parliament! Unexceptionable principles of policy! The wealthy are to oppress and grind the faces of the comparatively indigent; the many to enslave the few; the powerful to tyrannize over the impotent; the great to devour the small; the strong the weak; and Great Britain, in her turn, to become the slaves of America, the longest sword being the great charter of liberties, and the invaluable standard of right and wrong. Is justice, is equity, are the rights of mankind such transportable wares, such floating machines? Are there no fixed, eternal, and immutable principles of political truth and social justice, notwithstanding the acute efforts of some moderns to explain them away, which cannot be violated, but by the imputation of guilt? guilt of the blackest dye, which will sooner or later fall with crushing weight on the culprit's head. Can the splendour of wealth always dazzle the eye of reason, or the intoxicating fumes of undelegated power steel the heart against the stings and lashes of natural conscience? Can superiority of numbers alter the laws of nature, and annihilate the never-failing principles of strict justice? Can the longest sword sooth the clamours and twings of a wounded spirit, or be plead in justification at the bar of an offended God? We are told by the poets, that the guilty are driven about and haunted by the burning torches of the furies. Presumptuous guilt is the fury, says Cicero, that torments; an evil conscience the phrensy that rages; and stinging reflection the terror that distracts. These, these are the incessant bosom fiends that haunt the guilty, that harrow up their souls, and will day and night avenge the injuries and oppressions of innocent sufferers.

Let me ask our courtly-tongue pad if he really thinks Great Britain, for centuries yet to come, will be such proficient in his sublime philosophy as to set supinely at ease and see herself stripped of her most valuable rights; rights, in defence of which she has been often arrayed in armour and in blood. Would she petition an American Parliament for redress of grievances? Would she acknowledge the right of deprivation so long as there was one man existing on the Island? Would not every drop of English blood boil into a fury? Would not every spark of British spirit kindle into a flame? Would it not burst forth like a conflagration, and sweep with the besom of destruction the laws enacted in an American Parliament, and their executors, off the stage of entities?

My abused, wretchedly abused countrymen, whilst we are complaining of injuries and oppressions from others, let us see to it that we keep good consciences void of offence ourselves. Let us injure no man's person or property; cautiously guard against all outrages, riots, mobs, or irregular and unnecessary risings, which the adversaries to the common cause may artfully attempt to lead or provoke us into. The cause we are engaged in is of too much dignity to be sullied by rashness, too important, too seriously important, to be weakened by tumult and partial strife. Liberty receives strength and vigour from prudence and consideration. Justice, equity, and regularity, are her closest friends: she courts virtue as her bosom companion, and shuns vice as her dangerous enemy. Let us equally avoid the feverish fits of political heat and cold. Banish from our breasts all personal prejudices, private piques, narrow opinions, illiberal distinctions, and little unbecoming jealousies. Let us display a magnanimity proportionate to the importance and dangers of the struggle, cultivating harmony of sentiments and unanimity of counsels. Act discreetly, firmly, and unitedly. So long as men have hearts to feel, and blood and spirits to act, some irregularities and indiscretions will unavoidably take place under galling oppressions. These must be expected until vice is deep trodden to its centre, and frailties and human imperfections banished from the earth. I trust those among us will be few and exceeding small, such as, being viewed by an eye of candour, may be easily covered with the mantle of charity.

All America has recognised our cause, has become surety for our safety, and pointed out the process for redress. All the Colonies unitedly oppose. Opposition so respectable, so ample, never was known. Their unanimity and firmness was never exceeded. Let us then adopt, and religiously observe the recommendations of the grand American Congress, as the best rules of political conduct; hold their Association sacred; treat the enemies of our Country in the manner they prescribe; avoid, studiously avoid, every thing that may occasion a rupture and hasten on the last appeal; being completely equipped, and thoroughly prepared for every event, let us conduct peaceably and inoffensively. If we are attacked, and hostilities commenced against us, self-preservation, the first law of nature, must and ought to assume the reins, take the command, direct our conduct and govern the man. It does not oblige us to stand still until we are hewn dead at our enemies' feet.

FROM THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

New-York, Friday, March 31, 1775.

This being the day appointed for taking the sense of the freeholders of the Town of Jamaica, on Long-Island, whether they would nominate a Deputy to meet Deputies from the other Counties, in the City of New-York, the 20th of April, for the purpose of electing Delegates to attend the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, the 10th of May next; a poll was opened, when the votes taken stood as follows:

PORTSMOUTH (NEW-HAMPSHIRE) ASSOCIATION.

We, the subscribers, considering the disorderly state of the times, and being deeply impressed with a sense of the inestimable value of constitutional liberty, think ourselves under an absolute necessity of associating together for the support of the wholesome laws of the land, and also for the preservation and protection of our persons and properties, which we find, at least as to many, have been threatened of late, and we do therefore solemnly engage to and with each other:—

1st. That we will maintain the laws of the land to the utmost of our power.

2d. That we will also defend and protect each other from mobs, riots, or any other unlawful attack whatsoever, and upon the first notice of any attempt upon either of the subscribers, each and every one of us will immediately repair to the person attacked, and him defend to the last extremity.

January 17, 1775.

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS OF THE ABOVE ASSOCIATION.

Portsmouth, March 31, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: Take this Association under your mature consideration, as I hope some of you to be gentlemen of penetration and knowledge; and after a serious examination of the above Association, you will find, instead of supporting and maintaining the laws of the land, you are acting in direct violation thereof. As you say you will support and maintain the laws of the land, and as you have not made any distinction between the Province Law and the late unconstitutional Acts, established by the King and Parliament, we must suppose you mean to support and maintain both. Permit me, gentlemen, to tell you, that your zeal overbalances your knowledge. Pray examine the Province law throughout, and all other law authorities that ever were held in repute by the English Nation, and you will not find one instance wherein they justify a number of men in combining together in any league whatsoever to support the law, but quite the reverse; for the law is supported in another manner; it is maintained by Magistrates and Officers, that are legally appointed as the laws direct, and not by a number of men combining together. You say you "will also defend and protect each other from mobs, riots, or any unlawful attack whatsoever; and that on the first notice of any attempt upon either of the subscribers, each and every one of you will immediately repair to the person attacked, and him defend to the last extremity."

Is this law, gentlemen? In what book and page will you find it? or what legislative body ever established such measures to support laws? Was it ever known in the King's Dominions for a number of men to assemble together in order to suppress any mob without authority; for so doing they are themselves a mob in the eyes of the law, to all intents and purposes; though I am convinced, if you had been prudent enough to have examined into the law of the Province, by which our lives and properties are protected, before you undertook to support it by mobs, as you have solemnly agreed to do, you would have been ashamed ever to have subscribed your names to such an unlawful combination.

Gentlemen, I beg leave to ask you what it is you are afraid of? Is it because you have honest hearts and act upon well-grounded principles? Is it because you stand strong for the Colonies and her liberties? Or is it because you strike against American freedom, and because you are trying to enforce the late unconstitutional Acts, and to plunge America into a state of slavery? Surely it must be guilt and remorse of conscience, and from thence springs fear; ah! fear, indeed, and reason enough for fear, for any person to sell his Country and the liberties thereof, for the sake of false honour and the poor pittance of sordid gain; he will live in fear and die in fear, and will run the greatest risk of being tormented hereafter. SPECTATOR.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON TO A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED APRIL 1, 1775.

The behaviour of the New-Yorkers has raised the drooping spirits of the Ministry, and has been the cause of their pursuing their tyrannous measures towards America with tenfold vigour. A Bill is brought into the House by Lord North, to stop the trade of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and South-Carolina; it is determined, if you will not trade with Great Britain, that you shall not trade any where else. The friends of the Ministry declare publicly, every where, their intention of starving the four New-England Colonies. Ought not the Merchants of Pennsylvania, &c., &c., as they have but little time before the Act takes place that will prevent their sending them any provisions, to fill their Towns with bread, flour, and every thing else they may stand in need of? If it is true what the Ministry give out, that they have divided you, I yet hope, when America comes to see the insidious part Administration is taking to subdue her, that you will all unite as one man, and suffer every hardship rather than become the dupes of the present set of men who govern this Country. If you persevere in your Non-Importation and Non-Exportation Agreement, in less than twelve months you will become complete conquerors; if you break, then you become slaves, not to one tyrant, but to five hundred.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM NEW-HAVEN, TO MR. RIVINGTON, NEW-YORK, DATED APRIL 1, 1775.

Our Committee of Inspection have proceeded to very unwarrantable lengths; they ordered summonses to be served on several persons who had not been altogether complaisant enough to the mandates of the Congress. One of the Committee-men demanded of a loyal Constitutionalist: "What, do you drink Tea? Take care what you do, Mr.

C., for you are to know the Committee command the mob, and can in an instant let them loose upon any man who opposes their decrees, and complete his destruction." But upon his damning the King, the spirit of the gallant Royalist grew impatient, and he opened a battery of execrations upon Committees and Congresses of all denominations. This, of course, occasioned his being ordered before the whole Sanhedrim, where he is to be interrogated after the manner of the Spanish and Portugal inquisitions. To this complexion is American liberty, through the influence of the King-killing Republicans, already arrived. But the culprit is true game, and will prove as tough a sapling as ever these big wigs have tried their strength upon. If these choose to carry matters to extremity, now is the time to repel force by force, in defence of the constitutional liberty of the Colony; and be the strength of the disaffected what it may, the lives and fortunes of many in this Country will be freely hazarded in defence of King George the Third, and the laws of his Realm.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BOSTON, TO A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1775.

On Thursday last at daylight, the Troops beat to arms; five Regiments marched out with Earl Percy at their head; it was supposed they were going to Concord, where our Provincial Congress is now sitting. A quantity of provisions and warlike stores, I understand, is lodged there. Several expresses were immediately sent away to give notice of their marching. Important consequences were apprehended; but happily they only went a few miles out of Boston and returned again. The Town and Country were alarmed; many of the neighbouring country Towns immediately mustered, and got equipped for a march. It has given such uneasiness, that Committees from twelve of the near Towns have met upon it, and intend sending a Petition to the Provincial Congress representing this affair to them, desiring they would take up the matter, and remonstrate to the General upon it. The Troops went out of the common road; marched over the people's land—some where their grain was sown—and gardens; broke down their fences, walls, &c., and doing other injuries. It is thought such proceedings will bring on bad consequences, unless prevented. The late conduct of the Regulars, in tarring and feathering a countryman, headed by one of their Colonels, and other Officers, and the spirited remonstrance it occasioned from the Selectmen of the Town of Billerica to General Gage, has made much talk.

The military spirit and resolution prevailing in this Province, in support of their liberties and Constitution, is astonishing. I hope we shall soon have some good news from home, to prevent any breaking out, which I begin to fear, especially if the troops continue their marchings out. I have heard that forty or fifty of the troops were so fatigued by their march on Thursday, that they could not keep up with their fellow soldiers on their return. It is said they are intending to go out again soon. The Provincial grand magazine of provisions and warlike stores is kept at Worcester, about forty-four miles from Boston.

COUNCIL OF NORTH-CAROLINA.

At a Council held at Newbern, the 2d of April, 1775, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Hon. Jas. Hasell, Hon. John Rutherford, Hon. Lewis H. De Rossett, Hon. Alexander McCulloh, Samuel Strudwicke, Martin Howard, and Samuel Cornell, Esquires.

His Excellency acquainted the Board that he had received His Majesty's commands to use his utmost endeavours to prevent the appointment of Deputies from this Colony, to attend another Congress intended to be held at Philadelphia, in the month of May next. And as a Convention is appointed by advertisement to meet to-morrow in Newbern, for the choice of such Delegates, His Excellency desired the advice of the Council what measures were proper to be taken to prevent the meeting of such unlawful assembly. The Board were unanimously of opinion that His Excellency had no other means than to issue a Proclamation to forbid the holding of the proposed Convention, and to declare that such proceedings would be highly offensive to His Majesty; upon which His Excellency issued the following

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, I have received information that, in consequence of an advertisement signed John Harvey, Moderator, some time since published and dispersed through this Province, sundry persons have been elected by a small number of Freeholders in the several Counties, to meet in Convention in the Town of Newbern, on this day for the choice of Deputies to represent this Colony in a Congress intended to be held at the City of Philadelphia, in the month of May next: And whereas, the meeting of such Convention, and the declared purpose thereof will be highly offensive to the King, and dishonourable to the General Assembly of this Province, which is appointed to sit at this time for the despatch of publick business: I have, therefore, thought fit, with the advice of His Majesty's Council, to issue this Proclamation, hereby in the King's name to forbid the holding of the said Convention. And I do exhort all His Majesty's subjects, on their allegiance and on pain of incurring His Majesty's high displeasure, to withdraw themselves from the same, and to desist from all such illegal, unwarrantable, and dangerous proceedings.

Given, &c., the 3d of April, 1775. JO. MARTIN.

God save the King.

GLOUCESTER COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Gloucester County, at the Court-House of the said County, on Monday, the 3d of April, 1775, WARNER LEWIS, Esq., Chairman.

The Resolves of the Convention held at the Town of Richmond the 20th of March, 1775, were read and unanimously approved of.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Committee be presented to Thomas Whiting and Lewis Burwell, Esquires, our worthy Delegates, for their faithful discharge of the important trust reposed in them.

It being late before a sufficient number of members assembled to proceed upon business, the Committee adjourned to Tuesday, the 25th instant.

Committee Chamber, Philadelphia, April 3, 1775.

Whereas there is the greatest reason to believe that quantities of East India Goods have been purchased in England by Holland merchants and others, with a view to transport them to the Dutch Islands in the West-Indies, and from thence introduce them into the Ports of North America; and as such a traffick would not only be injurious to the trade and interest of this Country, but effectually counteract the Non-Importation Agreement which has been adopted, among other measures, for the common safety, this Committee therefore think it expedient thus publicly to caution their fellow-citizens against engaging in so pernicious a trade, and to declare that the utmost vigilance will be used to detect any persons who shall endeavour to import such India Goods from the Dutch Islands or elsewhere, and when detected their names will be published to the world, as delinquents and enemies to the liberties of America. By order of the Committee:

JOHN BENEZET, Assistant Secretary.

FREEHOLD (MONMOUTH COUNTY, N. J.) COMMITTEE.

April 3, 1775.

Thomas Leonard, Esquire, having been duly notified to appear this day before the Committee of Inspection for the Township of Freehold, in the County of Monmouth, New-Jersey, and answer to a number of complaints made against him, did not think proper to attend.

The Committee therefore proceeded, with care and impartiality, to consider the evidence laid before them, and were unanimously of opinion, that the said Thomas Leonard, Esquire, has, in a number of instances, been guilty of a breach of the Continental Association, and that, pursuant to the tenour of said Association, every friend to true freedom ought immediately to break off all connexion and dealings with him, the said Leonard, and treat him as a foe to the rights of British America.

Ordered, That their Clerk transmit a copy of this judgment to the Press. Signed accordingly by NATH. SCUDDER, Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM NEW-YORK TO A GENTLEMAN
IN BOSTON, DATED APRIL 3, 1775.

I am really under the greatest anxiety for the fate of you and your distressed citizens, as such great quantities of military stores have been carried from hence to your Town, as well as boards, hay, straw, bran, harness, &c., &c., which, added to the three hundred horses that we are told are sent for to Canada, portends the worst of designs. It is suspected that the Troops really mean to take the field, and attempt to open the Courts under the new regulation, or make a forced march, to Worcester. Others imagine that they will march out five or ten miles at a time, in order to compel you to commence hostilities first; whilst some think that nothing will be attempted till the Parliament has decided on the grand controversy. However, I am not clear but that orders to prosecute the Ministry's intentions, till the Parliament decides otherwise, may have been sent; and should your noble spirits be subdued, there is no doubt but the Parliament itself would justify such a conduct, though at the expense of much blood and treasure. For Heaven's sake be watchful, as all, under God, depends on your conduct at this time. A vessel with nails, boards, &c., for the Army, is ashore at Hell-Gate.

DR. JOSEPH WARREN TO ARTHUR LEE.

Boston, April 3, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Your favour of the 21st of December came opportunely to hand, as it enabled me to give the Provincial Congress, now sitting at Concord, a just view of the measures pursued by the tools of the Administration; and effectually to guard them against that state of security into which many have endeavoured to lull them. If we ever obtain a redress of grievances from Great Britain, it must be by the influence of those illustrious personages, whose virtue now keeps them out of power. The King never will bring them into power, until the ignorance and phrensy of the present Administration make the Throne on which he sits shake under him. If America is an humble instrument of the salvation of Britain, it will give us the sincerest joy; but if Britain must lose her liberty, she must lose it alone. America must and will be free. The contest may be severe—the end will be glorious. We would not boast, but we think, united and prepared as we are, we have no reason to doubt of success, if we should be compelled to the last appeal; but we mean not to make that appeal until we can be justified in doing it in the sight of God and man. Happy shall we be if the Mother Country will allow us the free enjoyment of our rights, and indulge us in the pleasing employment of aggrandizing her.

The members for the Continental Congress are almost all chosen by the several Colonies. Indeed, if any Colony should neglect to choose members, it would be ruinous to it; as all intercourse would immediately cease between that Colony and the whole Continent.

The First Brigade of the Army marched about four miles out of Town three days ago, under the command of a Brigadier General, (Earl Percy.) but as they marched without baggage or artillery, they did not occasion so great an alarm as they otherwise would. Nevertheless great numbers, completely armed, collected in the neighbouring Towns; and it is the opinion of many, that had they marched eight or ten miles, and attempted to destroy any magazines, or abuse the people, not a man of them would have returned to Boston. The Congress immediately took proper measures for restraining any unnecessary effusion of blood; and also passed proper resolves respecting the Army, if they should attempt to come out of the Town with baggage and artillery.

I beg leave to recommend to your notice Mr. Dana, the bearer hereof, (a gentleman of the law,) a man of sense and probity, a true friend to his Country, of a respectable family and fortune.

May Heaven bless you, and reward your labours with success. I am, sir, with great respect, your most obedient humble servant,

JOS. WARREN.

To Arthur Lee, Esq., London.

The Clerk of this House waited on his Excellency the Governour, and acquainted him that a sufficient number of Members to constitute a House were met, and to desire his Excellency to issue a Commission, and appoint some of the members of Council to see them qualified.

Being returned, brought for answer that his Excellency would appoint two of the Members accordingly.

The Honourable Lewis H. De Rosset, and Alexander McCulloch, Esquires, two of the members of Council came to the House; and the above forty-eight Members were qualified, by taking the oaths by law appointed for the qualification of publick officers, and repeating and subscribing the test.

Mr. Caswell and Mr. Macknight waited on his Excellency the Governour to inform him that the Members had qualified, and that they waited to receive his commands.

Being returned, reported to the House that his Excellency would send a Message to the Members to wait on him.

Received from his Excellency the Governour a verbal message by his Secretary, desiring the attendance of the Members in the Palace at 12 o'clock.

The Members waited on his Excellency the Governour in the Palace, when he was pleased to direct that they return to the House and make choice of a Speaker.

The Members being returned to the House, Mr. Samuel Johnston proposed and set up John Harvey, Esquire, who was unanimously chosen Speaker, and placed in the chair accordingly.

On motion, Ordered, Mr. Knox and Mr. McCulloch wait on his Excellency the Governour, and acquaint him the House had made choice of a Speaker, and desire to know when they shall wait on his Excellency to present him.

Being returned, informed the House his Excellency would send a message when he would receive them.

Received from his Excellency the Governour a verbal message by his Secretary, requiring the immediate attendance of the House in the Palace.

The House waited on his Excellency the Governour in the Palace, and presented their Speaker, whom his Excellency was pleased to approve of.

Then Mr. Speaker requested his Excellency to confirm the rights and privileges of the House, and that no mistake or error of his might be imputed to the House; to which his Excellency was pleased to answer, he would support the House in all their just rights and privileges, and then made a Speech to His Majesty's Council and this House.

Mr. Speaker with the House being returned, Mr. Speaker reported that his Excellency the Governour had made a Speech to the Council and this House, a copy of which, to prevent mistake, he had obtained, and laid the same before the House.

Then, on motion, Ordered, the said Speech be read.

Read the same, and is as follows, to wit:

Gentlemen of His Majesty's Honourable Council,

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

I have now met you in General Assembly, in hopes that, dismissing every cause of private dissention from your minds you will calmly, unitedly, and faithfully apply yourselves to the discharge of the high and important office of legislation, in which you bear so great a share, according to the Constitution of this Country, that calls upon you for relief at this time in a most peculiar and pressing manner.

I look, gentlemen, with the extremest horror and concern to the consequences of the violent and unjustifiable proceedings in some of His Majesty's Colonies of this Continent, where in many places the innocent, unwary, and ignorant part of the people have been cruelly betrayed into measures highly inconsistent with their duty and allegiance to our most gracious Sovereign and the State, that tend immediately to involve them in the most embarrassing difficulties and distresses, and which, if pursued, must inevitably precipitate these Colonies from their present unparalleled state of prosperity into a train of miseries most dreadful to contemplate, whence ages of time will not redeem them to their now envied felicity. You, gentlemen, are bound by your duty to the King, to the State, and to this People, as well as I, by mine, to obviate the contagion of these evil examples in this Country, and to defend it, if possible, from the ruin and distraction to which they plainly lead.

I see with infinite concern the unhappy influence they have already had among us. The meetings to which the people have been excited, the appointment of Committees, the violences these little unrestrained and arbitrary tribunals have done to the rights of His Majesty's subjects, the flagrant and unpardonable insults they have offered to the highest authorities of the State, by some of their acts, which have been made publick; and the stop that has been put in some of the Counties to the regular course of justice, in imitation of the unwarrantable measures taken in other Colonies, but too plainly evince their baneful progress here, and loudly demand the most effectual exertion of your restraining and correcting powers.

You are now, gentlemen of the Assembly, by your duty to yourselves and to your constituents, most peculiarly called upon to oppose a meeting of Delegates, which the people have been invited to choose, and who are appointed to assemble at this very time and place in the face of the Legislature. This illegal meeting, pursuant to my duty to the King and to the Constitution of this Country, and from regard to your dignity and the just rights of the people, I have counteracted, and I shall continue to resist it by every means in my power. What can this mean, gentlemen? Are you not the only lawful Representatives of the people in this Country, and competent to every legal purpose? Will you, then, submit to see your constituents misled, to violate their dearest privileges by wounding your dignity, and setting up Representatives derogatory to your just power and authority? This, gentlemen, is an insult to you of so violent a nature that it appears to me to demand your every possible discouragement, for its evident tendency is to excite a belief in the people that they are capable of electing Representatives of superiour powers to the Members of your House; which, if it can possibly obtain, must lead to obvious consequences, to the destruction of the essence, if not the very being of an Assembly in this Province, and finally to the utter dissolution and overthrow of its established happy Constitution.

This, gentlemen, among others I have before mentioned, is one of the fatal expedients employed in some of the other Colonies, under the influence of factious and wicked men, intent upon promoting their own horrid purposes at the hazard of their Country's ruin. I hope they have been adopted here more from a spirit of imitation than ill principles, and that you, clearly discerning the mischiefs with which they are pregnant, will heartily concur with me in opposing dawnings of so dangerous a system.

As an object of the greatest consequence to all the Colonies, I would recommend it to your first attention to employ your utmost care and assiduity to remove those false impressions, by which the engines of sedition have laboured to effect (but too successfully) a most unnatural division between the Parent State and these Colonies, which, under her protecting, indulgent, fostering care, have attained to a degree of prosperity beyond all example. The basest arts have been practised upon the innocent people, and they have been blindly led to partake in guilt, to which their hearts are confessedly averse; and thus, step by step, they will be seduced from their duty, and all the bonds of civil society will be destroyed, unless timely remedies are applied. This, gentlemen, is a melancholy prospect, that must seriously alarm every good subject, every humane, every honest man; and it will be your duty, as guardians of the constitutional rights of the people, vigorously to oppose proceedings so manifestly subversive of their freedom and happiness.

Be it your care, then, gentlemen, to undeceive the people; to lead them back from the dangerous precipice to which an ill spirit of faction is urging them, to the paths of their duty; set before them the sacred tie of allegiance, by which, as subjects, they are bound to the State; inform them of the reciprocal benefits which their strict observance thereof entitles them to; and warn them of the danger to which they must expose their lives and properties, and all that they hold dear, by revolting from it.

The frequent occasions you have had, in your several capacities as Members of the Legislature and Magistrates, most solemnly to swear this allegiance, which is an implied duty upon every subject of every State, where it is not professed and declared, must have brought it home to your own consideration, and you are therefore certainly well qualified to explain the obligatory nature and importance of it to the people. They will naturally look up to you for a rule of conduct in these wild and distempered times; and I have no doubt that, taught by your example, they will immediately return to their duty and obedience to the laws, and gladly free themselves from that tyranny which ill-directed zeal and lawless ambition, by all the arts of misrepresentation and delusion, are courting them to submit to. I have the high satisfaction to tell you, gentlemen, that I have already received signal proofs of the steady loyalty and duty of a great number of the good people of this Province, and I have the fullest assurance that many more will follow their laudable example. These, gentlemen, are favourable presages, upon which I congratulate you, and which I persuade myself your prudent conduct will improve to the honour and advantage of your Country.

The state of the Colonies is at this time the subject of the deliberations of the grand Council of the Nation, from whose wisdom and justice they have every thing to expect consistent with the principles of the British Constitution and the general welfare of the Empire, while they continue in the duty they owe to it. The confessed generous character of Britain, and the magnanimity of our most gracious Sovereign, who, through the whole course of his reign, has uniformly made the happiness of his people the object of all his views, and the rule of all his actions, insures it to them. On this great Arbitrer of British rights it therefore becomes you to rely with the fullest confidence, and to deserve, by a dutiful behaviour, its favourable regard. If a precedent could be wanting, as I cannot suppose it is, to induce to such right conduct, one of the most respectable of the Colonies affords it to you; and you will see, without question, how highly improper it will be, at such a conjuncture, to countenance any measures of a contrary nature. If the people of this Colony have any representations to make to the supreme powers of the State, you are the only legal and proper channel of their applications, and through you they may be assured of every attention to their dutiful petitions. You, gentlemen, I dare say, esteem too highly the rights of the people committed to your guardianship, and know too well the limits of your own power, to consign them to any other hands that must only be disqualified to serve the people, but will infallibly divest you of that dignity and consequence which belong to you as their lawful Representatives.

Let me hope, gentlemen, that, laying aside all passion and prejudice, you will calmly, and with one accord, pursue such a line of conduct in these points of general concern to America, as may be most likely to heal the unhappy differences now subsisting between Great Britain and her Colonies. Consider how great an opportunity you now have to serve, to save your Country, to manifest your loyalty to the best of Kings, and to demonstrate your attachment to the British Constitution—the most free, the most glorious and happiest political system in the whole world. If you consult but for a moment your own interest and welfare, and the happiness of this people, I cannot be disappointed in my hopes that you will avail yourselves of the occasion. Be it your glory, gentlemen, to record to latest posterity, that at a time when the monster Sedition dared to rear his impious head in America, the people of North-Carolina, inspired with a just sense of their duty to their King and Country, and animated by the example of its Legislature, stood among the foremost of his Majesty's subjects, to resist his baneful snares and to repel the fell invader of their happiness. Thus, gentlemen, you may redeem your sinking Country to prosperity; thus you will acquire to yourselves immortal honour and renown: while a contrary conduct must inevitably plunge this once happy land in horrors beyond all imagination; whence nothing can recover it but the generous hand of Britain, interposed to save you from your own destruction. Thus, gentlemen, I have set before you, upon principles of your duty to the Constitution and the welfare of your Country, the necessity of discouraging, to the utmost of your power, the illegal meetings into which the innocent people have been betrayed, and the unlawful establishments and appointments they have been led to give their sanction to. I have also stated to you the more especial obligations you lie under to prevent that meeting to which the people have been invited to send Deputies here at this time, and I have fully admonished you of the ruinous consequences of a different conduct. In addition to these powerful motives, gentlemen, I am authorized to say, that the unwarrantable measure of appointing Delegates to attend a Congress at Philadelphia, now in agitation, will be highly offensive to the King, and this, I cannot doubt, will be reason with you of the greatest force to oppose so dangerous a step.

Your next attention, gentlemen, is due to the particular state of this Country, that calls for your strictest regard.

The exhausted state of the publick Treasury, the large demands upon it that remain unsatisfied, the dues of publick officers that are unpaid, call loudly for your attention to the ill condition of publick credit and the finances of this Country, and I trust you will not fail to pay that regard which is due to points of so great importance. I heartily wish, with regard to matters of finance and modes of taxation, as well as to the regulation of the Treasury, to draw your attention to the admirable systems of New-York and Maryland, in which last Colony publick credit is established upon the firmest basis; but the example of every other Colony, with regard to the latter article, I am sorry to say it, is better than has been yet adopted here.

You have now, gentlemen, a fair opportunity to restore to this Province, by a law for the permanent establishment of Courts, that great store of political blessings, arising from a due and regular administration of justice, of which I have long lamented to see it deprived. I have received His Majesty's determination upon the proposed regulations with regard to proceedings by attachment, which have been the apparent cause of this misfortune. This I shall communicate to you in the course of your session, and I hope it will obviate all the difficulties that have occurred on this subject. When the establishment of Courts shall come under your consideration, you cannot fail to see the necessity of making provision for the Judges, and the propriety of that provision being adequate and honourable, and suitable to offices of so high dignity and importance.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

I cannot doubt that you will see the same necessity for supporting the usual establishment of Fort Johnston, founded upon the same principles of public utility that have induced you to maintain it during so long a series of years.

Gentlemen of His Majesty's Honourable Council,

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:

I am sensible that the advanced season of the year requires your attendance on your domestick affairs, and I shall therefore be glad to find that your unanimity in the conduct of the very important business you are now met upon, affords me opportunity to conclude your session speedily and happily; on my part, I do assure you, nothing shall be wanting to promote these good ends. Jo. MARTIN.

Newbern, 4th April, 1775.

Then, on motion, Ordered, His Excellency the Governour's Speech lie for consideration till to-morrow morning.

On motion, James Green, Jr., is appointed Clerk to this House; James Glasgow, Assistant; Benjamin Fordham, Mace Bearer; Francis Lynaugh and Evan Swann, Door-keepers.

Mr. Jonathan Herring, one of the Members for Pasquotank County, appeared.

Then the House adjourned till to-morrow morning 10 o'clock.

Wednesday, 5th April, 1775.

The House met according to adjournment.

This House being informed that Mr. Isaac Edwards, who was elected Member for the Town of Newbern, is dead:

On motion, Ordered, The following Message be sent to his Excellency the Governour, to wit:

To His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esquire, Captain-General, Governour, &c., &c.

SIR: This House having been informed that Mr. Isaac Edwards, who was elected Member for the Town of Newbern, is dead, therefore desire your Excellency will be pleased to direct the Clerk of the Crown to issue a writ for electing a Member for the said Town, to sit and vote in this present Assembly.

JOHN HARVEY, Speaker.

Sent by Mr. Hatch and Mr. Coor.

The House being informed that the Returning Officer of Guilford County had neglected to make due return of the Writ of Election for the said County, whereby one of the Members is deprived of a seat in this House;

On motion, Ordered, That the said Officer be sent for and brought in custody to the Bar of this House, to answer for such his conduct.

The Order of the Day being read, Resolved, The House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House tomorrow morning, to take under consideration His Excellency the Governour's Speech.

Then the House adjourned till to-morrow morning 10 o'clock.

Thursday, 6th April, 1775.

The House met according to adjournment.

On motion, Ordered, That Mr. Ashe, Mr. Rhodes, Mr. Thos. Rutherford, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Sheppard, Mr. McCulloch, Mr. Caswell, Mr. Hewes, Mr. Hill, Mr. Thomas Jones, and Mr. Gregory, be a Committee of Privileges and Elections, and that they have power to send for persons, papers, and records, as the case may require.

On motion, Ordered, That Mr. Harnett, Mr. Hewes, Mr. Knox, Mr. Cray, Mr. Samuel Johnston, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Jarvis, Mr. Howe, Mr. John Campbell, Mr. Macknight, Mr. Hooper, Mr. Macnair, and Mr. Long, be a Committee of Public Accounts; and that Mr. Ashe, Mr. Oldham, Mr. John Johnston, Mr. Allen Jones, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Thomas Jones, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Farquard Campbell, Mr. Benbury, Mr. Rhodes, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Edward Salter, Mr. Fraser, Mr. William Person, and Mr. Jarvis, be a Committee of Public Claims, in conjunction with such of the Members of His Majesty's honourable Council as they shall think fit to appoint, and that the following Message be sent to the Council, to wit:

Gentlemen of His Majesty's Honourable Council:

This House have appointed Mr. Harnett, Mr. Hewes, Mr. Knox, Mr. Gray, Mr. Samuel Johnston, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Jarvis, Mr. John Campbell, Mr. Macknight, Mr. Hooper, Mr. Macnair, and Mr. Long, on the Public Accounts; and Mr. Ashe, Mr. Oldham, Mr. John Johnston, Mr. Allen Jones, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Thomas Jones, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Farquard Campbell, Mr. Benbury, Mr. Rhodes, Mr. Gregory, Mr. Edward Salter, Mr. Fraser, Mr. William Person, and Mr. Jarvis, be a Committee of this House to settle and allow Public Claims, in conjunction with such of your Honours as you shall think fit to appoint.

JOHN HARVEY, Speaker.

Sent by Mr. McCulloch and Mr. Gregory.

On motion, Ordered, That Mr. William Salter, Mr. William Person, Mr. Howe, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Coor, Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Poyner, Mr. Hunter, Mr. Farquard Campbell, Mr. Caswell, Mr. Thomas Person, Mr. Wynns, Mr. Long, Mr. Ashe, Mr. Atherton, Mr. Francis Nash, Mr. Rhodes, Mr. Knox, Mr. Joseph Jones, Mr. Edward Salter, Mr. Griffith Rutherford, Mr. Fraser, Mr. Hewes, and Mr. Harnett, be a Committee of Propositions and Grievances.

The Order of the Day being read, for taking into consideration his Excellency's Speech,

On motion, Resolved, The House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House accordingly, and chose Mr. Andrew Knox Chairman, and after some time spent therein, came to several Resolutions.

Then Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and Mr. Chairman reported that the Committee had taken under consideration his Excellency the Governour's Speech, and came to several Resolutions thereon, to wit:

Resolved, That the Committee to be appointed to prepare an Address, in answer to the Governour's Speech, be instructed to express that the Assembly of North-Carolina have the highest sense of the allegiance due to the King;

the oath so repeatedly taken by them to that purpose, made it unnecessary for them to be reminded of it. That it has always been their pleasure to express, and will ever be so to testify by their actions, that allegiance which, however, they profess to owe to His Majesty as their Sovereign, who was by the same Constitution which established that allegiance and enjoined that oath (happily for his subjects) solemnly bound to protect them in all their just rights and privileges, by which a reciprocal duty became incumbent upon both.

That it is the undoubted right of His Majesty's subjects to petition for a redress of grievances, and to remonstrate against them either in separate or collective capacity, and that in order to agree upon such petition or remonstrance, they have a right to collect themselves together; and while they conduct themselves in a peaceable and orderly manner, they deserve not to be called an illegal meeting, or to have the imputation of sedition cast upon them. The Assembly, therefore, can never deem the meeting of the present Convention at Newbern, in order to appoint Delegates to petition for a redress of grievances, an illegal meeting, nor conceive it derogatory to the power and authority of the Assembly, or wounding to its dignity; and that though the Assembly are the legal Representatives, and perhaps adequate to every purpose of the people, yet the frequent unexpected prorogations, some of them proclaimed so late that many of the Members did not receive information thereof till their arrival in Town, gave the people no reason to expect that the Assembly would be permitted to meet till it was too late to send Delegates to the Continental Congress at Philadelphia; a measure which America in general, and this Province in particular, thought absolutely necessary, and which, as it is the full sense of our constituents, we, as their Representatives, highly approve.

That the Assembly are entirely ignorant of, and do not believe that any base arts have been practised upon the people of this Colony, in order to lead them from their duty; but that the steps they have taken have resulted from a full conviction that the Parliament of Great Britain had, by a variety of oppressive and unconstitutional proceedings, made the measures they pursued absolutely necessary. That therefore his Excellency's asserting that such measures have been owing to base arts practised upon them by wicked and designing men, is not only an injustice done to the people, but manifestly tends to weaken the influence which the united petitions of His Majesty's American subjects might otherwise have upon their Sovereign for a redress of those grievances of which they have such a right to complain; and that therefore the Committee be directed, in the strongest terms, to refute such assertion.

That the House would feel inexpressible concern at the information given them by his Excellency of his being authorized to say that the appointing Delegates to attend the Congress now in agitation would be highly offensive to the King, had they not recently received undoubted information that His Majesty has been pleased to receive, very graciously, the united Petitions of his American subjects, addressed to him by the Continental Delegates lately convened at Philadelphia; and that, therefore, they can never suppose that a similar application to the Throne will give offence to His Majesty, or prevent his receiving any petition for redress of grievances which his subjects have a right to prefer, either separately or unitedly.

That the Committee appointed by the people in the several Counties and Towns, in this Colony, in consequence of the Resolutions of the Continental Congress held at Philadelphia, were the result of necessity, not choice, as the only means left them to prevent, as far as in them lay, the operation of those oppressive and unconstitutional Acts of Parliament, endeavoured to be imposed upon America by Great Britain; and that the Assembly have not been informed of any steps taken by those Committees but such as they were compelled to take from that necessity, and for the salutary purpose aforesaid.

That the Assembly would be glad to receive information of any marks of loyalty to the King, given his Excellency by the inhabitants of this Colony, had not the manner in which that information was conveyed seemed to be intended to establish a belief that a great number of the people of this Province were disaffected to their Sovereign. That, therefore, the House instruct their Committee to do justice to the good people of this Colony, whose Representatives they are, by bearing testimony to the world in their answer to the Governour's Speech, that His Majesty has no subjects more loyal than the inhabitants of North-Carolina, nor more ready, at the expense of their lives and fortunes, to protect and support his person, crown; and dignity. That if, however, by the signal proofs his Excellency speaks of, he means those Addresses lately published in the North-Carolina Gazette, said to be presented to his Excellency, his congratulations thereupon can in no way be acceptable to the Assembly, but from the consideration that in so numerous a Colony so few could be found weak enough to be seduced from their duty, and prevailed upon by the base arts of wicked and designing men, to adopt measures so contrary to the sense of all America, and so destructive of those just rights and privileges it was their duty to support.

That the Committee be instructed, also, to express the warmest attachment to our sister Colonies in general, the highest compassion for the sufferings of the Town of Boston, in particular, and the fixed and determined resolution of this Colony to unite with the other Colonies in every effort to maintain those rights and liberties, which, as subjects of a British King, they possess, and which it is a duty they owe to posterity, to hand down to them unimpaired.

Resolved, That the Committee be instructed to account for the deficiency of the Public Funds.

That the Committee express their sense of the necessity of the establishment of Courts of Justice, and their willingness to adopt any plan which they may judge adapted to the circumstances of the Country.

That the Committee be instructed to express that the exhausted state of the Finances, and the particular circumstances of the Country render it inconvenient and unnecessary any longer to support the establishment of Fort Johnston.

On motion, Ordered, The foregoing Resolutions be instructions to the Committee to be appointed to draw up the Address in answer to his Excellency the Governour's Speech.

On motion, Ordered, That Mr. Howe, Mr. Hooper, Mr. Johnston, Mr. Hewes, and Mr. Macknight, be appointed a Committee to prepare an Address in answer to his Excellency the Governour's Speech, and report the same to the House for approbation.

Then the House adjourned till to-morrow morning 10 o'clock.

Friday, 7th April, 1775.

The House met according to adjournment.

Mr. Howe, from the Committee appointed to prepare an Answer to his Excellency's Speech, informed the House they had prepared the same, which was read.

On motion, Ordered, The same stand as the Address of this House: and is as follows, to wit:

To His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esquire, Captain-General, Governour, &c., &c.

SIR: We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of the Assembly of North-Carolina, have taken into consideration your Excellency's Speech at the opening of this Session.

We met in General Assembly with minds superiour to private dissension, determined calmly, unitedly, and faithfully to discharge the sacred trust reposed in us by our Constituents. Actuated by sentiments like these, it behoves us to declare that the Assembly of this Colony have the highest sense of their allegiance to the King of Great Britain, to whom alone, as our constitutional Sovereign, we acknowledge allegiance to be due, and to whom we so cheerfully and repeatedly have sworn it, that to remind us of the oath was unnecessary; this allegiance all past Assemblies have, upon every occasion, amply expressed, and we, the present Representatives of the people, shall be always ready by our actions with pleasure to testify; sensible, however, that the same Constitution which establishes that allegiance and enjoins the oath in consequence of it, hath bound Majesty under as solemn obligations to protect subjects inviolate in all their just rights and privileges, wisely intending, by reciprocal dependance, to secure the happiness of both.

We contemplate with a degree of horror the unhappy state of America, involved in the most embarrassing difficulties and distresses, by a number of unconstitutional invasions of their just rights and privileges, by which the inhabitants of the Continent in general, and this Province in particular, have been precipitated into measures extraordinary, perhaps, in their nature, but warranted by necessity, from whence, among many other measures, the appointment of Committees in the several Towns and Counties took its birth, to prevent, as much as in them lay, the operation of such unconstitutional encroachments; and the Assembly remain unconvinced of any steps taken by these Committees but such as they were compelled to take for that salutary purpose.

It is not to be controverted, that His Majesty's subjects have a right to petition for a redress of grievances, or to remonstrate against them; and as it is only a meeting of the people, that their sense respecting such petition and remonstrance can be obtained, that the right of assembling is as undoubted. To attempt, therefore, under the mask of authority to prevent or forbid a meeting of the people for such purposes, or to interrupt their proceedings when met, would be a vain effort unduly to exercise power in direct opposition to the Constitution.

Far be it from us, then, Sir, even to wish to prevent the operations of the Convention now held at Newbern, or to agree with your Excellency in bestowing upon them the injurious epithet of an illegal meeting. They are, Sir, the respectable Representatives of the people, appointed for a special and important purpose, to which, though our constituents might have thought us adequate, yet, as our meeting depended upon the pleasure of the Crown, they would have been unwise to have trusted to so precarious a contingency, especially as the frequent and unexpected prorogations of the Assembly (one of them in particular, as if all respect and attention to the convenience of their Representatives had been lost, was proclaimed but two or three days before the time which had been appointed for their meeting) gave the people not the least reason to expect that their Assembly would have been permitted to sit till it was too late to appoint Delegates to attend the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, a measure which they joined the rest of America in thinking essential to its interest.

The House, Sir, neither know nor believe that any base arts have been practised upon the people, in order to lead them from their duty; but we know with certainty that the steps they have taken proceeded from a full conviction that the Parliament of Great Britain had, by a variety of oppressive and unconstitutional proceedings, made those steps absolutely necessary.

We think it, therefore, a duty we owe the people, to assert that their conduct has not been owing to base arts, practised upon them by wicked and designing men; and have it much to lament that your Excellency should add your sanction to such groundless imputations, as it has a manifest tendency to weaken the influence which the united petition of His Majesty's American subjects might otherwise have upon their Sovereign, for a redress of those grievances of which they so justly complain.

We should feel inexpressible concern at the information given us by your Excellency, of your being authorized to say, that the appointment of Delegates to attend the Congress at Philadelphia, now in agitation, will be highly offensive to the King, had we not recently been informed, from the best authority, that His Majesty has been pleased to receive very graciously the united Petition of his American subjects, addressed to him by the Continental Delegates lately convened at Philadelphia. We have not, therefore, the least reason to suppose that a similar application to the Throne will give offence to His Majesty, or prevent his receiving a petition for the redress of grievances, which his American subjects have a right to present, either separately or unitedly.

We shall always receive with pleasure the information of any marks of loyalty to the King, given to your Excellency by the inhabitants of this Colony, but are greatly concerned, lest the manner in which you have thought proper to convey that information should excite a belief that a great number of the people of this Province are disaffected to their Sovereign; to prevent which it is incumbent upon us in this manner solemnly to testify to the world, that His Majesty has no subjects more faithful than the inhabitants of North-Carolina, or more ready, at the expense of their lives and fortunes, to protect and support his person, crown, and dignity. If, however, by the signal proofs your Excellency speaks of, you mean those Addresses lately published in the North-Carolina Gazette, and said to be presented to you, the Assembly can receive no pleasure from your congratulations thereupon, but what results from the consideration, that so few have been found in so populous a Province weak enough to be seduced from their duty, and prevailed upon by the base arts of wicked and designing men to adopt principles so contrary to the sense of all America, and so destructive of those just rights and privileges it was their duty to maintain.

We take this opportunity, Sir, the first that has been given us, to express the warm attachment we have to our sister Colonies in general, and the heartfelt compassion we entertain for the deplorable state of the Town of Boston in particular, and also to declare the fixed and determined resolution of this Colony to unite with the other Colonies in every effort to retain those just rights and liberties which, as subjects to a British King, we possess, and which it is our absolute and indispensable duty to hand down to posterity unimpaired.

The exhausted state of the publick funds, of which your Excellency complains, we contemplate with great concern, alleviated, however, by the reflection that it has not been owing to any misconduct in the Assembly. We were withheld from passing any inferior Court Law, but upon such terms as our duty rendered it impossible to accept; by which means no list of taxables could be taken for the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-three, and consequently no money collected to defray the charges of Government for that year; and as your Excellency did not think proper to meet the Assembly at their usual time of meeting in the fall, no Act could be passed to defray the contingent charges of Government for the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four. The Treasury, by these means, deprived of two years' collection of taxes, must consequently be unable to answer the great demands upon it till an Act of Assembly can be passed to enable it to discharge them.

The House, convinced of the necessity of Courts of Justice, would willingly adopt any plan for the establishment of them, which, in their opinion, is consistent with the circumstances of this Colony; and for independent Judges, of capacity and integrity, they would, with the greatest pleasure, very liberally provide.

We are sorry, Sir, the impoverished state of the publick finances will not permit us to provide for the usual establishment of Fort Johnston.

The advanced season of the year, which, of all other times, made it most inconvenient for us to attend publick business, will, your Excellency may assure yourself, induce us to forward it with all possible expedition.

JOHN HARVEY, Speaker.

Resolved, That the House do highly approve of the Proceedings of the Continental Congress lately held at Philadelphia, and that they are determined, as members of the community in general, that they will strictly adhere to the said Resolutions, and will use what influence they have to induce the same observance in every individual of this Colony.

This House having received information that William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, were appointed, by the Convention held at Newbern, as Delegates to attend the meeting of the Continental Congress soon to be held at Philadelphia:

Resolved, That the House approve of the choice made by the said Convention.

Resolved, That the thanks of the House be given to William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, for the faithful and judicious discharge of the important trust reposed in them as Delegates for this Colony at the late Continental Congress.

Mr. William Brown, the Member for Bath Town, Mr. Thomas Respass, one of the Members for Beaufort County, Mr. Jonathan Herring, one of the Members for Pasquotank County, and Mr. William Haywood and Mr.

Elisha Battle, the Members for Edgecombe County, appeared.

The Honourable John Rutherford and Lewis H. De Rosset, Esquires, two of the Members of Council, came to the House, and Mr. Brown, Mr. Respass, Mr. Herring, Mr. Haywood, and Mr. Battle were qualified, by taking the several oaths by law appointed for qualification of Publick Officers, and repeating and subscribing the Test.

Then the House adjourned till to-morrow morning, ten o'clock.

Saturday, April 8, 1775.

His Excellency the Governour, by Proclamation, was pleased to dissolve the Assembly.

At a Council held at the Council Chamber, the 7th of April, 1775, in the evening, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Honourable James Hasell, John Rutherford, Lewis H. De Rossett, Alexander McCulloch, Samuel Strudwick, Martin Howard, Samuel Cornell, and Thomas McGuire, Esquires:

His Excellency laid before the Board the Journals of the House of Assembly, in which was contained, amongst other unwarrantable proceedings, the following Resolve:

"Resolved, That the House do highly approve of the Proceedings of the Continental Congress lately held at Philadelphia, and that they are determined, as members of the community in general, that they will strictly adhere to the said Resolutions, and will use what influence they have to induce the same observance in every individual of this Colony."

Upon consideration hereof, this Board gave it as their opinion, that the longer existence of such a House of Assembly is incompatible with the honour of the Crown and the safety of the people, and therefore unanimously advised His Excellency to dissolve them, which was done by the following Proclamation:

North-Carolina, ss.

By His Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esquire, &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas several Resolves appear on the Journals of the House of Assembly, now sitting, tending to alienate the affections of His Majesty's subjects, and subvert the Constitution; and whereas the longer existence of such an Assembly is incompatible with the honour of the Crown and the safety of the people: I have therefore thought fit, by and with the advice and consent of His Majesty's Council, to dissolve the said Assembly, and it is accordingly dissolved.

Given under my hand, &c., at Newbern, &c., this 8th day of April, 1775, &c. JO. MARTIN.

God save the King.

Resolved, That the Moderator adjourn the Convention, de die in diem, until the business is finished.

The Convention is adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Tuesday, April 4, 1775.

The Convention met, according to adjournment.

Mr. John Webb, Delegate for the Town of Halifax, Mr. William Bryan, one of the Delegates for Craven County, Mr. George Wynns, one of the Delegates for Hertford County, and Mr. Alexander Martin, a Delegate for Guilford County, appeared, and took their seats in Convention.

The Convention adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Wednesday, April 5, 1775.

The Convention met, according to adjournment.

Mr. Jonathan Herring, one of the Delegates for Pasquotank County, and Mr. David Stanley, one of the Delegates for Bertie County, appeared, and took their seats in Convention.

The Association entered into by the General Congress at Philadelphia, on the 20th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1774, and signed by the Members thereof, was presented to this Convention by Colonel Richard Caswell, and, on motion, was ordered to be read, and was accordingly read.

Resolved, That this Convention do highly approve of the said Association, and do, for themselves, firmly agree to adhere to the said Association, and recommend it to their constituents that they likewise adhere firmly to the same. In full approbation and testimony whereof, the Members of this Convention subscribe their names.

JOHN HARVEY,

Roger Ormond,	Thomas Benbury,	Joseph Jones,

Nathan Poyner,	Henry Rhodes,	David Stanley,
Samuel Johnston,	William Cray,	Green Hill,
Thomas Oldham,	Andrew Knox,	Robert Howe,
Thomas Jones,	Isaac Gregory,	Thomas Rutherford,

In consequence of the preceding Resolve, all the Members of the Convention subscribed their names at the table, except Mr. Thomas Macknight, who refused.

Resolved, That the conduct of William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, in the meeting of Delegates lately held at Philadelphia, was, in every particular, worthy of the sacred trust reposed in them; and that the Moderator do, in behalf of this Colony in general, and of this Convention in particular, return them those thanks which their faithful discharge of such an important trust so justly merits.

In consequence whereof, the Moderator returned them thanks in the manner following:

GENTLEMEN: The sacred trust reposed in you by your Country so faithfully discharged by you, does honour to yourselves, justifies the choice made of you by the last Convention, and places you in a situation to receive the best reward a patriotick breast can fill, the applause of your Country; who, in order to bear testimony of your merit, have directed me to convey to you their sincere thanks for the services you have rendered them in the important office to which they appointed you. And it is with great pleasure I now, gentlemen, in behalf of this Colony in general, and of this Convention in particular, return you those thanks which have been so unanimously resolved by the Convention to be your due.

To which the Delegates returned the following Answer:

We, the Delegates appointed to represent this Province in the Continental Congress lately held at Philadelphia, beg leave to express a heartfelt gratitude for this publick testimonial which we have received from you of the approbation of our constituents of our conduct, in the most important transaction in which any member of society can have been engaged. With diffidence we undertook the sacred trust of being joined to a body of men appointed to be the guardians of the constitutional rights and privileges of British America. If we have executed that charge to give satisfaction to the inhabitants of this Province, our actions meet the most ample reward that any member of it can experience. One motive in this important measure, viz: a sacred regard for the rights and privileges of British America, and an earnest wish to bring about a reconciliation with our Parent State, upon terms constitutional and honourable to both, have hitherto actuated us. Our earnest wishes are, that this Province may virtuously adhere to the Resolves of the Continental Congress, as the means which will most probably bring about the end which all the friends to America most earnestly desire.

At the same time accept, Sir, our warmest acknowledgment for the polite manner in which you have thought fit to convey the sentiments of this truly respectable body.

On motion, Resolved, That the Instructions of the inhabitants of Perquimans County to their Delegates appointed to meet at this Convention, entered into on the 11th day of March last, be read; which were read accordingly. One of which said Instructions being, "That the thanks of the inhabitants of that County be given to William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, for their faithful and judicious discharge of the trust reposed in them at the late Continental Congress."

Pursuant to which, Colonel John Harvey, one of the Delegates for the said County, in the name of the Inhabitants thereof, gave their thanks to the gentlemen aforesaid.

To which the Delegates returned the following Answer:

Permit us, Sir, to express our sincere gratitude for this testimony of the approbation given, through you, by the inhabitants of the County of Perquimans, of the conduct of us the Delegates of this Province in the Continental Congress at Philadelphia. Actuated with a zeal for the preservation of the constitutional liberties of America, and an earnest desire to bring about a reconciliation with the Mother Country, upon terms that may restore us to the fullest enjoyment of our just rights and privileges, and secure them to us in future from the encroachments of weak or wicked men, we signed our assent to the proceedings of Congress; and we could meet nothing more convincing of the propriety of our conduct in the measure, than that it obtains the approbation of the County of Perquimans.

To you, Sir, we beg leave to offer our tribute of thanks for the polite manner in which you have thought fit to convey the sense of that respectable body.

On motion, Resolved, That William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, be and they are hereby appointed Delegates to attend the General Congress to be held at Philadelphia, on the 10th day of May next, or at any other time and place that shall be appointed for that purpose. And they are hereby invested with such powers as may make any acts done by them, or any of them, or consent given, in behalf of this Province, obligatory in honour upon every inhabitant thereof.

The Convention adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Thursday, April 6, 1775.

The Convention met, according to adjournment.

Mr. William Robson, one of the Delegates for Pitt County, appeared, and took his seat in Convention.

On motion, Resolved, That each and every County in this Province raise, as speedily as possible, the sum of Twenty Pounds, Proclamation Money, to be collected by the respective Delegates of each County, in manner as shall appear to them most convenient, and pay the same into the hands of Richard Caswell, Esquire; to be by him equally divided among the Delegates appointed to attend the General Congress at Philadelphia, as a recompense for their trouble and expense in attending the said Congress.

Mr. Thomas Macknight, a Delegate for the County of Currituck, having been called upon to sign (with the other Members of this Convention) the Association approved of by the Continental Congress held at Philadelphia, thereupon refused, and withdrew himself:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Convention, that from the disingenuous and equivocal behaviour of the said Thomas Macknight, it is manifest his intentions are inimical to the cause of American Liberty; and we do hold him up as a proper object of contempt to this Continent, and recommend that every person break off all connection, and have no future commercial intercourse or dealing with him.

Resolved, That the above Resolve be published in the Gazettes of this and the neighbouring Colonies.

The Convention adjourned till to-morrow morning nine o'clock.

Friday, April 7th, 1775.

The Convention met according to adjournment.

Resolved, That the Moderator of this Convention, and in case of his death, Mr. Samuel Johnston, be empowered on any future occasion, that may in his opinion require it, to direct Delegates to be chosen for the respective Counties and Towns in this Province, to meet in Convention in the Town of Hillsborough, at such time as he shall think proper to appoint; and in case that the Members of a majority of the Counties and Towns do not appear at the day appointed, that he be empowered to adjourn the Convention de die in diem, until a sufficient number shall appear.

Resolved, That the Clerk furnish Mr. James Davis with a copy of the Proceedings of this Convention, and that Mr. Davis print the same.

Resolved, That this Convention do most heartily approve of the conduct and Proceedings of the late Continental Congress, and will endeavour to carry into execution the measures by them recommended; and that the most earnest wishes and desires of this Convention are, to see harmony restored between Great Britain and her Colonies on honourable and constitutional principles, which alone can give the same a lasting foundation. That we will exert our utmost endeavours towards completing this important purpose, and are of opinion that the late commercial regulations are the most eligible means for attaining this desirable end.

And whereas the freedom, happiness, and prosperity of every State greatly depends on providing within itself articles necessary for subsistence, clothing, and defence of its inhabitants:

Resolved, That from common prudence and regard for this Colony, we will encourage Arts, Manufactures, Agriculture, and every kind of economy, and use our influence for the same purpose with our constituents and all connected with us; and we recommend to the Committees of the several Counties to propose Premiums to the inhabitants whose industry may be a proper subject for their bounty, in such manner as to them shall seem meet.

Resolved, That His Majesty's subjects have an undoubted right at any time to meet and petition the Throne for a redress of grievances, and that such right includes a further right of appointing Delegates for such purpose, and therefore that the Governor's Proclamation issued to forbid this meeting, and his Proclamation afterwards commanding this meeting to disperse, are illegal, and an infringement of our just rights, and therefore ought to be disregarded as wanton and arbitrary exertions of power.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Convention be given to the Honourable John Harvey, Esquire, Moderator, for his judicious and faithful exercise of that office, and the services he has thereby rendered to his Country.

Resolved, That the Honourable John Harvey, Esquire, Moderator of this Convention, sign the Minutes for and in behalf of the same. Attested by JOHN HARVEY, Moderator.

ANDREW KNOX, Clerk.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS MACKNIGHT AND OTHERS.

At a Convention of Delegates for the respective Counties and Towns within this Province, held at Newbern the 6th day of April, 1775:

Mr. Thomas Macknight, a Delegate for the County of Currituck, having been called upon to sign (with the other Members of this Convention) the Association approved of by the Continental Congress, thereupon refused, and withdrew himself:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Convention, that from the disingenuous and equivocal behaviour of the said Thomas Macknight, it is manifest his intentions are inimical to the cause of American Liberty; and we do hold him up as a proper object of contempt to this Continent, and recommend that every person break off all connection, and have no future commercial intercourse or dealing with him.

Resolved, That the above Resolve be published in the Gazettes of this and the neighbouring Colonies.

A true copy from the minutes.

Attested by

ANDREW KNOX, Clerk.

We, the subscribers, Samuel Jarvis, Solomon Perkins, and Nathan Poyner, late Representatives for the County of Currituck, in a Convention of Deputies for the Province of North-Carolina, held at Newbern, on the 3d day of April, 1775, and Jonathan Herring and Isaac Gregory, Representatives in the said Convention for the County of Pasquotank, having found ourselves under the disagreeable necessity of withdrawing from the said meeting, and being denied the justice of having our reasons entered on the Journals of their Proceedings, (that is, by an express refusal to the Representatives for Currituck, which was the only cause that those for Pasquotank did not apply,) have only this resource left for vindicating our conduct to the world, and rescuing the character of a gentleman we greatly esteem from undeserved obloquy and reproach.

The facts, upon which the necessity we were unhappily reduced to was founded, are simply these: Upon its being moved and seconded, in the course of the business of the said Convention, that a vote should pass expressing a high approbation of the Continental Association, Mr. Thomas Macknight, a Representative for the County of Currituck aforesaid, got up and declared, that he was greatly concerned he could not heartily concur in the vote proposed to be passed, on account of particular circumstances in his situation; which obliged him to dislike some part of the Association; that he owed a debt in Britain, which the operation of the Non-Exportation Agreement would disable him to pay, and that he could not approve of a conduct in a collective capacity, which, as an individual, he should blush to acknowledge; that he thought it a duty he owed to his own sincerity to mention this sentiment, but did not mean to obstruct the good purposes proposed by an union of measures; that he would cheerfully comply with the Non-Consumption and Non-Importation Agreements, and should give a passive obedience to the non-exportation article; that an individual, as a member of society, ought to conform his actions to the general will of it, but that opinions could not be altered without conviction, or insincerely expressed without dishonesty.

In consequence, however, of this declaration, notwithstanding Mr. Macknight expressly said, that he desired not any disapprobation of the measure to be expressed by that body, and was only willing to acquit himself of his duty, by declaring in Convention his own sentiments of it, it was proposed and carried, that a declaration to the purport above-mentioned should be signed by all the members. All of them accordingly subscribed their names to the Resolve, highly approving, &c., as entered on the Journal, except Mr. Macknight, who desired he might have leave to reduce his reasons to writing, that they might be entered on the Journals, together with his refusal, which was agreed to; but on his presenting them the next day, when called upon again to subscribe, they would not suffer them even to be read; but the question being proposed, whether his signing that "he would conform" to the Continental Association would be satisfactory, they divided, fourteen Counties to fourteen, and the Moderator declined giving the casting vote.

While the Convention was waiting till the Representative of a Town, who was sent for on purpose to decide the question, should come in, Mr. Macknight was informed that it would give general satisfaction if he would insert in the declaration the word "accede;" which on his agreeing to do, two members immediately voted in his favour; who had before given their votes against him, and this now carried the question for him; but the minority being greatly discontented, several of them declared, that if any subscription, different from theirs, was accepted from him, they would withdraw from the Convention; upon which he declared immediately, (being, as we conceive, heated by the violence and arbitrariness of his opponents' conduct,) that to cut the matter short, and prevent further dissensions in the Convention on his account, he would withdraw himself from them, thinking, as he has since assured us, (and we have never had any reason to doubt his veracity,) that such a step in one individual, who still left his constituents represented in Convention, would not be so prejudicial to the purpose of the meeting, as if it was taken by the many who threatened it. Upon which, the vote of censure and civil excommunication was proposed and passed by a majority, declaredly on account of his intentions, which we, however, believe always to have been friendly to the cause of American liberty; his actions evidently showing to us, who are his neighbours, the uprightness of his intentions. Nor did we observe any disingenuous or equivocal behaviour in Mr. Macknight, to warrant the censure of the Convention in the smallest degree; but some of those who were with him before being now offended by his withdrawing from amongst them, joined the other party.

The members for Currituck, on the last day of the Convention, offered the reasons of their dissent and withdrawing; but no kind of attention being paid to them by the Convention, two of the three Pasquotank members being also ready to present theirs, thought it useless, more especially as the Moderator was hastening to sign the Journals; the majority ordering him to do so, as we believe, lest the dissentients should appear on the Journals; and we know that many were determined to dissent from so unjust a censure. We, however, withdrew; and declare that we do not consider ourselves or our constituents bound by the Proceedings of this Convention; because, in other respects relative to the publick, this Convention have acted contrary to the sentiments of our constituents, expressly declared to us, and have gone beyond the powers with which we are invested to act in their behalf.

The above being a true statement, in substance, of the proceedings we complain of, we appeal to the world, whether the violence of insisting on a consistency of opinion in every individual instance, of all the Representatives of a Province present, or an insincere declaration to be subscribed contrary to a man's own conviction, at a time when he would most expressly have agreed to regulate his conduct by the general voice, (the greatest submission ever exacted, as the subscribers believe, except in despotick and tyrannical Governments,) the unjustifiable precipitation of a great number of the minority, when defeated in their purposes, which made Mr. Macknight, upon principles of affection to the cause they were nominated to support, offer to withdraw rather than occasion a total schism in their proceedings; their refusing to receive reasons themselves had called for, and agreed to enter on their Journals, and others which members had ready, and as we conceive had a right to present, and were entitled to notice, as they were calculated to show the world their motives for withdrawing from this Convention.

Whether these extraordinary, rash, and unwarrantable proceedings, together with the other reasons we have assigned, do not leave us justified for withdrawing from this Convention, inasmuch as they have done more than our constituents warranted us to engage for, and a great number of the members would not confine themselves to the rules laid down by the Congress, but required and insisted upon other terms of union than that respectable body, whose directions they have all promised to obey, deemed necessary, or could themselves individually assent to.

SAMUEL JARVIS, ISAAC GREGORY,
SOLOMON PERKINS, JONATHAN HERRING.
NATHAN POYNER,

N. B. The Convention having omitted to publish the vote which Mr. Macknight refused to subscribe, for the information of such as have not an opportunity of seeing the Journals, it is inserted here:

"Resolved, That this Convention do highly approve of the said Association, and do, for themselves, firmly agree to adhere by the said Association, and recommend it to their constituents that they likewise adhere firmly to the same; in full approbation and testimony whereof the members of this Convention subscribed their names."

The Continental Association was not signed by the members in this Convention, as might be presumed from the publication of their Clerk.

COUNCIL OF NORTH-CAROLINA.

At a Council held at Newbern, the 12th of April, 1775, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Honourable James Hasell, Alexander McCulloch, William Dry, Samuel Strudwick, Martin Howard, and Samuel Cornell, Esquires:

The Governour laid before the Board the Proceedings of a body of people calling themselves Delegates of the Inhabitants of this Province in Convention, signed John Harvey, Moderator, wherein are certain Resolves highly derogatory to the honour and dignity of His Majesty's Government, tending to destroy the peace and welfare of this Province, in the highest degree oppressive of the people, and utterly subversive of the established Constitution:

He, therefore, submitted to the consideration of this Board the propriety of marking its indignation of such unlawful and dangerous proceedings, by striking Mr. John Harvey out of His Majesty's Commission of the Peace for the County of Perquimans, where he resides.

The Board fully concurring with His Excellency's sentiments of the foregoing proceedings, unanimously advised that the said John Harvey should be struck out of the Commission of the Peace for Perquimans County.

The Honourable William Dry, Esquire, took again the oath appointed to be taken by Privy Counsellors.

HEMPSTEAD (NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. RIVINGTON: You are requested to publish the following Resolutions, unanimously entered into at the most numerous Town Meeting that has been held here for many years past:—

Hempstead, April 4, 1775.

At this critical time of publick danger and distraction, when it is the duty of every honest man and friend to his Country to declare his sentiments openly, and use every endeavour to ward off the impending calamities which threaten this once happy and peaceful land, we, the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Hempstead, in Queen's County, in the Province of New-York, being legally assembled on the first Tuesday in April, 1775, have voluntarily entered into the following Resolutions:

1st. That as we have already borne true and faithful allegiance to His Majesty King George the Third, our gracious and lawful Sovereign, so we are firmly resolved to persist in the same line of duty to him and his lawful successors.

2d. That we esteem our civil and religious liberties above any other blessings, and those only can be secured to us by our happy Constitution; we shall inviolably adhere to it, since deviating from it and introducing innovations, would have a direct tendency to subvert it, from which the most ruinous consequences might be justly apprehended.

3d. That it is our ardent desire to have the present unnatural contest between the Parent State and her Colonies amicably and speedily accommodated on principles of constitutional liberty, and that the union of the Colonies with the Parent State may subsist till time shall be no more.

4th. That as the worthy Members of our General Assembly, who are our only legal and constitutional Representatives, have lately taken the most rational and effectual measures to bring about this much wished-for accommodation, by petitioning his most gracious Majesty, a Memorial to the House of Lords, and a Remonstrance to the House of Commons; we are determined, therefore, patiently to wait for the issue of these measures, and carefully avoid every thing that might frustrate those laudable endeavours of our Representatives.

5th. That as choosing Deputies to form a Provincial Congress, or Convention, must have this tendency, be highly disrespectful to our legal Representatives, and also be attended, in all probability, with the most pernicious effects in other instances, as is now actually the case in some Provinces—such as shutting up the Courts of Justice, levying money on the subjects to enlist men for the purpose of fighting against our Sovereign, diffusing a spirit of sedition among the people, destroying the authority of constitutional assemblies, and otherwise introducing many heavy and oppressive grievances—we therefore are determined not to choose any Deputies for such Provincial Congress or Convention, nor consent to it, but do solemnly bear our testimony against it.

6th. That we are utterly averse to all mobs, riots, and illegal proceedings, by which the lives, peace, and property of our fellow-subjects are endangered; and that we will, to the utmost of our power, support our legal Magistrates in suppressing all riots, and preserving the peace of our liege Sovereign.

HULET PETERS, Town Clerk.

TO THE PUBLICK.

Hempstead, April, 1775.

At a time when every possible artifice is made use of, not only to create real divisions and dissensions among us on points of the last importance to the general weal, but, at the same time, to hold up an idea of much greater difference than, in fact, exists, it is the duty of every friend to truth and the welfare of his Country, to represent transactions of a publick nature in a fair and genuine light.

Influenced by this consideration, I am induced to make a few remarks on the proceedings of the Town of Hempstead, which have been published in Mr. Rivington's Gazetteer of the 6th instant.

By that publication, it might seem that the Town-Meeting at which the Resolves were passed, had been assembled for the purpose of signifying their sense relative to the appointment of Deputies to join in the proposed Provincial Congress, and that the inhabitants of Hempstead were unanimous in their disapprobation of the measure; but this is far from being a just representation of the matter.

The meeting was nothing more than an annual one, in order to choose Town Officers. No previous notice had been given, by advertisement or otherwise, that any thing beside the ordinary business of the day was to be transacted. Not only so, but the Resolutions entered into were introduced late, after many people had retired from the meeting. A considerable number of respectable Freeholders, who are well affected to the appointment of Deputies, would have attended had they been apprized of what was designed, and the apparent unanimity with which the publick has been deceived, could have had no colour of pretence.

I am one of those who think the union of the Colonies, in a general and spirited plan of opposition, absolutely necessary to the preservation of our rights; and I know there is a number of principal Freeholders in this Town of the same sentiments. Our reasons for being willing to concur in the choice of Deputies, are as follow:

1st. Though we feel ourselves impressed with sentiments of unshaken loyalty towards our rightful Sovereign, George the Third, and should view with indignation and abhorrence every attempt to diminish his just and constitutional authority over us; yet we can by no means conceive that loyalty implies in it an abject submission to the unjust and arbitrary mandates of the British Parliament, or precludes the use of those expedients which are requisite to preserve our lives and properties from the rapacious hand of tyranny and oppression.

2d. The claim of Parliament to bind us by statutes in all cases whatsoever, and the several acts passed in consequence of it, appear to us an open and flagrant violation of our rights, both as men and Englishmen, and ought to be opposed by every necessary means.

3d. It is our opinion that no rational mode of opposition could, in our present circumstances, be concerted, but by the united concurrence of all the Colonies. Without this, our measures must be partial and divided, and consequently weak and ineffectual. One Colony could not oblige another to accede to any thing itself might deem prudent and efficacious. Difference in opinion might prevent the adoption of those measures which were most likely to succeed, and our opposition, instead of tending to any desirable end, would only serve to render us contemptible, and the scoff of our enemies.

4th. Provincial Assemblies have frequently been dissolved for asserting their rights; and it would be in the power of the several Governours to keep them from sitting whenever they found they were likely to take any step that would serve to frustrate the designs of the Ministry; so that not much reliance could be had upon their exertions in support of their liberties, which clearly points out the necessity of having recourse to some other method.

5th. Petitions have been tried more than once to no good purpose; and as we have never been admitted into the secrets of the Cabinet, we can only judge from the declarations and actions of the Ministry and Parliament, from which we are compelled to believe that they would now, if unseconded, be equally fruitless and insignificant. Nor can we think it prudent or safe to wait the issue of one more trial, before we proceed to other measures, as is recommended by some; because we are sensible, that the delay would be attended with many dangerous consequences, and might, at least, protract our sufferings to a very disagreeable length. We would not presume to impeach the conduct of our Assembly; but judging from past experience and a long train of facts, we are unable to imagine what could lead them to expect such happy effects from this source alone, especially as the Assemblies of the other Provinces have manifested by their conduct a quite different opinion.

6th. As we think a Continental Congress necessary, for the reasons already assigned, so we think a Provincial Congress the only equal and just method of regulating a representation of the whole Province. Nor do we apprehend any mischiefs from the appointment of such a body, because no other authority has been delegated to them than barely that of choosing proper persons to represent the Colony in that Convention, which is to be held at Philadelphia in May ensuing.

7th. As to the shutting up the Courts, which is said to have taken place in some of the Colonies, we consider it as a regulation by them thought necessary, to prevent any advantage being taken of the present critical situation of affairs, and as being done with the general consent and approbation of the people; and we are informed they have used proper methods to prevent any abuses which might arise therefrom. We know not of any Provincial Congresses which have levied money on the subject to enlist men for the purpose of fighting against our Sovereign. We have, indeed, heard of some which have recommended it to their constituents to raise a fund for the support of those who might be employed in acquiring a knowledge of military discipline, in order to defend themselves, should they be reduced to the dreadful alternative of either maintaining their liberties, at the risk of their lives, or of submitting to become the slaves of their fellow-subjects in Great Britain.

8th. We cannot consider the power delegated in the present instance, either as interfering with the authority of our Assembly, or as being a mark of disrespect towards it; because we are confident, that had they considered it in that light, they would not have been so wanting to themselves, or so inattentive to their just rights, as to have looked on passively while such measures were in agitation, but would have taken proper steps to secure their own dignity and authority from all infractions and violations whatsoever; and because the general state of American affairs requires measures that are beyond the power of any one particular Assembly, should it think proper, from peculiar motives, to observe a line of conduct altogether singular and different from that of the other Assemblies, which are embarked in the same common cause.

A FREEHOLDER OF HEMPSTEAD.

TOWN-MEETING, ORANGE COUNTY, NEW-YORK.

At an annual Town-Meeting of the freeholders and inhabitants of the Precinct of Goshen, in the County aforesaid, on Tuesday the 4th of April, 1775, the following question, Whether any Deputies should be sent from this Precinct to meet Deputies from the other Counties at New-York, the 20th instant, to join with them in choosing proper persons as Delegates on the part of this Province, to meet in General Congress at Philadelphia, on the 10th of May next, was put, and carried unanimously in the affirmative.

A motion was then made by several persons, that Henry Wisner and Peter Clowse, Esquires, be appointed Deputies for the above purpose; and the question being accordingly put, it was carried in the affirmative, without one dissenting voice.

And at an annual Town-Meeting held the day aforesaid at Cornwall Precinct, in the County aforesaid, a motion was made, that Mr. Israel Seely, of said Precinct, be appointed one of the Deputies for the aforesaid County, to meet Deputies from the other Counties, at New-York, on the 20th instant, to join in choosing some proper persons to be sent as Delegates, to represent this Province in General Congress at Philadelphia, the 10th of next month; and the question being accordingly put, it was carried by a great majority in the affirmative.

Committee Chamber, Baltimore, April 5, 1775.

Information being made to the Committee that a few individuals, inhabitants of this Town, have of late worn pistols or private arms, alleging, in justification of their conduct, "that a motion had been made in the Committee to sacrifice some of the persons in this Town who differed from them, or were averse to the publick measures now carrying on in this Province, and that they wore arms against any such attempts."

The Committee, to remove any prejudice that may be taken by the publick against them, and to prevent the ill effects of such false and injurious reports, if circulated without contradiction, do solemnly declare that no such motion was ever made, or any entry relative to the same minuted in their proceedings. A few members of the Committee were of opinion that the names of such persons, who, upon application, had refused to contribute for the purchase of arms and ammunition, should be published; but even this measure was overruled in the Committee, as improper at that time.

Our meetings have been held in publick, nor has any person who thought fit to attend ever been excluded; our records are free and open for inspection. From the publick we received our authority, not by personal solicitation, but a free and voluntary choice; to that tribunal we submit our actions.

Although we have uniformly persevered, and are determined to persevere in carrying into execution the Association and measures of the Congress, yet, in no instance have we exceeded the line pointed out by that Assembly and our Provincial Assembly; and abhorring every idea of proscription, the Committee call upon the persons who have circulated the aforesaid report to disclose the author.

A true extract from the Minutes:

R. ALEXANDER, Secretary.

JOHN POWNALL, SECRETARY TO THE BOARD OF TRADE, TO THE GOVERNOURS OF THE SEVERAL COLONIES IN NORTH AMERICA.

Whitehall, April 5, 1775.

SIR: I have the honour to send you herewith, by Lord Dartmouth's directions, an Act of Parliament, to which His Majesty gave the royal assent on Friday last, entitled "An Act to restrain the Trade and Commerce of the Provinces of Massachusetts-Bay and New-Hampshire, and Colonies of Connecticut and Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in North America, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Islands in the West-Indies, and to prohibit such Provinces and Colonies from carrying on any Fishery on the Banks of Newfoundland, or other places therein mentioned, under certain conditions and limitations;" and I am to desire that you will be pleased to cause the said Act to be made publick in such manner as has been usual on like occasions. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JOHN POWNALL.

JOHN POWNALL TO THE GOVERNOURS OF THE SEVERAL COLONIES.

Whitehall, April 5, 1775.

SIR: As it may be of use that His Majesty's subjects in America should be informed of the Proclamation issued by the order of the States General, prohibiting the exportation of Arms and Ammunition from their Dominions, in British Ships, or in their own Ships, without leave of their College of Admiralty, I am directed by Lord Dartmouth to transmit to you the enclosed Gazette, containing the said Proclamation, which you will cause to be printed and published in such manner as you shall think fit.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JOHN POWNALL.

Hague, March 20, 1775.

Their High Mightinesses the States General have this day issued a Proclamation, of which the following is a translation:

PROCLAMATION.

The States General of the United Provinces, to all who shall see or hear these presents read, greeting:

Be it known, that we, for particular reasons thereunto moving, have thought fit absolutely to prohibit, and we hereby absolutely do prohibit all exportation of Ammunition, Gunpowder, Guns, and Shot, by Ships belonging to the Dominions of Great Britain, provisionally, for the term of six months, upon pain not only of confiscation of the Arms and Ammunition which shall be found there on board, but also of a fine of a Thousand Guilders over and above, at the charge of the Commander, whose Ship shall be answerable and liable to execution for the same.

That we have further thought fit to enact, and we do hereby enact, that during the above-said term of six months, no Gunpowder, Guns, Shot, or other Instruments of War, shall be embarked on board any other Ships, whether foreign or belonging to this Country, to be transported abroad, without consent or permission of the College of Admiralty, under whose jurisdiction the embarkation shall be made, upon pain of confiscation of the Arms, Gunpowder, Guns, Shot, or other Ammunition, which shall have been embarked without permission, and of the Commander incurring a fine of a Thousand Guilders, on board of whose Ship the said Arms and Ammunition shall have been embarked, and his Ship be answerable and liable to execution for the said fine.

And that no one may pretend ignorance hereof, we call upon and require the States, the Hereditary Stadtholder, the Committee of Council, and the deputations of the States of the respective Provinces, and all other Officers and Justices of these Countries, to cause this our Proclamation to be forthwith promulgated, published, and affixed, in all places where such publication is wont to be made. And we do further charge and command the Counsellors of the Admiralty, the Advocates General, together with all Admirals, Vice-Admirals, Captains, Officers, and Commanders, to pay obedience to this our Proclamation, proceeding and causing to be proceeded against the transgressors thereof, without favour, connivance, dissimulation, or composition. For such have we found meet.

Given at the Hague, under the seal of the States, signature of the President of our Assembly, and the counter signature of our Greffier, the 20th day of March, 1775.

G. VAN HARDENBROEK.

By order of the States General:

H. FAGEL.

ORDER IN COUNCIL.

At the Court of St. James's, the 5th day of April, 1775: Present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Whereas, the time limited by His Majesty's Order in Council of the 19th of October last, for the prohibiting the exporting out of this Kingdom, or carrying coastwise, Gunpowder or any sorts of Arms or Ammunition, will expire upon the 19th of April: And whereas, it is judged expedient that the said prohibition should be continued for some time longer, His Majesty doth therefore, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, hereby command, that no person or persons whatsoever, (except the Master-General, Lieutenant-General, or principal officers of the Ordnance for His Majesty's service) do, at any time during six months, to commence from the said 19th instant, presume to transport into any parts out of this Kingdom, or carry coastwise, any Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition, or ship or lade any Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition on board any Ship or Vessel, in order to transport the same into any parts beyond the Seas, or carrying the same coastwise, without leave or permission first obtained from His Majesty, or his Privy Council, upon pain of incurring and suffering the respective forfeitures and penalties inflicted by an Act passed in the 29th year of His late Majesty's reign, entitled "An Act to empower His Majesty to prohibit the exportation of Saltpetre, &c., &c."

THOMAS LIFE, AGENT FOR CONNECTICUT, TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Basinghall Street, London, April 5, 1775.

SIR: I received the favour of your last packet, in which was enclosed a general state of the transactions relative to the Rev. Samuel Peters, of his applications to you, and what passed between you on that occasion, and another letter, dated the 4th January last, in which you mention the receipt of my letter of the 5th day of October last, enclosing a copy of Messrs. Penn's Petition. On the 20th of last month, I attended Lord Dartmouth at his levee, and stated to him the facts from that general state, without delivering the state itself to his Lordship, who informed me that he had seen Mr. Peters but once, and did not seem to lay any part of the blame upon you; and whatever views Mr. Peters may have, I hope he will be disappointed. There was a flying report sometime ago, that the acts of some people in your Colony, in going down to Boston to oppose the King's Troops, had subjected your Charter to be forfeited, but have not heard any thing lately about it. The Colony of Rhode-Island, it is said, is likewise in the same predicament for seizing the King's powder. I received notice from the Board of Trade to attend them on the 20th of March last on Messrs. Penn's Petition, which I accordingly did, and prayed two months' time to be heard on behalf of your Colony by counsel. Mr. Baker, who married one of Mr. Penn's daughters, appeared on behalf of the petitioners, and opposed me very strongly, and it was with the utmost difficulty I obtained time till the first of May next, and I must be prepared in all events by that time. Indeed Mr. Baker at first objected to my having any more time than a fortnight, or a month at most; but on my representing that that would fall out in or near Easter week, their Lordships gave me a fortnight further time. Since I wrote by the last packet, Mr. Nuthall is dead and is succeeded by Mr. Hoole, whom I mentioned in my former letters to be his partner. On application to this gentleman he attended with me at the Board of Trade in behalf of Colonel Dyer and the other Susquehannah proprietors, but their Lordships would not then hear him, as they were of opinion that it was not then the proper time.

I am, sir, with the greatest esteem and regard, your most obedient humble servant,

THOS. LIFE.

The Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Governour of the Colony of Connecticut, at Lebanon in Connecticut.

MEETING OF THE LIVERY OF LONDON.

London, April 6, 1775.

Yesterday, at Guildhall, a few minutes after one o'clock, the Lord Mayor, and Aldermen Bull, Lewes and Newnham, with the two Sheriffs, proceeded to the Hustings; and the common Crier having made proclamation that the business on which the Livery were convened, was to consider of a "Remonstrance and Petition to the Throne, respecting the measures adopted with regard to America," the Lord Mayor came forward and addressed the Citizens in the following speech:

Gentlemen of the Livery:

It would ill become me, on this important day, to take up much of your time. I very readily complied with the request of several respectable fellow-citizens to call this Common Hall, from every feeling of justice and humanity to our persecuted brethren in America, and the fatal consequences I foresee of the violent proceedings now carrying on, which must so deeply affect the prosperity, not only of this, the first commercial City in the world, but likewise the whole Kingdom. I will only, gentlemen, beg leave to read to you, from your own records on this subject, the words of a Petition from this Metropolis to both Houses of Parliament, long before the present unhappy contest between the Mother Country and her American Colonies began; so long ago as the year 1739.

"The citizens of London are too deeply interested in whatever affects the trade of this Nation, not to express the utmost anxiety for the welfare of that only source of our riches. The Petitioners apprehend that the trade from these (His Majesty's Kingdoms) to his American Colonies, is of the utmost importance, and almost the only profitable trade this Nation now enjoys unrivalled by others."

If, gentlemen, the trade to our American Colonies near forty years ago was, according to the declared opinion of this Metropolis, of such importance, the amazing entries for several late years made in the books of the Custom-House, which are almost daily before your eyes, will best demonstrate to what an immense magnitude it is since grown. Such an object surely calls for our most earnest, unwearied attention and regard. Whatever your determinations may be, you may be assured of the hearty concurrence of your Chief Magistrate.

Mr. B. Allen, Esq., now moved that such Remonstrance should be presented, and all hands were held up in favour of the motion except seven or eight, among whom was Sir James Esdaile. Mr. Allen made a long and spirited speech, in which he was very severe on the arbitrary strides taken by Government, which rendered it necessary for every man of spirit to stand up in his own defence. He said that if he had sat in the House of Commons he should have opposed all the late measures, being convinced they were but the acts of the Minister, who was himself controlled by an invisible agent. That it was amazing a confidence should be reposed in a Stuart, by those who ought to fear every man of the name. Of the Scots in general, Mr. Allen spoke very handsomely, and wished the English would copy them in their nationality. He said that the Lord Mayor had been unjustly accused by a prejudice against the Scots as a people, and that the Thane had artfully made this circumstance the ground of national quarrel. This orator recommended unanimity in the common cause, but lamented that whenever emoluments were to arise, there never were wanting bad men, even of rank, who would do any thing. He said the question now was, whether the Americans were to be enslaved or not. If Government was in want of supplies, why did it not take the regular method of raising them? He concluded by saying, "the Americans are sons of Britons, and have a right to be free," and that he hoped the Hall would be unanimous for the proposed Remonstrance. Mr. Allen's speech was well received, and he concluded it with reading the Petition.

It was afterwards moved that the Petition be again read, which being agreed to, it was accordingly read and approved of, there not being more than three or four dissenting voices, among whom was Sir James Esdaile.

Mr. Saxby then made a motion, that the said Petition be fairly transcribed and signed by the Town Clerk; also, that it be presented to His Majesty by the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen and Livery of the City of London, in their gowns; that the Sheriffs do wait upon His Majesty, to know when he will be pleased to receive it; and that the Lord Mayor be requested to give the most early and publick intelligence of His Majesty's answer: all which were carried in the affirmative.

Mr. Saxby afterwards moved, that the thanks of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Livery, be given to those Lords who protested against the Acts lately passed respecting America; to such Members of the House of Commons who opposed the said Acts and all other anti-commercial measures; to Lord Chatham, for offering a conciliatory plan; to those Members of the House of Commons who voted for expunging the Resolutions relative to the Middlesex Election; and to Edmund Burke, Esq., for offering a conciliatory plan. All these motions were unanimously agreed to.

LETTER FROM THE GEORGIA DELEGATES TO THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS.

Savannah, Georgia, April 6, 1775.

SIR: The unworthy part which the Province of Georgia has acted in the great and general contest, leaves room to expect little less than the censure, or even indignation of every virtuous man in America. Although, on the one hand, we feel the justice of such a consequence with respect to the Province in general; yet, on the other, we claim an exemption from it in favour of some individuals who wished a better conduct. Permit us, therefore, in behalf of ourselves and many others our fellow-citizens, warmly attached to the cause, to lay before the respectable body over which you preside a few facts, which we trust will not only acquit us of supineness, but also render our conduct to be approved by all candid and dispassionate men.

At the time the late Congress did this Province the honour to transmit to it an Extract from their Proceedings, enclosed in a friendly letter from the Honourable Mr. Middleton, the sense and disposition of the people in general seemed to fluctuate between liberty and convenience. In order to bring on a determination respecting the measures recommended, a few well-affected persons in Savannah, by publick advertisement in the Gazette, requested a meeting of all the Parishes and Districts, by Delegates or Representatives in Provincial Congress. On the day appointed for this meeting, with concern they found that only five out of twelve Parishes to which they had particularly wrote, had nominated and sent down Delegates; and even some of these five had laid their Representatives under injunctions as to the form of an Association.

Under these circumstances those who met saw themselves a good deal embarrassed; however, one expedient seemed still to present itself. The House of Assembly was then sitting, and it was hoped there would be no doubt of a majority in favour of American freedom. The plan, therefore, was to go through with what business they could in Provincial Congress, and then, with a short address, present the same to the House of Assembly, who, it was hoped, would, by vote, in a few minutes, and before prerogative should interfere, make it the act of the whole Province.

Accordingly the Congress framed and agreed to such an Association, and did such other business as appeared practicable with the people, and had the whole just ready to be presented, when the Governour, either treacherously informed, or shrewdly suspecting the step, put an end to the session.

What, then, could the Congress do? On the one hand truth forbid them to call their proceedings the voice of the Province, there being but five out of twelve Parishes concerned; and on the other, they wanted strength sufficient to enforce them on the principle of necessity, to which all ought for a time to submit. They found the inhabitants of Savannah not likely soon to give matters a favourable turn. The importers were mostly against any interruption, and the consumers very much divided. There were some of the latter virtuously for the measures; others strenuously against them; but more who called themselves neutrals than either.

Thus situated, there appeared nothing before us but the alternative of either immediately commencing a civil war among ourselves, or else of patiently waiting the measures to be recommended by the General Congress. Among a powerful people, provided with men, money, and conveniences, and by whose conduct others were to be regulated, the former would certainly be the resolution that would suggest itself to every man removed from the condition of a coward; but in a small community like that of Savannah, (whose members are mostly in their first advance towards wealth and independence, destitute of even the necessities of life within themselves, and from whose junction or silence, so little would be added or lost to the general cause,) the latter presented itself as the most eligible plan, and was adopted by the people. Party disputes and animosities have occasionally prevailed, which show that the spirit of freedom is not extinguished, but only restrained for a time till an opportunity shall offer for calling it forth.

The Congress convened at Savannah did us the honour of choosing us Delegates to meet your respectable body at Philadelphia, on the tenth of next month. We were sensible of the honour and weight of the appointment, and would gladly have rendered our Country any services our poor abilities would have admitted of; but, alas! with what face could we have appeared for a Province whose inhabitants had refused to sacrifice the most trifling advantages to the publick cause, and in whose behalf we did not think we could safely pledge ourselves for the execution of any one measure whatsoever.

We do not mean to insinuate that those who appointed us would prove apostates, or desert their opinion; but that the tide of opposition was great; that all the strength and virtue of these our friends might be insufficient for the purpose. We very early saw the difficulties that would here occur, and therefore repeatedly and constantly requested the people to proceed to the choice of other Delegates in our stead; but this they refused to do.

We beg, sir, you will view our reasons for not attending in a liberal point of light. Be pleased to make the most favourable representation of them to the honourable the Members of the Congress. We believe we may take upon us to say, notwithstanding all that has past, there are still men in Georgia who, when an occasion shall require, will be ready to evince a steady, religious, and manly attachment to the liberties of America. To the consolation of these, they find themselves in the neighbourhood of a Province whose virtue and magnanimity must and will do lasting honour to the cause, and in whose fate they seemed disposed freely to involve their own.

We have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient and very humble servants,
 NOBLE WIMBERLY JONES,
 ARCHIBALD BULLOCK,
 JOHN HOUSTOUN.

To the President of the Continental Congress.

CALVERT COUNTY (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

April 5, 1775.

In consequence of an information received, that Mr. Alexander Ogg, merchant at Huntingtown, had sold and was selling his goods at a greater advance upon the prime cost than was recommended by the Provincial Convention, held at Annapolis in December, 1774, the Committee met at Huntingtown on Saturday the 25th March, and continued by adjournment till this day.

Ordered, That the Clerk give notice to said Ogg, and desire his attendance immediately before the Committee. Accordingly he attended, and produced his shop-notes and books, from which it appeared he had sold at a much higher advance than one hundred and fifty per cent. on the prime cost.

On motion, Resolved, That said Ogg has violated the Association, and therefore ought to be deemed an enemy to the cause of America. Signed per order, PAT. SIM SMITH, Clerk pro tem.

TO THE PUBLICK.

I hereby publickly acknowledge that I have, but with no sinister intention, violated the American Association in selling several articles of my last cargo at more than one hundred and fifty per cent. advance upon the prime cost. My goods were imported via Philadelphia, and consequently were much more chargeable than if imported directly into this Province. This extraordinary expense I thought I had a right to reimburse myself; but I find I was mistaken. I am sorry I have offended. I am willing to make satisfaction as far as is in my power. I shall give credit in every article where I have charged a farthing more than one hundred and fifty per cent. upon the prime cost. And as my character as a vender of goods has hitherto been very irreproachable, and I have been as zealous an assertor of American freedom as any man upon the Continent, my sphere of life considered, I hope the publick will forgive this offence, more especially as it has been owing to a misapprehension of the matter, and not to any design of taking advantage of the scarcity of goods that now prevails.

SUSSEX COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a Committee held for the County of Sussex, in Virginia, at the Court-House, on Thursday the 6th of April, 1775, present: Thomas Peete, Esq., Chairman, and twenty-seven other Members of the said Committee:

The Proceedings of the Provincial Congress, lately held in the Town of Richmond and County of Henrico, were laid before the Committee by the late Delegates for this County; and the same being read, and maturely considered, the Committee came to the following Resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Committee, in behalf of themselves and their constituents, the good people of this County, are justly due, and are most unfeignedly given to the Congress in general, and to our late worthy Delegates in particular, for the great pains and trouble they have been at, and wisdom shewn in their consultations and resolves, and to assure them that this Committee will adhere strictly to the spirit of the Resolves of the said Congress.

Signed by order.

THOMAS PEETE, Chairman.
 JOHN MASSENBURG, Clerk.

New-York, April 6, 1775.

A correspondent acquaints us that, on Monday, the 3d of April, the inhabitants of the Borough of Westchester met, in consequence of a summons, to give their sentiments upon a question, whether or not they would choose Deputies to represent them at a Provincial Convention in this City; when they declared themselves already very ably and effectually represented in the General Assembly of this Province by Isaac Wilkins, Esquire; peremptorily disowned all Congressional Conventions and Committees, most loyally repeating the old chorus, God save the King, which was seconded by three cheers.

On Tuesday, the 11th instant, a General Meeting of the inhabitants of the County of Westchester is to be held at the White Plains, to determine whether or not Delegates shall be sent by them to a Provincial Convention at New-York.

TO THE FREEHOLDERS AND INHABITANTS OF THE COUNTY OF WESTCHESTER.

New-York, April 6, 1775.

You are earnestly desired to attend a General Meeting of the County, to be held at the White Plains, on Tuesday next, the 11th instant, to give your votes upon the questions:—

Whether you are inclined to choose Deputies to meet at the City of New-York, in a Provincial Convention? Or,

Whether you are determined to abide by the loyal and judicious measures already taken by your own worthy Representatives in the General Assembly of this Province, for a redress of American grievances?

The consequences that may arise from your neglecting to attend at the White Plains, on Tuesday next, to declare your sentiments relative to the appointment of Deputies to meet in Provincial Congress, may be very fatal to this County. The friends of Government and our happy Constitution are, therefore, earnestly invited in person, to oppose a measure so replete with ruin and misery. Remember the extravagant price we are now obliged to pay for goods purchased of the merchants, in consequence of the Non-Importation Agreement; and when the Non-Exportation Agreement takes place, we shall be in the situation of those who were obliged to make bricks without straw.

MEETING OF THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, Thursday, April 6, 1775.

A number of the inhabitants of this City and County assembled at the Liberty Pole this day, in consequence of a notification published yesterday for that purpose, when they immediately proceeded to the choice of a Chairman. And after the Chairman had fully explained the business and design of the meeting, a motion was made, that the following recommendation and advice of the Committee should be read:—

To the respectable Inhabitants of the City and County of NEW-YORK.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: In times so critical as the present, it becomes the duty of every citizen to pay particular attention to the welfare of the community, and to counteract every measure that may tend to injure its interest.

Influenced by these considerations, we view with concern the uneasiness occasioned in this City by the late unusual exportation of Nails; and perceive with anxiety the distress to which a monopoly of this or any other article may expose many among us.

For what purpose, or with what design, such a quantity has, in so short a time, been purchased and exported, we neither know nor can conceive. The clamour raised among the Mechanicks, by the scarcity of Nails during the continuance of the last Non-Importation Agreement, is recent in our memories; and though the manufactories which have since been established will supply more than sufficient for our own consumption, we apprehend it would be imprudent thus rashly to part with what we have in store, especially as this sudden exportation has given just grounds for suspicion and alarm.

It is not within the limits of our appointment to provide against the evil tendency of this circumstance, by any regulation; but considering ourselves as fellow-citizens with you, and deeply interested in every thing that respects the public weal, and the support of the great cause in which our all is at stake, we take the liberty of declaring our sentiments upon the occasion; and recommend to you to avoid drawing the people of this City into any difficulties or discontents, by exporting or encouraging the monopoly of such great quantities of Nails as may leave a provision for our own consumption precarious, especially as it is not certain whether these Nails, so hastily bought up and exported, are designed to be used, or to be stored.

Permit us also to submit to your consideration the propriety of supplying the Troops at Boston with implements of war, and articles essential to hostilities. We cannot forbear observing, that the duty we owe to our interest and reputation should lead us to withhold such supplies from the Troops, at least till we have assurances that nothing hostile is intended against us. By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

And the same being read accordingly, and the question put, whether they approved of the said recommendation and advice, it was carried in the affirmative unanimously.

Then the question was put, whether we ought to supply the Troops at Boston with implements of war, and other necessities for carrying on their operations against the people of Massachusetts-Bay; which was carried in the negative, unanimously.

After which, the following motions (in writing) were delivered to the Chairman:

MR. CHAIRMAN: Whereas William and Henry Ustick, of this City, Traders, have, for some time past, been engaged in purchasing Spades, Shovels, and other intrenching tools for the use of the Army now at Boston; and have likewise employed a number of hands in manufacturing Bill-hooks, Pickaxes, &c., for the purpose aforesaid; whereby they have acted derogatory to the character of good citizens and friends to their Country, as it enables General Gage to take the field, and carry into execution any hostile plan which he may have conceived against the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay in particular, and the American Colonies in general, and may be the means of involving our Country in bloodshed, and the dreadful calamities attendant on civil war. In order, therefore, to testify to the world our abhorrence and detestation of such vile and infamous conduct, and prevent in some measure the infamy and reproach which our silence would bring upon the inhabitants of this City and County in general:

I move that the sense of this body be now taken, whether the said William and Henry Ustick have not acted in this matter as inveterate foes to American freedom, and whether we ought not to break off all connexion and dealing with them for the future?

And the questions being respectively put on the said motions, they were carried in the affirmative, with only one dissenting voice.

It was likewise moved, that a Committee should be appointed to wait on the Importers of Nails, and request them not to dispose of those which they have on hand to any person who may purchase them with a design to export them out of the Province; and a Committee of seven persons was accordingly appointed for that purpose.

ALEXANDER McDUGALL TO JOSIAH QUINCY, JUN.

New-York, April 6, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Your favours of the 17th and 19th of December last, enclosing letters for the friends of the common cause in Boston and Philadelphia, arrived here the 10th ultimo; but they were not handed to me before the 25th, owing to their being in a package belonging to a gentleman who was absent when they arrived. Your directions respecting them were strictly observed, and they were forwarded the 27th by safe conveyances. I shall take great pleasure in transmitting your future communications to your friends.

I wrote you by the March Packet under cover to Mr. Thomas Bromfield, in which I informed you of the progress then made by our House of Assembly on American grievances. The assurances I gave you, that what remained of the "Report of the Committee of Grievances" not then considered by the "Committee of the House," would rather be more in favour of liberty than the "Report," has since been confirmed; the particulars of which you have in the enclosed printed proceedings of the House. After the "Statement of Grievances" was agreed to, and approved of by the House, several of the members who were warm friends to the cause of liberty, having attended the Assembly two months, and their families being very remote from the Capital, and urgent business demanding their return, and considering the most important transactions of the sessions finished, went home. This gave an opportunity to the wicked and designing members of the House; contrary to all order, to depart from the spirit of the "List of Grievances," in a "Petition to the King," "Memorial to the Lords," and "Remonstrance to the Commons." But the "Statement of Grievances" agreed to by the fullest House during the sessions, must be considered as the basis of all their proceedings on the American controversy. If any regard is to be paid to the sense of the legal Representatives, that sense is the "Statement of Grievances" agreed to in a full House; and therefore, whatever difference appears in the "Petition," &c., from that "Statement of Grievances" is a mere nullity. If the Ministry make any dependance on the "Petition," &c., as declarative of the sense of this Colony, they will find themselves most egregiously mistaken. This City will publicly disavow the vile, slavish sentiments contained in the "Petition," &c., the moment they make their appearance. So far as they are now known, they are condemned, and the patrons of them despised. And if the Provincial Convention, who are to meet here on the 20th instant, to elect Delegates for the Continental Congress, do not disavow the "Petition," &c., which I have reason to conclude they will, they will certainly join with the Continental Congress in doing it.

During the Ship Beulah's stay in our Bay she was continually watched by a Sub-Committee, and did not enter. But while she lay at the Hook waiting for a fair wind, the night before she departed threatened a storm; and as the Boat, on board of which the Sub-Committee attended, was not so well provided with ground-tackling as the Ship, the Boat was obliged to go into a cove of safety, at some distance from the Ship. The owners, who had some goods on board, having previously meditated a plan to land them, availed themselves of this opportunity, and effected it in the night. Of this they were suspected, and our Sub-Committee of Observation, and the Committee of Elizabethtown, having got a clue to a discovery, the owners confessed the matter upon oath. Our citizens were so enraged at them for the horrid deed, that it was with great difficulty they were prevailed upon not to banish them. The fearful apprehensions of these persons, and the terms on which they are suffered to abide here, are fully expressed in the printed papers which you have herewith. This is the only violation of the Association we have had since it took place. The punishment they now, and will endure, is sufficient to deter any man, however base, from another breach.

The friends of the Association, and the great cause, are daily increasing; so that you have no reason to fear a defection of this Colony. Time will not permit me to be more particular. I shall continue to enclose you all the printed papers which I may judge of importance to you, regardless of the postage, until you direct me to the contrary.

I am, dear sir, in great haste, but with great respect, your humble servant,
ALEXANDER McDUGALL.
Josiah Quincy, Jun., London.

P. S. As my political character may tempt the tools of Government to open letters to me, please to cover your favours to me to Samuel Broome & Co., Merchants, in New-York.

FOR MR. RIVINGTON'S NEW-YORK GAZETTEER.

Boston, April 6, 1775.

Whereas it is the prevailing rage of the present times for people of all ranks, orders, and professions, to form Associations, and erect themselves into what they call Congresses and Committees of various denominations; who, under pretext of redressing grievances and reforming Church and State, have made most audacious and iniquitous resolves, tending to the subversion of all order and good Government, and the total abolition of law and justice:

And whereas, in compliance with the aforesaid resolves, many peaceable and well disposed persons, who have declined joining in such illegal Associations, have been insulted, persecuted, proscribed, and oppressed, and have suffered all the cruelty and torture that brutal, cowardly rage could devise; and as, in obedience to the orders of such Congresses and Committees, much private property has been destroyed, the most daring piracies and robberies have been perpetrated in the face of open day, and death and destruction denounced against all who dare oppose their lawless banditti:

And whereas the Pulpit and Press are become subservient to the infernal schemes of these diabolical assemblies, and are used as the great engines to destroy the peace and tranquillity of this devoted Nation, and to plunge it into all the horrors of rebellion and civil war; to accomplish which they daily teem with productions of the most inflammatory, seditious, treasonable nature; reflecting on, and highly injurious to the characters and interests of individuals, and particular societies of men; which individuals and particular societies labour under great disadvantages, through the want of mutual concert and intercourse with each other:

And as the Navy and Army sent hither by His Majesty for the support of the laws and preservation of the peace, have been marked out as the peculiar objects of the rancour and malignity of these reforming fanatics; and as in their resolves they have publicly declared the officers and men to be their enemies, and with that charity and humanity which are peculiar to the holy men of Massachusetts, have endeavoured to deprive them of those necessities and conveniences of life, which, among savages, are not denied to the brute creation; namely, straw to lie down on, and sheds to shelter them from the rigour of a most inclement season; and with their usual zeal for the propagation of irreligion and immorality, have spared neither pains nor expense to debauch the soldiers from their duty and allegiance, to persuade them to be guilty of perjury, treason, and rebellion; and as a few, by artifice and deceit, have been prevailed on to desert the service of their King and Country, some of whom have suffered the punishment due to so heinous a crime, and others have been condemned by their seducers to slavery, and sentenced to pass the remainder of their miserable days at hard labour in the mines:

As these illegal Congresses and Committees still continue to meet, vote, and resolve; and as His Majesty's land and sea forces here assembled, are particularly affected by these meetings, it is therefore, with all deference, submitted to the Officers, whether, from the foregoing considerations, they should not immediately form a Congress, that, by uniting their counsels and arms, they may both act with greater force, and with more effect; and the appearance of a confederacy may render them no less respectable among the people than formidable to the rebels:

It is therefore humbly proposed by the Moderator and Selectmen, that a Military Congress be immediately formed, under the name of A Grand Congress of Control; that this Congress have a President, who shall be styled Comptroller General; a Secretary; three Delegates from each Regiment; three from the Navy, and one from the Engineers.

That as many as can conveniently meet, do assemble on every Monday and Thursday, immediately after the publication of the Boston Gazette and the Spy, to take cognizance of whatever may relate to them in these Papers; and also of the proceedings of the Provincial Congress now sitting at Concord.

That on these days they hear all complaints against Congresses, Committees, Town Meetings, Selectmen, Printers, Watchmen, and mob of the Town of Boston.

That they take cognizance of any injury, insult, or indignity, that may be offered by any man or body of men, to their Country, their King, their profession, their General, their men, or themselves; and where legal process cannot be obtained, that a summary mode of redress be adopted and put into execution.

That they appoint such inferior Committees as shall to them appear expedient.

That they keep a faithful register of the occurrences of the times, and pursue every other measure which, in their united wisdom, they shall judge effectual, to obviate the insidious schemes of a most artful, indefatigable, unprincipled, and ungenerous enemy.

FOR THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

Boston, April 6, 1775.

My worthy Friends and Fellow-Countrymen;

Experience has ever been found to be the best guide of human conduct; to profit from our past errors, is at once to discharge our duty and consult our truest interest. When we review our past behaviour, in any stage or station of life, how many instances may we find, wherein we should have acted a very different part if we had been aware of the consequences which have ensued; and which, should we again be placed in the same situation, we should very materially correct? Hence have originated the wise maxims and prudent and salutary observations of the sages of antiquity, which, if more carefully attended to, would make succeeding generations much more cautious and circumspect in their conduct than we, in fact, find to be the case. But such is the unhappy frailty of the human mind, that we are in general less attentive to the calls of reason and prudence than the suggestions of passion, prejudice, and vicious habits. We are apt suddenly to gratify our present inclinations at the expense of our future happiness, and incur the same misfortunes which we have seen a thousand others do by a similar behaviour before.

If we look back upon the conduct of the Colonies for some years past, we may find many critical junctures where a prudent silence, or dutiful and rational remonstrance, would have been attended with the most salutary consequences, and put an end to that dispute which has since been so unhappily protracted. With what extreme caution, then, should we now proceed in our opposition, when our all depends upon adopting a proper mode of behaviour. We ought to be thoroughly convinced that we have truth, justice, reason, and equity for our foundation. How far these are the ground of the complaints of the Congress, I am endeavouring to discover to you, and beg your attention to that article of grievance which was omitted in my last, from motives of convenience, and is as follows: "Assemblies have been frequently and injuriously dissolved, and Commerce burdened with many useless and oppressive restrictions."

In this article we have a striking instance of the consolidated modesty, as well as wisdom of the Congress. As to the first part, relative to the dissolution of Assemblies, they might have recollected, that in some instances His Majesty, whose undoubted prerogative it is, by express instructions, had directed his Governors to dissolve the Assemblies, (unless they would recede from some rash, imprudent, and unjustifiable measures which they had adopted,) before they had so modestly told him, by styling them injurious, that he was not a judge of the propriety or justice of the steps which he himself had directed. In other instances, the Governors, of themselves, have dissolved Assemblies, when their proceedings have been such as required it. Here it is curious to observe the inimitable consistency and uniformity of the conduct of some members of the Congress, who, for some years past, as members of the General Assembly, have been endeavouring to prove that the Governor has the "sole power to prorogue, adjourn, and dissolve the General Assembly," when and where he thinks fit; and now, at the Congress, complain of it as injurious that he has exercised this right, in instances where he himself thought His Majesty's service required it. Such conduct can be accounted for on no other principle than a disposition in the Congress to raise fears and create jealousies in the people of a design to make them slaves, when, at the same time, they themselves are convinced that they are the mere suggestions of their own wicked arts and false insinuations. "And Commerce burdened with many useless and oppressive restrictions." This is still more extraordinary. In all the disputes that have hitherto subsisted, the right of Great Britain to regulate the Trade of the Colonies was never till now contested; and the necessity and justice of this is apparent, when we consider the vast expense Great Britain is at in protecting the trade; and that the Colonies might otherwise carry on a commerce destructive to her interest, which she has an undoubted right to prevent, upon every principle of justice and policy: by her strength, by her assistance, it is that we now enjoy this extensive Country, and have arrived to so great a pitch of opulence and importance. How reasonable is it, then, that we should be restrained from attempting any thing detrimental to her Trade and Commerce? These, however, have been regulated with the strictest regard and attention to the interests of the Colonies.

The inhabitants of Great Britain are not suffered to raise any tobacco, and are obliged to pay large duties upon what is imported, merely to benefit some of the Colonies, whose sole subsistence depends upon it. They are restrained from buying indigo, which they might get much cheaper at other markets, merely to encourage the American manufacture of that article. And though we have been restrained from vending a number of the articles of our produce to any but Great Britain, yet this has been amply compensated by the bounties that have been paid us upon their importation into that Kingdom. Large bounties have been paid upon our timber, pitch, tar, rosin, turpentine, hemp, indigo, pot and pearl ashes, &c.; the Acts granting some of which have a preamble which breathes the most benevolent regard to the interest and happiness of the Colonies; it is thus expressed: "Whereas, Her Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America were at first settled, and are still maintained and protected at a great expense of the treasure of this Kingdom, with a design to render them as useful as may be to England, and the labour and industry of the people there, profitable to themselves; and to enable them to make due and sufficient returns in the course of their trade," &c. Certainly nothing appears useless and oppressive in these instances; and the more we examine it, the more groundless this complaint appears. It is couched in general terms, to prevent the knowledge of the truth. It was supposed the veracity of the Congress would be implicitly relied on, and that few would take the trouble of inquiring for themselves. But I beseech you, my dear friends, exercise that reason, those powers of judging which God has given you. The Congress has been guilty of gross prevarication and false assertions, which I am endeavouring to convince you of; and however severe these charges may seem, I shall think the truth of my assertions a sufficient apology for every thing I advance.

The next complaint which has not yet been considered, is this: "Both Houses of Parliament have resolved that the Colonists may be tried in England for offences alleged to have been committed in America, by virtue of a Statute passed in the thirty-fifth year of Henry the Eighth, and in consequence thereof attempts have been made to enforce the Statute." The statute here referred to, either extended to America, or it did not; if it did extend here, how comes it to pass that we have never complained of it before? How could our forefathers, from the first settlement of the Country, tamely submit to such a galling yoke, and insensibly remain in such a state of slavery? Unhappy mortals! thus to continue for a hundred and fifty years in actual submission to tyranny and arbitrary power, and never once be aware of their danger; never perceive that their liberties were infringed; never feel so enormous a grievance. Surely our veneration for their characters, as the sons of freedom, must be greatly lessened, when we reflect upon this dastardly instance of their supine negligence and unmanly silence. Is it possible they could enjoy the conveniences, comforts, and luxuries of life, with which in later times they have been surrounded, and not be tormented with the goading reflection of their submission to this infamous statute of Henry the Eighth, that tyrant of tyrants, and scourge to his subjects? Unfeeling wretches! But, thank Heaven, we, their wiser offspring, have found it out, and are determined no longer to acquiesce in our submission; but through fear of misfortunes yet unfelt, will sacrifice our peace, our happiness, and every social blessing, and involve ourselves in the most distressing calamities, rather than by our silence countenance the bare existence of such an authority, though we never have, and never expect to experience its exertion. Who would not, for the uncertainty of future oppression, relinquish the certain enjoyment of present happiness and peace? Who would not, for the pleasure of opposing lawful authority, submit to the usurpation of lawless Congresses and Committee-men? One drop of American blood, if it flows in the veins of any one to whom these questions are proposed, must at once dictate the answer.

But to be serious.—If this Act did extend to America, could the resolutions of the two Houses of Parliament add to its baneful influence? Could that which has ever been a law, be rendered more so, by repeated declaration of but two branches of the Legislature? Certainly not. But if it did not extend here, is not the declaration of the Lords and Commons that it did, equivalent to making a new statute; and can they alone do this, without the assent of the third branch of the Legislature? Can, therefore, such resolves be considered in any other light, than a declaration of the general sense of the Nation? Can they be supposed to add any authority to the statute referred to, which it had not before? Is not the exposition of Acts of Parliament, the proper department of the Executive Courts of Justice? Can, therefore, any thing short of a new act of Parliament, which has the sanction of the three branches of the Legislature, extend a former Act beyond the meaning and construction it may lawfully bear? Will not the Judges of the Courts of Law expound it, as it stands by itself, abstracted from any resolves of separate branches of the Legislature? Have they not done this? Was it not first proposed to the Judges of England for their opinion, which was afterwards confirmed in terrorem merely, by the resolves of the two Houses of Parliament? And if this is the grievance, I admit it to be true that the Judges of England have determined that it does extend here; and it is equally true that they are the proper judges of this matter, and should, doubtless, have decided it upon the principles of Law and the Constitution; and however disagreeable the decision may be to the Congress, it certainly is not a matter of grievance, as hereby they have not made any new law, but explained one of a date more ancient than the settlement of this Country, and under the authority of which we have hitherto lived quiet and peaceable lives, without suffering any inconvenience or oppression. And here I cannot but take notice of the vague, indeterminate expression made use of, "that the Colonists may be tried in England for offences alleged to have been committed in America." As I have before observed, this Petition, so called, could be intended only for the publick newspapers here, and therefore the design was chiefly to alarm the fears of the populace. Accordingly they are left in this instance to conjecture whatever their heated imaginations may suggest, and to suppose that the most trivial of offences are here guarded against; whereas, if they were informed that it was high treason, the highest crime known in the law, and indeed the most flagitious in its nature and consequences, that can be committed in any State, the importance and necessity of the case would apologize for the extraordinary remedy provided, and silence every objection. But the Congress go on confidently to assert, that "in consequence thereof, attempts have been made to enforce that statute." What is intended by this, I am utterly at a loss to conceive. I neither know nor have ever heard of any instance of this kind, though I have been pretty industrious in my inquiries; and I believe I may justly and truly aver, that no such attempt has ever been made—sure I am, that there has been none in this Province; and I will candidly confess my error, and acknowledge my obligations to any one, who can inform me of an instance in any other. Why, then, we should be alarmed with an idea of danger, where there is none; why we should be told of attempts which have never been made, of grievances never felt, and of designs to injure us never conceived, is not easily accounted for upon the principles of justice, truth, equity, or a regard for the interest and happiness of the Colonies, or the just and legal authority of the Parent State.

I will now consider the next complaint, which is, "A Statute was passed in the twelfth year of your Majesty's reign, directing that persons charged with committing any offence therein described, in any place out of the Realm, may be indicted and tried for the same in any Shire or County within the Realm, whereby inhabitants of these Colonies may, in sundry cases, by that Statute made capital, be deprived of a trial by their peers of the vicinage." After premising that this statute is intended principally to prevent setting fire to His Majesty's Dock-Yards, Ships, and Naval Stores, I would beg leave to observe, that by Commerce and Trade alone Great Britain has arrived to such a pitch of opulence and splendour, as has scarce been equalled, never surpassed, by any Nation on the globe. By the undisputed sovereignty of the Sea, which she has ever maintained, she has been able to hold the first rank, and preserve the balance of power among all the Kingdoms, States, and Empires in the world. Should her naval power be considerably lessened or destroyed, it would be productive of the most ruinous consequences, and must finally terminate in the destruction of the British Nation. The principal States in Europe envy, and are striving to out-rival her in this boasted superiority; and should they ever be able to effect this point, Britain would soon become a tributary State to some potent victor. It is by her powerful fleet, that this renowned Island, comparatively small, has arisen to be the first Kingdom on earth for wealth and power; inexhaustible sources of opulence and riches have been discovered and improved by her commercial intercourse with the different Nations and Countries in the world; and this Trade is continued, secured, and protected merely by her much-envied but hitherto unrivalled Navy. Of how much importance it is, then, that the most effectual precautions should be used to support this valuable, useful, and necessary pillar of her greatness! To injure or impair this, is to strike at the very foundation of the Kingdom and vitals of the State. To attempt to destroy this bulwark of her power, would indicate an inclination to reduce Great Britain to a state of poverty and slavery. Who, then, can complain that the laws made to punish so heinous an offence should be severe, and attended with penalties proportionate to the greatness of the crime? Who would not be willing to submit to a provision in this instance, which in most others might be reasonably complained of? Sensible of the necessity and justice of it, the inhabitants of the other parts of the Dominions, who are equally affected by it with us, willingly and cheerfully acquiesce in their submission to this statute; and why we alone should complain, when every part of the Dominion is in the same predicament, is a little unaccountable. By this statute it is enacted, that whoever shall offend against it out of the Realm, may be indicted and tried in any County within the Realm that His Majesty shall appoint. Thus our fellow-subjects in Ireland, the West-Indies, and wherever else dispersed, are equally comprehended in this Act; so that we have no reason to suppose, as is suggested by the Congress, that it was passed in consequence of a plan adopted by the Ministry to enslave the Colonies. But the intention is best collected, from the Act itself, which informs us that it was made because the safety of the Dock-Yards, Ships, &c., is of great importance to the welfare and security of the Kingdom; and he who can basely attempt to infringe these, amply deserves to be tried under the disadvantages, if they can be called such, prescribed by this Act.

PHILEIRENE.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS-BAY.

NO. VIII.

Boston, April 6, 1775.

My Friends and Fellow-Countrymen:

We are now verging towards a close of our lucubrations upon the right of Parliament. I blush upon asking your further attention to this matter, having already trespassed long on your patience. The importance of the subject, and a show of argument in the two papers succeeding the one considered in our last, must be my apology. Having examined this question to its foundation, in a course of papers that have been laid before the publick; having compared it with every principle of law, of justice, and of social connexions, which would not disgrace the understanding of a Hottentot; having traced its decision in our favour, up to a connexion with our most important duty, and the precepts of Heaven; it remains only that we obviate the residue of our writer's half-made arguments upon this subject, by showing their inconclusiveness or remoteness from the point. Such matters as fall within the principles and rea-sonings established and applied on former occasions, we may pass by, as having been fairly and fully answered. It is unnecessary in this stage of the controversy to offer any thing in affirmance of our claim, however the observations and assertions of our antagonist may provoke us to it; for this, I must refer you to our past Numbers. Many other things might be added, so fertile and clear is the subject, the which, if they should all be written, I suppose the world itself would not contain the books that would be written.

The Paper of January 16th, begins with the most flagrant misrepresentation of facts, from which we may form some shrewd conjectures of its progress and end. "Had a person, some fifteen years ago, undertaken to prove that the Colonies were annexed to the Realm, were a part of the British Empire or Dominion, and as such subject to the authority of the British Parliament, he would have acted as ridiculous a part as to have undertaken to prove a self-evident proposition. Had any person denied it, he would have been called a fool or a madman." If this be true, James the First, Charles the First, and Charles the Second were mad Kings, as we have shown from good authority; our famed progenitors madmen; our Charters the offspring of madness; the English Laws and the British Constitution the essence of madness; and this ridiculous madness has been handed down, by some mysterious fatality, from generation to generation to the present day, excepting, in a few instances, where persons basking in the sunshine of Court favours, have had their brains so heated and volatilized by the piercing rays of honour and profit, as to enable them to evaporate the general contagion. Our sane disputant may stand high in this catalogue. By what specifics such cures are effected is no longer matter of curious speculation. This brings to my mind the story of a prodigal froward child, who, madly attempting to hang himself in his father's presence, was cured of his lunacy by a sum of money, which disease would never return but with an empty purse.

At this wise period individuals and bodies of men deny it, notwithstanding in doing it they subvert the fundamentals of Government, deprive us of British liberties, and build up absolute monarchy in the Colonies. We proved in our last that the admission of this authority is, in every point of view, absolutely inconsistent with the fundamentals of Government, British rights, English liberties, or the security of life, liberty, and property, which we are entitled to as men. And thus it erects an absolute Government in the Colonies as repugnant to every idea of freedom as life and death, blessing and cursing, are opposite to each other.

"Our Charters," says our hypothetical reasoner, "suppose regal authority in the grantor; if that authority be derived from the British Crown, it presupposes this Territory to have been a part of the British Dominions, and as such subject to the imperial Sovereign." If he means any thing to the purpose by these (perhaps designedly) inaccurate expressions and obscure reasoning, it must be this, viz: Our Charters suppose the right and property of the Colonies, or the American Territory, to be in the King, as grantor; and if this right and property be derived to him from the English Crown, or British, if he pleases, it presupposes the Colonies to have been a part of the British Dominions. To take him upon his own argument: Our Charters suppose nothing in the grantor, but what he has absolutely granted away, (excepting the reservations to himself,) which the Charters suppose he had good right to do. And his deriving this right or property from the English Crown, presupposes nothing to have belonged to the English Dominions, and subject to the imperial Sovereign, but what, being taken away and vested in the King, was conveyed over to the grantees, which proves, even upon his own principles, that we are not now a part of the British State, nor subject to its supreme authority. This is argumentum ad hominem.

Let us examine it upon its true principles. The Charters, as we have elsewhere observed, from their subject matter and the reality of things, can only operate as the evidence of a compact between an English King and the American subjects; their running in the style of a grant is mere matter of form, and not of substance. Nor do they suppose the Territory granted to be the right and property of the King as grantor, any more than where Magna Charta gives and grants to the people of England their rights, sua jura, and their liberties, libertatis suas, all which the people had a right to, and possessed previous to and independent of this Charter, proves that these rights and liberties were mere emanations from the royal grantor, or new blessings given to the subject as matters of bounty and grace, and not, rather, the royal assurance that those rights which adhered to them as men, and their Constitution confirmed to them as Englishmen, should not be invaded. Admitting that our Charters did suppose the right and property of the Colonies in the grantor, suppositions are only admissible where facts cannot be ascertained; they are always controlled and superseded by evidence. Massachusettsensis knows, Great Britain knows, common sense teaches, history confirms, and we have already proved, that the grantor had no right, title, or possession here in America, excepting what was derived from a visit made to these shores by some British mariners, when they were the possessed and rightful property of twenty other Nations; or what is still more ridiculous, if possible, from a Popish pretended right in Christians to take away the property, the dwellings, the liberties, and the lives of heathens. So that all this famous train of reasoning, going upon a false, mistaken, and refuted supposition of an antecedent right in the King, dwindles into sound and shadow; for the foundation being removed, the superstructure, however artificial and superb, must tumble to the ground. It is peculiarly characteristic of our embarrassed writer, to beg the question. I wish for once he would come to the point. Has he proved, excepting by arguments that evince directly the contrary, that before the reception of our Charters the Colonies were a part of the British Empire, or that these Charters united them to the British Realm? Does not his confused Babel fabrick, which he has been so long building, stand entirely on this basis? I call upon him to prop it up, if he has it in his power, or frankly confess the imposition. Let him name the time when, point out the manner how, or the means by which the Colonies were united to the Realm of England; or let him be for ever silent concerning a right in Parliament to give law in all cases to more than three millions of unrepresented and misrepresented Americans. I dare say this is a task that he, nor any other man in his senses, will never seriously attempt. Every history, every record, every scrap of paper to be found upon the subject, evinces the contrary. It may not be amiss to recite a few passages from a historian of great fame and undoubted credit. "When the Europeans first visited this Country, they found it inhabited by twenty different Nations, or Tribes, independent of each other, and commanded by their respective chiefs. Of these Nations the most powerful was the Massachusetts, situate on or near the harbour of Boston. King James the First, by letters patent, dated April 10, 1606, erected two Companies, granting to them all the Northeast Coast of America, which was then called Virginia. One of the Companies was called Plymouth Company, who, for some time, traded only with the natives of North Virginia, or now New-England, for furs, and fished upon their Coast." Did this grant to the Company suppose this Territory to be in the grantor, and presuppose it a part of the British Empire? Just as much as if a Provincial Governour should erect Companies, and grant them large tracts of the new discovered world in the South Seas belonging to the Otaheitis, would suppose a right in the Governour to the land of the Natives, and presuppose it a part of the Province he governed; a species of reasoning that the veriest tyro which ever passed the hands of a common pedagogue might have confuted.

About the year 1619 the Dissenters in England, to avoid religious persecution, having purchased the Plymouth Patent of the Company, (to prevent pretensions for molestation,) and obtaining another from King James of all New-England, a hundred and fifty men embarked on board of a Ship which arrived at Cape Cod in New-England, from Plymouth, the 6th of September, 1620, where they built a Town and called it by the name of New-Plymouth, and elected John Carver their first Governour. The Indians, continues the same historian, were at this time too much engaged in wars among themselves to give these strangers any disturbance; and Massassoit, Prince of the Massa- chusett Nation, learning what a powerful people the English were, made Governour Carver a visit the following spring, and entered into an alliance offensive and defensive with the English. This Prince also consented to acknowledge the King of England his Sovereign, and made cession of part of his Country to the new Planters. Several other Sachems did the same, following his example, and desired the protection of the English against their enemies, professing themselves subjects to King James. Did the cession of this land to the English unite it to the British Empire? Did the Mother State enlarge and contract herself in proportion as our ancestors increased or diminished their possessions in America? Did the natives subject themselves and their lands to the operation of any law that might pass the British Parliament, by acknowledging themselves the subjects of King James? Or would a Charter from His Britannick Majesty, granting them what was their own before, have settled the matter? What nonsensical conclusions, what complicated absurdities, will toryistical reasonings run us into.

In 1664 King Charles II. granted New-York, the Jerseys, and Pennsylvania to his brother, the Duke of York; the Duke granted over Pennsylvania to Sir William Penn, who received an additional grant from the same King in 1680. Penn, says the historian, notwithstanding the grants made him by the Crown and the Duke of York, did not esteem himself the real proprietor of the lands until he had given the Indians a valuable consideration for their Country. He assembled, therefore, their Sachems or Princes, and purchased countries of a very large extent of them at a moderate price, which he paid to the entire satisfaction of the natives. This flourishing Colony, whenever it wants to extend its settlements, it purchases new lands of the Sachems, and not from the Crown of England. What suppositions and presuppositions would our surreptitious land grantors raise from the above history? Does it prove the right in the Crown? Does it establish the desiderata of the Tories?

"If that authority was vested in the person of the King in a different capacity, then the British Constitution and Laws are out of the question, and the King must be absolute as to us, as his prerogatives have never been limited." To which we answer, that our Charter, and that alone, brings the English Constitution and Laws into view, and makes them necessary questions, let the King's authority and capacity be as they may. It refers us to those as to a standard (as it might as well have done to any other Constitution and code of laws) to reduce to a certainty the rights and privileges we were entitled to by our Charter; as also to point out and circumscribe the prerogatives of the Crown. So that these prerogatives are as much limited and confined in the Colonies as they are in England.

"Charter Governments must severally revert to absolute monarchy, as their Charters may happen to be forfeited by the grantees not fulfilling the conditions of them." This goes entirely upon the supposition that the King was the original owner and proprietor of the premises. This is begging the question; for we have shown, over and over, that it is a baseless hypothesis, framed by court-undertakers to support their darling plan; thus obscuring truth, they attempt to clothe the minds of their readers with darkness, and feed them with error. It is not only void of proof, but, what is worse, in direct opposition to irrefragable arguments, and the stubborn evidence of facts. If the conditions on which the Charter was made are broken by the one party or the other, (the grantees or the grantor,) the only possible conclusion from thence is, that the compact is dissolved, and both set at large.

Our heroick writer, imagining that he had not quite frightened away our senses, or reasoned us out of our rights and liberties, attempts to smile away both. "It is curious, indeed," says he, with an air of ridicule, "to trace the denial and oppugnation to the supreme authority of the State. When the Stamp Act was made, the authority of Parliament to impose internal taxes was denied, but their right to impose external ones, or, in other words, to lay duties upon Goods and Merchandise was admitted. When the Act was made imposing duties on Tea, &c., a new distinction was set up, that the Parliament had a right to lay duties upon Merchandise for the purpose of regulating Trade, but not for the purpose of raising a Revenue. That is, the Parliament had good right and lawful authority to lay the former duty of a shilling on the pound, but had none to lay the present duty of three pence." If our writer seriously believes this to be a fair representation of the matter, he is certainly to be pitied, instead of being reasoned with. The distinction set up is important, it is substantial, it is this, that the British Parliament may have good right and lawful authority to make a law to operate in England within the jurisdiction of Parliament, where the people are represented, for to lay a duty of one shilling, or nineteen shillings, if you please, on the pound, for the purpose of raising a revenue; and yet have no authority or right to make a law to operate within the Colonies beyond the jurisdiction of Parliament, where the people are not represented, for to lay a duty of three pence, or even the infinitissimum of a farthing, for the same purpose. Admitting that some of the Whigs set up different though consistent distinctions at different times, or rather, expressed the same distinction by different words, does it affect the merits of the controversy? Does it not rather prove that the Stamp Act, which ushered in the present ruinous system of politics, was such a novelty in Colony administration, and the principle it dragged after it such a monster in an English Constitution, as to render a description of it difficult by terms and distinctions?

Had we time for amusement, and to trace the Tories in the route they have taken, we could give such a curious history of their distinctions, contradictions, explanations, and declarations, in nurturing of this despicable brat of ministerial influence, if not in the unnatural part they acted as midwives, to give it birth, as would grace the Memoirs of Don Quixotte, or the most fantastick Knight-errant that ever lived. When the Tea Act, with others, passed, no American was found hardy enough openly to assert a right in Parliament to tax the unrepresented inhabitants of the Colonies; this was reserved as an exploit for our undaunted writer. At that time the Tories, or rather the friends to Government, as they call themselves, to save appearance, conjured up from their own noddles the ideas of a virtual representation; we heard much about the Americans being virtually represented in the British Parliament. This for awhile was trumpeted forth by every creature, or spawn of a creature, in the torystical choir. They hugged the unmeaning invention until, by its becoming familiar, it grew contemptible; at last with shame they gave it up. However, it was succeeded by another distinction from the same fountain (a Tory's fertile brain) equally ridiculous. The duty upon Tea was no tax. It was for the purpose of regulating trade. Nothing was a tax that could possibly be eluded, as this might by not consuming the dutied article. This was not long matter of dispute. The Ministry had christened their own bantling, they called it a tax; its sponsors, or God-fathers in America, rather than quarrel with their best friends, consented, at length, to call it by its proper name. The curtain is still kept drawn; and the farce continues. It is next admitted to be a tax, and that Parliament had no right to impose it. But yet it was our duty to submit to it cheerfully, acknowledge the right of laying it, and in that way get it removed. Having worried through all this series of contradictions, with much more equally curious, to no purpose; being chagrined with disappointment, and provoked at their own folly and stupidity, their last resort is to speak out, and declare us slaves. This Massachusettensis was most heroically resolved upon. He accordingly asserts that Parliament has a right to tax us; a right to make laws binding upon us in all cases whatsoever; and that opposition to such laws would be treason and rebellion. Such has been the vile employment, the sordid drudgery of those engaged in support of Court measures, though no person has reason to grudge them their places and pensions, either in enjoyment or expectancy, as compensations for their service. Certainly those inferior animals that are scattered up and down through the Country, those jackals, which, like so many satellites, have been revolving round some military Officer or new made Justice, in expectation of titles, of feathers, are much to be pitied. Poor things! could their leaders once get seated securely in the chair of greatness and absolute power, this insignificant tribe of fawners, seekers, and expectants, would be forever dismissed from their service; and their greatest misfortune, perhaps, would be, that they were once acquainted. To such, it is the advice of a friend immediately to throw off the infatuation, put on the man, and show the world they are not to be duped.

"It is of the last importance," says Massachusettensis, "to settle this point, that is, the right of Parliament; it will (continues he) serve as a true test, certain criterion, and invariable standard, to distinguish the friends from the enemies of our Country, patriotism from sedition, loyalty from rebellion." I heartily subscribe to the justice of this observation, but commiserate the unhappy situation of its author, if the friends and enemies of our Country should be distinguished by this standard of his own erecting, which, to do him justice, is the standard of truth. Weighed in such an equitable and discriminating balance, we should find all those fair pages of calumny which our author has published to the world respecting the conduct of the Whigs, converted into the sweetest encomiums; and Massachusettensis would be but another name for treason; the friends to Government, order, and the laws, in the modern prostituted application of the words, and the advocates for injustice, oppression, tyranny, and rebellion, would become synonymous terms.

After making some observations, which are nothing to the purpose, unless the Colonies are annexed to the Realm, which is not the case, nor ever will be; and if they were, it would not follow, if Guernsey and Jersey are enslaved, that the Americans must be so too; a clause from our first Charter, too long to be repeated, respecting incorporation, is recited by our author, upon which he gravely asks this simple question, "Whether it looks like a distinct or independent State?" We may fully answer him by another question equally simple, viz: Is there a single word in it that looks like uniting us to the British Empire, or subjecting us to the authority of Parliament? If it has not this look, it does not look to the point; for it is demonstration, as there was a time when the Colonies were disunited from the Realm and the supreme authority of the Parent State, that they are so now, unless there is evidence of a subsequent connexion. It is to be wished that those who keep eternally harping upon our being annexed to the British Realm, would point out the process that united us. There is none in nature. I challenge them to produce any.

The two next adduced paragraphs from our first Charter, we have examined in our third and fourth numbers, and have shown the first exactly to correspond with the rights we contend for, and the latter to be absolutely inconsistent with, and repugnant to, every principle and idea of our being a part of the British Empire, and subject to its Sovereign power. It is therefore unnecessary to take them up in this place.

The last-recited clause from this Charter we have also considered; the substance of which is, that all and every of the subjects of the King of England, his heirs and successors, who should go to and inhabit in the Massachusetts Colony, and all their children born in the said Colony, or on the Seas, should have and enjoy all the liberties and immunities of free and natural born subjects within any of the Dominions of the King, his heirs and successors, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as if they were, and every of them, born within the Realm.

"It is upon this clause, or a similar one in the Charter of William and Mary, that our patriots have built up the stupendous fabrick of American independence." Be it so: the foundation, were there no other, would sustain the building; it is impossible to undermine it or explain it away.

"I have already," says our writer, "shewn that the supposition of our being exempted from the authority of Parliament, is pregnant with the grossest absurdities." No mortal, excepting himself, has ever been able to see those absurdities. We have seen what such empty pretensions amounted to in a past paper, and to whom the absurdities were imputable. "Let us now," says he, "consider this clause in connexion with other parts of the Charter." Here we are led to expect some important reasoning; however, a recital of his argument is its best confutation. "If," says he, "we suppose this clause to exempt us from the authority of Parliament, we must throw away all the rest of the Charter, for every other part indicates the contrary, as plain as words can do." This is considering the clause in connexion with other parts. There is no end in contradicting the mere assertions of one who lets his pen run so freely. Read the Charter, and see if any part indicates the contrary, unless profound silence upon the subject is taken for such an indication.

"What is still worse, this clause becomes felo de se, and destroys itself; for if we are not annexed to the Realm we are aliens, and no Charter, grant, or other act of the Crown can naturalize us, or entitle us to the liberties and immunities of Englishmen." This is begging the question; it goes upon the old Jacobitish supposition deteriorated. It supposes that within the Realm the subject holds all his rights and liberties of the King, as the original possessor; and that persons out of the Realm, in a state of nature, possess no rights and liberties as men. In short, it supposes Great Britain to be the grand and only store-house of freedom, the dispenser of civil blessings, and that no part of the wide world can be entitled to any liberties or immunities, but what she, of her special grace and mere bounty, is pleased to grant them; whereas the truth is, we were entitled to all the rights of Englishmen, independent of any Charters or Realms under Heaven; and surely we are not the less so for having them confirmed by compact.

We shall waive what might be offered respecting aliens' allegiance to the King, and the relation that Wales, Jersey, Guernsey, and Ireland, stand in to the Realm of England, as they do not affect the solution of our present question.

More distortions, windings, and twistings, were never crowded into so small a compass as in the paragraph we are now considering. The following is diverting enough: "If a person born in England removes to Ireland, Jersey, or Guernsey, and settles there, he is then no longer represented in the British Parliament, but he and his posterity are, and will ever be, subject to its authority. So that the inhabitants of the American Colonies do, in fact, enjoy all the liberties and immunities of natural born subjects. We are entitled to no greater privileges than those who are born within the Realm; and they can enjoy no other than we do when they reside out of it. Thus it is evident that this clause amounts to no more than the Royal assurance that we are a part of the British Empire, and natural born subjects, and as such bound to obey the supreme power of the State." Such a concatenation of ideas were never jumbled up together before. The clause grants to all persons who were born within the Realm, and should come and inhabit in this Province from time to time, as well as to all their children born on the seas, or in this Colony, all the liberties and immunities of free natural born subjects within any of the King's Dominions, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, as if they were born within the Realm of England. The language of this clause, then, according to our mysterious interpreter, to all those who come from England here, would be this, viz: You who are born within the Realm of England, and shall go and inhabit in the Massachusetts Colony, shall have and enjoy all the liberties and immunities that those have and enjoy who are born within the Realm of England, and shall go and inhabit in America. As great a solecism as ever entered the head of man. If the accidental liberties that those persons enjoy who are only born within the Realm, and remove to foreign parts, are to measure and point out ours, how shall we ever know them? Is Ireland, Guernsey, the East and West-Indies, or Turkey, to decide the question and define the rights of all America? for those born in England have gone to, and enjoy different liberties in all these places; and, according to our logician, if the Americans enjoy as much liberty as those who were born in England enjoy in any of those Dominions, even if it be in Turkey, we are entitled to no more.

This clause is so far from being the Royal assurance that we are a part of the British Empire, and as such subject to its supreme authority, that it is directly the contrary. Its meaning undeniably is, notwithstanding the violence offered it by the Tories, who are pierced to their very vitals by its force, that we should enjoy all the privileges and immunities that the inhabitants of Great Britain are entitled to. What some of these were, we saw in our last number. It can have no other meaning but this, which will support that stupendous fabrick of American independence which we have possessed and practised upon for a century and a half, and which our patriots are struggling to preserve against the storms, the sackings and sappings of the Tories.

Whoever reads the Charter, continues he, will meet with irresistible evidence that our being within the jurisdiction of Parliament were the very tenures by which they held their estates. It is astonishing that any man will give himself such liberties. Whoever reads the Charter with an expectation of finding evidence of this, or any thing of the kind, will most certainly find himself egregiously disappointed. There is nothing from beginning to end that looks any more like it than what may be found in the Assembly's Catechism, or the Pilgrim's Progress.

FROM THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

ALEXANDER ELMSLY, AGENT OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY OF NORTH-CAROLINA, TO SAMUEL JOHNSTON.

London, April 7, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Yours by Captain Scott came to hand in due season, as did the money for Mr. Barker, which is at his credit. Your bill £100, order Mr. Ferrear, was this day paid.

Your politics are past my expectations, and out of my reach. I thought incorporating you would not only have remedied the disorder, but have given additional vigour to the Constitution; but, excepting our friend Mr. Barker, nobody either here or there is of the same opinion; therefore, I shall suppose, for the present, that he and I are mistaken, and wait with resignation the event of the measures adopted on both sides of the water.

On our side they are as follows:—

1^{mo}. The House of Commons have voted by resolve, that if you will tax yourselves for the purpose of supporting your own establishments, and also contribute a certain sum for the general safety, the amount of which to be satisfactory to the King and Parliament, and to be at their disposal, then the Parliament will desist from laying any further taxes for the present. This, they say, is holding out to you the olive branch; I say it is a dirty, disgracing, degrading expedient, compared to mine; but it is so much akin to a similar one proposed in the House of Lords by Lord Chatham, and approved of by Franklin and the other Americans here, that I must suppose myself again mistaken.

2^{do}. A bill has received the Royal assent for preventing the four New-England Colonies from fishing, after the 25th of June next; and another has been read three times in the House of Commons, for restraining the trade of all the associated Colonies to Great Britain and the British West-Indies; out of this restraint, however, New-York and North-Carolina are excepted; the former because their Assembly did not recognise the new laws, the latter for reasons not generally known; they are, however, one or all of the following: 1st. Mr. Barker and myself, instead of the Petition you sent us, (which contained, besides strange inaccuracies, indirect reflections on the Parliament, or the Ministry at least,) drew up a Memorial in more decent terms, which we left a rough draught of with Mr. Pownall, the Secretary, for his inspection, previous to its being presented to the Board. This was about the 10th of February; in two or three days we called to know his sentiments on it; he told us he had perused it, approved of it, and pressed us much and repeatedly to have it lodged as soon as possible, which was done the next day. Two or three days after, Lord North moved for the Restraining Bill in the House of Commons, and North-Carolina was and still is left out. The next reason is, we have as yet received no account of your Assembly, or rather the Members of it, having ratified the new laws, nor have you been charged with any excesses in the execution of them. The last, and perhaps the best reason is, Governour Tryon (who returns to New-York immediately) is much your friend, and I doubt not has exerted himself in your behalf accordingly. Whether you will thank us for this distinction, or not; whether it will not be considered as opprobrious instead of honourable; whether Mr. Barker and myself will be censured or not, as having been, in all probability, instrumental in bringing it about, I do not pretend to say. But in our defence, or rather in mine, for it was with much reluctance he consented to suppress the Petition, you will take notice, that when your Memorial was presented, we had no idea that such restraining bill was intended; on the other hand, should this exemption be received favourably, give us no credit for it; for, had it not been for a tenderness we had for the reputation of your Assembly, as having been long members of it, your Petition, exceptionable as it is, should have been presented. I do not know whether you ever perused it, but my objections to it were, first, that a memorial from us was as good as it; and next, that you generally address the King as the people of New-England do each other, in the third person; for instance, you say, in more places than one, "Your Majesty, in his great goodness, in his great wisdom," &c., instead of "your goodness," &c.; this might have passed from a poor ignorant criminal, begging his life, but surely better things would have been expected from your Assembly. Besides this objection, there was another: You say you have been taught to expect redress from the Throne alone, i. e. you expect none from the Ministry or the Parliament. How far you are well grounded, I do not know; but as I well know that none of these petitions ever reach the Throne but through the hands of the Ministry, to whom they are left as an ordinary piece of business, I thought, and I still think, it would have been preposterous to have presented a petition, which, amongst other things, sets forth that the petitioner, from past experience, did not doubt of having his petition rejected. This objection, however, alone, would not have had much weight, at least not enough to have prevented our presenting the Petition; but on account of both together, it was agreed to suppress it, and to substitute a Memorial in its room, and keep the whole a secret; and I am not sure whether Mr. Barker would not be dissatisfied if he knew that this matter had been communicated even to you; therefore pray say nothing about it. With respect to the success of your Memorial, we can at present form no judgment of it, but are told that by next packet the matter will be settled; and if no bad news arrives from Carolina in the mean time, we hope it will be in part settled to your satisfaction.

You ask Mr. Barker to let you know who it was that first moved, here, against your Court laws. Neither he nor I know certainly; but when old Mr. McCulloh, as your agent, first received an account of your Court Bill miscarrying, on account of an instruction to your Governour against attachments, he hinted that Lord Hillsborough, then Secretary of State for America, and Lord Hertford, then and now Lord Chamberlain, and both Members of the Privy Council, and North-of-Ireland men, and friends and neighbours of your Dobbi's, might probably, at their solicitation, have been the means of sending out the instruction. You know Nash had an attachment depending against their estate; this is only conjecture, but I think it probable; because, had the measure originated amongst the merchants, we certainly should have heard of it long ago; as you say, however, it is not of much consequence now, as the new laws have taken place, whether the old ones are restored or not.

Old Franklin is gone to Philadelphia, some people say to second Lord North's plan of your taxing yourselves; but I know nothing of the matter.

There is an account received that the Transports are sailed from Cork, and next week, the Generals Howe, Burgoyne, and Clinton, follow them from hence in a Man-of-War; some of these troops are destined for New-York, and two companies, with a sloop, are to be sent to Georgia.

Should your Assemblies refuse to adopt Lord North's plan, and our Parliament persevere, you will have another new set of laws soon established. They say your seaports are to be turned into garrison Towns, and the people of the Country left at liberty to form any establishment they think proper. Should this regulation take place, I hope you will have no occasion to turn soldier. Your Governour, I suppose, will take up his residence amongst the musketoes at Breacok, and you will be a Congress or Committee-man, instead of a military man. I like neither character, but hope you will never have occasion to take upon you the latter especially.

Mrs. Elmsly joins me in compliments and best wishes to you and yours.

I am, dear sir, your affectionate friend and humble servant,

ALEXANDER ELMSLY.

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee for Chesterfield County, held on the 7th of April, 1775, the proceedings of the Convention were read and unanimously approved of.

Resolved, That we will, as soon as possible, promote and further the establishment of Manufactories for the making of Linen, Cotton, and Woollen Cloth; and that we will give encouragement to such persons as shall excel in the preparation of materials necessary for carrying on such manufactories; and also that subscriptions be opened in this County by the several members of this Committee, for raising a fund to support such Manufactories as may be determined on in consequence of the foregoing Resolution.

Mr. John Brown, of Norfolk, having, by his behaviour, incurred the censure of the people of this Colony;

Resolved, That we will not hereafter transact any business, or have any connexion with the said John Brown.

Captain Sampson, of the Ship Elizabeth, from Bristol, having, by his conduct, incurred the general contempt and resentment of the good people of this Colony;

Resolved, That we will not hereafter have any intercourse with the said Sampson, nor contribute to, or, as far as in us lies, permit the loading of any Ship which he may now or hereafter be concerned with; and it is recommended to the inhabitants of this County to adopt these Resolutions.

Ordered, That these, and the Resolutions relative to the Manufactories, be printed. JERMAN BAKER, Clerk.

ULSTER COUNTY (NEW-YORK) COMMITTEE.

Kingston, Ulster County, April 7, 1775.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of the Town of Kings-ton, in Ulster County, a Committee of Observation was chosen agreeable to, and for the purpose mentioned in the Eleventh Article of the Association of the Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia in September last.

The persons nominated and appointed for said Committee were, Oke Sudam, John Beekman, Johannes Perse, Johannes Slegt, Hendrick Schoonmaker, Christian Fiero, and Egbert Schoonmaker, who at their meeting the 6th instant, chose Johannes Slegt for Chairman.

Information being then made to said Committee, that the merchants and venders of East-India Tea had entered into an association not to sell any East-India Tea, and that if any person or persons should be guilty of selling or vending any of that commodity, that they should be published in the publick newspapers as enemies to the liberties and privileges of American subjects; which Articles were signed by all the merchants and skippers who were possessed of any East-India Tea, (Mr. Jacobus Low excepted,) who, notwithstanding all the friendly admonitions and entreaties to the contrary, declared he had, and would sell Tea. Upon which information, this Committee resolved to send for Mr. Low, thinking that time and mature deliberation, together with their friendly advice, might be able to alter Mr. Low's determination; but all in vain: for he declared he was determined to sell Tea as formerly he had done, and absolutely refused to comply with the Articles agreed to by the other merchants and skippers in said Town.

We, therefore, in faithfulness to the trust reposed in us, and agreeable to the recommendation of the Congress, do publish, and he, the said Jacobus Low, is hereby published as an enemy to the rights and liberties of America; and we do hereby declare, that we will henceforth abstain from (and recommend it to others to abstain from) all kind of connections and commerce with him, until such time as a change in his conduct shall induce us to alter our determination.

Signed by order of the Committee:

JOHANNES SLEGT, Chairman.

PORTSMOUTH (NEW-HAMPSHIRE) VOLUNTEERS.

We, the subscribers, being desirous of attaining the Military Art, do agree on the following Rules and Regulations, viz:

1st. That we will meet at some place that shall be agreed on by the Company, every Monday and Thursday evening, for the purpose aforesaid.

2d. That on the first Monday evening of every month,

(after the exercise is over,) we will choose a proper person to instruct and preside over the Company; also a Clerk, and any other Officers that may be judged necessary.

3d. That we will pay obedience and strict attention to such as we shall appoint from time to time to instruct and command the Company.

Portsmouth, December 20, 1774.

April 6th, 1775.—The Company, taking into consideration the shortness of the evenings, and their numbers being so much increased that it is inconvenient to exercise any longer within doors; therefore,

Voted, That after the 10th day of April instant, we will meet on the parade, or some other convenient place, on Monday and Thursday mornings, precisely at sunrise.

Voted, That Dr. Hall Jackson, Messrs. James Sheafe, George Hart, George Gains, and Jeremiah Libby, be a Committee to wait on the Honourable Theodore Atkinson, Esquire, Colonel of the Regiment to which we belong, and request the favour of him to grant us liberty to beat a drum to call the Company together; and also to present to him a copy of our Rules and Regulations, that he may be convinced that we are not a Company detached from his regiment and command.

Attest:

J. LIBBY, Clerk.

Portsmouth, April 7, 1775.

SOUTHAMPTON (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a Committee held at the Court-House for the County of Southampton, the eighth day of April, 1775, agreeable to the Eleventh Article of the Continental Congress, Present: Edwin Gray, Chairman, Thomas Williamson, Richard Kello, James Ridley, George Gurley, Clerk, Benjamin Ruffin, Peter Butts, Benjamin Clements, Jun., Joshua Nicholson, Thomas Edmunds, Benjamin Ruffin, Junior, and Thomas Blunt:

The Proceedings of the late Convention held at the Town of Richmond, on the 20th of March, were laid before the Committee, and being read and maturely considered, Resolved unanimously, That this Committee doth entirely approve the Proceedings of the said Convention, and that they will use every opportunity to recommend, in the strongest manner, the several measures then adopted to the people of this County.

Resolved, That the several members of this Committee in their respective Districts (as laid off by a former Committee) endeavour to collect by subscription the sum of Ten Pounds, for encouraging Mr. Tait's useful scheme for making Salt; and also Fifteen Pounds for the use of the Deputies to represent this Colony in Continental Congress; and that such Money as may be collected be immediately paid by the several collectors into the hands of Mr. Edwin Gray and Mr. Henry Taylor, to be by them transmitted to Robert Carter Nicholas, Esquire, for the purposes aforesaid.

Resolved, That Monday, the 17th of this instant, be appointed for the election of Delegates at the Court-House, to represent this County in Provincial Congress; and that a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the Clergymen of the different Parishes of this County, requesting them to publish the same in their respective Churches; and also that the Clerk of this Committee advertise the same at the Court-House door on the next court day.

Resolved, That Mr. Benjamin Clements, Junior, Mr. Benjamin Ruffin, Junior, and Mr. Joshua Nicholson, or any two of them, be appointed to conduct the election of the said Delegates.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Committee be given to Mr. Edwin Gray and Mr. Henry Taylor, our worthy and patriotic Delegates; at the same time assuring them that they have conducted themselves entirely to their satisfaction in the discharge of that important trust.

Resolved, That this Committee be adjourned to Thursday, the 13th day of this instant.

Thursday, April 13, 1775.

This Committee taking under their consideration the necessity of providing the Militia of this County with Ammunition, and finding an improbability of collecting a sum sufficient for that purpose in so short a time as they deem necessary from the people of this County, do therefore Resolve, That each member will most cheerfully deposit the sum of Ten Pounds in the hands of Mr. Edwin Gray and Mr. Henry Taylor, or either of them, for the purpose aforesaid.

Resolved, That Mr. Edwin Gray and Mr. Henry Taylor inform the absent members of this Committee of the preceding Resolution, requesting them to contribute the sum of Ten Pounds each for the purpose therein mentioned.

Resolved, That Mr. Edwin Gray and Mr. Henry Taylor, or either of them, do, as soon as they have received the Money so subscribed, or any other sums that may be voluntarily advanced, make application to the Committee appointed by the late Convention for procuring Ammunition, &c., for as much Powder and Lead as the money they have received will amount to, in the proportion of one pound of powder to four pounds of lead.

Resolved, That the Powder and Lead, when procured, shall be stored in such convenient place or places as shall be agreed on by this Committee, and be liable to any directions of the same.

Silas Kirby, James Ingram, Josiah Kirby, and John Simmons, voluntarily appeared before this Committee, and acknowledged they had been guilty of violating the Eighth Article of the Association, by Gaming at the said Silas Kirby's, and winning a small sum of money of a certain Benjamin O'Donnello, a few days before; that it was an error they were unthinkingly led into, and are convinced of its evil tendency; that they are willing to refund every thing won by them; and they now assure this Committee of a more strict compliance for the future with the several Articles of the General Association.

This Committee therefore Resolve, That the said Silas Kirby, James Ingram, Josiah Kirby, and John Simmons, have been guilty of violating the Association; yet, in consideration of their candid behaviour before this Committee, and their ever conforming to the Association before this, their breach of it, hope the publick will join with them in considering the aforesaid persons as not inimical to American liberty.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this Committee transmit a copy of the proceedings thereof to Messrs. Dixon and Hunter, requesting them to publish the same.

EDWIN GRAY, Chairman.

SAMUEL KELLO, Clerk of the Committee.

TO THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA.

Prince William, April 8, 1775.

It is so true as to have become proverbial, that a drowning man will catch at a straw. On this principle it is that a despotick but almost despairing Ministry, having been compelled by the wisdom, virtue, and firmness of North America, to show a disposition to retract from their tyrannical system, are yet suspended in their determinations, and find their hopes kept alive by the corruption of some, by the folly and perverseness of others, on this side of the Atlantick. The most contemptible tales are magnified into importance when the mind wishes them to be true, and thus the lies of a Rivington, or the vanity of some heavy-headed Virginian, will swell trifles into proofs of disunion, and serve to persuade perseverance in measures hurtful indeed to America, but certainly ruinous to Great Britain. Among this tribe of mischief-working things may be classed a senseless paper lately published in the Norfolk Intelligencer, said to be "Instructions drawn up for the Delegates to the Convention at Richmond, the 20th of March, from a certain County in Virginia." Was this curious production rejected by the sensible Printers in Williamsburgh, which occasioned it to pass through that common sewer of political falsehood, the Norfolk Intelligencer? Though the framer of these Instructions certainly wants sense, he may be allowed to possess some cunning, because he has so contrived that willingness of mind, or ignorance of fact, may both conclude a whole County in Virginia to have perfidiously opposed the general union—a union formed, both as to time and matter, on the unanimous concurrence of this Country in August last, and finally confirmed by the same unanimous approbation on the 20th of March succeeding. But let us consider what are the motives and principles that probably govern this drawer up of Instructions, (for we do not learn they were ever signed,) thus to induce a belief so injurious to the fame of any County. It could not be the little vanity of showing how smoothly nonsense may be written, because the writer's name being concealed, his share of this merit must be small indeed. It could not conduce to procure an adoption of his crude ideas at the Convention, because the publication appears posterior to the rising of the Convention. It would seem, therefore, that this fiction was designed for the bad purpose before-mentioned, of keeping up the delusion in Great Britain, and comforting with hopes an almost expiring, venal, despotick Administration. It is not proper to insult the publick with a minute refutation of these Instructions; suffice it to observe, that the writer confesses "the grand principal (we will suppose him here to mean principles) for which we contend, are the rights of legislation and taxation; of legislation respecting our internal police, and of taxation independent of every power on earth;" which inestimable privileges, he farther declares, "we will maintain at the risk of our lives and fortunes." Bravo! Our man grows bold here; but presently, alas! he sinks again! For if his Instructions mean any thing, they mean to condemn the proceedings of the Congress, because the Quebeck Bill is beyond his "ideas;" because suspending Commerce will be fatal to those who are endeavouring to rob us of what himself calls "inestimable privileges;" and for a few other reasons equally cogent and sensible. Such is the inconsistency and folly of the enemies of America; for they are still enemies, whether influenced by vanity or wickedness; or misled by want of understanding.

AMERICANUS.

ADDRESS OF FREEHOLDERS OF FINCASTLE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) TO LORD DUNMORE.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, His Majesty's Lieutenant and Governour-General of the Colony of VIRGINIA:

The Address of the Freeholders and a number of the Inhabitants of FINCASTLE County.

MY LORD: Notwithstanding the unhappy disputes that at present subsist between the Mother Country and the Colonies, in which we have given the publick our sentiments, yet justice and gratitude, as well as a sense of our duty, induce us collectively to return your Lordship our unfeigned thanks for the great services you have rendered the frontiers in general, and this County in particular, in the late expedition against our enemy Indians.

In our former wars with the savages, we long suffered every species of barbarity; many of our friends and fellow-subjects were inhumanly butchered and carried into captivity, more to be dreaded than death itself; our houses plundered and burned, and our Country laid waste by an enemy, against whom, from our dispersed situation, and their manner of carrying on war, it was impossible to make a proper defence on our frontiers. Your Lordship being convinced of this, proposed to attack the enemy in their own Country, well judging that it would be the most effectual means to reduce them to reason, and be attended with little more expense to the community than a partial defence of such an extensive frontier. The proposal was cheerfully embraced, and the ardour of the Militia to engage in that very necessary service, could only be equalled by that of your Lordship in carrying it on. That the plan of an expedition should be laid when the season was far advanced, and near three thousand choice Troops raised in a few Counties, and put under the command of many brave and experienced Officers; that those forces should be equipped and fully supplied with provisions, and march several hundred miles through mountains to meet the enemy; that so many Nations of warlike Indians should be reduced to sue for peace; that those Troops should return victorious to their homes by the last of November; and all this without any publick money in hand to defray any part of the expense, shows at first view the immediate utility of the undertaking, and must be a convincing proof that the Almighty, in a peculiar manner, blessed your Lordship's attempts to establish peace, and stop the further effusion of human blood; but that your Lordship should forego your ease, and every domestick felicity, and march at the head of a body of those Troops many hundred miles from the Seat of Government, cheerfully undergoing all the fatigues of the campaign, by exposing your person, and marching on foot with the officers and soldiers, commands our warmest returns of gratitude; and the rather, as we have no instance of such condescension in your Lordship's predecessors on any similar occasion.

We should be wanting in point of gratitude, were we to omit returning our thanks on this occasion to the Officers and Soldiers who entered into the service with so much alacrity. The memory of such as fell nobly fighting for their Country ought to be very dear to it.

That your Lordship may enjoy every domestick blessing; that you may long govern the brave and free people of Virginia, and that the present disturbances may be amicably settled, is the ardent wish of the inhabitants of Fincastle.

His Lordship's Answer.

I am very much obliged to the freeholders and inhabitants of the County of Fincastle for their Address, and am happy to find they think the service I undertook upon the occasion of the Indian disturbances merits their publick thanks. I assure them that they will ever find me equally ready to exert my best endeavours for every purpose which may tend to the security or promote the happiness of the people of Virginia.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Saturday, 8th April, 1775, Present: The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour, Benjamin Chew, James Tilghman, Edward Shippen, Esquires.

Pursuant to an Order in Council, on the 13th day of March last, a draught of a Proclamation for recalling that issued on the 2d of November, and confirming the Proclamation of the 15th of September last, agreeably to His Majesty's permission signified to the Governour by the Earl of Dartmouth, was laid before the Board, and being duly considered was agreed to; and the Governour, by the advice of the Board, issued the same this day in the following words, viz:

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, and Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, by my Proclamation bearing date the fifteenth day of September last, I did enjoin and require all persons residing to the Northward and Eastward of the lines and boundaries theretofore run, and marked as boundaries and division lines between the Province of Maryland and the Province of Pennsylvania, and Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, by Commissioners for that purpose appointed and authorized, in pursuance of two Articles of Agreement made between the proprietors of the Province of Maryland and the proprietors of the Province of Pennsylvania and the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware; and also in pursuance of two several Decrees of the Lord High Chancellor of England, for the specifick performance of the said Articles, to yield obedience to the respective laws of the Province of Pennsylvania and Counties aforesaid on Delaware: And I did further by my said Proclamation require all Magistrates, Sheriffs, and other Officers of justice appointed or to be appointed in the said Province and Counties, to put in execution the respective laws thereof against all offenders within the lines and limits aforesaid as by my said Proclamation may more at large appear: And whereas by my other Proclamation, bearing date the second day of November last past, I did, in obedience to his Majesty's commands signified to me by a letter from the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, enjoin all Magistrates, Sheriffs, and other Officers of Justice, to desist from exercising the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania or the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, beyond those places where it had been theretofore usually exercised, until His Majesty's further pleasure should be known in the premises; any thing in my former Proclamation to the contrary notwithstanding. And whereas I am now informed by a letter from the Right Honourable the Earl of Dartmouth, dated the seventh day of January last, "that His Majesty, on further consideration, hath been graciously pleased to approve of the arrangement made by my said Proclamation of the fifteenth of September last, and permit me to recall that of the second of November last." I have, therefore, thought proper, by the advice of the Council, to issue this Proclamation, to make known the premises to all whom it may concern hereby, in pursuance of His Majesty's pleasure and permission, revoking my said Proclamation of the second of November last, and requiring all Officers and others within the Province of Pennsylvania and Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, to yield obedience to, and in all things observe, the orders and injunctions in my said Proclamation of the fifteenth of September last contained, as they will answer the contrary at their peril.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the Province of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, the eighth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and in the fifteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth.

JOHN PENN.

By his Honour's command:

JOSEPH SHIPPEN, JUN., Secretary.
God save the King.

The Governour at the same time communicated to the Board a Letter he had just received from Governour Eden, which follows in these words, viz:

Annapolis, March 25, 1775.

SIR: I have taken the earliest opportunity to acknowledge the receipt of your Honour's favour of the 16th instant, and to acquaint you, that as I have not received any notification of His Majesty's having on further consideration been pleased to approve the arrangement made by your Proclamation of the 15th September, and to permit you to recall that of the 2d November last, I cannot think myself justifiable in joining with your Honour to issue such a Proclamation; and am now, with the advice of my Council, to request that you will suspend the issuing of the same until such time as I can have an opportunity of hearing from England, in hopes of preventing any disturbances that may probably happen between the inhabitants of the two Provinces, in consequence of the issuing a partial Proclamation. I am, with great respect, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,

ROBERT EDEN.

His Honour John Penn, Esquire.

To which Letter the Governour, by the advice of the Council, wrote the following answer at the table, viz:

Philadelphia, April 8, 1775.

SIR: I have the favour of your Excellency's letter of the 25th March. Considering what passed between us the last summer on the subject, I rather wished than expected your concurrence in a Proclamation, and my last letter was only meant to give you notice of my intention, because I would choose to act in the most open manner.

If any dependance is to be had on my information, there is no probability of a disturbance between the people of the two Provinces. They are in general satisfied that the jurisdiction of this Government must take place, and therefore wish to have it hastened; nor can I imagine they will give an opposition to a measure which I have His Majesty's permission to take; and I am persuaded such an opposition will not be countenanced by the Government of Maryland. I therefore flatter myself that your Excellency will not think me unreasonable in persisting to issue a Proclamation agreeable to the King's permission and the advice of my Council. I am, with great regard, your Excellency's most obedient and humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

To his Excellency Robert Eden, Esquire, Governour of Maryland.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM DUTCHESS COUNTY, NEW-YORK, DATED APRIL 8, 1775.

A number of the Inhabitants of Charlotte Precinct, in this County, met yesterday, having notice for that purpose, to signify their sentiments about choosing Deputies to meet other Deputies from the several Counties, to appoint Delegates for the ensuing Congress. It was agreed that the matter should be determined by vote; and that the business might be conducted with fairness and justice, Mr. Enos Northrup was chosen by the friends of constitutional liberty, and Cornelius Humphrey, Esquire, by the advocates for a Congress, to preside and inspect the voting. Two Clerks were also appointed. When the Poll was closed, the number of those who were against Deputies and Delegates, and on the side of the Constitution, was - - 140 For Deputies, - - - - - 35

Just as the poll was closing, a number of Constitution- alists, about one hundred and ten, made their appearance; but they did not vote, as the opposite party gave up the contest.

Dutchess County consists of eleven Districts, and only four of them have voted for Deputies, and Richmond, Tryon, Cumberland, Charlotte, and Gloucester, will be unrepresented in our Provincial Convention.

PROTEST OF THE FREEHOLDERS OF SEVEN PRECINCTS IN DUTCHESS COUNTY, NEW-YORK.

MR. GAINE: A Dutchess County Freeholder desires you will publish the following Protest, as the inhabitants of the seven Precincts first mentioned therein have been informed that Robert R. Livingston, Jun., Egbert Benson, and Morris Graham, Esquires, have been deputed to represent the County of Dutchess; but by what kind of law-casuistry a representation of the County is made by three Deputies, we are at a loss to guess, unless a small and disappointed minority can be supposed to represent a large and respectable majority. If any of the minority entertain the least doubt that the Protest does not express the sense of the Precincts therein mentioned, formal and ample testimonies of its authenticity shall be sent you:

The Inhabitants of the seven Precincts of Beckman's, Pawling's, Southeast, Fredericksburgh, Philipse, Charlotte, and Poughkeepsie, in the County of Dutchess, composing at least three-fourths of the inhabitants of the said County, take this publick method of protesting against the appointment of any person or persons that may be deputed from the Precincts of America, Northeast, Rhynbeck, and Rhumbout, to represent the said County as Deputies in a Provincial Congress, intended, as they are informed, to be assembled at New-York, on the 20th instant, as five of the Precincts first mentioned are almost unanimously opposed to all unconstitutional representations not warranted by the laws of the land, a very great majority of the Precinct of Charlotte, and a majority of one hundred and ten to seventy-seven, in the Precinct of Poughkeepsie. The seven Precincts above mentioned, confide solely in the mode of application for redress of grievances adopted by their loyal and patriotick Assembly, whose proceedings on this head they most heartily approve of, convinced that they ought not, they will not adopt any other mode of application, but stand ready, at all times, to evince their loyalty to their gracious Sovereign, their firm attachment to the Constitution, and their steady opposition to every seditious and treasonable act derogatory to either.

New-York, May 1, 1775.

MR. GAINE: In your last Paper appeared an uncommon advertisement, with a Protest annexed, as was said from the Freeholders of seven Precincts, which were said to contain three-fourths of the inhabitants of Dutchess County. I choose to make no reflections on the author, since I would not wish to heighten the resentment or contempt of the County in which he lives; but, in justice to the County of which I am a freeholder, I hereby challenge him to show that that Protest was ever publicly read, or approved by any one of the Precincts he mentions, before it was published. I likewise deny, and call upon him to prove that the seven Precincts, in whose name, (but without whose authority) the above Protest was published, contains above half of the freeholders of Dutchess County, after deducting those that voted for Delegates in Poughkeepsie and Charlotte Precincts, although he so confidently asserts that they contain three-fourths. But that the publick may no longer be deceived by more presentations of the state of that County, I am willing to put it upon this issue: the County of Dutchess contains eighteen hundred freeholders; if the author of the Protest will publish a list of six hundred freeholders that are opposed to the election of Delegates, or will sign his Protest, I undertake to show double the number who approve of their appointment.

A FREEHOLDER OF DUTCHESS COUNTY.

N. B. No person will be considered as a freeholder, whose Precinct is not annexed to his name, as that is the only way to guard against misrepresentations.

New-York, May 15, 1775.

MR. GAINES: As in this season of publick distress, every altercation that may tend to promote divisions and animosities, ought carefully to be avoided; and as a coalition of parties in the County of Dutchess will probably very soon take place, and a proper union between its inhabitants established, no reply, for the above reasons, will be sent you in answer to the observations in one of your last Papers, on the Protest from that County; instead of which, as it may be somewhat satisfactory, you may assure the publick that the numerous body of freeholders and inhabitants who have heretofore been averse to the nomination of Committees, opposed solely from a virtuous principle of promoting thereby the real interests of their Country. They conceived, and had good reasons to believe, that as the mode of application for redress of grievances adopted by their Assembly was the only constitutional one, it would most probably be attended with the desired effect; and that no motives unfriendly to the liberties of their Country ever influenced any part of their conduct, when opposed to Committees.

COMMITTEE OF MONTREAL TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Montreal, April 8, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: We have received your letter of the 21st of February, by Mr. Brown, and see clearly the great injustice that has been done you. We deeply feel the sorrow and afflictions of our suffering brethren, and sincerely wish it was in our power to afford you effectual relief; but alas, we are more the objects of pity and compassion than yourselves, who are now suffering under the heavy hand of power, deprived as we are of the common rights of the miserable, to complain. You have numbers, strength, and a common cause to support you in your opposition. We are still more divided here by our interests than by our religion, language, and manners; and the apprehensions of evils to come upon us in a short time, from the unlimited power of the Governour, strikes all opposition dead. Indeed few in this Colony dare vent their griefs, but groan in silence, and dream of lettres de cachet, confiscations, and imprisonment, offering up their fervent prayers to the throne of grace to prosper your righteous cause, which alone will free us from those jealous fears and apprehensions that rob us of our peace. In a word, we are the British inhabitants of this widely extended Province, united in their sentiments. We have neither numbers nor wealth sufficient to do you any essential service. We must, therefore, cast ourselves into the arms of our sister Colonies, relying upon the wisdom, vigour, and firmness of the General Continental Congress for our protection, and hoping they will entertain no animosity or resentment against us because we cannot join them in the ensuing General Congress, which, were we to attempt, the Canadians would join the Government to frustrate. You will please to bear in mind, that not only those who hold the helm of Government, but also all those who make wealth or ambition the chief object of their pursuit, are professedly your enemies, and would be glad to reduce you to the same abject state with themselves. Nevertheless, the bulk of the people, both English and Canadians, are of quite contrary sentiments, and wish well to your cause, but dare not stir a finger to help you, being of no more estimation in the political machine than the sailors are in shaping the course, or working the ship in which they sail. They may mutter and swear, but must obey. However, should Government handle them too roughly, and arbitrarily attempt to force them upon dangerous and disagreeable service, to which they have already shown an irreconcilable aversion, they may, perhaps, dearly repent it.

The case is quite different with their noblesse, or gentry. The pre-eminence given to their religion, together with a participation of honours and offices, in common with the English, not only flatters their natural pride and vanity, but is regarded by them as a mark of distinction and merit, that lays open their way to fortune; of liberty or law, they have not the least notion.

As to the savages that dwell round about us, doubtless there are some to be found among them, who, for the sake of plunder, would murder, burn, and destroy; but we conceive that their Chiefs know their own interests better than to interfere as a Nation in this family quarrel; for let which side will prevail, they are sure, in that case, to be the victims.

We desire to know whether English Delegates would be accepted under the above-named limitations, namely: without entering into the General Association for the non-importation of goods from Great Britain, or the non-exportation of the produce of this Colony, and the India Countries above; and beg to be informed in what manner we can be serviceable to your cause, without bringing down ruin upon our own heads. It may not be amiss just to hint that the idea the Canadians seem to have of this Colony at present, is, that it is to be a French Government, holding under the Crown of Great Britain, from which they mean to exclude every Englishman, save the Governour and Lieutenant Governour.

We heartily wish our abilities to serve you were equal to our wills, and pray Heaven to prosper your generous purpose; and are, with the utmost consideration and feeling for your distresses, gentlemen, your most obedient and very humble servants and fellow-sufferers.

THOS. WALKER, JAMES PRICE,
JOHN WELLS, WM. HAYWOOD.

P. S. It is our earnest request that this letter may not be published, for fear of bad consequences to the subscribers.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED

London, April 10, 1775.

The quality at the court-end despise the poor and industrious, and are obliged now to inform the mob that their brethren in America are to be slaughtered by the large Fleet and Army now ready to sail against them. The people are kept in total ignorance of publick affairs, and the wisdom of our Senators is to deceive those they are chose to protect. There are to be two thousand pounds added to the King's salary, with a present, to pay his household debts of some thousands. When the budget opens, fine work how this money will be raised, and each common shop pay ten pounds, or fifteen pounds sterling tax. Every thing is taxed but the publick places of diversion; and they are so filled with people, so numerous, and cause so large a circulation of cash, that they are the only blessing the people think are left them; for they make the rich spend their money, and the sharpers get it. All this is the wise people who are to have the collecting of your taxes, and to support this mode are the mighty preparations of war. Oh, God! who beholds the inhabitants of the earth, and hears the cries of the poor; who understands judgment, and rules in righteousness, look on America, and keep the land from being polluted with the sins of the Mother Country. Oh, if I dare write what I wish you all to do—what you can do, and what Providence seems to intend you shall do!

If you submit, all will be forever lost; a curse on your names, and your estates confiscated by those bills of attainder that are ready to pass against you. 'Tis impossible to describe the ruin that is studied; the load of taxes; the number of placemen to be saddled on you. The land is to be confiscated, and the King an arbitrary Monarch. He is determined to be arbitrary, and consults no one who will not encourage his universal sway. He lives retired; only three times a week goes to the publick diversions, pantheon, plays, operas, and has given fifteen hundred pounds to an Italian singer. The young Prince is to go to housekeeping this spring, and the men appointed to attend his levee are of such a complexion as forebodes evil.

Four thousand of the new Army, with Colonel Howe, are to hoist the flag at New-York, and stop all communication with New-England. If the Fleet sails, you must fight or be destroyed; for the Ministry are determined to destroy your trade, to ruin the growth of the Colonies, and to stop all the blessings Heaven has given you. Get ready to fight, for nothing can save you but the power of the Colonies and their own strength, and to America will England owe their liberty or be ruined. Several gentlemen called on me, and desired me to write to you to arm immediately. Get ready to receive ten thousand men and four hundred sail, and you are to find provisions and pay them yourselves. New charters are ready now; for your money, the soldiers have orders to fight; new cannon, guns, powder, and ball, for war and blood! The cry of blood is gone out against you.

Your fate now depends on the brave and spirited conduct of yourselves. You see the diabolical plot is deep laid against you; and by bribes and undue influence, has obtained the late and the present Acts for blocking up your Trade, and taking those unwarrantable measures against the Colonies and the sense of the people.

This day will be remembered in history; for John Wilkes and the King to meet on such a solemn occasion, no less than the lives and property of all America and the whole English Nation. Great will be the event of this day. The Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Liverymen, Recorder, Remembrancer, and City Officers, all went in procession. A copy of the King's answer is to be sent to you. This answer will rouse up the blood of the English, and all America will see that they must fight, and that they have no hopes left. The glory of old England is no more! All is lost! God is about to move the Kingdom; and soon, very soon, the King will see his counsellors have deceived him, and the people of England will not bear their insults. The Bank and the Stocks will fail, as no trade is carried on with spirit until the spring; and now all begins to stop; all things are in an uproar; the City is affronted; the people insulted; the Island of Great Britain exposed to the French and the Spaniards; no remittances from the merchants as usual; the great expense to keep up the war, together with fighting against their own people, (and in the most unjust cause that ever disgraced a Kingdom.) All men of sense are astonished and tremble. England has taken her last legal steps, and done all they lawfully can do, and now depend on the Americans to help themselves, and on their own feelings; that the Americans will act like men of virtue and wisdom, and that all will oppose the greatest tyrant that ever yet was seen, who now is hardened Pharaoh like.

The Quakers in England have petitioned the King themselves, as a people, and now attended the City Petition, all in one voice against the Ministry, and are all faithful to the people in America. The Quakers are the most hearty in the cause, and see the dreadful consequences of a civil war. Our forefathers did not think that ever a King of England would break his oath, and murder his subjects in cold blood, and take their money, or rob his people, without giving them any opportunity to defend themselves but by the sword. This is dreadful, and dreadfully true. May the God of our forefathers direct you so to defend your rights and property, as will teach us to depend on the justice of our cause, and the hearty love of our country, in full confidence of a complete victory. This is the hearty prayer of thousands.

The continual inquiries are, how will the Colonies behave? Will they act like men? Or are they such poltrons as Lord Sandwich said they were? In his speech in the House of Lords, he said that the Americans are cowards; will not fight; are men of a mean spirit; dastardly poltrons; all noise and bully; that a few soldiers would soon make them submit. But God forbid that my worthy friends in America should add disgrace to ruin, and make the cause of God and man of no effect. The Fleet is sailed or sailing. General Gage has drawn bills on the Treasury, £2400, for secret services, to pay the tools of Government in all the different Colonies. Such bad policy must bring on ruin. Many of the hungry dependants on the King have asked for places; and you will not only have taxes to pay, and a Standing Army set over you, but you will have all those vile cattle to maintain. You will have all your blessings taken away if you submit. But if you stand firmly out, and demand your rights, and are determined to fight, the Ministry will be obliged to send you offers of peace; and make satisfaction for all the damage you have already sustained, and be glad of a reconciliation, for England cannot possibly live without you. The silence of the people was occasioned by fear of the Bank, as the National debt is so great; but now, the Tobacco and Oil, and other revenues from America, bring to England two millions. This is proved from the Custom-House books, which the Chamberlain of London has been at the expense and trouble to collect and lay before the King. Yet his heart is hardened like iron, and, as Pharaoh, he will drive his chariot into the German Sea, not without a host of his Nobles to attend him.

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Observation for Prince George's County, at the house of Richard Carnes, in Piscataway, on Monday, the 10th day of April, 1775, were present thirteen Members.

By a letter from the Committee at Baltimore, of the 15th ult., it appears that a Brig, called the Sally, William Moat master, from Bristol, having four thousand bushels of Salt on board, imported since the first of February last, arrived there lately, consigned to Doctor John Stephenson. That part of the said Salt was put on board three or four crafts, supposed to be intended for sale in the different Rivers in this Province, and that one Bailey, in a Sloop, took part of said Salt. And it appearing to this Committee, from the information of Messrs. William Lyles, Jr., George Fraser Hawkins, and Hezekiah Wheeler, that they had, on or about the 15th of March, purchased of one Thomas Bailey a parcel of fine Salt, since suspected to be part of the above, the aforesaid Thomas Bailey appears, and being informed of the above, declares his concern that he should have been unguardedly led into a step that he now finds to have been wrong; and that, to shew the sincerity of such declaration, voluntarily consents and requests that the Salt sold as above be destroyed; on which he fully gives up all claim against the persons to whom he had sold the same, and requests the determination of the Committee be postponed, as he can furnish evidence from Baltimore to prove his innocence: on which it is referred to this day fortnight. Mr. Carnes, Mr. Thomas Dent, Mr. Richard Dent, Mr. Edward Edelen, and Mr. George Diggs, or any two of them, are appointed to see the Salt destroyed.

At a meeting of the Committee of Observation, for Prince George's County, at the house of Mr. Richard Carnes, in Piscataway, on Saturday, the 27th day of May, 1775, were present nineteen Members.

The said Thomas Bailey failing to appear, according to the former reference, with the evidence proposed from Baltimore, the Committee proceeded to consider the charge against him; and as it appeared from the said Bailey's own declaration, that he was informed at Alexandria, before he landed the aforesaid Salt, that the ship load of Salt which arrived at Baltimore, consigned to Doctor John Stephenson, was declared to be illegally imported, and ordered to be destroyed,

They do Resolve, That the said Thomas Bailey has committed a wilful violation of the Continental Association, by selling and landing Salt imported in the Sally, Captain Moat.

The Committee being informed that Mr. John Baynes, of Piscataway, had killed a Lamb, contrary to the Resolve of the Provincial Convention, held at Annapolis in December last, Messrs. Luke Marbury and George Diggs were sent to inform him that the Committee desired his immediate attendance. Mr. Baynes appeared, and being informed as above, acknowledged that he had killed a Lamb, and conceived that he had not thereby violated the Continental Association, which he purposed to adhere to, and thought it superiour to the Provincial Convention, which, he conceived, was only intended to carry the Resolves of the Continental Congress into execution.

Resolved, That the said Mr. Baynes, in killing the said

Lamb, has violated the Resolve of the Provincial Convention; that such measures may be of mischievous consequence, as tending to create a disregard to publick regulation, formed for preserving the liberties of America.

Ordered, That a copy of these proceedings be signed by the Chairman, and sent to be published in the Maryland Gazette. Signed by order of the Committee:

JOSIAS BEALL, Chairman.

ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Observation for Anne Arundel County, held at Mr. Isaac McHard's, the 10th of April, were present forty-three Members.

It being moved that a Paper printed in the Publick Ledger of the 4th of last January, entitled, "Facts relative to the Riot at Annapolis in Maryland," be read, and the motion being seconded, the Paper aforesaid was read accordingly by the Clerk:

On motion, Resolved, That the said Paper be reprinted in the Maryland Gazette.

2. Resolved unanimously, That the said Paper contains a false, scandalous, and malicious narrative of facts invented by the author, or so disguised and misrepresented, that when they border upon truth, and even seem to assume its semblance, they are devoid of its reality.

3. Resolved unanimously, That the Author of the said Paper has designedly injured, against the conviction of his own conscience, the characters of the gentlemen mentioned and alluded to in his publication, gentlemen of approved worth; that he has cast unjust and invidious aspersions on a great number of very respectable inhabitants of this and two adjoining Counties, by representing them as a lawless mob, ignorant of their interests, or too lazy to be at the trouble of investigating them.

4. Resolved unanimously, That the Author has manifested an inveterate enmity to the liberties of this Province in particular, and of British America in general, by insinuating the necessity of introducing a military and mercenary force to support the Civil Government, and to secure obedience to the Laws of this Colony: that, by a suggestion so false and so malicious, he has inadvertently discovered his political opinion, that these Colonies ought, and his secret wish that they may be forced to submit to the arbitrary decrees of a despotick Ministry and a servile Parliament.

ISAAC MCHARD, Clerk Committee.

Facts relative to the Riot at ANNAPOLIS, in MARYLAND.

Nothing but a civil war at home can be so pernicious and detrimental to this Nation, as a contest with the Colonies driven to too great a length, as they are connected with the Mother Country by every social tie subsisting between subjects of the same Empire divided by so great a distance; the commerce of the one, and the defence of the other, depending in a great measure on a mutual harmony and good understanding with each other; in a word, they may be said to be linked together by the strongest interests, those of protection and profit.

This being the case, it is not surprising that every piece of intelligence on a subject so important and consequential to the community at large, should be received by every individual with the utmost avidity; for it is next to impossible for any British subject to be so neutral or disinterested in a matter so momentous as the present unhappy situation of our affairs on the Continent of America, as not to wish to be acquainted with the proceedings there, however limited and confined they may be in their nature, and private in their consequences. I hope, on this account, the following narration, taken from the best and most authentic authorities, will be agreeable to the publick, as from it may be deduced the real source and primary causes of the riot at Annapolis in Maryland, in which the Brigantine, called the Peggy, laden with Teas, was burnt; but I imagine some will scarcely believe that "an Officer in his Majesty's Revenue" was the principal abetter and promoter of the riot, though this was actually the case.

At the first publick meeting at Annapolis on American affairs, after the passing the Boston Port Bill, a resolution was proposed and zealously supported by many members at the meeting—"That the gentlemen of the Law should decline bringing any action for debts due to persons in Great Britain." The passing so dishonest a resolution, however necessary and convenient it might appear to some people in trade, was too pregnant with injustice to meet with general approbation; for the honest and thinking traders plainly foresaw that this measure, calculated only to serve the private purposes and views of a few individuals, would, in the end, greatly prejudice and injure the general credit of the Province, and prove extremely prejudicial to its commerce; therefore a strong opposition was formed, and a spirited protest was entered against the resolution, in both of which Mr. Stewart, one of the owners of the Brigantine, distinguished himself, and bore a very active share therein.

But notwithstanding that the opposition of the protesters against this dishonest and illegal resolution seemed to give general satisfaction, and met with almost universal approbation, as appeared by that measure never having again been proposed to be adopted at any of the future meetings; nevertheless Mr. Stewart's conduct therein procured him many enemies amongst those whose interest was injured; and it afforded matter for calumny and complaint to many of the neighbouring Merchants, who did not fail to embrace the first opportunity which happened by the arrival of the Brigantine with Teas on board, of gratifying their spleen and malice, and satiating their diabolical resentment and revenge, by endeavouring the ruin, perhaps the death of the man who had honestly dared actively to oppose these dishonest designs.

By the Brigantine, Messrs. Williams, the gentlemen to whom the Tea was consigned, had also fortunately received a plentiful supply of other goods from London; this gave umbrage to some of their neighbours who had been disappointed of the goods they intended to lay in before the Association or Non-Importation Agreement, which was then generally expected, and which has actually taken place, should operate; amongst these there was one house, a branch of a mercantile one in London, and of which Mr. Davison, Deputy Collector and Deputy Comptroller is a partner, to which the Messrs. Williams were likely to become formidable rivals in trade, who had the misfortune to have a vessel, on board of which the goods were shipped, stranded in the English Channel. Chagrined at their own disappointment, and determined that Messrs. Williams should not reap the benefit of this seasonable supply by the Peggy Stewart, resolved also to wreak their vengeance on Mr. Stewart. They used every means to inflame the populace, not only to prevent the landing of the Tea, but also to procure its destruction.

In this dilemma, Messrs. Williams adopted the only prudent method they had left to extricate themselves from the impending danger. Aware of the machinations of their enemies, they wisely refused to enter the Teas, or pay the duties, imagining that thereby the people would be satisfied, and that the Teas being seized for non-payment of the duties, the Officers of the Customs would in that case be obliged to land them, even at the risk of tarring and feathering.

But Mr. Stewart, as an owner of the vessel, anxious for despatch, in order that she might proceed to another port, too precipitately, as appeared by the issue, settled the matter otherwise. He agreed to deposit a bill of exchange at the Custom-House, as security for the duty of the Teas, which was the very point his enemies wished; for by this measure he laid himself open to the most virulent attacks malice could invent to excite the populace against him, which would end in his destruction.

To forward their malicious and infernal designs, the officer of the revenue before mentioned, although the house of which he was a partner had, unmolested, three months before, landed Teas, used every means in his power, personally, and by the interest of his partner, who is undertaker of the publick buildings, and by the means and assistance of every friend and dependant they had in the neighbourhood, endeavoured to stir up the populace against Mr. Stewart, in which they proved but too successful; for having depicted his proceedings as a crime of the most atrocious nature, giving out "that it was done intentionally to entail slavery and heavy taxes on the Americans, and to strike at the root of, and tear up every privilege British subjects possessed on the Continent of America," the minds of the people were so inflamed, that they threatened death to

Mr. Stewart, and desolation to his store and dwelling-house.

The mob of Maryland, like the common people of all Countries, are ever ready to receive the first impressions; and being too lazy or too ignorant to inquire or examine into causes or complaints, they are ever violent in their proceedings; and when a notion is once impressed on them, it is scarcely to be effaced by reason. Can it then be surprising that the Committee who met to inquire into the merits of the affair (inflamed as they were by the incendiaries who set them on) could not put a stop to their rage, though a great majority of the Committee were of opinion that the destruction of the Tea, and a publick acknowledgment of the fault from the parties, was a sufficient atonement for the trespass? Is it surprising that this should not appease, when the death or destruction of Mr. Stewart only could have satiated their vengeance?

To avert so great a calamity, some of Mr. Stewart's friends proposed "that the Vessel with the Tea on board, should immediately be burnt," which was executed almost as soon as proposed, and the happy expedient had the desired effect. The mischief they had perpetrated, and the blaze of the vessel pleased and appeased the populace, and in some measure, though it may be presumed not to the extent of their wishes, gratified the malicious and interested, and saved Mr. Stewart, if not from death and destruction, at least from ruin, tar, and feathers.

This disturbance happened in the absence of the Governor, who was then on his passage from England; but had he been on the spot it could not have been prevented, for the civil power in Annapolis, though the capital of Maryland and residence of the Governor, is unable to cope with, or curb the fury of an exasperated people. There are no military in the Province. AMERICANS.

TO THE PUBLICK.

Committee of Inspection Chamber,
Falmouth, Mass., April 10, 1775. }

To hold a man up as an object of general detestation, to deprive him of the benefits that result from society, is disagreeable; is painful; but, on the other hand, to neglect the interest of our Country, to disappoint the just expectations of our constituents, is dishonourable and base. The Committee of Inspection for the Town of Falmouth, therefore, come forward, to discharge the duty they owe the publick, and the trust reposed in them by their fellow-citizens.

On Thursday, the 2d ult., the Sloop John and Mary, Henry Hughes, master, arrived here from Bristol, supposed to have goods on board for Captain Thomas Coulson, of this place; and as the late Continental Congress had, by their Association, prohibited the importation of any goods from Great Britain after the first day of February last, this Committee, chosen by the said Town of Falmouth to observe the conduct of all persons in said Town touching said Association, immediately convened, and after employing some persons to see that nothing was taken out of said Sloop during their debates, they proceeded to consider the circumstances of the case; and being informed by Captain Coulson that said vessel had on board sundry Rigging, Sails, and Stores, sent him by Mr. Garnet, Merchant in Bristol, for a new Ship lately built here by said Coulson for said Garnet, the said Committee, after a full and serious consideration of the matter, gave it as their opinion, that his taking said Rigging and Sails out of the vessel in which they arrived, and appropriating them to rig his new Ship, in order to send her to England, would be a violation of the Continental Association, and therefore that the said Rigging, Sails, and Stores, ought forthwith to be sent back again, without breaking any of the packages thereof.

Of this opinion the said Coulson had due notice, but not making any preparations to comply therewith, the said Committee again convened on Tuesday following, viz: the 7th ult. Captain Coulson then attended, agreeable to the desire of this Committee, and being asked why he had not sent away the goods, agreeable to the opinion of this Committee, founded on the aforesaid Association, he said, because it was not for his interest; and further said that the vessel wanted repairs, and therefore was unfit to go to sea, and that he did not choose to procure another, or to send back the said Rigging and Sails, otherwise than by rigging his said new Ship with them, and thus to send them back in the said new Ship; but that he would consent to have them stored at the Committee's risk until the vessel was repaired, and that then he would re-ship them, and send them out of the harbour. But being asked whether he would send them back to Bristol, he declined giving the Committee any assurance that he would, though he was willing to send back the two hogsheads of Lines, which came in said vessel.

This Committee then sent for a Committee of Carpenters, Riggers, and Caulkers, who had been on board to view her, at the request of a number of the inhabitants of this Town, and they informed us that the vessel wanted some repairs, but that, in their opinion, she might be repaired; fit to return, in about two days, without taking out the goods. Upon which the Committee passed the following Resolve, and sent a copy of it to Captain Coulson, viz:

"That seven days be allowed said Coulson, from this time, to repair said vessel, and to make the necessary preparations for sending her back; and if he does not, at the end of that term, (wind and weather permitting,) send said vessel out of this harbour to proceed to Bristol, this Committee will forthwith cause the truth of the case to be published, agreeable to the Continental Association."

At the expiration of said term, viz: on the evening of the 14th ult., the Committee met again, and although a deposition, signed by several persons, some of whom were merchants, masters of vessels, and ship-carpenters, was then handed in to this Committee, purporting that said vessel was unfit to go to sea until the goods were taken out, and she thoroughly repaired, yet it appeared that Captain Coulson had not taken due care to get said Sloop repaired, nor had endeavoured to procure another, in which to re-ship the goods to Bristol, and would give the Committee no assurance that he would send them back, in any other manner than he at first proposed. The Committee then adjourned to the 15th ult., and then passed the following Vote, viz:

"That if Captain Coulson will re-ship the aforesaid goods in some other vessel, and send them back immediately, without breaking any of the packages, it will be satisfactory to this Committee."

To this Captain Coulson (who was again desired to attend, to hear the Committee's determination) would not consent, though one of this Committee offered him a vessel gratis, to carry them to Halifax or Newfoundland.

We, the said Committee of Inspection, do therefore, agreeable to the directions of the said Continental Congress, as expressed in the said Eleventh Article of their Association, hereby publish the name of the said Thomas Coulson, as a violator of the Continental Association.

By order of the Committee;

ENOCH FREEMAN, Chairman.

Committee of Inspection Chamber, }
Falmouth, March 2, 1775. }

At a meeting of the Committee of Inspection, at the Library Chamber, to determine what ought to be done with respect to a vessel that arrived here this day from Bristol, supposed to have goods and merchandise for Captain Thomas Coulson on board:

Voted, That Mr. Benjamin Mussey, Captain Joseph McLellan, and Mr. Benjamin Titcomb, be a Committee to employ some persons to see that no goods are landed from said vessel during the debates of the Committee of Inspection, and to desire that Captain Coulson and the Master of said vessel would attend this Committee.

Captain Coulson and the Master accordingly attended; and being asked if said vessel came from Bristol, and what she had on board, answered that she did come from Bristol, and had on board Rigging, Sails, and Stores for a new Ship lately built here by Captain Coulson.

Voted, That Captain Joseph McLellan, Mr. Jedidiah Cobb, Mr. Benjamin Mussey, and Mr. Samuel Freeman be a Committee to go on board said vessel, or employ some other persons to go on board her, to see whether she has on board any goods other than the Rigging, Sails, and Stores for said new Ship.

The meeting was then adjourned to eight o'clock tomorrow morning, to meet at the Library Chamber, and that in the mean time the absent members be desired to attend.

Falmouth, March 3, 1775.

The Committee of Inspection met, pursuant to adjournment. Present: Enoch Freeman, Esquire, Messrs: Daniel Isley, Benjamin Titcomb, Enoch Isley, John Waite, Stephen Waite, Benjamin Mussey, William Owen, Samuel Knights, Jedidiah Cobb, John Butler, Jabez Jones, Smith Cobb, Pelctiah March, Pearson Jones, Joseph Noyes, Samuel Freeman, Joseph McLellan, Theophilus Parsons. The question being put, whether Captain Coulson's taking said Rigging and Sails out of the vessel in which they arrived, and his appropriating them to rig his new Ship, in order to send her to England, will be a violation of the American Association:

After a long and serious debate, it was Resolved in the affirmative, by a majority of fourteen to five.

Voted, therefore, That said Rigging, Sails, and Stores for said new Ship, ought forthwith to be sent back again, without breaking any of the packages thereof, by a majority of fourteen to five.

Voted, nemine contradicente, That all other goods and merchandise that were imported in said vessel ought also forthwith to be sent back again without breaking any of the packages thereof.

Voted, That Messrs. Enoch Isley, John Waite, and Daniel Isley be a Committee, immediately to inform Captain Coulson of the result of this Committee, and that they are now sitting, if he is desirous to attend them.

Captain Coulson attended, and informed the Committee the vessel in which his Rigging and Sails arrived was so out of repair, that she was unfit to return back again until she was repaired, and that in order to repair her the freight must be taken out.

The meeting was then adjourned to three o'clock, P. M., to meet at the same place.

Three o'clock, P. M.

The Committee met, pursuant to adjournment.

Voted, That the Sub-Committees chosen by the first and second votes of yesterday, be discharged from any further service as Sub-Committees.

Voted, That this Committee will exert their utmost endeavours to prevent all the inhabitants of this Town from engaging in any riots, tumults, and insurrections, or attacks on the private property of any person, as pernicious to the real interest thereof, as well as injurious to the liberty of America in general, and that they will, as far as lies in their power, promote peace and good order, as absolutely necessary to the existence of society.

Ordered, That the result of this Committee, together with the foregoing vote last passed, be posted up in some publick place in the Town, signed by the Chairman.

Attest: THEOPHILUS PARSONS, Clerk.

London, April 11, 1775.

Assistance to the Americans is rising from a new quarter. The following information may be depended upon: a Ship sailed from Stettin last month, loaded with Small Fire-Arms, Gunpowder, Ball, and Accoutrements, thirty Field-pieces of a light construction, and eight General Officers, who have served long in Germany; three of them are Messrs. Robevells, Larafont, and Gurgenstein. The arms and ammunition are actually paid for by an American agent at Berlin, who went thither from Paris; but what the footing is upon which the Officers go, is only conjectured. They are Lutherans, and certainly do not go upon mere hope of preferment. This must be a scheme of the Prussian Monarch's for disconcerting the Court of London, with whom he is upon the worst terms.

New-York, April 14, 1775.

By accounts from Staten Island, we learn that the inhabitants of that place assembled on the 11th instant, in order to take the sense of the County upon the question, Whether they would nominate Deputies to concert with other Deputies in New-York, about the choice of Delegates for the ensuing Congress? When it was almost unanimously agreed against sending Deputies.

MEETING OF FREEHOLDERS OF WESTCHESTER COUNTY, NEW-YORK.

White-Plains, in the County of Westchester, April 11, 1775.

On the 28th of March last, the following gentlemen having received letters from the Chairman of the Committee of the City and County of New-York, relative to the appointment of Deputies for this County, met at this place for the purpose of devising means for taking the sense of the County upon the subject, viz: Theodosius Bartow, Esq., William Sutton, Esq., Captain Joseph Drake, James Willis, Benjamin Drake, Moses Drake, Colonel Lewis Morris, Thomas Hunt, Abraham Legget, James Horton, Jun., Esq.; Stephen Ward, and Abraham Guion, Esq., who, having taken the same into consideration, agreed to send the following notification to the principal freeholders in the different Towns and Districts in the County, viz:

March 28, 1775.

SIR: A number of gentlemen from different Districts in the County of Westchester, having this day met at the White-Plains, to consider of the most proper method of taking the sense of the freeholders of the said County upon the expediency of choosing Deputies to meet the Deputies of the other Counties, for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent this Colony in the General Congress to be held at Philadelphia, on the 10th day of May next, are of opinion that the best way of proceeding for that purpose will be to have a general meeting of the freeholders of said County. As this County is very extensive, we take the liberty of recommending the meeting to be held at the White-Plains, on Tuesday the 11th day of April next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, at the Court-House, and therefore do desire you to give notice of the same to all the freeholders in your District, without exception, as those who do not appear and vote on that day, will be presumed to acquiesce in the sentiments of the majority of those who vote.

We are, &c., &c.

The above notice having been generally given and distributed, a very numerous body of freeholders of the County assembled at the Court House at the White-Plains, on the day appointed, and chose Colonel Lewis Morris for their Chairman. An inconsiderable number of persons, (among whom were many tenants not entitled to vote) with Isaac Wilkins, Esq. and Colonel Phillips at their head, then appeared; and Mr. Wilkins, in their behalf, (as he said,) declared that they would not join in the business of the day, or have any thing to do with Deputies or Congresses; but that they came there for the sole purpose of protesting against such illegal and unconstitutional proceedings; after which they departed.

The following question was then put to the people by the Chairman, viz: Whether they would appoint Deputies for this County, to meet the Deputies of the other Counties at the City of New-York, on the 20th of April instant, for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent this Colony in the General Congress, to be held at Philadelphia on the 10th day of May next?

To which question they unanimously answered that they would.

They then appointed the following eight persons, or a majority of them, to be the Deputies of this County, for the purpose aforesaid, viz: Colonel Lewis Morris, Stephen Ward, Daniel Drake, Esq., Colonel James Holmes, John Thomas, Jun. Esq., Jonathan Platt, Esq., Robert Graham, Major Philip Van Cortlandt.

The two following Resolves were then unanimously entered into, viz:

Resolved, That the thanks of this body be given to the virtuous minority of the General Assembly of this Province, and particularly to John Thomas and Pierre Van Cortlandt, Esquires, two of our Representatives, for their firm attachment to, and zeal on a late occasion, for the preservation of the union of the Colonies, and rights and liberties of America; and that this Resolve be communicated by the Chairman to every gentleman of whom that minority consisted.

Resolved, That the thanks of this County are due to the Delegates who composed the late Congress, for the essential services they have rendered to America in general; and that this Resolve be forthwith published.

After the business of the day was thus concluded, the people gave three huzzas for our gracious Sovereign, and dispersed quietly without the least disorder.

LEWIS MORRIS, Chairman.

MEETING OF COMMITTEES FOR THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE GRANTS.

At a meeting of Committees appointed by a large body of Inhabitants on the east side of the range of Green Mountains, held at Westminster, on the 11th day of April, 1775:

1. Voted, That Major Abijah Lovejoy be the Moderator of this meeting.

2. Voted, That Doctor Reuben Jones be the Clerk.

3. Voted, as our opinion, That our inhabitants are in great danger of having their property unjustly, cruelly, and unconstitutionally taken from them by the arbitrary and designing administration of the Government of New-York, sundry instances having already taken place.

4. Voted, as our opinion, That the lives of those inhabitants are in the utmost hazzard and imminent danger, under the present administration—witness the malicious and horrid massacre of the night of the 13th ultimo.

5. Voted, as our opinion, That it is the duty of said inhabitants, as predicated on the eternal and immutable law of self-preservation, to wholly renounce and resist the administration of the Government of New-York, till such time as the lives and property of those inhabitants may be secured by it; or till such time as they can have opportunity to lay their grievances before his most gracious Majesty in Council, together with a proper remonstrance against the unjustifiable conduct of that Government, with an humble petition to be taken out of so oppressive a jurisdiction, and either annexed to some other Government, or erected and incorporated into a new one, as may appear best to the said inhabitants, to the royal wisdom and clemency, and till such time as His Majesty shall settle this controversy.

6. Voted, That Colonel John Hazeltine, Charles Phelps, Esq., and Colonel Ethan Allen, be a Committee to prepare such remonstrance and petition for the purpose aforesaid.

Speech delivered by Captain SOLOMON UHHAUNAUWAMUT, the Chief Sachem of the MOHEAKUMNUK Tribe of INDIANS residing in STOCKBRIDGE, on the 11th day of APRIL, 1775, after sitting near two days in Council, it being an Answer to a Message sent to them by the CONGRESS.

To the Honourable John Hancock, Esq., President of the Provincial Congress, now sitting at Concord—To be communicated.

BROTHERS: We have heard you speak by your Letter; we thank you for it; we now make answer.

Brothers: You remember when you first came over the great waters, I was great and you was little—very small. I then took you in for a friend, and kept you under my arms; so that no one might injure you; since that time we have ever been true friends; there never has been any quarrel between us. But now our conditions are changed; you are become great and tall; you reach up to the clouds; you are seen all round the world; and I am become small, very little; I am not so high as your heel. Now you take care of me, and I look to you for protection.

Brothers: I am sorry to hear of this great quarrel between you and Old England. It appears that blood must soon be shed to end this quarrel. We never till this day understood the foundation of this quarrel between you and the Country you came from.

Brothers: Whenever I see your blood running, you will soon find me about you to revenge my brothers' blood. Although I am low and very small, I will gripe hold of your enemy's heel, that he cannot run so fast and so light, as if he had nothing at his heels.

Brothers: You know I am not so wise as you are, therefore I ask your advice in what I am now agoing to say. I am thinking before you come to action, to take a run to the Westward, and feel the minds of my Indian brothers, the Six Nations, and know how they stand, whether they are on your side, or for your enemies. If I find they are against you, I will try to turn their minds. I think they will listen to me; for they have always looked this way for advice concerning all important news that comes from the rising of the sun. If they hearken to me you will not be afraid of any danger from behind you. However their minds are affected, you shall soon know by me. Now I think I can do you more service in this way, than by marching off immediately to Boston, and stay there (it may be) a great while before blood runs. Now, as I said you are wiser than I, I leave this for your consideration, whether I come down immediately, or wait till I hear some blood is spilled.

Brothers: I would not have you think by this that we are falling back from our engagements; we are ready to do any thing for your relief, and shall be guided by your counsel.

Brothers: One thing I ask of you if you send for me to fight, that you will let me fight in my own Indian way. I am not used to fight English fashion, therefore you must not expect I can train like your men. Only to point out to me where your enemies keep, and that is all I shall want to know.

TO THE KING.

London, April 12, 1775.

SIRE: When the complaints and petitions of injured subjects are treated with insolence by a profligate Parliament, and with mockery by an imperious Minister, it is high time for them to assume a different tone. Your Majesty must be a great proficient in Courtly accomplishments to profess astonishment at what you could not but know full well, from the protesting majority of the independent Peers, from a hundred loud and honest voices (marvellous as that may seem) among your own faithful Commons, besides the many other Petitions from the commercial and manufacturing parts of the Kingdom, who had long before avowed their approbation of American resistance, and their utter abhorrence of the arbitrary and violent measures of Administration, against what your Majesty calls a rebellious disposition only, which barely exists in a part of your Colonies. Had an actual rebellion not only existed, but raged all over America, your Ministers could hardly have spared more forces from the National defence than are now embarked to correct a bad disposition. If your Majesty is thus severe on ill humours and dispositions, which so much pains have been taken to excite and inflame, what thunderbolts of your royal vengeance will be hurled upon actual traitors, when you shall discover them—nearer home?

Your Majesty's "entire confidence in the wisdom of your Parliament" cannot but be well founded, considering from whom they have learned and adopted their principles and resolutions, and thus qualified themselves for the "great Council of the Nation."

Surely your Majesty does not suppose your good subjects so dull of apprehension, as to believe that your American measures were originally planned and recommended to your Ministers by Parliament. They are convinced that the majority of Parliament are too modest, and know themselves too well, to give advice to Government. They know that these measures were dictated to Parliament by the Minister, (who is also dictated to by some body else,) and for no other purpose but to gain a Parliamentary sanction to indemnify the Crown and its servants from the consequences of such violent and unconstitutional proceedings. Therefore, the compliment paid to Parliament on this occasion is but little better founded, or more sincere, than that made to Great Britain in the next sentence, when your Majesty declares, that "you will steadily pursue these measures for the support of her constitutional rights and commercial interests." Your Majesty, in your great wisdom, or rather in the wisdom of your Parliament, is pleased to take measures a little extraordinary on this great occasion; which, although very expressive of the violence of your attachment to our rights and interests, it is feared, like the fostering of too fond a parent, may overlay them both. The mode graciously adopted to protect our Commerce, by starving or cutting the throats of our Colonists, it is feared will neither increase their population, nor the Trade or Revenue of Britain.

Your Majesty cannot be supposed to dissemble with or mock your people in a matter which so nearly concerns them. We must, therefore, necessarily believe, on the faith of royalty, that these measures have originated from Parliament, acting as the great Council of the Nation, and that they have been planned with no other view than to "support the constitutional rights, and protect the commercial interests of Great Britain." This is a solemn declaration, made before God and the publick; and it would ill become your subjects to entertain a doubt of that sincerity in which your Majesty has been early trained, and of which your auspicious reign has afforded so many great and singular instances.

I could wish, however, (that no opening might be left for invidious censure,) the Ministerial authors of your Majesty's speeches would endeavour, for the future, not only to think in character themselves, on the small scale of knavish craft, but that they would enable their Royal master, when he addresses the publick, to speak in character also.

Conscious of their own evil principles and designs, they put words into the Royal mouth which would only have become their own. Thus your Majesty is made to address your Capital in a low and familiar style, utterly beneath your dignity as a great King, and your nice feelings as an honest man. My Lord North might be "astonished (speaking in character, as a hollow, hypocritical, sneering Minister) that any of your subjects could be capable of countenancing a rebellious disposition, unfortunately existing in some of the Colonies;" as such tyrannical and vindictive persons are not ashamed to make actual war upon a disposition; but a King of Great Britain, conscious of his own dignity, and speaking with the majesty of truth, as well as royalty, in answer to so heavy a charge, would have expressed his astonishment at the daring presumption of the Petitioners in countenancing rebellion, not at their being "capable of countenancing a rebellious disposition only." Which is little better than if your Majesty had said, "my good friends, I am very sorry you should be so unkind as to encourage a set of people whom I am obliged to treat as rebels, although I cannot call them such at present; but in all probability, by the blessing of God on my Fleets and Armies, they will deserve that appellation very soon."

In the mean time, as your Majesty's confidence in your Parliament is almost as great as the people's distrust and detestation of them, there can be no doubt but by pursuing the salutary measures they recommend, your Government will become as respectable, though not so gentle and condescending, as your speeches.

Your Majesty will pardon the well meant simplicity of a true subject, although a plain dealer. REGULUS.

GENERAL GAGE TO GOVERNOUR MARTIN, OF NORTH-CAROLINA.

Boston, April 12, 1775.

SIR: Your letter of the 16th of March, I have had the pleasure to receive, and am glad to hear that many of the people in your Province are beginning to find they have been misled, and that they seem inclined to disengage themselves from the arbitrary power of the Continental Congress, and of their Committees. I wish I could say as much for the people of this Province, who are more cool than they were, but their leaders, by their arts and artifices, still keep up that seditious and licentious spirit, that has led them on all occasions to oppose Government, and even to acts of rebellion. The late accounts from England have embarrassed their councils much. They have applied to the New-England Governments, and doubtless will to those at the Southward, to assist them, but I hope the madness of the latter is wearing off, and that they will get no encouragement from thence.

This Province has some time been, and now is, in the new-fangled Legislature, termed a Provincial Congress, who seem to have taken the Government into their hands. What they intend to do I cannot pretend to say, but they are much puzzled how to act. Fear in some, and a want of inclination in others, will be a great bar to their coming to extremities, though their leaders use every measure to bring them into the field. I have the honour to be, &c.

THOMAS GAGE.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE AT FALMOUTH TO SAMUEL FREEMAN, DATED APRIL 12, 1775.

Last night we had a letter from the Committee at Boston, wherein they say they should be extremely uneasy to find any omission of duty "in behalf of this Province and the other Colonies, as the eyes of the whole Continent are upon us. The tools of power wish for an opportunity to charge us with negligence, and are watching for it, to make a division between this Province and the other Colonies. We, therefore, again recommend to you, as our firm opinion, that you conform strictly and religiously to the Association of the Continental Congress in every respect, without favour or affection to any person whatever. We are of opinion, to suspend the publication of your Resolves respecting Captain Coulson, till we hear from you whether he has complied with the request of the Committee, conformable to the Resolution of the Continental Congress." Coulson no sooner arrived, but the next day had the Canoe Man-of-War up to Town, and his old Bristol Sloop alongside of his new Ship, taking out the goods. But it seems he cannot get any of our people to help him; and I do not think he will be able to get his Ship loaded and rigged, unless he gets the Man-of-War's men to do it. And I hear that Captain Mowat has been pressing men; some he releases, and some retains; and it is suggested by some, that his design is to supply Captain Coulson with men from his own Ship. We shall do all we can to prevent any other person from breaking the Association. I do not think it will be amiss for you to acquaint some of the Committee of Inspection in Boston of Captain Coulson's conduct, with which the People in general, in Town and Country, are very much dissatisfied.

We rejoice in your zeal and firmness in so trying a time as this, and we pray God to support you in so good a cause as the preservation of our liberties, civil and religious.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN ENGLAND TO HIS CORRESPONDENT IN VIRGINIA.

The sword is drawn here, and the scabbard thrown away. What are you to do? Submission and slavery are the same. The question then can only be, how shall we best resist the chains prepared for us?

Let Virginia, Maryland, and South-Carolina declare their resolution to stand by the Massachusetts; let the non-import be commenced as soon as possible. Were it not for the import of American Grain, this Country would this moment be in famine and insurrection. Be vigilant in keeping the Non-Import and Export Resolutions unviolated in the smallest degree. Select the best of the Militia, train and arm them well, and familiarize them to the right of resistance and the necessity of exerting it; cultivate the frontier Militia and their leaders. Much will depend on them. It is determined to put you to the trial; and every thing that is dear to us depends on your firmness. Remember that night is the time when the discipline of the Regulars is least availing, and their artillery useless. One year's firm observation of your Resolutions must reduce the Ministry to the necessity of capitulating. This Country cannot bear one year's interruption of her Commerce. It is impossible. A protractive war on your part must enfeeble her Army, which cannot be recruited but at a vast expense of time and money. The interruption of commerce brings, in a year's time, half our Merchants and Manufacturers to beggary, loads her landed interest with additional publick taxes and poor's rates, so as to shake every part of the community to its foundation. Nothing but a miracle can support them under such an accumulation of calamities. Let it be your study, therefore, to promote a frugality and industry in providing against the consequences of the interruption to you, so as to prevent popular disorders, and keep the people firm. You have the game in your own hands; a little patience, a little endurance, and your victory is sure. If you conquer in this contest, you will be the freest, the most prosperous and respected people in the world; if you submit, the most inexorable yoke that ever galled the neck of any Nation will be your lot. The threats thrown out here against you are fit only for savages. It is impossible to conceive with what approbation the House of Commons heard a Colonel Grant, the same who commanded the expedition with Colonel Lewis to Fort Duquesne, declare, that he had always treated the Americans as beasts of burden, and that they deserved no better usage, being fit for nothing else. American fraud, American rapine, American cowardice, and American insolence, are the perpetual topics of ministerial declamation. When America is the question, every idea of justice or mercy seems to be extinguished. Your own experience of seven years' ineffectual supplication will show that their professions of readiness to hear and redress grievances is a mere mockery.

The very existence of liberty on the face of this earth; the precious possession of it to you and your posterity from generation to generation; the avoiding the most cruel bondage and thralldom that ever ground the faces of a miserable people, all depend upon a year or two's exertion of virtue, fortitude, and forbearance in America. How infinite the purchase, and how cheap! Orders are certainly sent to seize particular persons. Reprisals will surely be made; but remember it is a state of war, and therefore be guarded. It is not the way to conquer the lion to run into his mouth.

I have the greatest inclination to come over. And yet I think I can be more serviceable here; nor do I imagine myself in less danger. On the contrary, I am certain of the intention of destroying certain American advocates here, when the temper of the times render it safe. Adieu.

Williamsburgh, Virginia, April 13, 1775.

By the last prints from England, we find that the proceedings of the General Congress have had a strange effect upon the minds of the people in that quarter. Some esteem and applaud them as a production of a most masterly nature; whilst others, swayed by the influence of the ministerial party, and their votaries, declare them not even worthy of notice; that the sentiments contained therein spring merely from a distempered imagination, and that they are naught but the effusions of wild, intolerable enthusiasm. But our wonder, on this account, must immediately cease when we consider that America is not yet without her enemies, who now reside within her territories; enemies who, notwithstanding they are wholly and entirely dependant upon her for subsistence, that would pleasingly aid, if we may judge from their conduct, in showering every misery upon this unhappy Country.

In the last English paper that we have received are the following paragraphs from some of those pious and deserving advocates (who unfortunately reside in Boston) for the meek and gentle measures of Administration; they are termed authentick, and are addressed to persons of great consequence in England:

"The residence of the General Congress at Philadelphia has entirely debauched the minds of the people of that place, who were heretofore the last to make objection to any measure of Government, but are now as violent as any other of the Colonies. I am informed by a gentleman in whom I can confide, that every resolution of the Congress will be strictly adhered to. No place on the Continent has shown so great an inclination to disobey the dictates of the General Congress as New-York.

"The Provincial Congress thought it prudent to decamp soon after the arrival of the Scarborough and Asia, and are removed to Worcester from Cambridge. The proceedings have been kept so close that nothing has transpired but what they have put in the papers themselves.

"Associations are forming in several Towns in the country by the well-thinking and better sort of people for their defence, who have been till now obliged to do just as the rabble dictated, very contrary to their own sentiments.

"Our good General has his hands full; you are not unacquainted with the people he has to deal with. If they are suffered to go on, adieu to all happiness in this Country; but surely the lion will be roused at last. Notwithstanding their boasted numbers, a determined frown even will make them tremble."

COMMITTEE OF YORK-TOWN, YORK COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA, TO JOHN HANCOCK AND THOMAS CUSHING.

York-Town, April 13, 1775.

HONOURED FRIENDS AND COUNTRYMEN: Sorry are we to hear that the hand of oppression still bears hard on your City, and that the distresses of your poor are not yet alleviated. If your misfortunes and sufferings could be divided, the inhabitants of this County would cheerfully bear a part. This, it seems, cannot be done; your destined Town must stand the shock alone. We want words to express the high sense we have of your conduct and virtue; few men in the world would have opposed despotism, and stood the torrent of ministerial vengeance with so much steadiness, intrepidity, and resolution, as the inhabitants of your Town and Country have done. You have true notions of liberty. You have purchased it. You ought to enjoy it. The noble stand made by the Province of Massachusetts-Bay, if faithfully adhered to, has laid the foundation for establishing American liberty on the most firm basis. The other Colonies will be equally gainers by a favourable determination of the contest, and will not desert you in the time of danger; they will doubtless grant you the most effectual assistance.

This County, upon the earliest intelligence of your distress, forwarded subscriptions for the poor of Boston. Grain was generally subscribed; we expected to have sent it last fall, but could not collect it at any seaport before the winter season came on, so that the shipping of it was postponed till the spring. Upon the meeting of the Committee of this County in February last, shortly after the receipt of the King's Speech to the Parliament, it was thought that it would not be safe to send Grain. The Committee, therefore, determined to convert the Grain into cash, and remit the same in Specie or Bills of Exchange to you. Your poor have suffered much by this Resolution, as the price of Wheat is greatly fallen. The subscriptions of but a part of the County are yet come in. We send you the sum of £246 8s. 10d., to be remitted to you in Bills of Exchange or Specie, by Messrs. Jonathan B. Smith and John Mitchell, Merchants of Philadelphia, which be pleased to distribute among our poor and unhappy countrymen in your Town, or in its neighbourhood, in such manner as you shall think proper. As there are a few disaffected people in this Province, we must trouble you to publish the receipt of the donations as is mentioned in the enclosed paper.* Your friends here are numerous, and most heartily interested themselves in your favour. As soon as the rest of the subscriptions in this County are paid, we shall cheerfully remit the same to you.

We wish you a speedy relief from all your sufferings, and are, gentlemen, with the greatest respect, your real friends and most obedient humble servants,

PROTEST OF INHABITANTS AND FREEHOLDERS OF WEST-CHESTER COUNTY, NEW-YORK.

County of Westchester, April 13, 1775.

Mr. RIVINGTON: Be pleased to insert the following, and you will oblige a number of your friends and subscribers.

On Thursday, the 11th instant, a very respectable number of freeholders and inhabitants of the County of Westchester, assembled at the White Plains, in the said County, agreeable to the notice given, that their sentiments might be known concerning the choice of a Committee to meet their Committee in the City of New-York, for the purpose of choosing Delegates to represent this Colony in the next Continental Congress.

The friends of order and Government met at the house of Captain Hatfield; those who were for a Committee, put up at another publick house in the Town. About twelve o'clock, word was brought to the gentlemen at Captain Hatfield's, that the opposite party had already entered upon the business of the day; upon which they immediately walked down to the Court-House, although not half of their friends, who were expected, had yet appeared, where they found the other company collected in a body. The numbers on each side seemed to be nearly equal, and both together might amount to two hundred, or, at most, two hundred and fifty. The friends to Government then declared, that as they had been unlawfully called together, and for an unlawful purpose, they did not intend to contest the matter with them by a poll, which would be tacitly acknowledging the authority that had summoned them thither; but that they came only with a design to protest against all such disorderly proceedings, and to shew their detestation of all unlawful Committees and Congresses. They then declared their determined resolution to continue steadfast in their allegiance to their gracious and merciful Sovereign, King George the Third; to submit to lawful authority; and to abide by and support the only true representatives of the people of this Colony—the General Assembly. Then giving three huzzas, they returned to Captain Hatfield's, singing, as they went, with a loyal enthusiasm, the grand and animating song of "God save great George our King." "Long live our noble King," &c., &c.

At their return, finding that many of their friends had arrived during their absence, and that many still kept coming in, they proceeded to draw up and sign the following Declaration, which they seemed to do with as much patriotic zeal as ever warmed the hearts of true and faithful subjects, and afterwards dispersed to their different habitations.

"We, the subscribers, freeholders and inhabitants of the County of Westchester, having assembled at the White Plains, in consequence of certain advertisements, do now declare, that we met here to declare our honest abhorrence of all unlawful Congresses and Committees, and that we are determined, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to support the King and Constitution; and that we acknowledge no Representatives but the General Assembly, to whose wisdom and integrity we submit the guardianship of our rights, liberties, and privileges."

The following persons, not being able to attend at the Plains, requested, by their friends, that their names might be added to the list of protesters, viz:

John Hunt, Esq.,	Philip Palmer, Esq.,	John Hitchcock,
Jeremiah Hitchcock,	William Bond,	Joseph Bond.

The foregoing account is strictly true, as can be proven by the testimony (or, if necessary, by the affidavits) of a number of persons of the most unquestionable character in this County. What, then, must we think of such persons as have propagated a report, that the friends of Government were, upon this occasion, out-numbered five to one, and that many of the persons whose names were subscribed to the foregoing Declaration, were not on that day present at the

* NORTH-CASTLE, May 8, 1775.—Mr. Rivington: In your paper lately I saw my name to a Protest. I never signed it, but went into Captain Hatfield's house, and was asked whether I was a Whig or a Tory? I made answer, that I did not understand the meaning of those words, but was for liberty and peace. Upon which some body put down my name. Now, sir, I desire you will print this, to show the world that I have not deserved to be held up in the light of a protester.

White Plains? They must be conscious to themselves that they have spread abroad a falsehood, and they are hereby called upon, if they dare, to set their names to those assertions.

In what manner those gentlemen, who chose the Committee at the Plains, proceeded, we cannot positively say; but this we can declare with truth, that we do not believe they can produce to the publick the names of a hundred and fifty persons who voted for a Committee that day, and we are verily persuaded that they did their utmost to make their party as numerous as possible. How then can they justify their choice of a Committee? Or how can they presume to impose upon the world, and to insult the loyal County of Westchester in so barefaced a manner?

It is well known here, that two-thirds at least of the inhabitants of this County are friends to order and Government, and opposed to Committees and all unlawful combinations; and it will be made apparent to the world that they are so, as soon as certain Resolves, now signing freely by the people, shall be ready for publication. And one principal reason why the friends to Government did not assemble in greater numbers than they did, on Tuesday last, was, that many of them had already, by signing those Resolves, testified their loyalty to the King, their attachment to the Constitution, their enmity to Committees, and their acquiescence in the prudent measures taken by the Assembly in the late session, for accommodating the unhappy difference between the Mother Country and the Colonies, and consequently thought they had done their duty.

The Committee that was chosen may, with some kind of propriety, be said to represent those particular persons who chose them; but how they can be denominated the Representatives of the County of Westchester, who, in general, abhor Committees and Committee-men, and are determined to take no steps that may lead them into rebellion, we cannot conceive. Certainly the friends to Government, who were collected at Captain Hatfield's, had a better right, from their number, to determine that there should be no Committee, than the opposite party had to appoint one; and might, with much greater propriety, be said to shew the sense of the County than the few who acted without authority, and in direct opposition to Government and to the determinations of our worthy Assembly; and we doubt not but the impartial publick will consider the matter in this light, and not esteem the act of a few individuals, unlawfully assembled, as the act (which it most assuredly is not) of the very respectable, populous, and loyal County of Westchester.

TO THE PUBLICK.

Morrisiana, May 7, 1775.

A very extraordinary paper, called a Protest against the proceedings of the Freeholders of the County of Westchester, relative to the election of Deputies for the late Convention, and said to have been subscribed by the several persons whose names are printed with it, was published in Mr. Rivington and Gaine's Gazette a few weeks ago.

By whom this performance was given to the publick is uncertain; and being as little distinguished by decency as by truth, there is reason to suspect the author's name will remain a secret.

The falsities contained in this representation are too flagrant to impose upon any person in this Colony; and nothing but the apprehension of its gaining credit in other parts of the world would have induced me to have made it the subject of animadversion.

I shall pass over the many little embellishments with which the author's fancy has endeavoured to decorate his narrative; nor is it necessary to call in question the reality of that loyal enthusiasm by which it is said those good people were influenced; and I really wish that had been the fact, because when inconsistencies and fooleries result from inebriety or enthusiasm, they merit our pity, and escape indignation and resentment.

Much pains, I confess, were on that day taken to make temporary enthusiasts, and with other more exhilarating spirit than the spirit of loyalty.

To give the appearance of dignity to these curious and very orderly protesters, the author has been very mindful to annex every man's addition to his name, upon a presumption, perhaps, that it would derive weight from the title of Mayor, Esquire, Captain, Lieutenant, Judge, &c.

But it is not easy to conceive why the publisher should be less civil to the clergy, than to the gentry and commonalty. Samuel Seabury and Luke Babcock, certainly ought not to have been sent into the world floating on a newspaper in that plain way; the one is the "Reverend Mr. Samuel Seabury, Rector of the united parishes of East and Westchester, and one of the missionaries for propagating the Gospel (and not politicks) in foreign parts," &c., &c. The other is the "Reverend Mr. Luke Babcock, who preaches and prays for Mr. Philipse and his tenants, at Philipseburgh."

In this formidable catalogue of three hundred and twelve sober and loyal protesters, there are not less than one hundred and seventy, who, after the most diligent inquiry, I cannot find have the least pretensions to a vote; and indeed many of them are lads under age.

Their names are as follows:—

Of the others who are Freeholders, many also hold lands at will of Colonel Philipse; so that the truth really is, that very few independent Freeholders objected to the appointment of Deputies.

LEWIS MORRIS.

FOR THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

Boston, April 13, 1775.

My worthy Friends and Fellow-Countrymen:

The charms of power are very intoxicating and bewitching. Mankind are naturally inclined to usurp authority over their fellow-men, whenever an opportunity presents; and it may be generally observed, that when their right to it is most questionable, their exercise of it is most wanton and unreasonable. This may be easily accounted for, as they fear its duration will be but short, and therefore are disposed to leave a testimonial of their having enjoyed it. In no instance do we see this truth more strongly verified, than in the conduct of the late American Continental Congress, who, in most of their proceedings, have exceeded the powers delegated to them, and in still more have counteracted the design of their appointment. That there are some grievances, or rather, that the time is come explicitly to define and settle the rights of the Americans; and the bounds of Parliamentary authority, will be denied by none who wish well to Great Britain and her Colonies. But to demand too much of a Nation that is wealthy, powerful, and brave, that we may obtain enough, discovers a childish petulance and forwardness, tending much more to irritate and inflame, than to soften and appease. She will, like a kind parent, correct our insolence, and reduce us to due subjection, and then allow us every indulgence that we ought reasonably to desire. As it is not her interest, so we can never suppose it her inclination, to injure or oppress us; but we may be equally satisfied that she will never see her just and constitutional authority abused and trampled on.

We cannot wonder, then, that the conduct of the Congress is so displeasing and provoking to Great Britain, when, among the articles of complaint, they have inserted matters which concerned them no more than the mandates of the Great Mogul, or the edicts of the King of France; matters which, if true, even in their very extensive construction, afford no real ground of uneasiness; matters which discover more a wanton exercise of their usurped authority, than a wish or inclination to restore harmony and peace between Great Britain and her Colonies. Indeed, when we review their proceedings, the manifest intention, tendency, and complexion of them force us to make a construction over which charity and candour would wish to throw a veil, if it was not too plain to mistake it, being written in the most legible characters. They have precluded every hope of accommodation, by the exorbitancy of their demands, and the illegality of the measures they have adopted. They have sacrificed their honour, honesty, and reputation, to a lawless, ambitious thirst of independence, and have purchased the worthless, transitory shouts and eclat of the restless and seditious multitude, at the expense of that lasting and satisfactory esteem and applause of the virtuous and the good, which alone ought to have been the object of their wishes, and the end of all their pursuits. The propriety of these observations will be apparent, in the consideration of the fifteenth and last general article of grievance, which, like the famed Cerberus of old, abounds with various sources of complaint.

"In the last session of Parliament an Act was passed for blocking up the Harbour of Boston; another empowering the Governour of the Massachusetts-Bay to send persons indicted for murder in that Province, to another Colony, or even to Great Britain, for trial, whereby such offenders may escape legal punishment; a third for altering the chartered Constitution of Government in that Province; and a fourth for extending the limits of Quebeck, abolishing the English, and restoring the French Laws, whereby great numbers of British freemen are subject to the latter, and establishing an absolute Government, and the Roman Catholic Religion throughout those vast regions that border on the westerly and northerly boundaries of the free Protestant English settlements; and a fifth for the better providing suitable quarters for Officers and Soldiers in His Majesty's service in North America." The Boston Port Act, when it first arrived, filled all parties with astonishment and surprise; the peculiarity of the mode of punishment; the severity with which it was attended; the sufferings inflicted thereby on many innocent individuals, at first raised a suspicion of the justice, equity, and policy of the British Nation; but on a nearer view, and more mature consideration of the spirit and design of the Act, we plainly discovered that, in the midst of judgment they had remembered mercy. The authority of Parliament had been most iniquitously and flagrantly abused, insulted, and opposed, by the destruction of a large quantity of Tea, the private property of the East-India Company, by a number of the inhabitants of the Town of Boston and the adjacent Towns, in the most riotous and daring manner. This Tea was sent here in consequence of a particular Act of Parliament, empowering the East-India Company to do it, merely for the regulation of Trade; as the Dutch Tea was smuggled in by the way of the Northern Colonies, in such quantities, and so cheap, as totally destroyed the sale of the English Tea, which, by being sold at publick auction in London to the merchant there, and by him with his advance upon it, to the merchant here; by the latter with his advance, to the retailer, and by him with his profits upon it, to the consumer, was raised to such a price as gave the Dutch Company the sole advantage of that article of commerce, as it came from them without any of these impositions, or the payment of any duty upon it.

We all profess to be subject to the Acts for the regulation of Trade; for this purpose solely was this Act made; by it no new duty was imposed, but some heavy restrictions taken off, so that the destruction of the Tea could be considered as arising only from the most wanton and unreasonable desire of throwing off all subjection to the Parent State, and setting up for independence. Proportionate, therefore, to the criminality and atrocious nature of the offence, might we reasonably suppose the punishment would be. Not only the private property of the East-India Company had been destroyed, but the honour and authority of the Nation had been injured and violated. The former was to be compensated, and the latter to be satisfied and repaired. The inhabitants of Boston and the other towns concerned, could not be more generally and immediately affected by any other way whatever. It will here be said it is hard for the innocent to suffer with the guilty; but the answer is obvious: the offenders were disguised and unknown; no one appeared at the time to oppose it; all might, therefore, be considered as involved in the guilt in some measure. The friends of Government, by their silence and inactivity in the first of these troubles, when they might have prevented the mischiefs that have since ensued, and the daring outrage which was now the cause of their punishment, had they properly exerted themselves, have therefore little reason to complain of the disadvantages they suffer, or the loss they sustain on this account. However, admitting they were quite innocent, and had done their duty on this occasion, it should be remembered, that as in general calamities of lightning, earthquakes, famine, war, and pestilence, inflicted by Heaven on mankind, there is no respect to persons, the wicked and the good are equally exposed and actually affected; so in States and Kingdoms in this world, when general punishments of a people are found necessary, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to discriminate and screen the innocent from the misfortunes which the guilty suffer. But in this instance, as was hinted above, with such wisdom, with so much lenity was the Port Act constructed, that the severity of its operation depended entirely upon the reasonable compliance or obstinacy of those who were to suffer by it. It was an indispensable act of common justice to pay for the Tea that had been destroyed, or it was equally just to punish those who were concerned in doing it. It has been said, that had the Act been conditional, to take place only if the terms were not complied with, there would have been some reason in it; no one would have complained; but not to be able to prevent the execution of it, had they been disposed to submit to the requisitions, was a degree of rigour without an example. Let us attend to the circumstances. It was made to take place the first of June; fourteen days after that were allowed for any vessels to fit out and sail; upon payment for the Tea being made, and some other trifling matters complied with, and a certificate procured from the Governour of the fulfilment of the terms of the Act, power was given to His Majesty in privy Council to suspend its execution. The Act arrived near the beginning of May, if I recollect right. Now, as the Spring ships are generally all arrived before the time that the Act was to take place, it would have little effect for some time after that upon foreign importation. If the Tea had been immediately paid for, and the requisite certificate procured, which might easily have been done, and transmitted home, the operation of the Act might have ceased at once; as it seems to have been particularly provided for this purpose, that the King in Council might suspend it, that so no delay might be occasioned by calling the Parliament together to repeal it. Orders for Fall goods might have been sent at the same time, and the Fall ships might have returned at their usual time, into an open and free Port; so that by a prudent conduct, the trade with Great Britain might not have been interrupted at all; other branches might have suffered a temporary damage, but it would have been trifling; as by the last of August we might have had the news of the Port's being open again. So that by the folly, injustice, and madness alone of the popular leaders, has this Act been attended with the distresses and inconveniences which are now so sensibly felt. Now let me ask, with what reason, with what justice, could an Englishman, could an American, could any one, who wished the prosperity of Britain, complain of an Act which was made solely to benefit the English merchant in preference to the Dutch? especially in the sale of an article of so much importance, in such constant and extensive use and consumption; and after the people here, being deluded and hurried on by a seditious tribe of demagogues had, in open violation of the common rights of society, of every principle of justice, of their allegiance to their Sovereign, of their constitutional dependance upon Great Britain, so wantonly and maliciously destroyed so large and valuable a quantity of merchandise, let me ask, where is the man so destitute of every principle of honesty, of every sentiment of honour, so deaf to the call of equity and justice, and the demands of law, as to hesitate one moment to make the most ample and satisfactory restitution in his power? To this question, to which it must pain every loyal American to return an answer, I, with equal grief and astonishment, reply, the Town of Boston, in Town-Meeting assembled, were the men. These men, who, by their conduct, had drawn down the resentment of the Nation; by their subsequent unaccountable proceedings, have been the wilful cause of the continuation of those distresses, of which they now so highly complain and so sensibly feel the effects; and such has been their fatal influence, that they prevailed upon the House of Representatives to appoint a solemn fast, to beseech of the Almighty a sanction to their violence and robbery. What unpardonable hypocrisy! What unheard-of mockery of Heaven! What unparalleled effrontery! Can it be supposed that the Divine Being, who, by the principles of natural religion implanted in the human mind, and by the repeated precepts in his written word, has so plainly commanded us to abstain from fraud, rapine, and injustice, and has denounced the most heavy woes upon those who are guilty of these heinous crimes, will ever hearken to the supplications of those who refuse to make restitution to their fellow-creatures, whom they have grossly, wantonly, and unreasonably injured? Nevertheless, the good people of the Province were so far deluded and misled, as to adopt so unpardonable a measure. It was, however, hoped, that the Members of the Continental Congress, free from the infatuation which was so prevalent here, unbiassed by our prejudices, uninfluenced by passions, and attentive to the true interests of the Province and Continent, would have recommended the payment for the Tea, as a necessary step to a reconciliation. But alas! we find them influenced by the same factious leaders, by their conduct virtually approving of this daring injustice. Upon no other principle can we account for their inserting the Boston Port Act in the list of grievances, when a compliance with the most obvious, indispensable demands of justice, would at once have suspended the execution of it.

The next particular in this very comprehensive article, is another Act, "empowering the Governour of the Massachusetts-Bay to send persons indicted for murder in that Province to another Colony, or even to Great Britain, for trial, whereby such offenders may escape legal punishment." It is really astonishing to see the low artifice and glaring falsehood made use of in this description of the Act. It is not true that the Governour is thus empowered, as the Act expressly requires the advice and consent of the Council, before any person can be removed to any other place prescribed by the Act for trial; so that, however arbitrarily the Governour may be disposed to act in this instance, if the Council refuse their consent, he can do nothing. What could induce the Congress thus to sacrifice their characters as honest men, (as I presume some of them were,) is totally unaccountable. If the Act is really grievous, is it not much better to represent it in a true light, than by falsehood and high colouring, to mislead and deceive every reader who does not examine the statute for himself? To make the people believe that the Governour has it in his power to tyrannize at pleasure over them, when in reality he can do nothing himself? If it is not grievous, will such misrepresentations make it so? Can they be justified upon any good and virtuous principle? Ought not those men, who, by such pitiful, base methods, can attempt to stir up a people to acts of treason and rebellion, and destroy the peace and happiness of millions, to be held in everlasting infamy and contempt? Reason dictates, justice demands, that they should.

Let us attend to the other expressions used in the description of this Act: "Send persons indicted for murder in that Province to another Colony, or even to Great Britain, for trial." Is not this expression plainly calculated to induce a belief that all persons indicted for any murder may be thus removed? Is it not general and indefinite, without any exception, without any restriction, to the particular offences specified in the Act? I grant, that were the Act such as is here represented, it would be a most alarming grievance, a matter requiring every effort in our power to get it redressed; and the more distressing and oppressive it would be if true, so much greater is the guilt and wickedness of those men who would make us believe it to be so. But if we examine the statute itself, we shall find it really calculated to promote the more impartial administration of justice in those instances to which it relates. If we advert to the design of its being made, and the cause which gave rise to it, we shall be convinced of its propriety and expediency. The destruction of the Tea above mentioned had been effected in open and direct opposition to, and violation of, an Act of Parliament; no Magistrate had interposed to prevent it; it was the prevailing opinion of the common people, who formed their political creed upon the principles, practices, and information of their seditious leaders, that Acts of Parliament were not binding in America. They, therefore, did not consider themselves as committing an act of treason in destroying it, but at most a trespass at common law; nay! some, in their phrensy, thought it a meritorious action, and that they were doing God service by their zeal in such a cause. If, therefore, any civil Magistrate, or others by his command, had, in resisting these rioters and traitors, put any of them to death, and had been brought to a trial for it here, such was the ferment of the times, so infectious and extensive the infatuation, that the chance was ten thousand to one that the jury to pass upon their lives would consist of men who had adopted these erroneous opinions, who would therefore think the conduct of the accused unlawful and criminal, and consequently bring them in guilty of murder; and I have no doubt but this would have been the case, had such resistance been made at that time. The Parliament might justly suppose that this notorious violence passing "uncontrolled and unpunished," was owing to this cause; at least this is the most favourable and charitable construction that they could put upon it. But be that as it may, their attention to future instances of the same kind, to prevent such daring outrages, to induce submission to Acts of Parliament, and to encourage the civil Magistrate and others in the execution of their duty, was evidently the design of the Act; and it is equally evident, to use the words in the preamble of the Act, that Magistrates and others might "be discouraged from the proper discharge of their duty, by an apprehension that, in case of their being questioned for any acts done in execution of the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, they might be liable to be brought to trial for the same before persons who do not acknowledge the validity of the laws, in the execution whereof, or the authority of the Magistrate, in support of whom such acts had been done." Especially when, for a bare disavowal of the violence and opposition to British laws, and the illegal, dangerous spirit that then did and still does prevail, whole Towns have been stigmatised, and individuals insulted and abused. Nay, if those who would venture to resist and quell any riots or mobs fortunately were acquitted by their peers, upon a fair, open, and impartial trial, they have still been pursued with unrelenting vengeance, and their names and characters held up to publick view in the most infamous and odious light: witness the institution on the fifth of March; that disgrace to humanity, dishonour to the laws, and paragon of infernal malice! Thus, while every discouragement has been given to the due execution of the laws, when we were absolutely reduced to a state of lawless anarchy, can we with reason complain of an Act calculated to restore us to peace, quietness, and order; an Act which provides an impartial trial for men who shall laudably venture to enforce a due obedience to the laws and constitutional authority of the Parent State.

But the fatal mischief which the quick-sighted Congress have discovered, in this Act, that "hereby such offenders may escape legal punishment," at once excites our pity for their weakness, and resentment for their dishonesty. Surely their complaisance to this Province arose to an unbounded height, thus to compliment us, not only at the expense of all the other Colonies upon the Continent, but even of Great Britain. I am apt to suspect they undertook the description of this Act immediately after the adoption of the Suffolk Resolves; in these two instances their conduct seems to be uniform and consistent. And is there not, then, to be found in the Kingdom of Great Britain, nor in all the Colonies; an uncorrupted Court and twelve impartial Jurors, who will act agreeable to law and justice, save in the renowned Province of the Massachusetts-Bay? Cannot a fair and legal trial be had in any other part of the Dominions? Or, what I was not aware of before, did the Congress think there could not be found elsewhere a Court and Jury so intoxicated with popular rage and delusion, as to condemn men, as guilty of murder, who had only discharged their duty in the due execution of the laws? And, therefore, in their great humanity complain that they should have any chance for an acquittal! I am at a loss on which of these principles to account for the conduct of the Congress. But it is so ridiculous to pretend that a fair trial cannot be had out of this Province, when every circumstance favours a contrary supposition, that it hardly deserves a serious answer. Thus, my dear friends and fellow-countrymen, have the Congress left that path which their duty and our interest pointed out, and followed the lead of a few men, who, had they been influenced by any laudable or virtuous considerations, we should have been saved from the calamities that now awaits us.

As this publication is so lengthy, I must defer the remaining part of the article for a future paper.

Boston, April 13, 1775.

My Friends and Fellow-Countrymen:

It is not to be wondered at that disappointed men, grown wanton by peculation, whose ambition suggested to them the hope of overturning a Constitution which themselves, their ancestors, and the community had enjoyed, and the British Nation acceded to for near a century and a half, should endeavour to convince their fellow-countrymen of the rectitude and fitness of their exertions; when suspected, if not convicted, at the bar of the impartial publick of a series of treasonable acts and perfidious plots, by which their Country and millions of their fellow-mortals are plunged into a choice of the greatest calamities, that they should call opposition to their measures by lying names, treason, and rebellion; that they should attempt to fix the imputation of their own crimes upon those who have, in some degree, detected and baffled their oppressive schemes; that they should struggle to carry their points, by imposing upon the understandings of some, and practising on the hopes and fears of others; is no way astonishing. Such men blush at nothing; ever restless and craving, over-heated in the pursuits of honour and profit, they yield themselves up to the dominion of principles as unworthy the man as ever the wretched animals of unbounded ambition were under the influence of, or the willing tools of despotick power advocates for.*

Massachusettensis, in his publication of January 23d, after giving us some historical facts, and his observations upon them, which go to the right of Parliament, bursts forth into the most virulent invectives against those gentlemen who have been deputed, by the free and unsolicited suffrages of the people, to watch the encroachments of power, and to concert means to withstand the efforts of tyranny, which, like an inundation, was breaking in upon us, sweeping away all our social blessings. The application of his facts, and the pertinency of his observations, goes wholly upon the presumption that the Colonies were parts of the British Empire, even from their first discovery, or, for aught appears, from the creation of the world, and as such subject to the British Parliament in all cases. Therefore, as there is nothing new in this part of his paper, the answers which we have repeatedly made to such presumptions, void of proof, will, upon recollection, apply, and be a sufficient confutation. For this reason I will not take up your time with unnecessary observations upon his first paragraphs on this subject.

* It gives me no pleasure to write; it must give pain, to a good mind to read a character which wounds his species (his countrymen) with disgrace and infamy. I am sorry to say there are some on both sides the Atlantic, to whom it but too well applies. Charity hopes all things, and may plead for tenderness and indulgence. But the first obligations upon a writer are to truth and justice, offend whom it may.

Our writer tells us the novelty of our being exempted from the authority of Parliament will appear, by an extract from a pamphlet published in 1764, by a gentleman who was then an oracle of the Whigs, and whose profound knowledge in the Law and Constitution is equalled but by few. This extract asserts that all the Colonies are subject to, and dependant on Great Britain, and that the Parliament has authority to make laws binding upon them for their general good, &c. This gentleman, who has been one of the greatest ornaments of his profession as a lawyer, has made all America his debtors for his agonizing struggles in opposition to usurpation and tyranny by British powers. He has more than once nobly stood forth to stem the torrent. His publick life has been a political conflict with principalities and powers, with men whom, from a lust of power, have been plotting the ruin of this ill-fated Province, together with this great patriot.

The Whigs call no man master under Heaven, however great; their appeal is to the law and to the testimony, to the Constitution of their Country, and the eternal principles of nature. The position laid down by the gentleman alluded to, as it stands unsupported by argument or reason, whatever might induce to it in his mind, is but the opinion of one individual of the community. Admitting that it was his opinion that the right of Parliament was as extensive as her present claims, which was not the case, it would only prove a diversity of opinion in different men, which is sometimes the case in the same man at different times. This is incident to humanity, especially before a thorough examination of the subject. We might apply to it an observation of his own upon a similar occasion, "that when great men miss it, they miss it most egregiously." They, as has been remarked on this very pamphlet, sometimes see men as trees walking. However, Massachusettensis, ever consistent with himself, fully answers this, his own argument, in his paper of March 16th. "Messieurs Otis, Cushing, Hancock, and Adams," says he, "were confidential friends, and made common cause. May we thence infer, that the three latter held that the Parliament had a just and equitable right to impose taxes on the Colonies, &c., because the first did." He adds, "such principles and inferences are unlucky," that is, nothing can be inferred from them. If so, can we infer the sentiments of the publick from the opinion of one gentleman? How, then, does the above extract, which has been published and republished, cited and recited by our writer, prove, upon his own principles, that the denial of the authority of Parliament over the Colonies is a novelty?

We are next presented with an extract from the Farmer's Letters, who, we are told, took the lead in explaining away the right of Parliament to raise a revenue in America, where, speaking of the regulation of Trade, tells us, "he who considers these Provinces as States distinct from the British Empire, has very slender notions of justice, or of their interest. We are but parts of a whole, and therefore there must exist a power somewhere to preside and preserve the connection in due order. This power is lodged in Parliament, and we are as much dependant on Great Britain as a perfectly free people can be on another." This elegant writer and firm assertor of his Country's rights, who took the lead, still holds a conspicuous place among the American worthies, the guardians of our liberties. His sentiment respecting the rights of Parliament is sufficiently evident from the result of the Congress, of which he was a member, as well as from the whole tenour of those Letters, which have been translated and admired by different Nations in Europe. It is admitted that the Colonies and Great Britain are one; are parts of a whole, in their commercial interest. They see the necessity of a power somewhere, to preside, and preserve this commercial connection in due order. They consent that Parliament should exercise this power; we contend only for the rights and privileges of a perfectly free people, submitting to Acts for the regulating of Trade.

Massachusettensis having, as he says, settled the right of Parliament, dips his pen in gall; lost to all sense of candour or generosity, to all the noble sallies of the charitable soul, arms it with invectives, and with a facility peculiar to himself, hurls the envenomed shafts of obliquy and reproach against some of the fairest characters on the Continent. He lashes all around him indiscriminately, with the dire scourges of calumny and slander.

To show what engines some of the Tories, even the mildest of them, employ in their political war; what indecencies a party spirit betrays them into; to what expedients, and pitiful shifts they sometimes stoop, I will transcribe the substance of a part of this acrimonious . . .

We are told, that the Resolves of our Congresses either argue profound ignorance, or hypocritical cunning; that many unsuspecting persons have been prevailed upon to oppose the execution of Acts of Parliament by those who could have turned to the page where such insurrections were pronounced rebellion by the laws of the land; and had not their hearts been dead to a sense of justice, and steeled against every feeling of humanity, they would timely have warned us of our danger; that our patriots have sent us in pursuit of a fascinating glare, devoid of substance; that when we find ourselves bewildered, with scarce one ray of hope to raise our sinking spirits, or stay our fainting souls, they conjure up phantoms more delusive and fleeting, if possible, than that which first led us astray; they tell us that we are a match for Great Britain; that no pains have been spared by our wretched politicians to prevent a defection of the Army to the service; that the officers have a bad opinion of the cause of the Whigs, from the treatment of their General, and the infamous attempts to seduce the soldiers from His Majesty's service; that the policy of our patriots has been as weak and contemptible as their motives are sordid and malevolent; that failing of success in corrupting, they took pains to attach them firmer to the service, by preventing the erecting of barracks, by which means many contracted diseases, and some lost their lives; that our patriots had deprived them of a gratification never denied to the brute creation—straw to lay on; that we have been amused with intimations and prospects which were only the suggestions of despair; that the Grand Congress had prevented the people in England from espousing our cause; that they had bid Great Britain defiance. He then concludes his paper by telling us what warlike preparations are made against us, and advising us to provide for the safety of ourselves, our wives, our children, our friends, and our Country, by immediately protesting against all the traitorous Resolves and Associations of our Congresses, that the innocent may not be confounded with the guilty.

There is scarce one crime that human nature is capable of, but what is here imputed to our leaders, whose publick conduct is applauded by an admiring world. Not contented with vilifying their characters, he urges it upon us with an importunate pathos as a duty, to commit an act of the basest ingratitude, an instance of the blackest treachery. Perfidiously to protest against the proceedings of those gentlemen who, by our appointment and for our safety, have undertaken an arduous task, and, unawed by a sense of danger, confiding in the virtue and firmness of their Country, have discharged it with honour, wisdom, firmness, and courage themselves, would be blasting our species with disgrace, and consigning our names to everlasting infamy.

Paintings and colourings on indifferent matters may tickle the sense and please the imagination; even fictitious representations may be innocent. In affairs of serious and general concernment, to misrepresent and asperse, is to play with firebrands, arrows, and death. You well know, my countrymen, the real state of facts upon which our writer founds his ill-natured charges. You are acquainted with their concomitant circumstances, the principles and policy upon which they stand. The necessity of our situation, in which the Tories had plunged us, pointed them out; self-preservation gave them being. I shall not particularly advert to his charges against our publick characters, excepting to those of treason and rebellion. Power naturally exists where God Almighty placed it. Great oppressions, unless the people are sunk into ignorance and stupidity, will ever kindle the spirit of opposition. It is in vain to attempt to reason or frighten those who have minds to conceive, hearts to feel, and spirit to act, into servile submissions. They feel truths, feel injuries: and present sufferings render them strangers to future dangers. Exigencies call for exertions; efforts may prove fortunate, glorious, and triumphant; and when a subjection, or vanquishment, can take nothing away that a submission would leave, reason warrants the procedure. It is an observation of the celebrated Doctor Blackstone, "that whenever the unconstitutional oppressions, even of the sovereign power, advance with gigantic strides, and threaten desolation to a State, mankind will not be reasoned out of the feelings of humanity, nor will sacrifice their liberty, by a scrupulous adherence to those political maxims which were established to preserve it."

This will be the case, whether there be Congresses or Committees, patriots and politicians, or not, until men's spirits are subdued. Had Massachusettensis been as much indebted to some of our patriots, as many of his good brethren in the western parts of this Province are for their kind interposition to appease a justly incensed multitude, he would have dealt out his invectives with a more sparing hand.* What would have been the situation of the Tories in the Country, had it not been for Committees of Correspondence, which they so much despise, and other gentlemen of influence, who possessed the confidence and affections of an abused people?

That all publick and civil powers, Royal prerogatives, and Kingly authority, may remain where the wisdom of our Constitution have placed them, is the wish of every true American. Every pulse beats loyalty to our gracious Sovereign. He pierces with indignant looks the wretch who dares to lisp disloyalty, who would not spill his blood in defence of his King's constitutional Government, his crown and dignity. By opposing innovations, Government is preserved. For subjects to hold their liberties dearer than life, must be the joyful boast of an English Prince: it is the most sparkling gem in the Crown of George the Third, whose life America prays may be long and happy. She considers the Crown and Royal dignity as an office instituted for the people for their good, as a trust for millions, and extending its influences to generations yet unborn, and not as a descendable property, as an estate vested in the possessor for the emolument and grandeur of himself and heirs.

To assert and defend those rights which have their foundation in the reason of things, in the nature of Government, the principles of the English Constitution, our own Charters, the laws of our being, the maxims of wisdom and sound policy that have been sanctified by long usage, a uniformity of principle and practice for ages past, cannot be disloyalty to that King who never dies, who is constitutionally present and active in all parts of his Government, and neither knows nor regards the pleasure or mandates of the man who wears the Crown, when they are not dictated by the laws of the land. The coronation oath, and the oath of allegiance, says a great writer, are in effect but swearing to the Constitution—in one to govern, and in the other to be governed, according to it.

Treason and rebellion consists in rising in opposition to lawful authority. If we are not a part of the Empire of Great Britain in such a sense as to be subject to her legislative authority in all cases, then she has no right to give us law in all cases, or to coerce obedience to them. If she has not this right, opposition to such laws as she has no right to make is neither treason nor rebellion, nor any other misdemeanor, but incumbent duty. Every society has a right to preserve its liberties and privileges against those who have no authority to invade them: and certainly they are justified in the use of those means by which alone they can attain this valuable end. Sighs and tears, prayers and broken hearts are of no effect against the frightful blaze of warlike apparatus. The points of swords, mouths of thundering cannon, arms, and other instruments of death; these must be answered by a different argument.

The good of the whole is the same with the good of all its parts. If self-defence is justifiable, nay, a duty in individuals, it must be lawful in a community composed of individuals. "The right of self-defence, in cases of great and urgent necessity, and where no other remedy is at hand, (says a great Crown lawyer,) is perfectly understood and universally assented to; a right which the law of nature giveth, and no law of society hath taken away."

If this be true in case of individuals, it will be equally so in cases of communities under the like circumstances of necessity. For all the rights and powers for defence and preservation belonging to society, are nothing more than the natural rights and powers of individuals transferred to, and centering in the body, for the preservation of the whole. And from the law of self-preservation, considered as extending to civil society, resulteth the well known maxim, salus populi suprema lex.

I think the principles here laid down must be admitted, unless any one will choose to say that individuals in a community are, in certain cases, under the protection of the primitive law of self-preservation; but communities, composed of the same individuals, are in like cases excluded. Or that when the enemy is at the gate, every single soldier may and ought to stand to his arms, but the garrison must surrender at discretion.

Is there not but too much reason to contemplate upon these principles, to expect an attack, to prepare for the conflict? Has not our capital street been bathed in blood? some of our countrymen cut and mangled with pointed steel? Others abused and injured in triumphant rage? Is not much of our property wrested from the hands of its lawful owners? Are not many valuable lives in constant jeopardy? Is not our Metropolis in captivity, and our Harbours filled with Ships-of-War? Are not our adversaries preparing for havock and desolation? In this situation is it loyalty to lay still unarmed, until destruction comes upon us as a whirlwind? Is it treason to prepare to act on the defensive? The great Somers tells us, that "he who lets any person whatever destroy him contrary to law, when it is in his power to preserve his life by defending himself, does tacitly consent to his own death, which he is obliged to defend by the law of nature; and therefore is guilty of his own blood." Is it not the same with communities?

Massachusettensis tells us, in his publication of February 20th, "that he agrees with the Whigs, if the Colonies are separate or distinct States, (that is, not within the jurisdiction of Parliament,) every Act of Parliament extending to the Colonies, and every movement of the Crown to carry them into execution, would be really grievances, however wise and salutary they might be in themselves, as they would be exertions of a power that we were not constitutionally subject to, and would deserve the names of usurpation and tyranny." He might have added, and every person who has been deliberately attempting to enforce and carry them into execution is guilty of . . . and deserves the . . . together with the abhorrence of all America.

If the Parliament has not the right she contends for, of taxation and legislation over the Colonies, a few extracts from the illustrious Locke and Lord Somers will, perhaps, come home to the point. "Whenever (says Locke) Legislators endeavour to take away and destroy the property of the people, or to reduce them to slavery under arbitrary power, they put themselves in a state of war with the people, who are thereupon absolved from any farther obedience, and are left to the common refuge which God hath provided for all men against force and violence. Whenever, therefore, the Legislative shall transgress this fundamental rule of society, and either by ambition, fear, folly, or corruption, endeavour to grasp to themselves, or put into the hands of any other, an absolute power over the lives, liberties, and estate of the people, they forfeit their trust, and the people have a right to reassume their original liberty. The same holds true concerning the supreme Executor, who acts against his trust, when he goes about to set up his own arbitrary will as the law of the society, when he employs the force, treasure and offices of the society to corrupt the Representatives, and gain them to his purposes. What is this but to cut up Government by the roots, and poison the very fountain of publick security?" These are the words of that great man, and if they apply in any degree to present times it is not my fault.

Seeing all power must be derived from some grant of the people, it is incumbent upon every body politick to prove and justify the several degrees of authority which it pretends to claim; and what it cannot derive from some concession of the people, must remain vested in them as their reserved right. If it assumes any authority which it cannot prove the people surrendered, it is guilty of an invasion of their rights. To extend the rights of governing and commanding, and the duties of submission and obedience, beyond the laws of one's Country, is treason against the Constitution, treachery to the society, and an injury to mankind. It is cutting up the hedges and fences of the subject's liberty, an attempt to make one part of mankind tyrants and monsters, the other food for their malice, revenge, and brutal lust—to make them wretched slaves, miserable reptiles.

Is there any proof or evidence of any surrender, compact, or consent of the people, that the Colonies should be, in all cases, within the legislative authority of Parliament? Would not this be subversive of our Constitutions, and repugnant to every principle of freedom? What, then, are the crimes of those who have been, and are still struggling to establish this subjection?

"They are not, nor can be rebels," says the famous Lord Somers, "who endeavour to preserve and maintain the Constitution; but they are traitors who design and pursue the subversion of it. They are rebels who go about to overthrow the Government of their Country; whereas such as seek to defend and support it, are the truly loyal persons, and do act according to the ties and obligations of fealty. Nor is it merely the first and highest treason in itself, that a member of a political society is capable of committing, to go about to subvert the Constitution; but it is also the greatest treason he can perpetrate against the person, crown, and dignity of the King."

"Whosoever, either ruler or the subject, by force goes about to invade the rights of either Prince or People, and lay the foundation for overturning the Constitution and frame of any just Government, he is guilty of the greatest crime, I think, a man is capable of, being to answer for all those mischiefs of blood, rapine, and desolation, which the breaking to pieces of Government brings upon a Country; and he who does it is justly to be accounted one who resists the ordinance of God, and the common enemy and pest of mankind."

The above is the judgment of whole Kingdoms and Nations. Let those, whoever they be, that have been sporting with the rights of mankind, and rioting on their spoils; who, contracted in the little point of self, and equally steeled against the rebukes of conscience and the sentiments of humanity, that have been thundering to the world the terrors of prostituted law, and proclaiming the manly and loyal struggles of an oppressed people in defence of their just rights, sedition and rebellion—thus, instigated by the sweets of revenge, the hopes of conquest, the prospect of rich plunder in a plenty of confiscations, the pleasing expectation of unbounded power, with a mis-giving heart still dreading the final issue of things, have been eager to travel the crimson fields of blood, and to send the terrors of fire and sword into the innocent places of domestick retirement; let such consider what has been the judgment of past ages, and will be the opinion of future generations respecting their conduct.

FROM THE COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, April 14, 1775.

The alarming crisis to which the Parliamentary controversy with the Colonies is now brought, demands the united wisdom and attention of every serious, well-disposed person among us; and the grand question which obtrudes itself at first view is, can we withstand the power of Great Britain, when determined to enforce obedience to the laws of her Parliament? To this question, many heated imaginations may reply, we can; for Britain is not able to send Troops enough to conquer us, though she may distress and ruin our commercial connections. I must confess that I am not of that opinion; for if the British Nation, collectively as one body, should espouse the Parliamentary claim of supremacy, however unjust or unconstitutional, I am convinced they could reduce us to such extremities as would make us the most miserable of dependant beings. But this cannot be expected; we see the greatest men in the Nation appear in behalf of America, condemning the policy of Administration, applauding the Colonists for their noble and generous exertions in support of their just rights and privileges; we see the Merchants kindly and friendly petitioning the Parliament in our behalf; but all in vain—our controversy is confined to the two branches of the Legislature only, and they are judges in their own cause; and although His Majesty has been pleased to give countenance to their Resolutions, and seems determined to support them, yet, with all these appearances, we cannot think the present manœuvres justified by the Nation; and a short time will convince us that greater disturbances will appear in England than in America. The obstruction to the Newfoundland Fishery from New-England, will be another alarm to the Nation, as they must see their rivals in trade, the French, will seize every advantage thereby; and the Southern Governments will look upon the stoppage to the trade of the New-England Provinces only as the execution of a plan in part, in expectation that they would avail themselves of the opportunity of growing rich, and increasing in trades, while the other are sinking beneath their burdens, and reduced to such misery as to be obliged to submit; which when they have accomplished, Administration will not be content till they have subjugated the whole Continent to their sovereign control. But the question still remains to be answered, can we, or shall we withstand an Army who spread the British standard, and is commanded by a General acting by and under His Majesty's commission? To answer this question is puzzling to the ablest politicians amongst us; those who answer in the affirmative, do not enough consider that the sword once drawn can never be sheathed but in the bowels of Britons and Americans—till desolation and war becomes one general scene. For although ten thousand Troops may fall an easy prey to the numbers brought against them, yet what will be the event of such a conquest? Britain will feel the loss of her sons, and the blood of the slain will call aloud for revenge, and this may rouse the Nation to drop every idea of friendship, and losing sight of the merits of the controversy, will naturally support the tarnished honour of the British arms, and enraged with disdain of an inglorious defeat, may send such numbers of mercenary and veteran Troops, which, together with a powerful Fleet, will scatter destruction on our devoted heads. On the other hand, those who are on the negative side of the question, and who say we ought not to oppose the British Troops, should mark out the line of conduct necessary to be pursued in this critical and alarming period, and should prove the inexpediency of appearing in arms till forced thereto by the loss of every idea or hope of a reconciliation with Britain; and that it plainly appears the Nation has left us to be the victims of Parliamentary resentment. For my own part, I must own the idea of taxation without representation appears to me incompatible with the British Constitution, and is a political solecism; and any Government founded upon such principles must soon fall into despotism. And as America is not represented in the Parliament of Britain, she can't justly be taxed; but if it is insisted upon, that supremacy must be lodged somewhere, and the Parliament being the highest Court in the Nation, that supremacy ought to rest there; in that case, subordinate legislation by American Assemblies must be first annihilated; for the subject ought not to be governed by two codes of laws, some of which are diametrically opposite in their operation.

These arguments have been so often and so fully treated upon, that every individual knows the force of them. I shall therefore only add here, that there is a vacancy, or rather weakness, in the Constitution of the Parliamentary Government of America, which requires the consideration of both Countries, and without a settlement thereof the present controversy will never be ended; for unless the wound is probed to the bottom, it cannot be healed; it may be skinned over for a short time, but will break out again with more virulence. A denial of any legislative right over America, is equally unreasonable in us, as it is in the Parliament to claim it in all cases whatsoever. To suppose that we are to be controlled only by our own Legislatures, will appear at first view to be incompatible with the regulating laws of Commerce. The East-India, the Assiento, and Hudson's Bay Companies, all pay large sums to the Nation for an exclusive trade; and every merchant in Britain is subject to large penalties for even attempting to trade there, besides a seizure and condemnation of both vessel and cargo. So that if the Colonies are not subject to these regulating laws, they may easily interfere in all these exclusive trades, and evade the penalties. Inasmuch as we have not attempted those trades, we have considered ourselves as excluded with the rest of the Nation. The line of conduct necessary for us to pursue at this time, to avoid the dreadful consequences of a desolating civil war, requires the advice and wisdom of the coolest and most considerate men amongst us. And may the overruling hand of a good Providence so direct all consultations for the safety, welfare, and advancement of the British Nation in general, and America in particular; and that unanimity in our adopted plans may crown our expectations with success, to a happy re-establishment of that harmony between the two Countries, which is confessedly allowed to be the only means of supporting their political existences.

In Provincial Congress, Concord, April 14, 1775.

Whereas numbers of persons, from their unhappy situation in the Town of Boston, are removing with their effects:

It is recommended to the good people of this Province, that they would rent their Houses, and assist such persons with Teams for their removal, Provisions for their support, and all other necessities, upon as easy and cheap terms as they can possibly afford; and that all Goods and Merchandise be sold in like manner, agreeable to the spirit of the Continental Association. By order of the Provincial Congress:
JOHN HANCOCK, President.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LORD DARTMOUTH TO GENERAL GAGE, DATED LONDON, APRIL 15, 1775.

It would appear necessary and expedient, that all Fortifications should be garrisoned by the King's Troops, or dismantled and destroyed; that all cannon, small arms, and other military stores of every kind, that may be either in any magazine, or secreted for the purpose of aiding the rebellion, should also be seized and secreted; and that the persons of such as, according to the opinion of His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General, have committed themselves in acts of treason and rebellion, should be arrested and imprisoned.

I observed that in your letter of January 18th, you said that if a respectable force is seen in the field, the most obnoxious of the leaders seized, and a pardon proclaimed for all others, Government will come off victorious. The two first of these objects are already provided for, and it only remains for me to signify to you the King's pleasure, that, if you shall continue to be of opinion, that an offer of pardon will be advisable, you do, by virtue of the power already given to you by His Majesty's special commission, under the great seal for pardon for treason and other offences, issue a Proclamation within your Government, at such time as you shall judge proper, offering a reasonable reward for apprehending the President, Secretary, and any other of the Members of the Provincial Congress, whom you shall find to have been the most forward and active in that seditious meeting, requiring all persons who may, in consequence of their Resolves and exhortations, have appeared in arms to oppose the law, to render themselves to the Governour and Council within a reasonable time, and declare, that upon such surrender, and upon taking the oaths of allegiance, and making such declaration of their obedience as you shall think proper, they shall receive His Majesty's gracious pardon for all treasons they have committed.

LORD DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOURS OF COLONIES.

Whitehall, April 15th, 1775.

SIR: I am commanded by the King to acquaint you that it is His Majesty's pleasure that the orders of the Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's Forces in North America, and under him of the Major Generals and Brigadier Generals, shall be supreme in all cases relative to the operations of the said Troops, and be obeyed accordingly. I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

BALTIMORE (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

Committee Chamber, Baltimore, April 15, 1775.

The Committee of Observation for Baltimore County, reflecting on the many mischiefs and disorders usually attending the Fairs held at Baltimore Town, and willing in all things strictly to observe the Regulations of the Continental Congress, who, in their eighth Resolution, have advised to discountenance and discourage every species of extravagance and dissipation, especially horse-racing, cock-fighting, &c., have unanimously resolved to recommend it to the good people of this County, and do hereby earnestly request, that they will not themselves, nor will suffer any of their families to attend, or in anywise encourage the approaching Fair at Baltimore Town; and all persons are desired not to erect booths, or in any manner prepare for holding the said Fair.

We are persuaded the inhabitants of the Town in particular will see the propriety of this measure, and the necessity of enforcing it, as the Fairs have been a nuisance long before complained of by them, as serving no other purpose than debauching the morals of their children and servants, affording an opportunity for perpetrating thefts, encouraging riots, drunkenness, gaming, and the vilest immoralities.

SAMUEL PURVIANCE, Jr., Chairman.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM JAMES HABERSHAM TO MESSRS. CLARK AND MILLIGAN, LONDON.

Savannah, Georgia, April 17, 1775.

The fiery patriots in Charleston have stopped all dealings with us, and will not suffer any Goods to be landed there from Great Britain; and I suppose the Northern Provinces will follow their example.

The people on this Continent are generally almost in a state of madness and desperation; and should not conciliatory measures take place on your side, I know not what may be the consequence. I fear an open rebellion against the Parent State, and consequently amongst ourselves. Some of the inflammatory resolutions and measures taken and published in the Northern Colonies, I think too plainly portend this. However, I must and do, upon every occasion, declare that I would not choose to live here longer than we are in a state of proper subordination to, and under the protection of, Great Britain; although I cannot altogether approve of the steps she has lately taken, and do most cordially wish that a permanent line of Government was drawn and pursued by the mother and her children; and may God give your Senators wisdom to do it, and heal the breach; otherwise, I cannot think of the event but with horror and grief. Father against son; and son against father, and the nearest relations and friends combating with each other! I may perhaps say with truth, cutting each other's throats. Dreadful to think of, much more to experience. But I will have done with this disagreeable subject, and am, gentlemen, your humble servant,

JAMES HABERSHAM.

P. S. I find the American Merchants in London have begun to stir in this matter; and I hope their application will meet with success, as no good can ensue to Great Britain and her Colonies from this contest, but much hurt to both. I am for peace on constitutional grounds.

KING GEORGE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

The Committee being informed that Mr. Austin Brockenbrough was counteracting the measures of the Continental Congress, ordered him to be summoned to answer the complaint, which was done in the following terms:

King George, March 8, 1775.

SIR: You are accused before the Committee of disregarding your duty as an Associator, [Associator!] and attempting to prejudice the people of your neighbourhood, and others with whom you have communication, against the Association, [Yes, but I never went out of my way to do it,] and to draw into contempt the authority and conduct of the Committee. [That I have, and always shall.] The truth of this charge the Committee cannot avoid inquiring into, and have ordered us to give you notice to attend the monthly meeting at the Court-House, on the next Court day, [that I shall not,] that you may have an opportunity of making your defence; and if the charge is groundless, of evincing your innocence. [Innocence!] We are your humble servants,

THOMAS JETT,WILLIAM ROBINSON,
JOHN WASHINGTON.

On the day appointed, Mr. Brockenbrough failing to attend, Mr. Daniel Briscoe, the person who delivered him the notice, was called, and being sworn, declared that he read the above notice to Mr. Brockenbrough, at least ten days before the meeting of the Committee, and left him a copy, who made the replies inserted in the body of the notice. These answers confess the truth of the charge, and sufficiently indicate the disposition of the man, whose obnoxious behaviour is also well known, and for some time past has been observed with concern by several members of the Committee. To reclaim from error, rather than punish, would be the choice of the Committee. Opportunity was designedly afforded Mr. Brockenbrough, by a short delay in the publication, to make atonement, and avoid public censure. The well-meant indulgence has been slighted. Duty now requires that the truth of the case be published, to the end that Mr. Brockenbrough may be publicly known, and universally contemned as an enemy to American liberty. By order of the Committee:

ANDREW WODROW, Clerk.

King George, April 17, 1775.

Committee Chamber, Philadelphia, April 17, 1775.

Whereas, it is now under the consideration of the Committee to suspend all trade and intercourse with such Colonies as have not acceded to the Association of the Continental Congress; the Committee have therefore thought it proper to apprise their fellow-citizens of this matter, that they govern themselves accordingly, and avoid entering into any engagement with respect to such Colonies, from which they may be subjected to great inconveniences hereafter.

By order of the Committee:

JONATHAN B. SMITH, Secretary.

TO THE PUBLICK.

New-York, April 17, 1775.

Whereas, the enemies to the English Constitution, and the rights and liberties of America, have endeavoured, to the utmost of their power, to revile and defame the character of every man who has honestly endeavoured to assert and maintain those rights and privileges, which these traitors are striving to subvert and take away; hoping, by such vile practices, to destroy or lessen the influence of those who obstruct the execution of their wicked designs. On this account, Captain Sears, who has long distinguished himself among the most zealous, steady, and disinterested friends and supporters of the rights and freedom of his Country, became exceedingly obnoxious to these enemies, who sought to aggrandize themselves upon its ruins. They have, therefore, been extremely watchful to catch every opportunity, when by misrepresentation or direct falsehoods, they might bring an odium on his character, or expose him to contempt and ridicule. But these devices, instead of answering the end designed, have hitherto recoiled upon their authors, and only served to exalt the character they were intended to depress.

Among other false reports propagated against Captain Sears, one was, that since shutting up the Port of Boston, he, and his son-in-law, Mr. Paschal N. Smith, had loaded a vessel with Wheat, Flour, or other provisions, for the supply of the King's Troops at Boston. The falsehood of this malicious report will sufficiently appear by the following Affidavit:

City of New-York, ss.

Personally appeared before me, Benjamin Blagge, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, for the City and County of New-York, Isaac Sears and Paschal N. Smith, of the said City, merchants, who, being severally sworn, depose and say, that since the shutting up of the Port of Boston, neither of them have directly or indirectly, nor any other person for or under them, supplied, or caused to be supplied, the Army at Boston with any manner or kind of provisions whatsoever; and that neither of them have received, nor in future expect to receive, any kind of emolument or advantage, in any respect, from the Flour, Peas, and other provisions shipped for the use of the Army at Boston, since the shutting up of the said Port of Boston.

ISAAC SEARS,

PASCHAL N. SMITH.

Sworn this 17th of April, 1775, before me,

B. BLAGGE.

ARTHUR LEE TO JAMES KINSEY, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY, NEW-JERSEY.

Garden Court, Middle Temple, April 17, 1775.

SIR: Your letter, containing the Petition from the House of Representatives to the King, arrived here after Doctor Franklin had sailed for Philadelphia. The Petition was therefore put into my hands to deliver to Lord Dartmouth. I accordingly gave it to his Lordship, informing him of these circumstances, and of the wish of the House that it might be presented to His Majesty. But his Lordship returned it to me this morning, with a declaration, that as I was not authorized by the House, he, as Secretary of State, could not receive it from me for the purpose I desired. To deliver it to the King, in the common way, if I were authorized so to do, would be ineffectual, because there is no certainty of his reading it; and he never gives an answer but from the Throne, or through one of his Secretaries of State. The Petition will therefore remain here, to wait the further pleasure of the House. They who know and lament that Petitions for redress of grievances from the different Assemblies have been repeatedly rejected, cannot but be persuaded, that the promise of their being now attended to is only a Ministerial manœuvre to divide the Colonies, and draw off their attention to, and confidence in, that which is their great shield and defence—union in General Congress. Your Constitution was so framed as to mortify that hope. To divide and to destroy, or to fix this merciless tyranny upon us, is their only endeavour. But I trust in God, that the wisdom and virtue of our countrymen will continue to render it ineffectual, and give us, at length, a happy issue out of all our troubles, by obtaining a full redress of grievances.

I have the honour of being, &c.

ARTHUR LEE.

GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL TO REV. ELEAZER WHELOCK.

Lebanon, April 17, 1775.

REVEREND SIR: On the 7th instant, I received your letters of the 16th and 22d of March last, and return my thanks for your intelligence. The ability and influence of Mr. Dean, to attach all the Six Nations to the interest of these Colonies, is justly to be considered as an instance of Divine favour for us, and proper authority and encouragement to him will undoubtedly be easily obtained for that purpose. When he returns, it will be very acceptable to me to hear the intelligence he brings.

If the Indian scholars are called from you in a manner that shews a design of hostilities, please to give the earliest intelligence of it. You may depend on my care to do nothing that may tend to injure you or your cause. Our safety consists in the blessing of Heaven, a firm adherence to our constitutional rights, and an union in religion and virtue; in the pursuit and practice of these, we may hope for the relief of our distresses and redress of grievances. It is the prayer of good men, that the Spirit of grace, as to its converting influences, may be poured out upon the people of this land. The late awful restraints of the Spirit are a terrible token of God's righteous judgments.

I am, with much esteem and respect, reverend Sir, your obedient humble servant,

JONATHAN TRUMBULL.

Reverend Eleazer Wheelock.

Boston, Monday, April 17, 1775.

A letter from Taunton, dated last Friday, mentions, "that on Monday, the 10th instant, parties of Minute-Men, &c., from every Town in that County, with arms and ammunition, met at Freetown early that morning, in order to take Colonel Gilbert; but he had fled on board the Man-of-War at Newport. They then divided into parties, and took twenty-nine Tories who had signed enlistments and received arms in the Colonel's Company, to join the King's Troops; they also took thirty-five muskets, two case-bottles of powder, and a basket of bullets, all which they brought to Taunton the same afternoon, where the prisoners were separately examined, eighteen of whom made such humble acknowledgments of their past bad conduct, and solemn promises to behave better for the future, they were dismissed; but the other eleven, being obstinate and insulting, a party was ordered to carry them to Simsbury Mines; but they were sufficiently humble before they had got fourteen miles on their way thither; upon which they were brought back the next day, and after signing proper articles to behave better for the future, were escorted to Freetown. There were upwards of two thousand men embodied there last Monday."

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-ENGLAND, GREETING.

Men, Brethren, and Fathers:

Is the time come, the fatal era commenced, for you to be deemed rebels by the Parliament of Great Britain? Rebels! wherein? Why, for asserting that the rights of men, the rights of Englishmen belong to us; that the King of Great Britain has pledged his Royal faith to protect us in the enjoyment of all these rights of solemn compact as our King; for meeting in Congresses, and resolving that no man, nor body of men under Heaven, has any just right to dispose of our properties without our consent! Then surely the time is come when we are loudly called upon to consider whether we will defend these our rights and properties, or surrender them to Lord North and the rest of the reigning tyrannical British Ministry, and content ourselves for the future, not only to pay just such taxes as Lord North and his bribed tools in Parliament shall please to order to be laid upon us, but to be sold—we, our wives and children—as other slaves are; and all our houses, lands, and fruits of our industry to be at the disposal of our lordly masters! But this you will not, you cannot submit to. Heaven forbid that we should be so tame, so base, so unlike the sons of God, so much like the vassals of the Prince of Darkness! Awake, therefore, and let us show ourselves men, and not asses! Let us all repent and turn every one from his sins, his provocations against Heaven, and God Almighty will awake to our help as in ancient time; he will ride on the clouds in his excellency, and smite our enemies on their cheek-bone; divide their counsels, and turn their enterprises headlong, for he is mightier than the noise of many waters; he brought our forefathers into this land, and made it to them an asylum from oppression, tyranny, and persecution, and was for walls and bulwarks round about them; and had not the Lord been on their side, they would have been many a time swallowed up quick. And he will be for walls and bulwarks unto us, if we don't forsake him; for it is our God who says, "Fear not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will help thee, I will strengthen thee, yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." But as to our being in a state of open rebellion, "the Lord God of Gods, the Lord God of Gods, he knoweth," and Great Britain shall know; if it be in open rebellion against our rightful Sovereign, against the constitutional authority of the British Parliament, or the good and wholesome laws of our land, we have acted, and for which we are now declared to be in a state of open rebellion, "and in transgression against the Lord, let the Lord himself require it, and save us not this day!"

I am much mistaken if Lord North has not acted against his own life, and will not soon lose his own head, if not bring destruction on the Kingdom of Great Britain, and King George the Third and his family, by his late measures in the British Parliament relative to our being declared to be in a state of open rebellion! Time was, (an opportunity given him,) by the Petition of the grand Continental Congress, to have saved all; but I fear the time is now passed, especially if nothing turns up soon to prevent their sending over more forces, for the purpose of subduing us as rebels. But subdue us to a subjection unto the supreme legislation and taxation authority of the British Parliament over the Colonies without their consent, they will not, they shall not! Will it not be the proper dictate of wisdom, as the way, and only way left us of our preservation and safety, as soon as we see the sword of Great Britain drawn against us, to sacrifice every New-England Tory among us; to publish a manifesto with promises of protection and rewards to all of the British Troops that shall join in the cause of American liberty, and immediately cut off all such as intend to act as our enemies; and to send ambassadors to the Courts of Europe, with a declaration of all our Ports being opened to them for a free trade?

JOHANNES IN FREMO.

Salem, Massachusetts, April 18, 1775.

London, April 19, 1775.

Though the whole body of the people might, with great facility, get into their power any Standing Army which Ministers may employ in destruction of our liberties, yet, by my advice, not a single Briton should be put to the sword, except in the field of battle, or by the divine law of retaliation. Besides, were we not powerful enough within ourselves to effect this purpose, we may be assured that our own Militia, who are the only constitutional Soldiers of this Realm, will not longer remain idle, or that they will, like hired ruffians or mercenary troops, imbrue their hands in the blood, or sheathe their bayonets in the bosoms of their countrymen; for our Militia ought to be enrolled, and composed only of the Knights or landed gentry of the Country, and as such their respective Lord-Lieutenants would not dare to send them upon any unconstitutional service, because, by the Norman Treaty, our Militia-men are enjoined to obey their Colonels, so far forth as "eorum justa præcepta" shall extend, but not a single hair's breadth farther; for they are guilty of treason against the Constitution the moment they pass the Rubicon. And here lies the great distinction between Militia-men and Regulars; the former, at the hazard of their lives, are to execute no unjust, unnatural, unconstitutional orders; the latter, even at the peril of their lives, must implicitly and unhesitatingly obey every order they receive from their commanding officer, was it even to lay the whole City of London in ashes this very moment, or to rip open the bowels of every pregnant woman in the Kingdom, their own mothers not excepted. Happy, indeed, though our Mutiny Acts authorize the execution of every species of Herodian barbarity and Neronian cruelty, yet, as several clauses in those very Acts are most flagrant violations of the Norman Treaty, and shocking to human nature, they are, as I have frequently observed, not law; consequently the King's Troops, as they are faithfully called, (for they are not the Troops of the King, but on the contrary the Troops of the Kingdom, and in the pay of the Kingdom, and of the Kingdom only,) would be highly justified were they, like true Englishmen, unanimously to lay down their arms, and absolutely refuse to fight against their countrymen, constitutionally assembled, either in the plains of Runnymede, or in the Town of Boston. Conscious of the rectitude and truism of this position, our honest, brave English Soldiery, one and all, grounded their firelocks on Hounslow-Heath, nobly and most spiritedly refusing to obey the butcherly commands of that pigmy of a tyrant, James the Second—a pigmy, I mean, compared to the colossal tyrants of the present day. Nor does this immortal precedent stand single in the historick page, for the Troops of Cinna, in his fourth Consulship, when ordered by the Senate to embark for Dalmatia, and give battle to Sylla, most gloriously refused to go aboard, peremptorily insisting they would not be employed as barbarian ruffians or inhuman monsters, to slaughter their countrymen in cold blood; and this, too, even though the Senate had previously declared both Sylla and his forces enemies to Rome. To compel your Army to obedience merely by the terrors of punishment and Mutiny Acts of Parliament; this is not to govern, but to domineer. This true and most excellent observation doubtless will have its proper weight with our whole Military, since it is the dictum of as great a General, and of as great an Empire as ever existed—I mean Caius Marius, who, though born a plebian, and therefore regularly precluded from the Consulship of Rome, yet, in consideration of his signal courage, contempt of money, love of his Country, and unparalleled knowledge of the whole theory and practice of war, was seven times successively elected Consul, an honour never conferred upon any Roman, either before or after his advancement to that superlatively imperial dignity.

I have thus laid before you a true state of the weakness and insignificance of the Standing Army at present in Great Britain, not, indeed, out of any disrespect or disparagement to them, for I have a presentiment that the marching Regiments and Lighthorse will maturely consider they do not receive the King's pay, but that of the Kingdom, and therefore, properly and strictly speaking, are in the actual service, not of the King, but of the Kingdom; and that, consequently, whenever the popular State shall constitutionally and simultaneously rise up in arms, as our glorious ancestors did against the Kings John and James the Second, the Regulars have only this optional alternative in law, namely, either to lay down their arms, as I have mentioned they did on Hounslow-Heath, or take an active part under the banners of the people.

This being the case, and seeing there is no real danger in the present Standing Army, were they even to act hostily against the people constitutionally assembled, which cannot reasonably be expected; and seeing that Lieutenant Colonel James Abercrombie, who is embarked with a powerful reinforcement for that Army, which is to destroy the liberties of America, hath actually carried over with him peremptory orders to disarm the people of Boston, which is another most insolent, impudent violation of the Bill of Rights, (for by that treaty it is expressly and sacro-sanctionally stipulated, that every Protestant subject shall always carry arms for his defence.) What remains, then, for us, but instantly to put a stop to this rapid and all-deluging torrent of tyranny? What better advice can there be, than immediately to convene a National Congress here in England, and take the field, as our ancestors did on the plains of Runnymede, and thus constitutionally and effectually assist our American brethren, whom to desert in their present distresses, or even not to assist to the utmost of our abilities, would, in us, be unpardonably unjust, superlatively iniquitous, and infamously ungrateful; for in fact they are now fighting our battles. It is the glorious cause of liberty they are engaged in; the common cause and common birthright of every Englishman. I say the common birthright of every Englishman, for the liberty of an Englishman is an inheritance issuing out of his freehold land; and whether my freehold lies at Boston, in New-England, or at Boston, in Old England, it makes no difference, because by the same tyranny that I am forcibly disseized of my ancestral grant of land, which entailed with it a grant of liberty in one part of the British Empire, I may be equally robbed of it by the same lawless power of the sword in any other part of the British Dominions. Let us, then, here at home, my countrymen, never suffer so inestimable a grant to be tamely wrested from us; let us join our brother Americans in so just and glorious a cause, and, like our immortal exemplary ancestors, make that King tremble on his throne who shall sacrilegiously dare to invade the majesty of the Democratick State in the most essential of their rights, the free gift and grant of their money.

BRECKNOCK.

ABRAHAM BRASHER,
JEREMIAH PLATT,
PETER T. CURTENIUS.

Committee-Chamber, New-York, April 19, 1775.

Ordered, That the above state be published in the Newspapers of Mr. Holt and Mr. Gaine, and that Mr. Curtenius be directed to remit the amount in produce to Boston. By order of the Committee:

FRA. LEWIS, Chairman pro tem.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM NEW-YORK TO A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED APRIL 19, 1775

Last night arrived Captain Dean, who left London the 5th and Start Point the 18th of March, and tells us that eleven Regiments are to be embarked on board ninety-five Transports for Boston; the vessels had sailed to the several Ports in Great Britain and Ireland; twelve sail of Frigates are ordered to accompany them; the Transports and Royal Ships have twelve months provisions and stores on board. Be assured this Colony will be blessed with every possible mark of Royal favour that can be shown it. The armament coming out is to enforce the intentions of Government, in case the four New-England Provinces should refuse the Conciliatory Bill, as intimated by Lord North's motion.

EXTRACT OF ANOTHER LETTER OF THE SAME DATE.

This morning the Snow Sir William Johnson, Captain Dean, arrived here from London, but last from the Downs, in thirty-one days: the intelligence he brings is not so agreeable as could be wished; the papers are as late as the 5th of March. Captain Dean says, that sixteen Men-of-War and ninety-five Transports were certainly coming out to America; he lay among them at Spithead; that terms would be first offered, that is, that each Government should annually raise a certain sum for the support of the Fleet and Army of Great Britain; that complied with in our own way, an amicable accommodation would soon follow.

A nobleman is ordered out for this place, in order to bring about a pacification I hope.

COMMITTEE OF NEW-YORK TO THE PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

New-York, April 19, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The following very interesting accounts were this day received by the Snow General Johnson, Captain Dean, in thirty-one days from England. The writer is a person of undoubted veracity and has the best means of intelligence, who may be depended on, having for these twelve months always furnished the most certain advice of the Ministers' designs, &c. In consideration of which, and the present posture of affairs in America in general, but more particularly on account of the situation of your Province, and the consequences to which it is more immediately liable, it is thought an indispensable duty to give you this late advice. It is unfeignedly wished that you may improve it to your own safety, as well as to the advantages of the whole Continent. We have the honour to be, with great respect, your obedient servants,

HENRY REMSEN, Deputy Chairman.

EXTRACTS OF LETTERS, &c.

"London, February 24, 1775.

"Providence seems to have placed me here in order to give you the earliest intelligence of the most interesting affairs relative to the Colonies.

"To my great astonishment, I have now before me an Act for blocking up the other Colonies, and another called the Black Act, to prevent the Fisheries. The whole Nation seems to be deeply affected at such an enormous crime; which is supposed to be done at the request of the King and his creatures. God forbid that you should be intimidated at this iniquitous law, which is calculated to ruin what was a mutual benefit to you and us. This must convince you what you are to expect, if you submit to the most shocking set of men that England can produce. You now see their humanity. Rouse up, then, with a just indignation, and exercise your Militia. Watch your Government and Council. The new Assembly is to be composed of such creatures as will give up the people's rights, and join in the most horrid plot against them. What a melancholy reflection, that the riches and trade of a great Nation should be abused, and turned to the destruction of themselves and the Colonies! In short, the King is determined to be as absolute as the French King; and with the most obstinate head and bad heart, has set himself against the people, whom he will not see, keeping himself retired from his subjects in pride and ignorance. He has discarded men of veracity from all places of profit, and filled their offices with a set of the most abandoned villains on earth. These are they who advised him to break his oath with the people, for which they are despised by the Nation. If you hold out a few months, England will rise and do you justice, as well as relieve themselves from those accursed tyrants who want to corrupt you and deprive you of both liberty and property. There are two hundred and eighty-five Members of Parliament, who are all paid with the people's money to vote whatever Lord North proposes, and he has his lesson from eight more who compose a club, that meets in the most private manner in the night at Mrs. Keen's, near the Palace, where they have a box, which contains the papers that pass between His Majesty and them. The King overlooks the schemes, and corrects them; as well as gives orders how to proceed for the future. Hutchinson is consulted, and to the shame of Governors Colden, Penn, and Martin, who have written such letters to Lord Dartmouth, that the King has appointed them to meet at New-York, in order to join with your other lying spirits in betraying the Colonies: to complete which villany Lord North has made a motion in Parliament, as if he intended to promote peace with the Colonies; but it is to deceive them, and the people of England too. It is intended to defeat the salutary advice of the Congress, which does credit to British America. Set the Press immediately to work, and publish to the world the wicked designs of the King and his Counsellors, that you despise their slavish schemes, and are determined to preserve your laws and religion. Encourage the brave people of Massachusetts-Bay to act worthy of their noble ancestors! I have the pleasure to assure you, that the noble Lords with whom I have conversed, all join you in contempt of the junto here. You are desired to let the Colonies know that there is a deep plot formed to divide them and deceive the people into a compliance. But tell them that you want not their trade nor protection at the expense of your liberty. You'll see by the papers the treatment Lord Chatham's plan met with. Those Lords who advised the King to declare you rebels, and apprehend Messrs. Hancock, Adams, &c., &c., have gone so far as to say that Chatham shall fall a sacrifice to their designs, &c. I know there is publick virtue among you; I know your fondness for England will not let you believe the wicked designs that are meditating against you; but I do now, in the presence of God, warn you that the King has no good intentions toward you, but what you oblige him by your own wisdom and virtue to have. Take care of yourselves, and act as the wise and brave have done in all ages when oppressed by tyrants. Resist unto blood all who attempt to betray you. The Parliament have registered Colden's and Penn's letters; look to them, and see for yourselves. Believe the Court your worst enemies. Be much on your guard. Yesterday Doctor Fothergill and Mr. Barclay were so pressed in spirit that they went to see Lord North, and told him that the Bill for prohibiting the Fisheries was so horrid and inhuman that the whole Nation would rise and oppose it; and that if it did pass into a law, it would be a scandal to humanity, and, perhaps, occasion a revolt. They plead two hours with him, but to no purpose. The Bill is to be read a third time on Tuesday; so that in five days this horrid Bill passes into a law without any further consideration. Oh, America! Oh, England! The Ministry, in order to quiet the mob, ordered an inflammatory pamphlet to be burnt at Guildhall, which drew off the people while the Bill passed in Parliament, &c. A report is sent into the City that the Transports are stopped. This is to quiet the Merchants; but the Officers are gone down in private coaches of other people, and America is to be divided and driven into compliance before England is apprized of it. Lord North has just given out that he will resign, and at the same time says, that he fears nothing from the people, unless it be the breaking of his coach doors, or some such trifle; no resistance of importance from the City, only a clamour, which he has often experienced. He expects that this manœuvre will quiet the people on both sides of the water.

"Goods are shipped in the Transports with the Officers' Baggage, marked Rex, and under the protection of the King's Troops, who are to land them and protect the trade, &c. North-Carolina is to be a store-house, it is said. Support the Committee, and watch the Officers of the Customs, &c. Your friends are afraid that you will be surprised into a compliance. The offers of peace were only to raise the Stocks, which had fallen; they are four per cent. higher on account of the report. The Council sat up all night, in order to find out ways and means to conquer Virginia and procure Tobacco; great offers will be made to those who will raise it, &c. Men of large fortunes are afraid to oppose Government, lest the Bank should fail, which is said to be in danger. The interest on the year '74 is not paid. Many of the people are your most hearty friends, but the King is your greatest enemy. Be not deceived by his low cunning; act wisely, and the wicked and cursed plot will break on the heads of those who want to destroy you. The King is his own Secretary; he gets up at six o'clock every morning, sends off his box with remarks on a bit of paper tied round each order; four of the ablest lawyers are constantly with him, whose business it is to advise and search for precedents, to screen his head and throw the blame on the Parliament. Two millions have been squandered in bribery and corruption. The Crown has nothing to fear but the hunger of the poor. A steady adherence to the proceedings of the Congress will save England and America. Beware of Governor Penn, who has had offers made him to comply with the designs of the Court. Send this to Boston immediately. Mr. Hancock's lands are already divided among the Officers, &c. Lord Dartmouth is your bitter enemy, and determined to destroy the liberties of America. Lord Chatham, Lord Camden, the Duke of Richmond, and all the wise wish that you may attend to the advice of the Congress."

Extract from a different person, dated MARCH 2d:—

"Part of the Troops now ordered for embarkation here and Ireland, are to rendezvous at New-York, to make it a place of Arms, securing the defection of that Province from the general alliance in the cause of freedom and every thing that is dear to man; and to prevent the communication between Virginia, Maryland, and the other Southern Colonies, with New-England, when General Gage, with such assistance as he may get from New-York, is to subdue these Colonies by a Garrison-Town and place of Arms, with the assistance of Quebec, to rule with a rod of iron all the slaves of America. Without the concurrence of New-York this scheme can never be carried into execution, of which every gentleman and man of knowledge in this Kingdom is fully convinced; therefore, on your virtue, in a great measure, it depends whether America shall be free, or be reduced to the most abject and oppressive servitude, worse than that of Egyptian bondage; in which you must inevitably be involved, if you lend your aid to enslave your brethren in the other Colonies. I have to inform you that the Bill for preventing the four Colonies of New-England from Fishing, getting Provisions from the other Colonies, or carrying on any Commerce whatever to any part of the world except Great Britain, Ireland, or the British West-Indies, will finally pass the House of Commons to-morrow, and is to take place the first of next July. You may also depend that in a few days another Bill will be brought in to prohibit any of the other Colonies from carrying on any Trade whatever with each other, or to any other part of the world, except to Great Britain, Ireland, or the British West-Indies, which will probably take place in July also; therefore you will act accordingly, and let this be publickly known."

Extract of another Letter, dated LONDON, MARCH 1:

"The measures of the Ministry will, I hope, do more towards uniting the Colonies, than any efforts of America itself. You will easily perceive their wicked intentions to divide, as well as their designs after that hoped-for division. They have high hopes of success from the last accounts from New-York. I trust the people of that Province will soon displace those rascally and treacherous Tories in your Assembly, who dare thus negatively encourage the system of despotism now adopted for your Government. The wisdom of the Congress and the firmness of the people give the strongest assurances of future conduct. Several names are made use of here as authorities to warrant the defection of America. (I can give you such as I have heard; their conduct will best determine whether the idea is well founded: The De...ys, J....., W....., Smith, J..... G.....y, J..... R....., &c., &c. They most assuredly correspond with some ministerial people here, and though great care is taken to conceal, yet the men are too evidently marked to be totally unknown.) Pray print this short hint for the observation of the honest men among you. I need not attempt to expose the baseness or folly of the present men in office, for they take care to do it themselves."

The foregoing were at first intended only to be communicated to the inhabitants of Massachusetts-Bay, &c. But on more consideration it was judged best to inform those of Connecticut also, leaving them to forward the accounts to Concord with the utmost despatch.

HENRY REMSEN, Deputy Chairman.

TO THE RESPECTABLE PUBLICK.

New-York, April 19, 1775.

When the character of a fellow-citizen is basely traduced, his injuries become a common cause, in defence of which, every virtuous member of society will be an advocate. The insignificance of some enemies, indeed, secures them from resentment; and while they confine their calumny within the sphere wherein they are known, contempt is the only proper return for their malice. But when they make a publick newspaper the vehicle of their scandal, a more formal defence becomes necessary.

In Mr. Holt's paper of the 13th instant, are published the proceedings of a set of people, assembled at the Liberty Pole, on Thursday, the 6th instant, in which is contained a declaration, that "Messrs. William and Henry Ustick are inveterate foes to American freedom." This, it seems, passed almost unanimously, upon the motion of a certain person, who is not named, to a Chairman, likewise not named. This concealment would entitle these little patriots to some credit for their modesty, if they had not known that the publication of their names would have defeated their malice; the gratification of which, it seems, they have preferred, to the pride of seeing themselves in print. They have, however, artfully engrafted in their proceedings, an advertisement, subscribed by the Chairman of the Committee, from which the inattentive reader would be led to conclude, that they were the proceedings of that body; which, however, was not the fact.

The peace and orderly state of the Town having given great offence to this little set of heroes, they made various efforts to rouse the citizens into action; and the Messrs. Usticks were to be the victims of their little rage. Several attempts to collect the Town together, failed; though on every such occasion, they resolved that their meetings had been very useful, and the glorious means of defeating the Tories.

It was reserved, however, for the meeting at the Liberty Pole to strike the important blow, and the actors were worthy of the farce, whose names shall be held up to the publick in some future paper.

Although the Usticks are confident that this City will never suffer the rule and government of it to be committed into such hands, and that they never will submit to the inquisition they would establish here, yet they are actuated by a very sincere desire of retaining the good opinion of every friend to liberty. They are bold to say, that the charge against them of their being foes to freedom, is false; and as they have not transgressed any of the laws of their Country, so neither have they violated any part of the Association of the Congress. Upon what principles then are they to be held up to the respectable publick, by these paltry sons of mischief, as enemies to their Country? Must they be deprived of the exercise of the trade, by which they earn their bread? Must they be precluded from the benefits of a manufactory which they have carried on under so many difficulties and discouragements, and which will be so extremely useful to the Country? Why was not a clamour raised when a certain person shipped such quantities of Flour to the Army? For if they must be considered as enemies, surely the best way would be, to starve them at once, and thereby prevent them most effectually from doing mischief. No, my fellow-citizens, this is but the pretended reason. The true motive is to make every trader, but the chosen few, odious to the people in the Country, and thereby to engross the whole custom to themselves. Upon this principle it is, that by stigmatizing a number of worthy friends of liberty with the name of Tories, these restless people have so far deluded many Country traders, as to withdraw their custom from them, and even prevented boatmen from carrying up goods which have not got a clearance from them.

New-York, April 19, 1775.

Mr. RIVINGTON: Be pleased to insert the following in your Paper, and if any person conceives himself injured by any thing contained in it, the facts shall be publicly proved by the most unexceptionable evidence.

That the tranquillity of this City and Province has long given great umbrage to a set of folks among us, must have been evident from the frequent buzzings of these little harmless insects, who have at length made a feeble essay to sting as well as make a noise. Sensible that in a calm they must grovel in the dirt, they have tried to raise a storm, by which they hope to be elevated into notice.

On Wednesday, the 5th instant, the Committee of Inspection published an advertisement, in which they declare, with respect to Nails, "That though the manufactures which have been since (the last non-importation) established, will supply more than sufficient for our own consumption, we apprehend it would be imprudent thus rashly to part with what we have in store; especially as this sudden exportation has given just grounds for sufficient alarm."

No sooner did this notice appear in publick, than a certain set, in consequence of it, (the direction being to the respectable inhabitants,) assembled first at Philips's Beer-house, next at Bardin's, then at the Liberty Pole, and lastly, at Van Der Water's; at which several meetings (tremble, Lord North, and be dismayed, ye Tories!) Mr. Marinus Willet, and Mr. John Lamb, were Chairmen.

Having despatched the poor Usticks, by a vote that they were foes to their Country, entered into upon the motion of Mr. James Alner, a new and important subject arose for debate. It was suggested that Mr. Ralph Thurman had been employed in packing Straw, and Mr. Robert Harding, in purchasing Boards, to be sent to Boston. This was a heinous crime; and a Committee was ordered, from the body assembled on the — instant, to wait on those two traitors to their Country. Mr. Harding was out, so that he was spared for that night; but, unfortunately, his daughter was at home, and, terrified at the formidable appearance, fell into fits. — This, however, was a trifling consideration to men engaged in the cause of liberty. Mr. Thurman, it seems, was so obstinate, and such an inveterate foe to his Country, that he presumed to call in question the power of this body to interfere with his private affairs. Unpardonable impudence!

At this meeting, which was duly notified, very few attended; but although Captain Sears complained that he was deserted while he was engaged in the grand cause, yet 'tis evident that fortune conspired to make his glory the more conspicuous, as if determined that none should deprive him of the honour of a motion he made, which was, that "every man should provide himself with four-and-twenty rounds."

Another meeting, however, was, by adjournment, fixed upon for Saturday, the 15th instant, at the Liberty Pole. Meanwhile, complaint being made of these proceedings, as disorderly and a breach of law, the Magistrates issued a warrant against Captain Sears; he was apprehended and carried before the Mayor. Bail was demanded, but this being a violation of liberty, was refused. A mittimus was therefore issued, and the illustrious prisoner carried towards the Jail. But this was the height of arbitrary power; the very quintessence of toryism; and as it would doubtless have given Lord North great pleasure, it was not to be endured; the Captain was therefore set at liberty from the officers of justice, and led in triumph through the Town.

Accompanied by a number of his friends, with colours flying, the Captain proceeded through the Fly, Wall-street, and Broadway, to the Liberty Pole. Among those who were near him, were Mr. Ivers, Mr. Alner, Mr. Richard Livingston, and Mr. Roorbach.

At six o'clock, the Captain, attended with a large crowd, mounted a rostrum prepared for him in the Fields, from whence, like the Devil in Milton, "By merit raised to that bad eminence," he opened the business by a circumstantial recapitulation of facts, of which his own merit, the good he had done, and the evils he had averted, made a considerable part. At length, the following question was put:

"Whether a Son of Liberty ought to give bail or not?" which was carried in the negative. This occasioned three huzzas, in which Captain Alexander McDougall, who was near Captain Sears, bore no small part. It should not be omitted, that when Captain Sears had done, Mr. Pardon Burlingham mounted the stage, and harangued the people, and recommended going to the delinquents for satisfaction.

From the Fields they repaired to Thurman's and Hardings, and endeavoured to extort confessions from them that they had done wrong, and to prevail on them to ask pardon. These gentlemen refused both; insisting, that as they had been guilty of no violation of any law, agreement, or association, they would sooner die than ask pardon.

For fear of being too prolix, I shall omit the exploit to Turtle-Bay, the march to the Transport, in the North-River, in consequence of which she was cut off from the wharf, and the huzzaing through the town, and cry of no boards! at the Albany Pier, which being on the evening of Captain Lawrence's arrival, doubtless proceeded from their joy on the good tidings he brought, and is a mark of their gratitude, and a proof that they are actuated by nothing but the pure dictates of liberty.*

The above contains a narrative of the transactions which have disturbed the Town for a fortnight past, and which I desire, Mr. Rivington, you will not omit inserting in your paper; for while the most seditious and inflammatory papers are daily published, tending to alienate the minds of the people from our gracious King, (one of which is now circulating about the City, and read with avidity by those who have proscribed your paper, because some of your correspondents presume to think and write for themselves,) a customer claims it as a right to hold up these matters to the publick. While we are determined to contend against the tyranny of the British Parliament and Ministry, let us not establish the sway of a mob, which includes despotism, the most cruel and severe of all others. Many fellow-citizens have been deluded by the cry of liberty, which has been held up to them as the reason for these violences. They are now undeceived; but so daring a violation of the good order and police of the City, so flagitious an insult on Magistracy, and contempt of the laws, ought not to be passed over with impunity; for let us remember, that the restraints of the law are the security of liberty.

ANTI-LICENTIOUSNESS.

REVEREND SAMUEL AUCHMUTY TO CAPTAIN MONTRESOR, CHIEF-ENGINEER IN GEN. GAGE'S ARMY AT BOSTON.

New-York, April 19, 1775.

MY DEAR SIR: Yesterday Captain Coupar arrived from London; Rivington, I conclude, will have all the news in his paper, but for fear you should not get his paper in time, I send you some extracts from a letter I received from undoubted authority, which may be depended upon. It is dated London, March 4th, 1775.

"I congratulate you heartily on the spirited and prudent conduct of your Assembly. Their proceedings are universally applauded by the people of this Country. Envy dares not hiss against them, and Faction hides its face with shameful disappointment. Pursue the same path, and your Provinces will be honoured with every mark of distinction from this Country. His Majesty is already disposed to grant you every honourable favour that can be proposed. I am happy that the Clergy under your direction have conducted themselves so prudently and successfully, and hope that the Church, for the labour of her sons, will not be forgotten.

"The Resolution suggested by Lord North will, I flatter myself, have a happy effect at New-York. It proposes to the Colonies all they can reasonably ask. They desired to be taxed by their own Representatives; it will be granted them. Leave it to our Assemblies (they said) and we will sufficiently tax ourselves, and contribute to the common expenses. The Parliament accepts the promises, and invites them by this Resolution to propose what they will give and grant for the necessary contingencies of the State, and their own Civil Establishment. While they fulfil their engagements, Parliament will not interfere to tax them; when they refuse to bear a part in supporting the common burthen, the supreme Legislature will compel the delinquent Colony to its duty. Thus every reasonable indulgence is offered to you, and every necessary power reserved to Parliament. If you reject this proposition of peace and reconciliation, the Nation will be convinced that you are determined to agree on no terms of accommodation.

"The Armament which will speedily embark for Boston will convince the refractory among you, that this Nation will not be trifled with. It is uncertain who will be your Governor, the King being resolved to appoint one himself; Governour Martin of North-Carolina is talked of."

Thus I have given you all the news that I at present know, which may be depended upon. Coupar says, that thirty-odd sail of Transports sailed for Ireland the same day with him, and that many more Transports were taken up daily. This is terrible news for my poor distressed, oppressed, injured countrymen. I must own I was born among the saints and rebels, but it was my misfortune. Where are your Congresses now? What say Hancock, Adams, and all their rebellious followers? Are they still bold? I trow not.

We have lately been plagued with a rascally Whig mob here; but they have effected nothing, only Sears, the King, was rescued at the Jail door. He was ordered there by the Magistrates upon his refusing to give bail for being guilty of misdemeanors, &c. Our Magistrates have not the spirit of a louse; however, I prognosticate it will not be long before he is handled by authority.

I am, &c.

SAMUEL AUCHMUTY.*

* SALEM, MASS., May 18, 1775.—From such servile wretches as the author of the above letter, do the British Administration receive informations relative to the state of America; and by such informations do they govern their conduct with respect to it; no wonder then that they discover so much folly, imbecility, and irresolution in all their measures.

His zeal for the Church had, it seems, influenced the past conduct of this would-be right reverend author and some of his Tory brethren of the Clergy in the Province of New-York. In order to engage their further labours in this good cause, his correspondent in England encourages him and them to hope for the recompense of reward; that they should soon receive an ample retribution for all their toil and labour in the service of the Ministry. These are the baits held out to the tools of power, and these are sufficient to induce some among us to sacrifice the liberty of this Country, and to rejoice with infernal satisfaction at seeing the land which gave them birth stained with the blood of its slaughtered inhabitants.

The correspondent of this Reverend gentleman talks much of the conciliating proposal made by Lord North, and asserts that the Colonists will be universally condemned if they do not comply with it; but the least observation must convince us that this proposal was no other than a flimsy State trick of this wise Minister, and did not, in reality, remove any grievance of which the Americans complained. According to this proposal the Parliament of Great Britain is to demand a certain sum in bulk of the Continent of America, but each Assembly is to have the power of adjusting the particular method in which its proportion shall be raised; but if it refuses to pay as much as the Parliament demands or shall demand, it is to be dragooned into obedience; all the liberty allowed to the Colonies is to determine how they will raise the sum taxed, without allowing them the liberty of judging whether they ought to be taxed or no; so that the power of taxation remains virtually and truly in the British Parliament still, and the Colonies are only flattered with an appearance of freedom. The proposal was designed as a bait to draw off our friends in Great Britain, and to dissolve the union of America; but it is seen through by both, and will most assuredly be treated by them with the contempt it deserves.

What must be the heart of the man who can jest, as doth this execrable Clergyman, with the miseries of his Country, and can exult at the thought of its being drenched in blood: the prospect of the arrival of Troops to answer this purpose affords him matter of triumph. This is a Tory Clergyman; to such men as these, our countrymen, (if we prevent them not by our own valorous exertions,) must we pay tithes of all that we possess; to such men as these must we become hewers of wood and drawers of water! Who can endure even the distant idea of such a state? what then must it be to feel and to groan under it!

It hath been the misfortune of this Province to produce many such vermin as the author of this letter, many who have acted the part of parricides to their Country, and who would sacrifice that, together with their consciences, to their ambition and avarice; but we may comfort ourselves with the reflection, that it hath produced a long list of patriots, who are now straining every nerve to secure her freedom, and who will sacrifice their lives rather than that the schemes of such traitors as the author of this letter should succeed.

The ever-memorable nineteenth of April gave an answer to the questions so often asked by the enemies of American freedom, and among the rest by this little tool of power: what think ye of the Congress now? That day showed the efficacy of the Resolutions of that illustrious body, and evidenced that Americans would rather die than live slaves! A Hancock and an Adams, with the other patriots, whose names will be handed down, with everlasting honour, to posterity, still retain their invincible firmness; and in despite of British Fleets and Armies, under the assured protection of their God, will secure the freedom and happiness of America.

* The Packet Earl of Dunmore, Captain Lawrence, arrived at New-York on Tuesday, April 11, 1775. By this Vessel was received the London Gazette of February 11, containing the Address of the two Houses of Parliament to the King, adopted on the 7th, and presented to the King on the 9th of February.

NEW-YORK PROVINCIAL CONVENTION.

Minutes of the Provincial Convention of New-York.

City of New-York, April, 20, 1775.

The Deputies hereinafter named, from the following Counties, assembled at the Exchange in this City, for the purpose of forming a Provincial Convention, viz :

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK.—Philip Livingston, Esquire, John Alsop, Esquire, James Duane, Esquire, John Jay, Esquire, Colonel Leonard Lispenard, Mr. Francis Lewis, Mr. Abraham Walton, Mr. Isaac Roosevelt, Mr. Alexander McDougall, and Mr. Abraham Brasher.

CITY AND COUNTY OF ALBANY.—Colonel Philip Schuyler, Colonel Abraham Ten Broeck, and Abraham Yates, Junior, Esquire.

ULSTER COUNTY.—Charles De Witt, George Clinton, and Levy Pawling, Esquires.

ORANGE COUNTY.—Colonel A. Hawkes Hay, Henry Wisner, Esquire, John Herring, Esquire, Mr. Peter Clowes, and Mr. Israel Seely.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.—Colonel Lewis Morris, John Thomas, Junior, Esquire, Robert Graham, Esquire, Major Philip Van Cortlandt, Samuel Drake, Esquire, and Mr. Stephen Ward.

DUTCHESS COUNTY.—Colonel Morris Graham, Major Robert R. Livingston, Junior, and Egbert Benson, Esquire.

KING'S COUNTY.—Simon Boerum, Esquire, Captain Richard Stillwell, Mr. Theodorus Polhemus, Mr. Denice Denice, and Mr. John Vanderbilt.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.—Colonel William Floyd, Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull, Colonel Phineas Fanning, Thomas Tredwell, Esquire, and John Sloss Hobart, Esquire.

NEW-TOWN AND FLUSHING, IN QUEEN'S COUNTY.—Colonel Jacob Blackwell and Mr. John Talman.

The Convention unanimously chose Philip Livingston, Esquire, to be their President.

Ordered, That the sense of this Convention, upon every question, be taken and determined by the majority of the votes of the Counties here represented.

That the votes of the City and County of New-York be considered as four; the City and County of Albany as three; and that of each of the other Counties, respectively, as two; and that this arrangement shall not, upon any future occasion, be drawn into precedent.

The Convention then unanimously elected John McKesson, Esquire, to be their Secretary.

The Deputies of the City and County of New-York produced the poll-lists taken the fifteenth day of March last, in each Ward of the said City, certified under the hands of the Vestrymen of the respective Wards, and others before whom they were taken, by which it appears that Philip Livingston, John Alsop, James Duane, John Jay, Leonard Lispenard, Esquires, Messrs. Francis Lewis, Abraham Walton, Isaac Roosevelt, Alexander McDougall, and Abraham Brasher, all now present, together with Mr. Isaac Low, who is not present, were elected by a very great majority of voices to be the Deputies of the said City and County of New-York, for the sole purpose of appointing Delegates to attend the next Continental Congress, to meet at Philadelphia, on the 10th day of May next.

Colonel Philip Schuyler, Colonel Abraham Ten Broeck, and Abraham Yates, Junior, Esquire, produced a Certificate subscribed by John N. Bleecker, Clerk of the Committee of Correspondence for the City and County of Albany, certifying that they, together with Colonel Peter R. Livingston and Walter Livingston, Esquire, were unanimously elected by the said Committee, (which Committee was expressly empowered for that purpose,) as Deputies for the City and County of Albany, to attend the Provincial Convention to be held in the City of New-York on this day, for the purpose of choosing Delegates to represent this Colony in the next Continental Congress, to meet at Philadelphia, on the 10th day of May next, which Certificate bears date at Albany on the twenty-first day of March last past; and being read and accepted, is filed with the Secretary.

Charles De Witt, George Clinton, and Levy Pawling, Esquires, produced a Certificate bearing date the seventh day of April instant, subscribed by Colonel Johannes Hardenbergh, Chairman or President of all the Committees of the respective Towns and Precincts in Ulster County, (except the Towns of Rochester and Mamacoting) which several Committees were therein named, and declared to have been elected and appointed to meet, nominate, and appoint Deputies for the said County, to serve in Provincial Convention at the City of New-York, on this day, or at such other time and place as might be agreed on; and were then assembled at the New-Paltz, in the said County, for that purpose. And the said Credentials certify that they the said Charles De Witt, George Clinton, and Levy Pawling, Esquires, were unanimously elected by all the said Committees, as Deputies for the said County of Ulster, to attend the Provincial Convention to be held at the City of New-York, on this day, or at such other time and place as may be agreed on, for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent this Colony in the Continental Congress, to meet at Philadelphia, on the tenth day of May next, or at such other time and place as may be agreed on for that purpose. The same gentlemen from Ulster County also produced a Letter signed by Jacob Hoornbeck and Jochum Schoonmaker, (the Committee elected by the said Town of Rochester,) bearing date at Rochester the eleventh day of April instant, consenting to and approving of the appointment of the said gentlemen, and reposing the same trust in them as the other Towns and Precincts in the said County of Ulster had done. And the said Credentials being read and approved of by this Convention, are filed with the Secretary.

The Convention then adjourned to 5 o'clock, P. M.

Five o'clock, P. M., April 20, 1775.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment. Present :

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK.—Philip Livingston, Esquire, President, Messrs. Francis Lewis, Alexander McDougall, Abraham Brasher, John Jay, Esquire, Leonard Lispenard, Esquire, Messrs. Isaac Roosevelt, and Abraham Walton.

CITY AND COUNTY OF ALBANY.—Abraham Yates, Junior, Esquire, Colonel Philip Schuyler, and Colonel Abraham Ten Broeck.

ULSTER COUNTY.—Charles De Witt, George Clinton, and Levy Pawling, Esquires.

ORANGE COUNTY.—Colonel A. Hawkes Hay, Henry Wisner, Esquire, John Herring, Esquire, Mr. Peter Clowes, and Mr. Israel Seely.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.—Colonel Lewis Morris, John Thomas, Junior, Esquire, Robert Graham, Esquire, Major Philip Van Cortlandt, Samuel Drake, Esquire, and Mr. Stephen Ward.

DUTCHESS COUNTY.—Colonel Morris Graham, Major Robert R. Livingston, Junior, and Egbert Benson, Esquire.

KING'S COUNTY.—Simon Boerum, Theodorus Polhemus, Esquires, and Mr. John Vanderbilt.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.—Colonel William Floyd, Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull, John Sloss Hobart, Esquire, Thomas Tredwell, Esquire, and Colonel Phineas Fanning.

FLUSHING AND JAMAICA, IN QUEEN'S COUNTY.—Mr. John Talman and Mr. Joseph Robinson.

The Deputies for Orange County produced here several Credentials from the respective Towns and Precincts in that County, in substance as follows, to wit : A Certificate signed by Gilbert Cooper, Clerk, setting forth that at a Town-Meeting of the Precinct of Haverstraw, in the said County of Orange, held at the New-City, on Tuesday, the fourth day of April instant, it was—

Resolved, 1st. That that meeting did highly approve of a Convention of Deputies from the different Counties, to meet at the City of New-York on this day, for the purpose of choosing Delegates for the next Continental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia in the month of May next, as the most effectual means to promote the honour and happiness of the Colony, and to unite the Colony in the common cause, for the preservation of our rights and liberties; and,

2dly. That it was then and there resolved that Colonel A. Hawkes Hay should be, and was thereby appointed a Deputy to represent that Precinct at such Provincial Convention, to meet at the City of New-York on this day; and was thereby authorized and appointed to join with the Deputies who should meet in such Convention, in the appointment of Delegates to represent this Colony in the next Continental Congress; and also to concur with the said Deputies in such other measures as might be thought necessary to promote the honour, happiness, and interest of this Colony.

Secondly. The same gentlemen, Deputies for Orange County, produced a Certificate signed by Daniel Everett, Precinct Clerk of the Precinct of Goshen, in the said County, certifying, that at an annual Town-Meeting held at Goshen, in and for the Precinct of Goshen, on Tuesday, the fourth day of April instant, it was moved, and unanimously voted in the affirmative, that Henry Wisner and Peter Clowes, Esquires, be appointed Deputies for the said Precinct of Goshen, to meet such other Deputies as should be appointed by other parts of the Colony, in a Provincial Convention, to be held in the City of New-York on this day, for the purpose of electing Delegates for the next Continental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia on the tenth day of May next.

Thirdly. The said Deputies for Orange County produced a Certificate subscribed by Thomas Outwater, Town Clerk, setting forth that a meeting of the Freeholders of the Town of Orange, in Orange County, was held at the house of Jost Mabce, in the said Town, on the 17th day of April instant, agreeable to notice given, and request made by publick advertisements for that purpose. That the freeholders then and there assembled, took into consideration the necessity of their being duly and properly represented in the Provincial Convention, to be held at the City of New-York on this twentieth day of April, for the purpose of electing and appointing Delegates to represent this Colony of New-York in the next Continental Congress, to be held in the City of Philadelphia on the tenth day of May next. That the question was put, Whether the Freeholders there assembled should send a Deputy to represent the said Town of Orange at this Convention? And that the same was carried in the affirmative. And therein also setting forth and certifying, that it was thereupon voted and ordered, that John Herring, Esquire, should be a Deputy for the said Town of Orange, to represent the said Town in this Convention; and that he act and vote on behalf of the inhabitants thereof, in all such matters and things as should, by the said Convention, be taken into consideration.

Lastly. The said Deputies from Orange County produced a Certificate signed by Jesse Woodhull, Esquire, setting forth, that at an annual meeting of the Freeholders and inhabitants of the Precinct of Cornwall, in the said County, held at the house of John Brewster, in Bloomington, on the fourth day of April instant, the said Jesse Woodhull, Esquire, was chosen Moderator. That the said Freeholders then proceeded to take into consideration a Letter from the Committee of the City and County of New-York, signed by Isaac Low, their Chairman, recommending the choosing of Deputies for the several Counties in this Colony, to meet in Provincial Convention at the City of New-York, on this twentieth day of April, for the sole purpose of choosing Delegates to represent this Colony in the next Continental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia on the tenth day of May next ensuing. That it was then proposed to the said Freeholders, whether the subject-matter of the said Letter should be taken into consideration immediately, or postponed to another day; and that debates arising thereon, and the question being put, it was voted by a large majority, that the subject-matter of the said Letter should be considered immediately. That it was then proposed to the said Freeholders, whether a Deputy should be sent from that Precinct to this Convention, or not? And that debates arising thereon, and the question being put, it was carried in the affirmative by a large majority.

And the said Certificate sets forth and certifies, that Mr. Israel Seely was then and there chosen as one of the Deputies of that County for the purposes aforesaid.

And all the said Credentials and Certificates produced by the said Deputies for Orange County being read and approved of, and accepted by this Convention, are filed with the Secretary.

Colonel Lewis Morris, Mr. Stephen Ward, Samuel Drake, Esquire, John Thomas, Junior, Esquire, Robert Graham, Esquire, and Major Philip Van Cortlandt, the Deputies from Westchester County, produced Credentials bearing date at the White-Plains, in Westchester County, on the eleventh day of April instant, signed by Lewis Morris, Chairman, therein reciting and setting forth, that on the twenty-eighth day of March last past, a number of gentlemen therein particularly named, from different Districts in the County of Westchester, having received Letters from the Chairman of the Committee of the City and County of New-York relative to the appointment of Deputies for the County of Westchester, to this Convention, met at the White-Plains aforesaid, for the purpose of devising means to take the sense of the people of the County upon the subject. That they had sent Letters of Notification to the principal Freeholders in the different Towns and Districts in the County, acquainting them that they had then met to consider of the most proper method to obtain the sense of the Freeholders of the County upon the expediency of choosing Deputies to meet the Deputies of the other Counties, for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent this Colony in the Continental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia on the tenth day of May next; and therein recommending a general meeting of the Freeholders of the said County, to be held at the White-Plains, on Tuesday, the eleventh day of April instant, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, at the Court-House; and therein and thereby requesting each such principal Freeholder to give notice of the said meeting to all the Freeholders in his District, without exception, as those who did not appear and vote on that day, would be presumed to acquiesce in the sentiments of the majority of those who should vote. And therein also further setting forth and certifying, that such notices as aforesaid had been generally given and distributed; and that a very numerous body of the Freeholders of the County had assembled at the Court-House at the White-Plains, on the said eleventh day of April instant, in pursuance thereof, and chose Colonel Lewis Morris for their Chairman. That an inconsiderable number of persons, (among whom were many tenants not entitled to a vote,) with Isaac Wilkins, Esquire, and Colonel Philipse at their head, then appeared; and Mr. Wilkins, in their behalf, as he said, declared that they would not join in the business of the day, or have any thing to do with Deputies or Congresses; but that they came there for the sole purpose of protesting against such illegal and unconstitutional proceedings; after which they departed.

That the following question was then put to the Freeholders by the Chairman, viz: Whether they would appoint Deputies for the County of Westchester, to meet the Deputies of the other Counties at the City of New-York, on the twentieth day of April then instant, for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent this Colony in the General Congress to be held at Philadelphia, on the tenth day of May next? That the Freeholders then there met unanimously answered in the affirmative; and thereupon appointed the said Colonel Lewis Morris, Mr. Stephen Ward, Samuel Drake, Esquire, John Thomas, Junior, Esquire, Robert Graham, Esquire, and Major Philip Van Cortlandt, together with Colonel James Holmes and Jonathan Platt, Esquire, or the majority of them, to be the Deputies of the said County of Westchester, for the purposes aforesaid.

The same Credentials being read and heard, and accepted by this Convention, are now filed with the Secretary.

The Deputies for King's County produced here proceedings of a meeting of the several Committees chosen by the Freeholders of the Townships of Flatbush, Brookland, Bushwick, New-Utrecht, and Gravesend, held at the County Hall, in Flatbush, in King's County, on the fifteenth day of April instant, for the purpose of choosing Deputies to meet with the Deputies from the other Counties, at New-York, on the twentieth day of April instant, to choose Delegates to attend the Continental Congress, to be held at Philadelphia on the tenth day of May next. The said proceedings, certified by Abraham Van Ranst, Clerk to the said several large and respectable Committees there met, do certify, that Simon Boerum, Esquire, having been elected their Chairman, they unanimously resolved that the said Simon Boerum, Richard Stilwell, Theodorus Polhemus, Denice Denice, and John Vanderbilt, or the major part of them, be appointed, and they were thereby appointed Deputies for King's County, to meet the Deputies of the other Counties within this Colony, at New-York, on the twentieth day of April instant, to choose Delegates to attend the Continental Congress, at Philadelphia, on the tenth day of May next.

And the same certified proceedings being now read and heard and accepted, and approved of by this Convention, are filed with the Secretary.

The Deputies for Suffolk County produced a Certificate, signed by Robert Hempsted, Chairman, at a meeting of the Committees from the different Towns in the County of Suffolk, held at the County Hall, on the sixth day of April instant, certifying that it was then and there unanimously voted and agreed, that Colonel William Floyd, Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull, Colonel Phineas Fanning, Thomas Tredwell, and John Sloss Hobart, Esquires, all now present, together with Thomas Wickham, Esquire, were then and there appointed Deputies, on the part and behalf of that County, to meet the Deputies of New-York and the other Counties within this Colony in a Provincial Convention at the City of New-York, on the 20th day of April instant, (as recommended in a Letter from the Chairman of the Committee in the said City,) there to unite with the other Deputies in appointing Delegates to attend the Continental Congress at Philadelphia or elsewhere, in May next. And thereby also farther certifying that the said Deputies were thereby empowered to unite with the other Deputies in Provincial Convention in entering into such Resolves, and giving such Instructions to the Delegates that shall be there chosen, as in their judgment shall tend to the preservation of the rights and liberties of America, and to restore harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies.

And the said certified proceedings and appointments being read and heard, and accepted by this Convention, are now filed with the Secretary.

The Convention then proceeded to make an Order, in the words following, to wit :

It having been reported that Mr. Isaac Low, who appears to have been elected one of the Deputies for the City and County of New-York, and has not attended, does not intend to act in that capacity ; and as the Convention are restrained in the appointment of Delegates to the persons of whom it is composed,

Ordered, That the Secretary wait upon Mr. Low, and request the favour of him to inform the Convention whether they are to consider him as one of their Members.

The Convention then adjourned to ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Die Veneris, 10 hora, A. M., April 21, 1775.

The Convention assembled at the Exchange, in New-York, pursuant to adjournment, Present :

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK.—Philip Livingston, Esq., President, John Alsop, James Duane, and John Jay, Esquires, and Colonel Leonard Lispenard, Messrs. Isaac Roosevelt, Alexander McDougall, Abraham Brasher, Francis Lewis, and Abraham Walton.

CITY AND COUNTY OF ALBANY.—Col. Philip Schuyler, Colonel Abraham Ten Broeck, and Abraham Yates, Jun., Esquire.

ULSTER COUNTY.—Charles De Witt, George Clinton, and Levy Pawling, Esquires.

ORANGE COUNTY.—Col. A. Hawkes Hay, Henry Wisner, Esquire, John Herring, Esquire, Messrs. Peter Clowes, and Israel Seely.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.—Col. Lewis Morris, Mr. Stephen Ward, Samuel Drake, Esquire, John Thomas, Jun., Esquire, Robert Graham, Esquire, and Major Philip Van Cortlandt.

DUTCHESS COUNTY.—Col. Morris Graham, Major Robert R. Livingston, Junior, and Egbert Benson, Esq.

KING'S COUNTY.—Simon Boerum, Esq., Captain Richard Stilwell, Messrs. Theodorus Polhemus, and John Vanderbilt.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.—Colonel William Floyd, Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull, Colonel Phineas Fanning, Thomas Tredwell, Esquire, and John Sloss Hobart, Esquire.

NEWTOWN, OYSTER BAY, FLUSHING, AND JAMAICA, IN QUEEN'S COUNTY.—Colonel Jacob Blackwell, Captain Zebulon Williams, Messrs. John Talman, and Joseph Robinson.

Mr. John Talman, of Flushing, in Queen's County, produced to this Convention a Certificate, signed by John Rodman, Town Clerk, and by Mr. Stephen Van Wyck, certifying that, on the 4th day of April instant, after due notice had been given to the Freeholders of Flushing, at an annual Town Meeting, it was proposed that a Deputy should be chosen to represent the said Town at a Provincial Convention, to be held at the City of New-York on the 20th day of April instant. That after some debates the matter was put to vote, and that Mr. John Talman was, by a great majority, chosen their Deputy, to represent the said Town of Flushing in the said Provincial Convention.

Mr. Joseph Robinson produced to the Convention a Poll List of one hundred and seventy-six of the Freeholders of the Town of Jamaica, in Queen's County ; eighty-two whereof, who, though a minority of the Freeholders of the said Town who polled on that occasion, have requested him to attend this Convention, and signify their willingness to acquiesce in the choice of the Deputies who attend this Convention for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent this Colony at the next Continental Congress.

Captain Zebulon Williams produced two Certificates, signed by forty-three of the Freeholders of the Town of Oyster Bay, in Queen's County, dated the 12th day of April instant, who, though a minority of the Freeholders who polled on that occasion, have thereby appointed him their Deputy, to attend this Convention and act on their behalf.

Colonel Jacob Blackwell produced to this Convention a Poll List of Freeholders of the Township of Newtown, whereby it appears that one hundred Freeholders in the said Town (who were all that did poll on that occasion) have elected him their Deputy to attend this Convention.

The said Certificates and Poll List being read, heard, and considered,

Resolved, That the Convention allows Colonel Jacob Blackwell, Captain Zebulon Williams, and Messrs. John Talman and Joseph Robinson to be present at its deliberations, and will take into consideration any advice they may offer.

Colonel Morris Graham, Major Robert R. Livingston, Junior, and Egbert Benson, Esquire, laid before the Convention a Certificate, signed by the respective Committees of the Precincts of Rumbout, Northeast Amenia, and Rynbeck, in the said County of Dutchess, at a meeting held by them at Charlotte Precinct, in the said County, on the 14th day of April instant, certifying that they, the said Morris Graham, Robert R. Livingston, Junior, and Egbert Benson, were elected Deputies to represent the said County in the Provincial Convention at the City of New-York, on the 20th day of April instant ; or to represent the respective Precincts who had sent Committees to that meeting, as this Convention, from a state of facts to be laid before them, should determine.

The same gentlemen from Dutchess County then laid before the Convention the said state of facts, which are in the words following, to wit :

1st. That at a meeting in August last, held for the purpose of nominating Delegates to represent the County of Dutchess in the last Continental Congress, Committees attended from seven Precincts.

2d. That shortly after, a Committee was chosen in another Precinct, who approved of the proceedings of this meeting, and wrote to the Committee of Correspondence, informing them of the same.

3d. That at this meeting Messrs. Anthony Hoffman, John Van Ness, and Egbert Benson were constituted a Standing Committee of Correspondence for the whole County, with directions to communicate to the other Committees whatever intelligence should, from time to time, be received, with a power to call a meeting of the other Committees when they should think it expedient ; and for that purpose a place was appointed where the next meeting should be held.

4th. That immediately upon the receipt of the Letter from the Committee of the City of New-York, of the 16th of March last, Circular Letters were despatched to the several Precincts in the County, mentioning the time when another meeting would be held at the place appointed, as above.

5th. That Town Meetings, for the purpose of taking the sense of the Inhabitants with respect to sending Deputies to attend this Convention, have been held in only six Precincts.

6th. That taking the six Precincts throughout, of the persons who actually appeared and gave their voices, either for or against the measure, a majority were in favour of it.

And the said Certificate and state of facts having been read and heard, and duly considered, they were accepted of by this Convention, and filed with the Secretary.

The Secretary being then called on for that purpose, reported to the Convention that, in pursuance of their order, he yesterday evening waited on Mr. Low, who, in substance, informed him that, as he could not attend the Committee when the measure of having eleven Deputies for the City and County of New-York was in agitation, he got a friend to signify to the Committee his disapprobation of the measure, and that if he was nominated he should think himself obliged to refuse to serve; that he had afterwards published a declaration that he would not serve as a Deputy, that the City might have an opportunity to supply his place, if it was thought necessary to have eleven Deputies, and that, therefore, the Convention are not to consider him as a Member.

Resolved unanimously, That this Convention, sensible of the services of the Delegates from this Colony who attended the Continental Congress, in order to express their approbation of their conduct, and as a mark of the confidence reposed in them, have unanimously re-elected all of them Delegates to attend the next Continental Congress at Philadelphia, except Mr. Isaac Low, who had previously declared that the Convention was not to consider him as a Member of this Convention, and is therefore ineligible.

John Herring, Esquire, declined attending at the next Continental Congress as a Delegate, and assigned his reasons to the Convention, which are approved of, and he is therefore excused.

Resolved unanimously, That five gentlemen be added, as Delegates, to those who attended the last Continental Congress, and re-elected by this Convention, and that they be chosen by ballot.

And the following gentlemen were then elected by ballot, nemine contradicente, viz: Colonel Philip Schuyler, George Clinton, Esquire, Colonel Lewis Morris, Robert R. Livingston, Junior, Esquire, and Francis Lewis, Esquire.

Resolved, therefore, unanimously, That Philip Livingston, James Duane, John Alsop, John Jay, Simon Boerum, William Floyd, Henry Wisner, Philip Schuyler, George Clinton, Lewis Morris, Francis Lewis, and Robert R. Livingston, Junior, Esquires, be Delegates to represent this Colony at the next Continental Congress to be held at the City of Philadelphia on the 10th day of May next, with full power to them, or any five of them, to meet the Delegates from the other Colonies, and to concert and determine upon such measures as shall be judged most effectual for the preservation and re-establishment of American rights and privileges, and for the restoration of harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies.

The Convention then adjourned till to-morrow morning, eleven o'clock.

Die Sabbati, 11 hora, A. M., April 22, 1775.

The Convention assembled at the Exchange, in New-York, pursuant to adjournment, Present:

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW-YORK.—Philip Livingston, Esquire, President, John Alsop, Esquire, Leonard Lispernard, Esquire, Francis Lewis, Esquire, Messrs. Abraham Walton, Isaac Roosevelt, Alexander McDougall, Abraham Brasher, and James Duane, Esquire.

CITY AND COUNTY OF ALBANY.—Colonel Philip Schuyler, Colonel Abraham Ten Broeck, Abraham Yates, Jun., Esquire, and Walter Livingston, Esquire.

ULSTER COUNTY.—Charles De Witt, George Clinton, and Levy Pawling, Esquires.

ORANGE COUNTY.—Colonel A. Hawkes Hay, Henry Wisner, Esquire, John Herring, Esquire, Messrs. Peter Clowes, and Israel Seely.

DUTCHESS COUNTY.—Robert R. Livingston, Jun., Esquire, Colonel Morris Graham, and Egbert Benson, Esquire.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.—Colonel Lewis Morris, John Thomas, Jun., Esquire, Robert Graham, Esquire, Major Philip Van Cortlandt, Samuel Drake, Esquire, and Mr. Stephen Ward.

KING'S COUNTY.—Simon Boerum, Esquire, and John Vanderbilt.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.—Colonel William Floyd, Colonel Nathaniel Woodhull, Colonel Phineas Fanning, John Sloss Hobart, Esquire, and Thomas Tredwell, Esquire.

NEWTOWN, OYSTER BAY, FLUSHING, AND JAMAICA, IN QUEEN'S COUNTY.—Colonel Joseph Blackwell, Zebulon Williams, Esquire, Messrs. John Talman, and Joseph Robinson.

A Draft of Credentials for the Delegates of this Colony, elected and appointed to attend at the next Continental Congress at Philadelphia, being read and approved, was agreed to, and is in the words following, to wit:

At a Provincial Convention, formed of Deputies from the City and County of New-York, the City and County of Albany, and the Counties of Dutchess, Ulster, Orange, Westchester, King's, and Suffolk, held at the City of New-York the twenty-second day of April, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, for the purpose of appointing Delegates to represent the Colony of New-York in the next Continental Congress, to be held at the City of Philadelphia on the tenth day of May next, Philip Livingston, Esquire, James Duane, John Alsop, John Jay, Simon Boerum, William Floyd, Henry Wisner, Philip Schuyler, George Clinton, Lewis Morris, Francis Lewis, and Robert R. Livingston, Jun., Esquires, were unanimously elected Delegates to represent this Colony at such Congress, with full power to them, or any five of them, to meet the Delegates from the other Colonies, and to concert and determine upon such measures as shall be judged most effectual for the preservation and re-establishment of American rights and privileges, and for the restoration of harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies.

Ordered, That the same be subscribed by the Members of this Convention, and that fair copies be made of the Resolutions of this Convention appointing the Delegates, as also a list of the Deputies who attended thereat, and that the same be signed by the President, and published in the New-York Newspapers.

Ordered, That the thanks of this Convention be given to the Secretary for his services on this occasion; which was accordingly done.

ATTACK ON THE INHABITANTS OF MASSACHUSETTS BY THE BRITISH TROOPS.

Portsmouth New-Hampshire, April 20, 1775.

Early this morning we were alarmed with an Express from Newburyport, with the following Letter to the Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence in this Town:

Newburyport, April 19, 1775.

SIR: This Town has been in a continual alarm since mid-day, with reports of the Troops having marched out of Boston to make some attack in the country. The reports in general concur, in part, in having been at Lexington. And it is very generally said they have been at Concord. We sent off an express this afternoon, who went as far as Simons's at Danvers, before he could get information that he thought might be depended upon. He there met two or three gentlemen who affirmed, the regular Troops and our men had been engaged chief of the morning, and that it is supposed we had twenty-five thousand men engaged against four thousand Regulars; that the Regulars had begun a retreat. Our men here are setting off immediately. And as the sword is now drawn, and first drawn on the side of the Troops, we scruple not you will give the readiest and fullest assistance in your power. And send this information further on.

In behalf of the Committee for this Town.

Your humble servant, JAMES HUDSON, Chairman.

LETTER FROM BOSTON TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED APRIL 19, 1775.

I have taken up my pen to inform you, that last night about eleven o'clock, one thousand of the best Troops, in a very secret manner, embarked on board a number of Boats at the bottom of the Common, and went up Cambridge River, and landed.

In the mean time they stopped every person from going over the Neck, or any Ferry; but we soon found a way to get some men to alarm the country. From thence they marched to Lexington, where they saw a number of men exercising. They ordered them to disperse, and immediately fired on them, killed eight men on the spot, and marched to Concord. This alarmed the country so, that it seemed as if men came down from the clouds. This news coming to Town, the General sent out another thousand men, with a large train of artillery. In the mean time, those Troops at Concord had set fire to the Court-House there. We then had our men collected, so that an engagement immediately ensued, and the King's Troops retreated very fast, until they were reinforced with the last one thousand that the General sent; but they did not stand long before the whole body gave way, and retreated very fast. Our men kept up at their heels, loading and firing till they got to Charlestown, when our men thought it not prudent to proceed any farther, fearing the Ships-of-War would be ordered to fire on Boston and Charlestown. They have gained a complete victory; and, by the best information I can get, most of the officers and soldiers are cut off. There were two wagons, one loaded with powder and ball, and the other with provisions, guarded by seventeen men and an officer going to the Army, when six of our men waylaid them, killed two, wounded two, and took the officer prisoner; the others took to the woods, and we brought off the wagons. The engagement began about twelve o'clock, and continued until seven; in the mean time they retreated twenty miles.

I have endeavoured to give you a few of the particulars, as near as I am able, considering the situation we are in, not knowing but the Troops may have liberty to turn their revenge on us. We have now at least ten thousand men round this Town. It has been a most distressing day with us; but I pray God we may never have reason to be called to such another.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN NEAR PHILADELPHIA, DATED BOSTON, APRIL 20, 1775.

Yesterday produced a scene the most shocking that New-England ever beheld. Last Saturday P. M., orders were sent to the several Regiments quartered here, not to let their Grenadiers or Light-Infantry do any duty till farther orders; upon which the inhabitants conjectured that some secret expedition was on foot, and, being upon the look-out, they observed those bodies on the move between ten and eleven o'clock on Tuesday night, observing a perfect silence in their march, towards the point opposite to Phipps's farm, where boats were in waiting, that conveyed them over. The men appointed to alarm the country on such occasions got over by stealth as early as the Troops, and took their different routes.

The first advice we had was about eight o'clock in the morning, when it was reported that the Troops had fired upon and killed five men in Lexington; previous to which an officer came express to his Excellency General Gage, when, between eight and nine o'clock, a Brigade marched out under the command of Earl Percy, consisting of the Marines, the Welsh Fusileers, the Fourth, and Forty-seventh, and Thirty-eighth Regiments, and two fieldpieces. About twelve o'clock it was given out by the General's Aid-de-Camp that no person was killed, and that a single gun had not been fired, which report was variously believed; but, between one and two o'clock, certain accounts came that eight were killed outright, and fourteen wounded of the inhabitants of Lexington. Those people, it seems, to the number of about forty, were drawn out early in the morning near the Meeting-House to exercise; upon which the party of Light-Infantry and Grenadiers, to the number of about eight hundred, came up to them, and ordered them to disperse. The commander replied that they were innocently amusing themselves with exercise, that they had not any ammunition with them, and therefore should not molest or disturb them. This answer not satisfying, the Troops fired upon them, and killed three or four; the others took to their heels, and the Troops continued to fire. A few took refuge in the Meeting-House, when the soldiers shovelled up the windows, pointed their guns in, and killed three there. This is the best account I can learn of the beginning of the fatal day, and you must naturally suppose that such a piece of cruelty would rouse the Country.

The Troops continued their march to Concord, entered the Town, and refreshed themselves in the Meeting-House and Town-House. In the latter place they found some ammunition and stores belonging to the country, which finding they could not bring away by reason of the country people having occupied all the posts round them, they set fire to the house, but the people extinguished it. They set it on fire a second time, which brought on a general engagement at about eleven o'clock. The Troops took two pieces of cannon from the countrymen; but their numbers increasing, they soon regained them, and the Troops were obliged to retreat towards Town.

At noon they were joined by the other Brigades, under Earl Percy, when another very warm engagement came on at Lexington. The Troops not being able to stand it, were obliged to continue their retreat, which they did with the bravery becoming British soldiers; but the country was in a manner desperate, not regarding their cannon in the least, and followed on till seven in the evening, by which time they got into Charlestown, when they left off the pursuit, lest they might injure the inhabitants. I stood upon the hills in Town and saw the engagement very plain, which was very bloody for seven hours; and it is conjectured that one half of the soldiers at least are killed. The last Brigade was sent over the Ferry in the evening to secure their retreat; and they are this morning intrenching themselves upon Bunker's Hill, till they can get a safe retreat to this Town.

It is impossible to learn any particulars, as the communication between town and country is at present broke off; they were till ten last night bringing over their wounded, several of whom are since dead, two officers in particular. When I reflect, and consider that the fight between those whose parents but a few years ago were brothers, I shudder at the thought, and there is no knowing where our calamities will end.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BOSTON TO A GENTLEMAN
IN NEW-YORK, DATED APRIL 20, 1775.

I have yet an opportunity of writing to you from my own house, but how long that privilege is to continue God only knows. Yesterday morning, or rather late in the night of the 18th, a Brigade, or four Regiments, were carried from the west part of the Town, in boats of the Men-of-War, to Cambridge, from whence they marched on towards Concord, which is about twenty miles from hence. On their way, in passing through Lexington, the Troops came unexpectedly on a Company of our country people, (who are called Minute-Men) that were early in the morning exercising with arms, without ammunition. The Officer of the Troops is said to have ordered them to lay down their arms. The Captain replied, he was on his own ground; that his Company were without ammunition, and had no intent but that of improving in the military art. After some altercation, report says the Captain and his men turned to go off, and that the Light-Infantry fired on them, killed six, and wounded mortally two others. The Troops continuing their route to Concord, the country, by the time of their getting there, was alarmed; and our people, taking to a hill, began firing upon the Troops with about two hundred men, which number, receiving continual additions, the Troops were all the remainder of the day on their retreat to Charlestown, and many of the officers who have returned say they never were in a hotter engagement. Many are killed on both sides, and were left on the roads, neither side having time to collect their dead. Our people came to no regular battle, but annoyed their whole passage back. We could see the flashes, and hear the reports of the guns for hours; the warmest fire being about two miles from the Town, where only water parted us.

The marching of the Troops to the water side was so sudden and silent, that few of the inhabitants knew of it till next morning.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BOSTON TO A MERCHANT IN NEW-YORK, DATED THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1775.

What I was apprehensive of in my last, is now confirmed. Yesterday morning the Grenadiers and Light-Infantry of all the Regiments in Town marched out very unexpectedly, and proceeded to Concord, twenty-one miles from hence; at which place the Provincial Congress sat, and where large Magazines, belonging to the Country, were collected, which were totally destroyed. This party consisted of about eight hundred men, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Smith, of the Tenth Regiment. About six hours after those left Boston, a Brigade was ordered out, consisting of one thousand men, commanded by Lord Percy. These marched about sixteen miles, to a place called Lexington, where they met the first party returning, and who, in their first march up, had killed eight or ten men that opposed their march. Upon the Army's return, near Lexington, they were fired on from the woods, which was returned. Thus the engagement became general, and continued for seven hours, during which several lives were lost, and a great many wounded. It is surprising how soon the country people mustered, and in vast numbers; so much, that the Troops were obliged to retreat near twelve miles, and all this way a constant firing was kept up on both sides. The country people fired all from cover, and by this means had much the advantage of the Troops. The engagement lasted until night put an end to it. I saw a great part of it from Beacon Hill. They kept a constant firing until they got into Charlestown. The loss on the part of the Troops, from the best information, is about two hundred killed; among which there are no Officers, though many very much wounded. Lieutenant-Colonel Barnard, of the Royal Welch, Lieutenant-Colonel Smith, of the Tenth, are slightly wounded. Lieutenant Gould, of the Fourth Regiment, is also wounded. Major Moncrieffe, Captain Parsons, and Mr. Haines, are safe returned. The loss on the side of the Country must be considerable; at present, there is no coming to any certainty. From the preparations that are making, I think it will be soon renewed.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN NEWPORT (RHODE-ISLAND) TO THE NEW-YORK COMMITTEE, DATED APRIL 21, 1775.

Yesterday the Town was alarmed by intelligence contained in a letter, which came express from Providence, to the Governour, subscribed by the Lieutenant-Governour, S. Hopkins, J. Jenks, S. Nightingale, J. Brown, and about twenty others, inhabitants of the Town of Providence, which says: "Our brethren of the Massachusetts-Bay are attacked by a body of the Regular Troops, and many friends are slain." They then request the Governour to call the Assembly, to make the necessary preparations for the common defence; to which a postscript is added, signed Thomas Green, that Colonel Warren and Doctor Pyncham, two Deputies from Massachusetts Congress, were at Providence, waiting to consult the Assembly on what was proper to be done. There is also another letter from S. Hopkins to Major-General Potter, a copy of which was forwarded to the Governour, and calls upon the Major-General to repair to Providence, to consult with Lieutenant-General Sessions; this says: "The King's Troops are actually engaged butchering and destroying our brethren in the most inhuman manner. The inhabitants oppose them with great zeal and courage."

Both the above letters are dated, Providence, April 19, 1775, at night.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM WEATHERSFIELD, IN CONNECTICUT, TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED APRIL 23, 1775.

The late frequent marchings and counter-marchings into the country, were calculated to conceal the most cruel and inhuman design; and imagining they had laid suspicion asleep, they pitched upon Tuesday night for the execution. A hint being got, two expresses were sent to alarm the Congress. One of them had the good fortune to arrive; the other (Mr. Revere) is missing, supposed to be waylaid and slain. In the night of Tuesday, the Company of Grenadiers and Light-Infantry, from every Regiment, were transported to Charlestown in long-boats, and at daybreak began their march for Lexington, where a number of the inhabitants were assembled peaceably, without arms, to consult their safety. The Commander called them rebels, and bade them disperse. On their refusal, he fired; killed and wounded nine. They then proceeded towards Concord, marking their way with cruelties and barbarity, never equalled by the Savages of America. In one house a woman and seven children were slaughtered, (perhaps on their return.) At Concord, they seized two pieces of cannon, and destroyed two others, with all the flour, &c., in store, but the people secured their magazine of powder, &c.

By this time, about four hundred (no accounts make them more than five hundred) of our men assembled, and placed themselves so advantageously, without being perceived, that when the enemy were on the return, they received the full fire of our men. A heavy engagement ensued; the enemy retreating, and our men pressing on them with constant reinforcements. At Lexington, they retook their two pieces of cannon, seized the enemy's wagons and baggage, and made about twenty prisoners; continuing to press the Regulars close to Charlestown, where they were on the point of giving up, (one account says this Brigade was almost all cut off,) but a reinforcement, under the command of Lord Percy, having been detached that morning from Boston, they joined the first detachment in the retreat, and retired with it to Bunker's Hill, where they intrenched, and night parted them. Our number increased, and next morning would have surrounded the hill, had it not been for the situation near the water, where, on one side, they were exposed to the fire from a Man-of-War.

We lost thirty men in the action. The lowest account of the enemy's loss is one hundred and fifty. Lord Percy, General Haldimand, and many other officers, are said to be among the slain. A gentleman of veracity assured me that he numbered, within half a mile from the place where the fight began, one hundred and fifty. The post confirms the same account.

We are all in motion here, and equipt from the Town, yesterday, one hundred young men, who cheerfully offered their service; twenty days provision, and sixty-four rounds, per man. They are all well armed, and in high spirits. My brother is gone with them, and others of the first property. Our neighbouring Towns are all arming and moving. Men of the first character and property shoulder their arms and march off for the field of action. We shall, by night, have several thousands from this Colony on their march.

The eyes of America are on New-York; the Ministry have certainly been promised by some of your leading men, that your Province would desert us; but you will be able to form a better judgment when you see how this intelligence is relished. Take care of yourselves; we have more than men enough to block up the enemy at Boston, and if we are like to fall by treachery, by Heaven we will not fall unrevenged on the traitors; but if balls or swords will reach them, they shall fall with us. It is no time now to dally, or be merely neutral; he that is not for us is against us, and ought to feel the first of our resentment. You must now declare, most explicitly, one way or the other, that we may know whether we are to go to Boston or New-York. If you desert, our men will as cheerfully attack New-York as Boston; for we can but perish, and that we are determined upon, or be free. I have nothing to add, but am, your friend and countryman, &c.

P. S. Colonel Murray's son, one of the Tories, undertook to guide the Regulars in their march to Concord, and on their retreat was taken prisoner; but attempting to escape from our people, they shot him—a death too honourable for such a villain! They have made another of them prisoner, but I do not recollect his name; none of ours were taken.

Will Colonel Grant believe now that New-England men dare look Regulars in the face? Eighteen hundred of their best men retreating with loss, before one-third of their number, seems almost incredible, and I think must be called an omen for good. In every struggle Heaven has, as yet, given us strength equal to the day; its hand is not shortened, nor its arm weakened. We are now called upon to show the world “that whom we call fathers did beget us,” and that we desire to enjoy the blessings they purchased for us with their lives and fortunes. We fix on our Standards and Drums, the Colony Arms, with the motto, “qui transtulit sustinet,” round it in letters of gold, which we construe thus: “God, who transplanted us hither, will support us.”

New-York, Sunday, April 23, 1775.

This morning we had reports in this City from Rhode-Island and New-London, that an action had happened between the King's Troops and the inhabitants of Boston, which was not credited; but about twelve o'clock an express arrived with the following account, viz:

Watertown, Wednesday morning, }
Near ten o'clock, April 19, 1775. }

To all Friends of AMERICAN Liberty let it be known:

That this morning before break of day, a Brigade, consisting of about one thousand or twelve hundred men, landed at Phipps's farm at Cambridge, and marched to Lexington, where they found a Company of our Colony Militia in arms, upon whom they fired without any provocation, and killed six men and wounded four others. By an express from Boston we find another Brigade are upon their march from Boston, supposed to be about one thousand. The bearer, Israel Bessel, is charged to alarm the Country quite to Connecticut, and all persons are desired to furnish him with fresh horses as they may be needed. I have spoken with several who have seen the dead and wounded. Pray let the Delegates from this Colony to Connecticut see this; they know Colonel Foster, of Brookfield, one of our Delegates.

T. PALMER,

One of the Committee for Safety.

Attest,

NATHAN BALDWIN, Town-Clerk.

Fairfield, Connecticut, Saturday, 22d April, 8 o'clock.

Since the above was written we have received the following by the second express:

Thursday, 20th April, 3 o'clock, A. M.

I am this moment informed by express from Woodstock, taken from his own mouth, that arrived there at 2 o'clock this afternoon, that the contest between the first Brigade that marched to Concord was still continuing this morning at the Town of Lexington, to which place said Brigade had retreated; that another Brigade, said to be the second mentioned in the letter of this morning, had landed with a quantity of artillery at the place where the first did. The Provincials were determined to prevent the two Brigades from joining their strength, if possible, and remain in great need of succour. The Regulars, when in Concord, burnt the Court-House, took two pieces of cannon, which they rendered useless, and began to take up Concord Bridge, on which Captain . . . , who, with many on both sides, were soon killed, then made an attack on the King's Troops, on which they retreated to Lexington. I am your humble servant,

EBENEZER WILLIAMS.

To Colonel Obadiah Johnson, Canterbury.

P. S. Mr. McFarland, of Camfield, Merchant, has just returned from Boston, by way of Providence, who conversed with an express from Lexington, who further informs, that about four thousand of our Troops had surrounded the first Brigade above-mentioned, who were on a hill in Lexington; that the action continued, and there were about fifty of our men killed, and one hundred and fifty of the Regulars, as near as they could determine when the express came away. It will be expedient for every man to go who is fit and willing.

The above is a true copy as received by express from New-Haven, and attested to by the Committee of Correspondence from Town to Town.

The above was received on Sunday, April 23, about twelve o'clock, by the Committee of New-York, and forwarded to Philadelphia by Isaac Low, Chairman of the Committee, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

LETTER FROM NEW-YORK TO A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED APRIL 24, 1775.

This City was alarmed yesterday by a report from the Eastward, that the King's Troops had attacked the Massachusetts-Bay people; the report was confirmed in a few hours after by the arrival of St. Croix, from Rhode-Island, and an express from near Boston. The Committee was soon called, and an express sent off to your City; as you will have particulars by him before this reaches you, I need say no more.

There were two Sloops here loaded with Flour for the Soldiers at Boston, by Mr. Watts. The people went, Sunday as it was, and unloaded them in a hurry. Towards evening they went and secured about half the City Arms; a guard of about one hundred men, I am told, was then placed at the City-Hall, to secure the rest of the Arms, and another hundred at the Powder-House; this was not done by the Magistrates, but by the people.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM NEW-YORK TO A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED APRIL 24, 1775.

I do not doubt but the interesting news from Boston must give every good and virtuous man much concern, that, from present appearances, a reconciliation between us and Great Britain is at a farther distance than we, of late, had rational grounds to hope. Surely this proceeding on the part of General Gage is not the olive branch held up by Government. Yesterday this whole City was in a state of alarm; every face appeared animated with resentment. Soon after the news arrived by express, many citizens went to two Transports loaded with Bread, Flour, &c., for the Troops, and they were speedily unloaded. The Committee met, and after despatching the express, considered of other matters, and will no doubt be attentive to every thing within their power to preserve the peace of the Town, and property, and all other matters tending towards maintaining the character of a sister Colony that feels for another in distress. Many persons of influence, who have been thought inimical to the cause, now come out boldly and declare their sentiments worthy of themselves. Indeed the difference of sentiment has not been much; party views kept men of weight asunder; it is hoped that will subside more and more.

New-York, April 25, 1775.

This day, about noon, arrived a second express from New-England, with the following important advices:

Wallingford, Monday, April 24, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Colonel Wadsworth was over in this place most of yesterday, and has ordered twenty men out of each Company in his Regiment, some of which had already set off, and others go this morning. He brings accounts, which came to him authenticated, from Thursday in the afternoon. The King's Troops being reinforced a second time, and joined, as I suppose, from what I can learn, by the party who were intercepted by Colonel Gardner, were then encamped on Winter Hill, and were surrounded by twenty thousand of our men, who were intrenching. Col. Gardner's ambush proved fatal to Lord Percy and another General Officer, who were killed on the spot the first fire. To counterbalance this good news, the story is, that our first man in command (who he is I know not) is also killed. It seems they have lost many men on both sides; Colonel Wadsworth had the account in a letter from Hartford. The Country beyond here are all gone, and we expect it will be impossible to procure horses for our wagons, as they have, and will, in every place employ themselves all their horses. In this place they send a horse for every sixth man, and are pressing them for that purpose. I know of no way, but you must immediately send a couple of stout, able horses, who may overtake us at Hartford possibly, where we must return Mrs. Noyes's, and Meloy's, if he holds out so far. Remember, the horses must be had at any rate.

I am, in the greatest haste, your entire friend and humble servant,

JAMES LOCKWOOD.

N. B. Colonel Gardner took nine prisoners, and twelve clubbed their firelocks, and came over to our party. Col. Gardner's party consisted of seven hundred men, and the Regulars one thousand eight hundred, instead of one thousand two hundred, as we heard before. They have sent a vessel up Mystick River as far as Temple's farm, which is about half a mile from Winter Hill. These accounts being true, all the King's forces, except four or five hundred, must be encamped on Winter Hill.

At the instance of the gentlemen of Fairfield, just departed from hence, this is copied verbatim from the original, to be forwarded to that Town. ISAAC BEERS.

press a letter and newspaper, with momentous intelligence, this instant arrived. We are your humble servants,

PAUL TRAPIER, P. TRAPIER, JUNIOR,
S. WRAGG, ANTHONY BONNEAU.

The Committee of Intelligence in Charlestown, to the care of the Honourable William Henry Drayton, Esq. Per Express.

Salem, Massachusetts, April 20, 1775.

Great Britain, adieu! No longer shall we honour you as our mother; you are become cruel; you have not so much bowels as the sea monsters towards their young ones. We have cried to you for justice, but behold violence and bloodshed! Your sword is drawn offensively, and the sword of New-England defensively; by this stroke you have broken us off from you, and effectually alienated us from you. O Britain! see you to your own house.

King George the Third, adieu! No more shall we cry to you for protection; no more shall we bleed in defence of your person. Your breach of covenant; your violation of faith; your turning a deaf ear to our cries for justice, for covenanted protection and salvation from the oppressive, tyrannical, and bloody measures of the British Parliament, and putting a sanction upon all their measures to enslave and butcher us, have dissolved our allegiance to your Crown and Government. Your sword, that ought in justice to protect us, is now drawn with a witness to destroy us. O George! see thou to thine own house.

General Gage, pluck up stakes and begone; you have drawn the sword; you have slain in cool blood a number of innocent New-England men; you have made the assault, and be it known to you, the defensive sword of New-England is now drawn; it now studies just revenge, and it will not be satisfied till your blood is shed, and the blood of every son of violence under your command, and the blood of every traitorous Tory under your protection: therefore depart with all your master's forces; depart from our territories; return to your master soon, or destruction will come upon you. Every moment you tarry in New-England, in the character of your master's General, you are viewed as an intruder, and must expect to be treated by us as our inveterate enemy.

O my dear New-England, hear thou the alarm of war! The call of Heaven is to arms! to arms! The sword of Britain is drawn against us; without provocation, how many of our sons have been fired upon and slain in cool blood, in the cool of the day! What unheard-of barbarity has been committed on the sickly and helpless grey hairs and innocent babes, by the British Troops! Behold the fruits of our being declared rebels by the British Parliament! Behold what all New-England must expect to feel, if we don't cut off and make a final end of those British sons of violence, and of every base Tory among us, or confine the latter to Simsbury mines. I beseech you, for God's sake, and for your own sake, watch against every vice, every provocation of God Almighty against us; against intemperance in drinking; against profane language, and all debauchery; and let us all rely on the arm of the Most High; and whether we tarry by the stuff, or jeopard our lives in the high places of the field, let us all, like good Jehoshaphat, address the Throne of God, saying, "Behold how they reward us, to come to call us out of thy possessions, which thou hast given us to inherit! O our God, wilt thou not judge them? For we have no might against them; neither know we what to do; but our eyes are upon thee."

We are, my brethren, in a good cause; and if God be for us, we need not fear what man can do. Let us be wise, be prudent, be firm, and courageous. The cause that General Gage has undertaken to execute, is so manifestly wrong, that he must be a terror to himself. Our blood shed by the Troops under his command, cries, and the cry will soon appear to have reached Heaven against him.

O thou righteous Judge of all the earth, awake for our help. Amen and Amen. JOHANNES IN EREMO.

Concord, Massachusetts, April 20, 1775.

SIR: The Army under General Gage having murdered sundry inhabitants; this, with the industrious preparations making in Boston for a speedy march into the country, impresses us with the absolute necessity of convening the Provincial Congress at Concord, as soon as may be, agreeable to a vote of Congress at their last session. You are therefore requested immediately to repair to Concord, as the closest deliberations, and the collected wisdom of the people, at this alarming crisis, are indispensably necessary for the salvation of the Country.

RICHARD DEVENS, per order.

To the Members of the Provincial Congress.

THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY OF MASSACHUSETTS TO THE GOVERNOUR OF CONNECTICUT.

Cambridge, April 20, 1775.

On Wednesday, the 19th instant, early in the morning, a detachment of General Gage's Army marched into the country to Lexington, about thirteen miles from Boston, where they met with a small party of Minute-men exercising, who had no intention of doing any injury to the Regulars. But they fired upon our men without any provocation, killed eight of them the first onset, then marched forward to Concord, where they destroyed the Magazines and Stores for a considerable time. Our people, however, mustered as soon as possible, and repulsed the Troops, pursuing them quite down to Charlestown, until they reached a place called Bunker's Hill, although they received a very large reinforcement at Lexington, from General Gage. As the Troops have now commenced hostilities, we think it our duty to exert our utmost strength to save our Country from absolute slavery. We pray your Honours would afford us all the assistance in your power, and shall be glad that our brethren who come to our aid may be supplied with Military Stores and Provisions, as we have none of either more than is absolutely necessary for ourselves. We pray God to direct you to such measures as shall tend to the salvation of our common liberties. Per order of the Committee of Safety.

DOCTOR WARREN TO GENERAL GAGE.

Cambridge, April 20, 1775.

SIR: The unhappy situation into which this Colony is thrown gives the greatest uneasiness to every man who regards the welfare of the Empire; or feels for the distresses of his fellow-men; but even now much may be done to alleviate the misfortunes that cannot be entirely remedied; and I think it of the utmost importance to us, that our conduct be such as that the contending parties may entirely rely upon the honour and integrity of each other for the punctual performance of any agreement that shall be made between them. Your Excellency knows very well, I believe, the part I have taken in publick affairs; I ever scorned disguise. I think I have done my duty; some may think otherwise; but be assured, Sir, as far as my influence goes, every thing which can be reasonably required of us to do, shall be done; every thing promised, shall be religiously performed. I should now be very glad to know from you, Sir, how many days you desire may be allowed for such as desire to remove to Boston with their effects, and what time you will allow the people in Boston for their removal. When I have received that information, I will repair to Congress, and hasten, as far as I am able, the issuing a Proclamation. I beg leave to suggest that the condition of only admitting thirty Wagons at a time into the Town appears to me very inconvenient, and will prevent the good effects of a Proclamation intended to be issued for encouraging all wagoners to assist in removing the effects from Boston with all possible speed. If your Excellency will be pleased to take the matter into consideration, and favour me as soon as may be with an answer, it will lay me under a great obligation, as it so nearly concerns the welfare of my friends in Boston. I have many things which I wish to say to your Excellency, and most sincerely wish I had broken through the formalities which I thought due to your rank, and freely have told you all I knew or thought of publick affairs; and I must ever confess, whatever may be the event, that you generously gave me such an opening as I now think I ought to have embraced; but the true cause of my not doing it was the knowledge I had of the vileness and treachery of many persons around you, who I supposed had gained your entire confidence. I am, &c.

ADAM BABCOCK TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

New-Haven, April 20, 1775.

SIR: I have a Brig now ready for sea, on board of which is laden twelve Oxen, bound for the foreign West-Indies. She was cleared out the 15th instant, and has made several attempts to sail, and once actually sailed, but by contrary winds was obliged yesterday to put back, and must unlade the Cattle she has on board, according to your Honour's Proclamation, unless the circumstances attending this matter can induce your Honour to grant a dispensation. I will use no other argument in favour of this application than this: that as the Cattle were purchased, cleared out, and shipped before the Embargo was laid, and indeed before the cause that occasioned the Embargo existed, there was consequently no intention in me to defeat the wise precaution of our Legislature, and have been so long a time on ship-board, at a great expense. Whether, under these circumstances, I may not claim, at least ask an exemption, as in my apprehension the publick will apparently sustain a greater loss through me, as an individual, from her being stopped and unloaded, (as I have neither time nor opportunity to supply the place of the Oxen with Horses before there may be danger of sending out any Vessel,) than from her proceeding to perform her voyage; especially when I assure your Honour that the nett proceeds of this Vessel and Cargo are ordered to be laid out in the West-Indies, and shipped home to me in certain articles which the community are in much greater want of at this unhappy period than of Cattle. I shall wait your Honour's determination by the return of the young man, Mr. Adam Helme, who waits on you with this; and in the mean time have the honour to be, with the greatest respect, your Honour's most obedient and humble servant, ADAM BABCOCK.

The Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Governour of the Colony of Connecticut.

Williamsburgh, Virginia, April 21, 1775.

This morning, between three and four o'clock, all the Gunpowder in the Magazine, to the amount, as we hear, of about twenty barrels, was carried off in his Excellency the Governour's Wagon, escorted by Captain Collins and a detachment of Marines from the armed Schooner Magdalen, now lying at Burwell's Ferry, and lodged on board that Vessel. As soon as the news of this manœuvre took wind, the whole City was alarmed, and much exasperated; and numbers got themselves in readiness to repair to the Palace to demand from the Governour a restoration of what they so justly supposed was deposited in this Magazine for the Country's defence. However, as some gentlemen represented the propriety of remonstrating to the Governour upon this occasion in a decent and respectful manner, the Common Hall assembled, who, after deliberating some time, waited upon his Excellency with the following Address, which was presented by the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, Recorder of this City, and is as follows:

To His Excellency the Right Honourable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, His Majesty's Lieutenant, Governour-General, and Commander-in-chief of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA:

The humble Address of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and Common Council of the City of WILLIAMSBURGH:

MY LORD: We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and Common Council of the City of Williamsburgh, in Common Hall assembled, humbly beg leave to represent to your Excellency that the inhabitants of this City were this morning exceedingly alarmed by a report that a large quantity of Gunpowder was, in the preceding night, while they were sleeping in their beds, removed from the publick Magazine in this City, and conveyed under an escort of Marines on board one of His Majesty's armed Vessels lying at a Ferry on James River.

We beg leave to represent to your Excellency, that as this Magazine was erected at the publick expense of this Colony, and appropriated to the safe-keeping of such munition as should be there lodged from time to time, for the protection and security of the Country, by arming thereof such of the Militia as might be necessary in case of invasions and insurrections, they humbly conceive it to be the only proper repository to be resorted to in times of imminent danger.

We farther beg leave to inform your Excellency, that from various reports at present prevailing in different parts of the Country, we have too much reason to believe that some wicked and designing persons have instilled the most diabolical notions into the minds of our Slaves, and that, therefore, the utmost attention to our internal security is become the more necessary.

The circumstances of this City, my Lord, we consider as peculiar and critical. The inhabitants, from the situation of the Magazine in the middle of their City, have for a long tract of time been exposed to all those dangers which have happened in many Countries from explosions and other accidents. They have, from time to time, thought it incumbent on them to guard the Magazine. For their security, they have for some time past judged it necessary to keep strong patrols on foot. In their present circumstances, then, to have the chief and necessary means of their defence removed, cannot but be extremely alarming.

Considering ourselves as guardians of the City, we therefore humbly desire to be informed by your Excellency upon what motives and for what particular purpose the Powder has been carried off in such a manner: and we earnestly entreat your Excellency to order it to be immediately returned to the Magazine.

To which Address His Excellency returned this verbal Answer:

That hearing of an insurrection in a neighbouring County, he had removed the Powder from the Magazine, where he did not think it secure, to a place where it would be in perfect security; and that, upon his word and honour, whenever it was wanted on any insurrection, it should be delivered in half an hour. That he had removed it in the night time to prevent any alarm; and that Captain Collins had his express commands for the part he had acted. He was surprised to hear the people were under arms on this occasion, and that he should not think it prudent to put Powder into their hands in such a situation.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee for Cumberland County, held on Friday, the 21st of April, 1775:

The Chairman recommended that the Committee should take under consideration the proceedings of the late Provincial Convention, held at Richmond Town, in the County of Henrico, from Monday, the 20th of March, to Monday, the 27th of the same month.

The Committee accordingly proceeded to the consideration thereof, and, after the maturest deliberation, came to the following Resolutions:

Resolved, unanimously, That this Committee do cordially approve the Proceedings and Resolutions of the late Provincial Convention, and also recommend it, in the strongest terms, to the inhabitants of this County, to observe them in every particular, and that they use every means in their power to carry them into effect.

Resolved, unanimously, That the most cordial thanks of this Committee, and of all the inhabitants of the County, are justly due to the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esq., and the rest of the worthy Delegates who represented this Colony in the late Provincial Convention, for the cheerful undertaking, and faithful discharge of the trust reposed in them, and for the wisdom and spirit displayed in their proceedings.

GEORGE CARRINGTON, Chairman.

CONNECTICUT COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE TO JOHN HANCOCK.

Lebanon, April 21, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Two of the Delegates from your Congress were with Governour Trumbull, and left him this morning at 7 o'clock. Writs are gone out, to call the General Assembly to meet at Hartford next Wednesday. Every preparation is making to support your Province. We have many reports of what is doing with you, the particulars we cannot yet get with precision. The ardour of our people is such, that they can't be kept back. The Colonels are to forward part of the best men and most ready, as fast as possible, the remainder to be ready at a moment's warning. These are the present movements with us. All that we learn from you is, that a Brigade marched from Boston towards Concord last Tuesday evening; that they fired on a party of Provincials at that place, and that they were attacked by the Provincials, and obliged to retreat; and that General Gage was marching out to cover their retreat; that numbers were killed on both sides. Indeed, our accounts are so various, we know not what to rely on. We therefore have despatched Mr. David Trumbull, the son of Governour Trumbull, with orders to proceed to such place as he shall find you at, and get such intelligence as may be depended on, that we may know how to concert the measures necessary and best for us to take.

We shall anxiously expect to hear from you, and hope to have such intelligence as you may judge necessary to give us, by the return of Mr. Trumbull.

We are, with anxious prayers for your safety, and a happy event of this most disagreeable contest, gentlemen, your most humble servants,

WM. WILLIAMS,
NATH. WALES, Jr.,
JOSEPH TRUMBULL.

To the Honourable John Hancock, Esquire, President of the Provincial Congress of the Massachusetts-Bay. Per Mr. Trumbull.

P. S. We hope despatches will be immediately sent off from you, with most authentick accounts of the late transactions, to forestall such exaggerated accounts as may go from the Army and Navy; it may prevent harsh measures, and strengthen the hands of our friends in Britain. We hint this step, and dare say no hints, however free, at such a time as this, will be taken amiss.

COMMITTEE OF NEWBURYPORT TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Newburyport, April 21, 1775.

SIR: We have sent forward the bearer, to have your orders with all possible despatch by his return, whether the forces that are coming from the Province of New-Hampshire, and from the eastern parts of our Province, who, by expresses, are hastening along, should be sent back, especially those who live near the sea-shore. We are well informed numbers passed our River yesterday, at the upper Ferries, besides four Companies through this Town, on their way to you. We shall follow your directions, and, if ordered, take care to find expresses as far Eastward as necessary. We have a party of men from this Town (upwards of one hundred) upon their march to you. If they are not wanted, and you think proper, you can order our express to turn them back. We sent off last evening two field-pieces to you; if not wanted, they may be of some use here. We would be glad of your directions by our next Express, or by any safe opportunity, as soon as you can attend, how we shall act in case any Cutters should come in here, more especially if they bring land forces with them. If provisions of any sort are wanted, give us an account what sort, and we will forward what we are able, with all despatch. If, in giving answers to these inquiries, it be necessary for you to give any private information, please to direct to Benjamin Greenleaf, Esquire, sealed, and enclose it in another letter, with your information that may be communicated, sealed, to the Chairman of the Committee for this Town, by whose order, and in whose behalf, I am, Sir, your most humble servant,

B. GREENLEAF.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY OF MASSACHUSETTS TO NEW-HAMPSHIRE CONGRESS.

Cambridge, April 22, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: On Wednesday, the 19th instant, early in the morning, a Brigade of General Gage's Army marched into the country to Lexington, about thirteen miles from Boston, where they met with a small party of our Militia exercising, who had no intention of doing injury to the Regulars; but they fired upon our men, without any provocation, killed eight of them, and wounded two others. Then they marched to Concord, where they destroyed part of our Magazines and Stores. However, our people collected as soon as possible, and repulsed the Troops, pursuing them quite down to Charlestown, where they encamped on a place called Bunker's Hill. The First Division, which consisted of about one thousand men, went to Concord, and the Second Division, about the same number, who took the same route, supported the First Division as well as they could, but all were obliged to retire. Our loss is supposed between twenty and thirty killed, and a few wounded. Their loss is much larger. As the Troops have now begun hostilities, we think it our duty to exert our utmost strength to save our Country from absolute slavery, and we pray you to afford us all the assistance in your power; and we shall be glad that our brethren, who may come to our aid, may be supplied with all necessary provisions and military stores, as we have no more of either than what is absolutely necessary for ourselves. We pray God to direct you to such measures as shall tend to the salvation of our common liberties.

We are, gentlemen, with great respect, your distressed friends and brethren. By order of the Committee of Safety.

J. PALMER.

To the Honourable John Wentworth, Esquire, Chairman of the Provincial Congress of New-Hampshire. Per favour of Mr. John Griffin.

BENJAMIN GREENLEAF TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE IN HAMPTON.

Newburyport, April 22, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: We have now received information from the Committee of Safety at Cambridge, who are appointed by the Province, that they have a sufficient number of men arrived, and therefore would not have any more come from the Northward for the present, but think it needful they should be ready to guard the sea-coasts in their own neighbourhood. Pray forward this intelligence as far as may be needful, and with as much despatch as possible.

We were unhappily thrown into distress yesterday, by false accounts received by two or three persons, and spread abroad, of a number of Soldiers being landed at Ipswich and murdering the inhabitants. We have since heard that it arose in the first place from a discovery of some small Vessels near the entrance of their River—one, at least, known to be a Cutter—and it was apprehended that they were come to relieve the captives there in Jail.

I am, gentlemen, your most humble servant,

B. GREENLEAF.

To the Committee of Correspondence in Hampton.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE INHABITANTS OF BOSTON.

April 22, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The Committee of Safety being informed that General Gage has proposed a Treaty with the inhabitants of the Town of Boston, wherein he stipulates that the women and children, with all their effects, shall have safe conduct without the Garrison, and their men also, upon condition that the male inhabitants within the Town shall, on their part, solemnly engage that they will not take up arms against the King's Troops within the Town, should an attack be made from without. We cannot but esteem these conditions to be just and reasonable; and as the inhabitants are in danger of suffering from the want of provisions, which, in this time of general confusion, cannot be conveyed into the Town, are willing you should enter into, and faithfully keep the engagement aforementioned, said to be required of you, and to remove yourselves, women, children, and effects, as soon as may be.

Per order.

BOSTON COMMITTEE TO DR. JOSEPH WARREN.

Boston, April 23, 1775.

SIR: The following proceedings contain the Agreement made between his Excellency General Gage and the Town of Boston. You are informed it is the earnest desire of the inhabitants, that such persons as incline to remove into the Town with their effects, may be permitted so to do without molestation, and they having appointed us as a Committee to write to you on this subject, we hope this request will be complied with, as the Town, in a very full meeting, was unanimous in this and every other vote, relating to this matter; and we beg the favour of as speedy an answer as may be. We are, most respectfully, your obedient humble servants,

JAMES BOWDOIN,	JOHN PITTS,
JOHN SCOLLAY,	EZEK. GOLDTHWAIT,
TIM. NEWELL,	ALEXANDER HILL,
THOS. MARSHALL,	HENDERSON INCHES,
SAMUEL AUSTIN,	EDWARD PAYNE.

To Doctor Joseph Warren.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN GENERAL GAGE AND THE TOWN OF BOSTON.

Boston, ss.

At a meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the Town of Boston, legally warned, on Saturday, the 22d day of April, A. D. 1775,

The Hon. JAMES BOWDOIN, Esq., Moderator.

The Moderator informed the Town that the present meeting was in consequence of an interview between his Excellency General Gage and the Selectmen, at his desire, and mentioned the substance of the conversation that passed; and also that the Selectmen, with the advice and assistance of a number of gentlemen, had prepared several votes, which they thought it might be proper for the Town to pass; and which, in conjunction with the assurances that had been given to his Excellency by the Selectmen, they apprehended, from the interview aforesaid, would be satisfactory to his Excellency: Whereupon, the Honourable James Bowdoin, Esquire, Ezekiel Goldthwait, Esq., Mr. Henderson Inches, Mr. Edward Payne, Mr. Alexander Hill, together with the Selectmen, viz: John Scollay, Esquire, Mr. Timothy Newell, Mr. Samuel Austin, Thomas Marshall, Esquire, and Mr. John Pitts were appointed a Committee to consider of this important matter, and were desired to report as soon as may be.

The said Committee made report, and, after some debate, the two following Votes passed unanimously, viz:

His Excellency General Gage, in an interview with the Selectmen, having represented that there was a large body of men in arms assembled in the neighbourhood of this Town, with hostile intentions against His Majesty's Troops stationed here, and that in case the Troops should be attacked by them, and the attack should be aided by the inhabitants of the Town, it might issue in very unhappy consequences to the Town: For prevention whereof, his Excellency assured the Selectmen, that whatever might be the event of the attack, he would take effectual care that the Troops should do no damage, nor commit any act of violence in the Town; but that the lives and properties of the inhabitants should be protected and secured, if the inhabitants behaved peaceably: And the Selectmen, in behalf of the Town, engaged for the peaceable behaviour of the inhabitants accordingly. In confirmation of which engagement, Voted, That as the Town have behaved peaceably towards the Troops hitherto, they hereby engage to continue to do so; and the Peace Officers and all other Town Officers are enjoined, and the Magistrates, and all persons of influence in the Town, are earnestly requested to exert their utmost endeavours to preserve the peace of the Town. The Town at the same time relies on the assurances of his Excellency that no insult, violence, or damage shall be done to the persons or property of the inhabitants, either by the Troops or the King's Ships, whatever may be the event of the attack his Excellency seems to apprehend; but of which attack we have no knowledge or information whatever, as all communication between the Town and Country has been interrupted by his Excellency's order ever since the collection of the body aforesaid.

Whereas the communication between this Town and the Country, both by land and by water, is at present stopped by order of his Excellency General Gage, and the inhabitants cannot be supplied with Provisions, Fuel, and other necessities of life; by which means the sick and all invalids must suffer greatly and immediately, and the inhabitants in general be distressed, especially such (which is by much the greatest part) as have not had the means of laying in a stock of provisions, but depend for supplies from the country for their daily support, and may be in danger of perishing, unless the communication be opened: Therefore,

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to wait on his Excellency General Gage, to represent to him the state of the Town in this regard, and to remind his Excellency of his declarations in answer to Addresses made to him when the works on the Neck were erecting, viz: "That he had no intention of stopping up the avenue to the Town, or of obstructing the inhabitants or any of the country people coming in or going out of the Town as usual; that he had no intention to prevent the free egress and regress of any person to and from the Town, or of reducing it to the state of a garrison; that he could not possibly intercept the intercourse between the Town and Country;" that "it is his duty and interest to encourage it; and it is as much inconsistent with his duty and interest to form the strange scheme of reducing the inhabitants to a state of humiliation and vassalage, by stopping their supplies." Also, to represent to him that, in consequence of these repeated assurances of his Excellency, the fears and apprehensions of the inhabitants had generally subsided, and many persons, who had determined to remove with their effects, have remained in Town, whilst others largely concerned in navigation had introduced many valuable goods, in full confidence of the promised security. That the Town think his Excellency incapable of acting on principles inconsistent with honour, justice, and humanity, and therefore that they desire his Excellency will please to give orders for opening the communication, not only for bringing Provisions into the Town, but also that the inhabitants, such of them as incline, may retire from the Town with their effects without molestation.

The same Committee were appointed to wait upon the General with the foregoing votes.

Then the meeting was adjourned to Sabbath morning, ten o'clock.

Sabbath morning, Ten o'clock, April 23, 1775.

The Town met, according to adjournment.

The said Committee made a verbal report. Whereupon it was desired that the Committee would withdraw and reduce their Report to writing, which was accordingly done, and is as follows, viz:

"The Committee appointed by the Town to wait upon his Excellency General Gage with a copy of the two Votes passed by the Town yesterday in the afternoon, report: That they being read to him by the Committee, and a long conference had with him upon the subject-matter contained in the said votes, his Excellency finally gave for answer, that upon the inhabitants in general lodging their arms in Faneuil-Hall, or any other convenient place, under the care of the Selectmen, marked with the names of the respective owners, that all such inhabitants as are inclined may depart from the Town with their families and effects, and those who remain may depend upon his protection; and that the arms aforesaid, at a suitable time, would be returned to the owners."

Whereupon, Voted, That the Town accept of his Excellency's proposal, and will lodge their arms with the Selectmen accordingly.

Voted, That the same Committee be desired to wait upon his Excellency the Governor with the vote of the Town complying with his Excellency's proposal, and the Committee are desired to request of his Excellency that the removal may be by land and water, as may be most convenient for the inhabitants.

"The Committee appointed to wait upon his Excellency report, that they accordingly waited upon him, and read the vote of the Town, which was accepted by his Excellency; and at the same time his Excellency agreed that the inhabitants might remove from the Town by land and water with their effects, within the limits prescribed by the Port Act; and also informed the Committee he would desire the Admiral to lend his boats to facilitate the removal of the effects of the inhabitants, and would allow carriages to pass and repass for that purpose; likewise would take care that the poor that may remain in Town should not suffer for want of provision after their own stock is expended, and desire that a letter might be wrote to Dr. Warren, Chairman of the Committee of the Congress, that those persons in the country who may incline to remove into Boston with their effects, may have liberty so to do without molestation."

The Town unanimously accepted of the foregoing Report, and desired the inhabitants would deliver their arms to the Selectmen as soon as may be.

The meeting was then adjourned to Tuesday morning, the 25th of April, ten o'clock in the forenoon, and was continued by successive adjournments to Thursday, P. M., the 27th of April, 1775, when the Town met, to receive the further report of the Committee. They reported as follows, viz:

"The Committee waited on his Excellency General Gage, with the papers containing the account of the arms delivered to the Selectmen, and the return made to them by the Constables of the Town relative to the delivery of arms in their respective Wards. After long conversation on the subject of the inhabitants removing themselves and effects from the Town, his Excellency being obliged to attend other business, left the affair to be settled with Brigadier General Robinson, who, after further conference, and reporting the substance of it to General Gage, returned to the Committee, and declared to them that General Gage gives liberty to the inhabitants to remove out of Town with their effects; and desires that such inhabitants as intend to remove would give their names to the Selectmen, and signify whether they mean to convey out their effects by land or water, in order that passes may be prepared; for which passes, application may be made to General Robinson any time after eight o'clock to-morrow morning; such passes to be had as soon as persons wanting them shall be ready to depart."

Voted, That the foregoing Report be accepted, the Town relying on the honour and faith of General Gage that he will perform his part of the contract, as they have faithfully performed their part of it.

Then the meeting was adjourned to Monday next, May 1, ten o'clock in the forenoon.

HENRY ALLINE, Jun., Town Clerk, pro tem.

In Provincial Congress, Watertown, }
April 23, 1775. }

Resolved, unanimously, That James Sullivan, Esquire, a Member of this Congress, be immediately despatched to the Colony of New-Hampshire, as a Delegate from this body, to deliver to the Provincial Congress there the following Letter; and further inform them of the present situation of this Colony, and report the effect of his mission to this Congress, as soon as possible.

Watertown, April 23, 1775.

Before this letter can reach you, we doubt not you have been sufficiently notified of the late alarming Resolutions of the British Parliament, wherein we see ourselves declared Rebels, and all our sister Colonies in New-England, in common with us, marked out for the severest punishments. In consequence thereof, General Gage has suddenly commenced hostilities by a large body of Troops under his command, secretly detached in the night of the 18th instant, which, on the morning ensuing, had actually begun the slaughter of the innocent inhabitants, in the very heart of the Country, before any intentions of that kind were suspected. And although the roused virtue of our brethren in the neighbourhood soon compelled them to precipitate retreat, they marked their savage route with depredations, ruin, and butcheries hardly to be matched by the armies of any civilized Nation on the globe.

Justly alarmed by these manœuvres, vast multitudes of the good people of this and the neighbouring Colonies, are now assembled in the vicinity of Boston for the protection of the Country. The gates of that devoted Town are shut, and the miserable inhabitants are pent up there, with a licentious soldiery, as in one common prison. Large reinforcements of the Troops under General Gage are hourly expected; and no reason is left us to doubt that his whole force, as soon as collected, will be employed for the destruction, first of this, and then of our sister Colonies engaged in the same interesting cause; and that all America will be speedily reduced to the most abject slavery, unless it is immediately defended by arms.

Unavoidably reduced to this necessity, by circumstances that will justify us before God and the impartial world, this Congress, after solemn deliberation and application to Heaven for direction in the case, have this day unanimously resolved, That it is our duty immediately to establish an Army for the maintenance of the most invaluable rights of human nature, and the immediate defence of this Colony, where the first attack is made; that 30,000 men are necessary to be forthwith raised in the New-England Colonies for that purpose, and that of that force 13,600 shall be established by this Colony without delay.

We have not a doubt of the virtue of the Colony of New-Hampshire, no less engaged than ourselves in the glorious cause at stake, and equally involved in the miseries that must ensue, should it be lost. In testimony of our reliance on you, we have sent this express to give you the earliest notice of these Resolutions, and the circumstances that have necessitated them; and earnestly to request your speediest concurrence and such assistance in this most important cause, as the present urgent necessity demands, and the many former evidences we have had of the spirit and firmness of the Colony of New-Hampshire give us the highest reason to expect. We are, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servants,

JOSEPH WARREN, Pres't pro tem.

P. S. The great confusions in this Colony prevent our being able to send with this letter such depositions as might give full and particular information of the facts above referred to; but measures are taking for that purpose, and we shall not fail to transmit the result of them by the first opportunity.

JEDIDIAH FOSTER TO THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Brookfield, April 23, 1775.

HONOURED SIR: Mr. Davidson immediately proceeded from Concord to Governour Trumbull with the papers, as directed by the Congress; but from the then appearance of affairs he did not think proper to call the Assembly. Early on Thursday morning Mr. Davidson, with myself, set out for Lebanon to Governour Trumbull, who, about two hours before our arrival, had received the tragical narrative from Colonel Palmer, and cheerfully consented to call the Assembly of the Colony to be held at Hartford, on Wednesday next, ten o'clock in the morning, at which time the Delegates will attend as they were directed by the Congress. I purpose, as soon as I have discharged my trust there, to attend my duty at the Congress. Wishing the Congress may be under the special guidance and direction of Heaven, I am, Sir, your most humble servant,

JEDIDIAH FOSTER.

To the President of the Honourable Provincial Congress of the Massachusetts-Bay.

ANDREW M'CLARY TO THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE CONGRESS.

Cambridge, April 23, 1775.

HONOURABLE GENTLEMEN: Being in great haste, but beg leave to give you some broken intelligence relating to the Army that is now assembled here. The number is unknown at present, and as there is a Council of War now sitting, their result is still kept a profound secret. The Army has already provided a number of Cannon, (there is more still coming,) and is providing a great plenty of warlike stores, implements, and utensils. There are now about two thousand brave and hearty resolute New-Hampshire men, full of vigour and blood, from the interior parts of the Province, which labour under a great disadvantage for not being under proper regulations, for want of Field Officers. In our present situation we have no voice in the Council of War, which makes a great difficulty. Pray, gentlemen, take these important matters under your mature consideration, and I doubt not but your wisdom will dictate and point out such measures as will be most conducive to extricate us from our present difficulties. The conduct of a certain person belonging to New-Hampshire will have a vast tendency to stigmatize the Province most ignominiously. Yesterday it was reported throughout the New-Hampshire Troops, that one Mr. Espy, who appeared in the character of a Captain at the head of a Company, had been to the General, and received a verbal express from him that all New-Hampshire men were dismissed, and that they might return home; and by the insinuation of him and his busy emissaries, about five or six hundred of our men inconsiderately marched off for home. Captain Cilley and I were three miles from Cambridge when we received the intelligence, which was, to our unspeakable surprise, for us to return before the work was done. We immediately repaired to the General to know the certainty of the report, and on making application to him he told us that it was an absolute falsehood, for he never had any such thought; whereas he very highly valued New-Hampshire men, always understanding them to be the best of soldiers, and that he would not have any of them to depart for home on any consideration whatever till matters were further compromised; and strictly inquired for the man in order to have him confronted. We replied the man was departed, and therefore we could not conform to his request. But since, we understand that his conduct hath stopped a number of men from coming in, and some officers that tarried have sent for their men to return back. Pray, gentlemen, don't let it always be reported that New-Hampshire men were always brave Soldiers, but no Commanders. The desertion of those men causes much uneasiness among the remaining Troops, for we are obliged to use our utmost influence to persuade them to tarry. Gentlemen, I am, with all imaginable respect, yours and the Country's most obedient and humble servant,

ANDREW MCCLARY.

MARYLAND CONVENTION.

At a Meeting of the Deputies appointed by the several Counties of the Province of Maryland, at the City of Annapolis, on Monday, the 24th of April, 1775, and continued, by adjournment from day to day, till the 3d of May, were present one hundred Members.

The Honourable Matthew Tilghman, Esquire, in the Chair; Gabriel Duval appointed Clerk.

Resolved unanimously, That His Majesty King George the Third is lawful and rightful King of Great Britain, and the Dominions thereunto belonging; and that the good people of this Province do owe, and will bear faith and true allegiance to our said lawful and rightful King, as the Sovereign, constitutional guardian, and protector of the rights of all his subjects.

On motion, that a Committee be appointed to prepare a draught of a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence for Philadelphia, acquainting them that this Convention had received from gentlemen of their Committee an extract of a letter from New-York, communicating the very interesting and important intelligence, that a number of Troops were ordered for that City, which was to be the place of Arms, and fortified; that all communication between that City and the Southern and Eastern Provinces, was to be cut off; that the people of that Colony were concerting means to prevent such scheme, were embodying themselves, and desired the immediate assistance of the Southward Colonies, before the arrival of the Troops; that this Convention were greatly alarmed, and deeply concerned for that Colony, and therefore desired to be acquainted with the authenticity of that account, and the particulars thereof; and that the Committee of Philadelphia would give this Convention as full and particular accounts of the state of the Colony of New-York, and of their own Province, as they possibly can; what conduct it is expected will be adopted by their Colony, and of all other matters which they may think of consequence to the general welfare of America.

The previous question was moved for and put, whether the above question be now put? And resolved in the affirmative.

The above question was then put, and resolved in the affirmative.

The following Letter was accordingly sent to the Committee for the City and Liberties of Philadelphia:

Annapolis, Saturday, April 29, 1775, 5 o'clock, afternoon.

GENTLEMEN: The extract of the letter from New-York, communicating the very interesting and important intelligence, "that a number of Troops were ordered for that City, which was to be the place of Arms, and fortified; that all communication between that City and the Southern and Eastern Provinces, was to be cut off; that the people of that Colony were concerting means to prevent such schemes, were embodying themselves, and desired the immediate assistance of the Southward Colonies, before the arrival of the Troops," was this morning, about 10 o'clock, received, and immediately laid before the Provincial Convention now sitting.

The Convention are deeply concerned for New-York, and request to be acquainted with the authenticity of that account, and the particulars thereof; and that you will advise them what conduct it is expected will be held by New-York, your Province, and the Jerseys, on the very interesting and trying occasion.

By order of the Convention:

MAT. TILGHMAN, Chairman of the Convention.

Resolved, unanimously, That all Exportations from this Province to Quebeck, Nova-Scotia, Georgia, and Newfoundland, or any part of the Fishing Coasts, or Fishing Islands, and to the Town of Boston, ought immediately to be suspended, until the Continental Congress shall give further orders therein.

Resolved, That it is earnestly recommended to the inhabitants of this Province to continue the regulation of the Militia, as recommended by the last Provincial Convention; and that particular attention be paid to forming and exercising the Militia throughout this Province; and that the Subscriptions for the purposes by the said Convention recommended, be forthwith completed and applied.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention, that the Honourable Matthew Tilghman, Esquire, Thomas Johnson, Junior, Robert Goldsborough, Samuel Chase, William Paca, John Hall, and Thomas Stone, Esquires, the Delegates of our Province, or any three or more of them, do join with the Delegates of the other Colonies and Provinces, at such time and place as shall be agreed on; and in conjunction with them, deliberate upon the present distressed and alarming state of the British Colonies in North America, and concur with them in such measures as shall be thought necessary for the defence and protection thereof, and most conducive to the publick welfare. And as this Convention has nothing so much at heart as a happy reconciliation of the differences between the Mother Country and the British Colonies in North America, upon a firm basis of constitutional freedom, so has it a confidence in the wisdom and prudence of the said Delegates, that they will not proceed to the last extremity, unless, in their judgments, they shall be convinced that such measure is indispensably necessary for the safety and preservation of our liberties and privileges. That, in the present state of publick affairs, this Convention is sensible that the measures to be adopted by the Continental Congress, must depend much upon events which may happen to arise; and relying firmly upon the wisdom and integrity of their Delegates, this Province will, as far as it is in their power, carry into execution such measures as shall be agreed on and recommended by the General Congress.

Resolved, That it be recommended that the sum of Six Hundred Pounds be raised in the different Counties of this Province by subscription, under the direction of the several Committees, in the following proportion:

In St. Mary's County, Thirty-Six Pounds; Charles, Forty-Eight Pounds; Calvert, Twenty-Two Pounds; Prince George's, Fifty Pounds; Anne Arundel, Fifty-Two Pounds; Frederick, Eighty Pounds; Baltimore, Fifty-Six Pounds; Harford, Twenty-Eight Pounds; Worcester, Thirty-Two Pounds; Somerset, Thirty-Two Pounds; Dorchester, Twenty-Nine Pounds; Caroline, Twenty-One Pounds; Talbot, Twenty-Four Pounds; Queen-Anne's, Thirty-Two Pounds; Kent, Thirty-Four Pounds; Cecil, Twenty-Four Pounds.

And that the several sums to be raised on the Western Shore be paid to Mr. Charles Wallace, of the City of Annapolis; and the several sums to be raised on the Eastern Shore be paid to Mr. Thomas Ringgold, of Chestertown, to defray the expenses of the Delegates at the ensuing Continental Congress.

Resolved, That it is recommended to all ranks and denominations of people, to use their utmost endeavours to preserve peace and good order throughout this Province.

This Convention, deeply considering the distressed and perplexed situation of British America, the weakness of all human counsels, and that the hearts of all men are in the disposal of the Supreme Being, do recommend that the eleventh day of this instant may be observed throughout this Province as a day of fasting and humiliation; and that the inhabitants of this Province, on that day, in an especial manner, by prayer and supplication, humbly and devoutly implore the blessing, support, and protection of Almighty God, for the preservation of the rights and liberties of America, and the restoration of peace, union, and happiness to the British Empire.

This Convention, taking into consideration, that the time proposed for the meeting of the next Continental Congress is near at hand, and that it is highly expedient that the Delegates of this Province should attend the said Congress as early in their session as may be, where the state of the City and Colony of New-York, as well as the circumstances of the other Colonies and Provinces, may be best known, and measures for the security of the City and Colony of New-York, as well as the safety of all British America, be best concerted and provided for.

And whereas, it is now altogether uncertain when an answer may be received to the Letter sent on Saturday last to the Committee of Correspondence in the City of Philadelphia; and it being necessary that the Members of this Convention should return to their respective Counties, it is, therefore,

Resolved, That this Convention do now rise; and it is recommended to such of the Counties in this Province, where it may be necessary, forthwith to make choice of Deputies to represent them in a Provincial Convention, to be held in the City of Annapolis, on Monday, the 22d of May, unless an earlier or later day should be appointed by the Delegates of this Province, or any three of them, appointed to attend the Continental Congress.

The following were received by return of the express sent by the Provincial Convention to the Committee of Correspondence for Philadelphia:

Philadelphia, May 1, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: We have duly received your favour of the 29th ultimo. As the accounts from New-York were not handed to this Committee through a channel that gave us the satisfaction we could wish; and as they were very important, we thought proper immediately to despatch some of our members to that place, in order that they might, on the spot, learn the true situation of affairs there, and what the inhabitants of New-York expect from the Southern Colonies. On their return, or on the receipt of any certain intelligence, we shall immediately communicate the particulars to you.

In the mean time we have to inform you, that, upon the receipt of the late intelligence, this City and County immediately took the alarm, and are arming and forming with all possible expedition; and, by accounts from the other Counties in this Province, the same spirit prevails every where; and we hope, in a short time, we shall be in a condition to unite our efforts with the rest of the Colonies.

Enclosed we send you a letter from Newport, Rhode-Island, which contains a particular account of the situation of affairs to the Eastward, together with some important intelligence. By order of the Committee:

JOHN NIXON, Chairman.

To Matthew Tilghman, Esq., Chairman of the Provincial Convention of the Province of Maryland, now sitting at Annapolis.

Newport, April 25, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: You have, without doubt, before this time, heard of the bloody, savage massacre of a number of the inhabitants of Lexington, a Town about twelve miles northwest from Boston, perpetrated by a detachment of about twelve hundred of the King's Troops, and what ensued thereon. We enclose you two accounts, which may be more particular than any you have yet received. The one was brought us by a gentleman who left Cambridge on Thursday last, in the forenoon, and is contained in the handbill; the other is in the newspaper. Since we received these accounts, we have been credibly informed that the number of the King's Troops killed and taken amounts to about three hundred, besides, many were wounded and carried into Boston; the number of Americans to about forty killed and wounded, and it is said about four or five taken prisoners. A large body of men, not less than twenty thousand, are assembled, and form a semicircle from Charlestown to Roxbury; what their plan of operation will be, is unknown. By a gentleman of the Committee of Correspondence for the Town of Providence, in this Colony, who arrived here this afternoon, we are informed that the Provincial Congress of the Massachusetts-Bay, now sitting, have determined that a Standing Army of thirty thousand men should be raised in the New-England Colonies, expecting that the Southern Colonies will assist in furnishing moneys for their support. That our people had taken possession of a hill on Dorchester Point, which commands General Gage's works on Boston Neck, and that they had made intrenchments within gunshot of those works at Roxbury. That two Men-of-War had arrived at Boston, and brought the three Generals that have been expected; and that six thousand Troops had embarked for that place when those Men-of-War left England. There were not more than three hundred Americans in a body at any one time during the action on Wednesday, and they acquitted themselves with such intrepidity, as has convinced the King's Officers that Americans can and will fight.

All communication between the Town of Boston and the other parts of the Colony, being shut up, and things being in a state of confusion, renders it almost impossible to obtain any certain particular intelligence from that quarter; however, the foregoing account, we think, may be depended upon.

We had hoped that the dispute between Great Britain and these Colonies would have been settled without bloodshed; but the Parliament of Great Britain, it seems, have determined to push their iniquitous unconstitutional measures by dint of arms. The sword of civil war has been drawn by the King's Troops, and sheathed in the bowels of our countrymen. May peace, with liberty, soon present the scabbard; and may Americans never be obliged again to take up arms but against a foreign foe.

We hope that the union which has so remarkably taken place throughout the American Colonies, may acquire, if possible, greater firmness, by this unjustifiable, inhuman, murderous attack upon our countrymen; for, upon an universal firmly cemented union of the American Colonies, under God, depends the salvation and establishment of American liberty. I am, in behalf of the Committee of Correspondence for the Town of Newport, gentlemen, your and America's sincere friend,

WILLIAM ELLERY.

To the Committee of Correspondence for the City of Philadelphia.

In Committee, Philadelphia, May 1, 1775; received per Captain Whitman this day, and forwarded to Annapolis.

J. B. SMITH, Secretary of Committee.

NEWARK (NEW-JERSEY) COMMITTEE.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Observation for the Township of Newark, April 24, 1775, present, eighteen Members:

Mr. CALEB CAMP, Chairman.

The Chairman having opened the business of the meeting, and related the purport of the expresses lately received from Boston, the following motions were made, and agreed to unanimously:

That the members of this Committee are willing, at this alarming crisis, to risk their lives and fortunes in support of American liberty; and that it be recommended to our constituents to give all necessary support in their power to our brethren in the Province of Massachusetts-Bay, in the present alarming exigency.

That it be also recommended to the Captains of the Militia in this Township to muster and exercise their respective Companies at least once every week, and carefully to exact that each man be provided with arms and ammunition, as the Militia Law directs.

That it be requested of all heads of families and masters of apprentices, to encourage all of proper age under their direction to learn the military exercise, and to allow them such portions of time as may be necessary to make them perfect therein.

ROBERT JOHNSTON, Clerk.

NEW-YORK COMMITTEE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

New-York, April 24, 1775.

DEAR SIR: As the most unjustifiable hostilities on the part of Great Britain have actually commenced against America, it is thought not only prudent, but absolutely necessary and justifiable in the sight of God and man, to avail ourselves of every opportunity that may offer, in order to preserve our liberties and religion, as well as to prevent the effusion of blood as much as possible. Actuated by no other motives, we take the liberty of informing you of the arrival of the Packet this afternoon, in which there are despatches for General Gage, containing, no doubt, matters of the utmost importance to all these Colonies. It is therefore recommended to your most serious consideration, to fall on the most probable plan for intercepting them immediately on the receipt of this, as it is expected they will be forwarded very speedily, perhaps in the morning, or at farthest by noon. If they go by land from here, we think both roads ought to be strictly guarded, on the first notice of this. But as there is no arriving at an absolute certainty whether they go by land or water, we think an express ought to be directly sent as far as Newport and Providence at farthest, and every other caution taken that your prudence can dictate, and your zeal prompt you to think of. If the intelligence gained should be much better than can be reasonably expected, it may save an infinite expense and trouble to the Continent; but if otherwise, it may save the lives of thousands, by enabling the friends of this bleeding land to defeat the designs of its implacable and remorseless enemies. So that let it be viewed in either light, it appears to us to be an affair of the greatest magnitude. Perhaps it may be asked why it was not attempted here? To which, let it be observed, there is a weighty objection, which is this: the late melancholy accounts from Boston have had a most excellent effect in uniting the inhabitants of this City; insomuch that we have been able to stop all supplies from the Army, and get possession of the City Arms, and are now guarding the Powder and them; but should the foregoing attempt succeed or not, it is thought it would tend to throw more power into the hands of our enemies. We most ardently wish that your and our honest endeavours to serve the cause of liberty may be attended with all the success that the righteousness of the cause can entitle it to.

It is expected that the general despatches, to prevent suspicion, may be directed to some popular person in the Massachusetts-Bay, &c., perhaps to Hancock or Adams, &c.

Oliver Delancy, Junior, who is now here from Boston in behalf of the Army, may be the person who will carry them, in which case you are to know that he is a lusty, fat, ruddy looking young fellow, between twenty and thirty years of age. We are yours, &c.

Agreement subscribed by Captain ARNOLD and his Company of fifty persons, when they set out from CONNECTICUT as Volunteers to assist the Provincials at CAMBRIDGE.

To all Christian people believing in and relying on that God, to whom our enemies have at last forced us to appeal:

Be it known that we, the subscribers, having taken up arms for the relief of our brethren, and defence of their as well as our just rights and privileges, declare to the world that we, from the heart, disavow every thought of rebellion to His Majesty as supreme head of the British Empire, or opposition to legal authority, and shall, on every occasion, manifest to the world, by our conduct, this to be our fixed principle. Driven to the last necessity, and obliged to have recourse to arms in defence of our lives and liberties, and, from the suddenness of the occasion, deprived of that legal authority, the dictates of which we ever with pleasure obey, find it necessary, for preventing disorders, irregularities, and misunderstandings in the course of our march and service, solemnly to agree to and with each other on the following regulations and orders, binding ourselves by all that is dear and sacred carefully and constantly to observe and keep them.

In the first place we will conduct ourselves decently and inoffensively as we march, both to our countrymen and one another, paying that regard to the advice, admonition, and reproof of our Officers, which their station justly entitles them to expect, ever considering the dignity of our own character, and that we are not mercenaries, whose views extend no farther than pay and plunder, whose principles are such, that every path that leads to the obtaining these is agreeable, though wading through the blood of their countrymen; but men acquainted with, and feeling the most generous fondness for the liberties and unalienable rights of mankind, and who are, in the course of Divine Providence, called to the honourable service of hazarding our lives in their defence.

Secondly. Drunkenness, gaming, profaneness, and every vice of that nature shall be avoided by ourselves, and discountenanced by us in others.

Thirdly. So long as we continue in our present situation of a voluntary independent Company, we engage to submit on all occasions to such decisions as shall be made and given by the majority of the Officers we have chosen; and when any difference arises between man and man, it shall be laid before the Officers aforesaid, and their decision shall be final. We mean by Officers, the Captain, Lieutenants, Ensign, Sergeants, Clerk, and Corporals; the Captain, or in his absence the Commanding Officer, to be the Moderator, and have a turning or casting voice in all debates, from whom all orders shall from time to time issue. Scorning all ignoble motives, and superiour to the low and slavish practice of enforcing on men their duty by blows, it is agreed that when private admonition for any offence by any of our body committed will not reform, publick shall be made; and if that should not have the desired effect, after proper pains taken, and the same repeated, such incorrigible person shall be turned out of the Company, as totally unworthy of serving in so great and glorious a cause, and be delivered over to suffer the contempt of his countrymen.

As to particular orders, it shall from time to time be in the power of the Officers to make and vary them as occasion may require; as to delivering our provisions, ammunition, rules, and orders for marching, &c. The annexed order for the present we think pertinent, and agreeable to our mind. To which, with the additions or variations that may be made by our said Officers, we bind ourselves by the ties above mentioned to submit.

In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands, this 24th of April, 1775.

GENERAL WARD TO THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Head Quarters, April 24, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: My situation is such, that if I have not enlisting orders immediately I shall be left all alone. It is impossible to keep the men here, excepting something be done. I therefore pray that the plan may be completed and handed to me this morning, that you, gentlemen of the Congress, issue orders for enlisting men. I am, gentlemen, yours, &c.

A. WARD.

To the Hon. the Delegates of the Provincial Congress.

JOHN HANCOCK TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Worcester, April 24, 1775. }
Monday Evening. }

GENTLEMEN: Mr. S. Adams and myself, just arrived here, find no intelligence from you, and no guard. We just hear an express has just passed through this place to you, from New-York, informing that Administration is bent upon pushing matters, and that four Regiments are expected there.

How are we to proceed? Where are our brethren? Surely we ought to be supported. I had rather be with you, and, at present, am fully determined to be with you before I proceed. I beg, by the return of this express, to hear from you, and pray furnish us with depositions of the conduct of the Troops, the certainty of their firing first, and every circumstance relative to the conduct of the Troops, from the 19th instant to this time, that we may be able to give some account of matters as we proceed, and especially at Philadelphia. And I beg you would order your Secretary to make out a copy of your proceedings since—what has taken place, and what your plan is; what prisoners we have, and what they have of ours; who of note was killed on both sides; who commands our forces. Are our men in good spirits? For God's sake do not suffer the spirit to subside, until they have perfected the reduction of our enemies. Boston must be entered. The Troops must be sent away, or Our friends are valuable, but our Country must be saved. I have an interest in that Town. What can be the enjoyment of that to me, if I am obliged to hold it at the will of General Gage, or any one else. I doubt not your vigilance, your fortitude, and resolutions. Do let us know how you proceed. We must have the Castle—the Ships must be Stop up the Harbour against large Vessels coming. You know better what to do than I can point out. Where is Cushing? Are Mr. Payne and Mr. John Adams to be with us. What are we to depend upon? We travel rather as deserters, which I will not submit to. I will return and join you, if I cannot travel in reputation. I wish to hear from you. Pray spend a thought upon our situation. I will not detain this man, as I want much to hear from you. How goes on the Congress? Who is your President? Are the Members hearty? Pray remember Mr. Adams and myself to all friends. God be with you.

I am, gentlemen, your faithful and hearty countryman,
JOHN HANCOCK.

Pray give me a particular answer to my queries.

To the Gentlemen Committee, &c., &c., &c.

OLIVER PRESCOTT TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Groton, April 24, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: I think if an order should pass for the establishment of a Town Guard, to be kept in a prudent manner, in every Town in this Province, it would have a great tendency to deter and detect villains and their accomplices. The passes that people bring this way are generally without date, or assignment to any person or place, so that a man may pass to Africa with the same order. Pardon my freedom, and allow me to subscribe, gentlemen, your most obedient, very humble servant,

OLIVER PRESCOTT.

To the Committee of Safety.

MASSACHUSETTS COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE CONGRESS OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

April 24, 1775.

Our friends from New-Hampshire having shewn their readiness to assist us in this day of distress, we therefore thought it best to give orders for enlisting such as were present in the service of the Colony, as many desired something may be done to hold them together until the resolve of your Congress is known, when we are ready and desirous they should be discharged from us, and put under such command as you shall direct. Colonel Sargeant has been so kind as to afford his utmost assistance in concluding this matter.

We are, &c., &c.

H. JACKSON TO COLONEL JEREMIAH LEE.

Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, April 24, 1775.

DEAR SIR: Although this is no time for ceremony or compliments, yet so great is the pleasure I feel on your escape from the hands of wicked and violent men, that I cannot help congratulating you. May God Almighty continue to be your safety and defence.

Could it be thought advisable for us to leave the seaports, I should long before this have been with you, at the head of a Company as good as ever twang'd a bow, inferior in military discipline to none; they are anxious and eager to be with you.

You well know that the art military has been my hobby-horse for a long time past. I have vanity enough to think that the recommendation of an immediate perusal of the enclosed volume, to the Officers in the United Army, will not be thought impertinent at this time, considering the nature of our Country; considering the natural genius of our men, no piece could be better adapted to our circumstances.

Our men are natural partisans. Witness the Rogers, Starkey, and Shepherd, &c., &c. Did they not, in the last War, take the very sentries from off the walls of our enemies' Fortresses, in the heart of their Country? I can't help thinking that some Horse might be employed to great advantage, if our adversaries should ever venture abroad again. I have published some pieces on this subject in our papers, but the New-Hampshire Gazette can hardly be called a proper channel to convey one's ideas to the publick. Might not some of the principal parts of the Partisan be given in manuscript to some of our officers? Dear sir, I hope you will not construe this, my humble opinion, into impertinent dictation. We are all embarked in one cause, and from the ideas of all (though some may be simple) some things of consequence may be collected. With humble submission to the better judgment of every one, I conclude,

Your most obedient, most obliged humble servant,
H. JACKSON.

P. S. I have been in my sulky more than once to pay you a visit, but my friends have prevented me. When opportunity offers, remember me to Mrs. Lee and family.

As I apprehend there is not many of the books in the Country, you will make what use of this you think proper, so that I may have it again hereafter.

Yours,

H. J.

To Colonel Jeremiah Lee.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON TO A GENTLEMAN IN MASSACHUSETTS, DATED APRIL 25, 1775.

A steady friend to America called upon me this afternoon, to acquaint me with the following intelligence, communicated to him by this day, which you may rely upon as a fact. The said that the Administration, on Friday, received advices from General Gage to the eighteenth of March, wherein he acknowledges the receipt of the King's order to apprehend Messrs. Cushing, Adams, Hancock, &c., and send them over to England to be tried; but that the second orders, which were to hang them in Boston, he said the General had not then received. The General expressed his fears on the occasion; and in hopes of their being reversed, he should delay the execution a while longer, because he must, if the orders were fulfilled, come to an engagement, the event of which he had every reason to apprehend would be fatal to himself and the King's Troops, as the Massachusetts Government had at least fifteen thousand men ready trained for the onset, and, besides, had every publick and private road occupied by the Militia, so as to prevent his marching into the country, and which were, at the same time, ready to facilitate any attempt against the Army; on which unwelcome situation he earnestly wished for a reinforcement, if that disagreeable order must be effected. The General also wrote that the Standard was hoisted by the people at Salem, and multitudes flocked to it, which would not be the case should the Royal Standard be erected; added, that he now believed America would carry their point; that many of the Administration were of the same mind, and sincerely wished they had pursued more gentle measures with the Colonies. He said Lord North was evidently uneasy, and that Government dreaded the news by the April Packet; that they suppressed this intelligence from General Gage, because of the instant effect it would have on the Stocks. He acknowledged the Nation was ready for a revolution, if any enterprising genius would step forth, and which would certainly be the case if blood was ever drawn in America. He blames Hutchinson much, and says Administration charges him with duplicity, in telling them they ought to have been more active, and that they would have made the Massachusetts submit; to others, that Administration had gone much further than he advised. Be this as it may, he added that the King consults him, places a confidence in what he says, and has actually fixed his salary at two thousand Pounds per annum for life, which had much chagrined some of the Administration, who ardently wished him given up as a sacrifice to both Countries. My intelligencer wishes, if this letter should be published, that name might be omitted, as the information was confidential. I shall only add that my Country may be free if she will; and that she may have the virtue to play the man, is the aspiration of, Sir, your most obedient servant.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, DATED APRIL 25, 1775.

We have our suspicions and fears on account of Philadelphia and New-York. If the great chain of continental connection is once broken, the consequences may prove very unhappy. It is the union of America which gives it strength. Any defection, especially of such important Provinces, would contribute greatly to encourage our adversaries and check the endeavours of our friends. I am not without hopes that the next Assembly of New-York may be composed of different members from those of the present. The Petition from the Assembly of New-Jersey is arrived, but Lord Dartmouth, on pretence that it would be improper to forward it to the King, without its being brought to him by the Agent of the Province, refuses any attention to it. When Doctor Franklin is here, Ministry will receive no Petition by him. When he is not here, they refuse Petitions because they are not offered by him. However, all this is in perfect unison with the rest of their conduct.

HUGH MERCER, ETC., TO COLONEL GEORGE WASHINGTON.
Fredericksburgh, April 25, 1775.

SIR: By intelligence from Williamsburgh, it appears that Captain Collins, of His Majesty's Navy, at the head of fifteen Marines, carried off the Powder from the Magazine in that City on the night of Thursday last, and conveyed it on board his vessel, by order of the Governour. The gentlemen of the Independent Company of this Town think this first publick insult is not to be tamely submitted to, and determine, with your approbation, to join any other bodies of armed men who are willing to appear in support of the honour of Virginia, as well as to secure the military stores yet remaining in the Magazine. It is proposed to march from hence on Saturday next for Williamsburgh, properly accoutred as Light-horsemen.

Expresses are sent off to inform the Commanding Officers of Companies in the adjacent Counties of this our resolution, and we shall wait prepared for your instructions and their assistance.

We are, Sir, your humble servants,

HUGH MERCER, ALEXANDER SPOTSWOOD,
G. WEEDON, JOHN WILLIS.

P. S. As we are not sufficiently supplied with Powder, it may be proper to request of the gentlemen who join us from Fairfax or Prince William, to come provided with an over proportion of that article.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM ONE OF THE VIRGINIA DELEGATES, ON HIS WAY TO THE CONGRESS, TO A FRIEND IN WILLIAMSBURGH, DATED APRIL 25, 1775.

The storm thickens very fast. The New-Yorkers have received intelligence that their Town is to be fortified, and fourteen Regiments to be sent there to cut off the communication between the Southern and Eastern Colonies; this has united them to a man in the American cause. They are forming themselves, and beg assistance from the Southward. This comes from the Philadelphia Committee. The Bostonians have given a good drubbing to two thousand Regulars.

GLOUCESTER COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At an adjourned meeting of the Committee of Gloucester County, at the Court-House of the said County, on Tuesday, the 25th of April, 1775, they came to the following Resolves:

Resolved, That as an encouragement to the manufacturing Gunpowder in this Colony, we will give a premium of Twenty-Five Pounds to any person who shall produce to the Chairman of this Committee, on or before the 25th of October next, three hundred pounds of good Gunpowder made in Virginia, which we will purchase at the current price of that commodity; and if it shall be proved to be made wholly of the materials of this Colony, we will give an additional premium of Ten Pounds.

Resolved, That we will give Fifty Pounds to any person who shall produce to the Chairman of this Committee sixty pair of good Wool, and sixty pair of good Cotton Cards, on or before the 25th of October next, with an authentick certificate of their having been made in this Colony, and we will purchase the same at the usual price.

The Committee having received authentick information that last Thursday night an Officer of one of His Majesty's armed vessels, with a party of armed men, by express command of Lord Dunmore, privately removed the Gunpowder belonging to this Colony out of the Magazine, it was unanimously Resolved, That the removal of the Powder from the Publick Magazine on board one of His Majesty's armed vessels, by order of the Governour, is exceedingly alarming at this time.

Resolved, That his Lordship's verbal answer to the Address of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen, and Common Council of the City of Williamsburgh on that occasion, is unsatisfactory, disrespectful, and evasive.

Resolved, That his Lordship, by this and other parts of his conduct which have lately transpired, has justly forfeited all title to the confidence of the good people of Virginia.

Resolved, That the Powder ought immediately to be restored.

Ordered, That the Clerk send by express copies of these Resolves to each of the Printers, and they are desired to publish them in their next Gazettes.

JASPER CLAYTON, Clerk.

BEDFORD COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee for the County of Bedford, at the Court-House of the said County, on Tuesday, the 25th of April, 1775, JOHN TALBOT, Gentleman, Chairman.

The Resolves of the Convention held at the Town of Richmond the 20th of March, 1775, were read:

Resolved unanimously, That this Committee will strictly observe and adhere to the several Resolutions of the said Convention, and will leave no means in their power unessayed to carry the same into effect.

On motion made that this Committee be dissolved,

Resolved unanimously, That this Committee do consider their delegation as now at an end, and that it be recommended to the Freeholders of this County to meet at the Court-House, on Tuesday, the 23d of next month, for the purpose of electing Delegates to represent them in Colony Convention for one year, and to elect another Committee.

At which time the Freeholders accordingly met, and unanimously made choice of John Talbot and Charles Lynch, Esquires, for their Delegates. And the following gentlemen were duly elected for a Committee, (agreeable to the Eleventh Article of the General Congress,) to wit: John Talbot, Charles Lynch, William Meade, Richard Stith, Guy Smith, John F. Patrick, James Callaway, Gross Scruggs, David Rice, Edmond Winston, James Steptoe, John Ward, John Callaway, William Callaway, Jun., John Quarles, Simon Miller, Haynes Morgan, William Leftwich, William Trigg, and George Stovall.

Then the said Committee immediately proceeded to business, and entered into the following Resolves:

Resolved unanimously, That John Talbot, gentleman, be appointed Chairman of this Committee.

Resolved, That Robert Alexander be appointed Clerk of this Committee.

Resolved, That as Gunpowder is much wanted in this County, and finding, from experience, that every article made use of in the manufacturing (except Sulphur, of which we have not made trial) can be easily procured here, we will give a premium of Ten Pounds, current money, to any person who shall first produce to this Committee twenty-five pounds of good Sulphur, with an authentick certificate that the same was refined from materials in this Colony.

ROBERT ALEXANDER, Clerk.

TO MESSIEURS DELANCY, WHITE, COLDEN, WATTS, AND COOPER, OF NEW-YORK.

Philadelphia, April 25, 1775.

It appears, from a number of authentick letters from London, that the present hostile preparations against the American Colonies were occasioned by nothing but assurances from you of the defection and submission of the Colony of New-York. It is impossible to unfold the extensive and complicated nature of your crimes. You have defeated the attempts of the Congress to bring about a constitutional reconciliation with Great Britain. You have involved your fellow-subjects in Britain, Ireland, and the West-Indies, in all the distresses which must speedily fall upon them from an interruption of their Trade with America. But you have done more; you have unsheathed the sword of Britain, and pointed it against the bosom of your Country. You have held up a signal for a civil war; and all the calamities of Towns in flames, a desolated Country, butchered fathers, and weeping widows and children now lay entirely at your doors. Go now, ye parricides, to the Press of your associate, James Rivington, and there satiate yourselves with your triumph. But do not presume too much upon the impunity of Bernard Hutchinson, and other traitors to America. Repeated insults and unparalleled oppressions have reduced the Americans to a state of desperation. Executions of villains in effigy will now no longer gratify their resentment. The blood of your unfortunate British and American fellow-subjects, who have already fallen in Massachusetts-Bay, calls to Heaven for vengeance against you. The injury you have done to your Country cannot admit of a reparation. Fly for your lives, or anticipate your doom by becoming your own executioners.

THREE MILLIONS.

METCALF BOWLER TO THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Providence, April 25, 1775.

SIR: Your intelligence to the Governour and Company of this Colony, by Edward Rawson, Esquire, was received by the Assembly, who were sitting in Providence to consult and act upon the present distresses into which your Colony and all of New-England are involved. You will see by the enclosed papers what we have done. Notwithstanding an exception of a very few individuals, you may be assured that the Colony are firm and determined, and that a greater unanimity scarce ever prevailed in the Lower House than was found in the great questions before them.

We pray God that he would be graciously pleased to bring to nothing the counsels and designs of wicked men against our lives and liberties, and grant his blessing upon our righteous contest. I am, in behalf of the General Assembly, your and your Colony's sincere friend and humble servant,

METCALF BOWLER, Speaker.

President of the Provincial Congress in Massachusetts.

TO THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS OF CONNECTICUT.

Providence, April 25, 1775.

SIR: I am directed by the Lower House of Assembly to inform you, that William Bradford, Esquire, and Mr. Nathaniel Greene, two of the Members of this House, are appointed "to wait upon the General Assembly of the Colony of Connecticut, to consult upon measures for a common defence of the four New-England Colonies, and to make report to the next session of Assembly," (which will be next week at Providence;) at our general election.

The Assembly this day have passed an Act to raise fifteen hundred good effective men, for the service of the Colony, and the general cause. Great firmness and resolution for the defence of the common rights of this Country, most certainly prevails in this Colony; and greater unanimity was scarce ever found than was manifested in the Lower House on the great questions which came before them.

We pray God that he would be graciously pleased to bring to nothing the counsels and designs of wicked men against our lives and liberties, and grant a blessing upon our righteous contest. I am, in behalf of the House, your and your Colony's sincere friend and humble servant,

METCALF BOWLER, Speaker.

Act of RHODE-ISLAND for raising an Army of Observation.

At this very dangerous crisis of American affairs; at a time when we are surrounded with Fleets and Armies, that threaten our immediate destruction; at a time when the fears and anxieties of the people throw them into the utmost distress, and totally prevent them from attending to the common occupations of life—to prevent the mischievous consequences that must necessarily attend such a disordered state, and to restore peace to the minds of the good people of this Colony, it is thought absolutely necessary that a number of men be raised and embodied, properly armed and disciplined, to continue in this Colony, as an Army of Observation; to repel any insults or violence that may be offered to the inhabitants; and also, if it be necessary for the safety and preservation of any of the Colonies, that they be ordered to march out of this Colony, and join and co-operate with the Forces of our neighbouring Colonies.

It is Voted and Resolved, That fifteen hundred Men be enlisted, raised, and embodied as aforesaid, with all the expedition and despatch that the nature of the thing will admit of.

April 25, 1775.—In the House of Magistrates, Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the afore-written pass as an Act of this Assembly.

By order: SILAS DOWNER, pro Clerk.

In the Upper House, Read the same day and concurred.

By order: JAMES CLARKE, D'y Sec'y.

April 25, 1775.—In the House of Magistrates, Resolved, That the Military Officers throughout this Colony, or any other gentlemen who shall be willing, do forthwith enlist fifteen hundred good and effective Men, for the service of this Colony, and that each Man who shall enlist shall receive a bounty of Four Dollars, and be entitled to the monthly wages of One Pound Sixteen Shillings.

Voted and passed. By order:

SILAS DOWNER, pro Clerk.

In the Upper House, Read the same day and concurred.

By order: JAS. CLARKE, D'y Sec'y.

April 25th, 1775.—In the Lower House, Resolved, That the Speaker of this House write unto the President of the Provincial Congress in Massachusetts-Bay, and the Speaker of the House of Deputies in the Colony of Connecticut; and that he transmit to the Congress copies of the Resolutions of this House touching the matters contained in the President's Letter. By order:

SILAS DOWNER, pro Clerk.

In the Upper House, Providence, April 25, 1775.

We, the subscribers, professing true allegiance to His Majesty King George the Third, beg leave to dissent from the Vote of the House of Magistrates for enlisting, raising, and embodying an Army of Observation of fifteen hundred men, to repel any insults or violences that may be offered to the inhabitants, and also, if it be necessary for the safety and preservation of any of the Colonies, to march them out of this Colony to join and co-operate with the Forces of our neighbouring Colonies: because we are of the opinion that such a measure will be attended with the most fatal consequences to our Charter privileges; involve this Colony in all the horrors of a civil war; and, as we conceive, an open violation of the oath of allegiance which we have severally taken upon our admission into the respective offices we hold in the Colony.

J. WANTON, DARIUS SESSIONS,
THO. WICKES, WM. POTTER.

JOHN HANCOCK TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Worcester, April 25, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: From a conviction of your disposition to promote the publick good, I take the freedom to request your countenance and good offices in favour of Mr. Edward Crafts, of this place, that he may be appointed to the command of a Company. I know him well; he is capable. I beg your attention to this; it will give great satisfaction to Mr. Adams and myself, and to the people of this County—do gratify us. I also beg leave you would recommend to the notice of General Heath, in my name, Mr. Nathaniel Nazro, of this Town, who is desirous of being noticed in the Army; he is lively, active, and capable. My respects to Heath, and all friends. Pray General Heath to take notice of this recommendation. God bless you. Adieu. I am your real friend,

JOHN HANCOCK.

COMMITTEE OF BOSTON TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Boston, April 25, 1775.

SIR: We shall communicate to the Committee of Donations the advice which your letter of yesterday gave us, respecting the application of the donation money in their hands, and are much obliged for your assurances that you shall not fail to lend the inhabitants of the Town your best assistance with regard to the furnishing them with habitations in the country. They will also want a great number of Wagons to carry off their effects, which, we hope, can be had from the country, and which you will please to permit to come in. We beg leave to repeat with earnestness our desire and the desire of the Town, that those who incline to remove from the country with their effects into Boston, may do it without the least injury or interruption. For this purpose you will permit us to wish that you would publish proclamations or notifications that passes may be had for all such persons at Roxbury and Cambridge, and such other places as you shall please to appoint. You will have the goodness to excuse us for again soliciting that this may be done as speedily as possible. We are, respectfully, your humble servants,

JAMES BOWDOIN,	SAM'L AUSTIN,
EZEK'L GOLDTHWAIT,	JOHN PITTS,
JOHN SCOLLAY,	EDWARD PAYNE,
TIMOTHY NEWELL,	HENDERSON INCHES,
THOMAS MARSHALL,	Committee.

Permission will be given for thirty Wagons to enter the Town at once, to carry away the effects of the inhabitants. So soon as those have returned to the end of the Causeway leading to Roxbury, then others will be permitted to come in. None will be permitted to enter till after sunrise, nor to remain after sunset. If any Vessel or Boat, now in the Harbour, be employed to remove the inhabitants' effects, security must be given that the Vessel or Boat be returned. That leave be obtained for some persons to go to the different Parishes to give notice to such persons who incline to come with their effects into Boston, that they may come without molestation; and it is desired that the Wagons and Vessels employed to come and carry away the Goods of the inhabitants of Boston, may bring the effects of those who are desirous to leave the country, they paying half the charge.

Salem, April 25, 1775.

Last Wednesday the 19th of April, the Troops of His Britannick Majesty commenced hostilities upon the people of this Province, attended with circumstances of cruelty, not less brutal than what our venerable ancestors received from the vilest Savages of the wilderness. The particulars relative to this interesting event, by which we are involved in all the horrors of a civil war, we have endeavoured to collect as well as the present confused state of affairs will admit.

On Tuesday evening a detachment from the Army, consisting, it is said, of eight or nine hundred men, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Smith, embarked at the bottom of the Common in Boston, on board a number of boats, and landed at Phipps's farm, a little way up Charles River, from whence they proceeded with silence and expedition on their way to Concord, about eighteen miles from Boston. The people were soon alarmed, and began to assemble in several Towns, before daylight, in order to watch the motion of the Troops. At Lexington, six miles below Concord, a company of Militia, of about one hundred men, mustered near the Meeting-House; the Troops came in sight of them just before sunrise; and running within a few rods of them, the Commanding Officer accosted the Militia in words to this effect: "Disperse, you rebels—damn you, throw down your arms and disperse;" upon which the Troops huzzaed, and immediately one or two officers discharged their pistols, which were instantaneously followed by the firing of four or five of the soldiers, and then there seemed to be a general discharge from the whole body: eight of our men were killed, and nine wounded. In a few minutes after this action the enemy renewed their march for Concord; at which place they destroyed several Carriages, Carriage Wheels, and about twenty barrels of Flour, all belonging to the Province. Here about one hundred and fifty men going towards a bridge, of which the enemy were in possession, the latter fired and killed two of our men, who then returned the fire, and obliged the enemy to retreat back to Lexington, where they met Lord Percy, with a large reinforcement, with two pieces of cannon. The enemy now having a body of about eighteen hundred men, made a halt, picked up many of their dead, and took care of their wounded. At Menotomy, a few of our men attacked a party of twelve of the enemy, (carrying stores and provisions to the Troops,) killed one of them, wounded several, made the rest prisoners, and took possession of all their arms, stores, provisions, &c., without any loss on our side. The enemy having halted one or two hours at Lexington, found it necessary to make a second retreat, carrying with them many of their dead and wounded, who they put into chaises and on horses that they found standing in the road. They continued their retreat from Lexington to Charlestown with great precipitation; and notwithstanding their field-pieces, our people continued the pursuit, firing at them till they got to Charlestown Neck, (which they reached a little after sunset,) over which the enemy passed, proceeded up Bunker's Hill, and soon afterwards went into the Town, under the protection of the Somerset Man-of-War of sixty-four guns.

In Lexington the enemy set fire to Deacon Joseph Loring's house and barn, Mrs. Mullikin's house and shop, and Mr. Joshua Bond's house and shop, which were all consumed. They also set fire to several other houses, but our people extinguished the flames. They pillaged almost every house they passed by, breaking and destroying doors, windows, glasses, &c., and carrying off clothing and other valuable effects. It appeared to be their design to burn and destroy all before them; and nothing but our vigorous pursuit prevented their infernal purposes from being put in execution. But the savage barbarity exercised upon the bodies of our unfortunate brethren who fell, is almost incredible; not contented with shooting down the unarmed, aged, and infirm, they disregarded the cries of the wounded, killing them without mercy, and mangling their bodies in the most shocking manner.

We have the pleasure to say, that, notwithstanding the highest provocations given by the enemy, not one instance of cruelty, that we have heard of, was committed by our victorious Militia; but, listening to the merciful dictates of the Christian religion, they "breathed higher sentiments of humanity."

The consternation of the people of Charlestown, when our enemies were entering the Town, is inexpressible; the Troops however behaved tolerably civil, and the people have since nearly all left the Town.

The following is a List of the Provincials who were killed and wounded:

CAMBRIDGE.—Killed: William Marcy, Moses Richardson, John Hicks, Jason Russell, Jabish Wyman, Jason Winship. Wounded: Captain Samuel Whittemore. Missing: Samuel Frost, Seth Russell.

CHARLESTOWN.—Killed: James Miller, and a son of Captain William Barber.

WATERTOWN.—Killed: Joseph Cooledge.

SUDBURY.—Killed: Deacon Josiah Haynes, Asahel Reed. Wounded: Joshua Haynes, Jun.

ACTON.—Killed: Captain Isaac Davis, Abner Hosmer, James Hayward.

BEDFORD.—Killed: Captain Jonathan Wilson. Wounded: Job Lane.

NEEDHAM.—Killed: Lieutenant John Bacon, Sergeant Elisha Mills, Amos Mills, Nathaniel Chamberlain, Jonathan Parker. Wounded: Captain Eleazer Kingsbury, and a son of Doctor Tolman.

MEDFORD.—Killed: Henry Putnam, William Polly.

NEWTOWN.—Wounded: Noah Wiswall.

WOBURN.—Killed: Asa Parker, Daniel Thomson*. Wounded: George Read, Jacob Bacon.

LEXINGTON.—Killed: Jonas Parker, *Robert Munroe, Jedidiah Munroe, John Raymond, *Samuel Hadley, *Jonathan Harrington, Jun., *Isaac Muzzy, *Caleb Harrington, Nathaniel Wyman, John Brown. Wounded: Francis Brown, John Robbins, Solomon Peirce, John Tidd, Joseph Comie, Ebenezer Munroe, Jun., Thomas Winship, Nathaniel Farmer, Prince, a negro.

BILLERICA.—Wounded: John Nichols, Timothy Blanchard.

CHELMSFORD.—Wounded: Deacon Aaron Chamberlain, Captain Oliver Barron.

CONCORD.—Wounded: Abel Prescott, Jun., Captain Charles Miles, Captain Nathan Barrett.

FRAMINGHAM.—Wounded: Daniel Hemenway.

STOW.—Wounded: Daniel Conant.

DEDHAM.—Killed: Elias Haven. Wounded: Israel Everett.

ROXBURY.—Missing: Elijah Seaver.

BROOKLINE.—Killed: Isaac Gardner, Esq.

SALEM.—Killed: Benjamin Peirce.

DANVERS.—Killed: Henry Jacobs, Samuel Cook, Ebenezer Goldthwait, George Southwick, Benjamin Deland, Jun., Jotham Webb, Perly Putnam. Wounded: Nathan Putnam, Dennis Wallis. Missing: Joseph Bell.

BEVERLY.—Killed: Mr. Kinnym. Wounded: Nathaniel Cleaves, Samuel Woodbury, William Dodge.

LYNN.—Killed: Abednego Ramsdell, Daniel Townsend, William Flynt, Thomas Hadley. Wounded: Joshua Felt, Timothy Munroe. Missing: Josiah Breed.

We have seen an account of the loss of the enemy, said to have come from an Officer of one of the Men-of-War; by which it appears that sixty-three of the Regulars, and forty-nine Marines were killed, and one hundred and three of both wounded: in all, two hundred and fifteen. Lieutenant Gould of the Fourth Regiment, who is wounded, and Lieutenant Potter of the Marines, and about twelve soldiers, are prisoners.

Mr. James Howard and one of the Regulars discharged their pieces at the same instant, and each killed the other.

Our brethren of Danvers who fell fighting for their Country, were interred, with great solemnity and respect, on Friday last.

The publick most sincerely sympathize with the friends and relations of our deceased brethren, who gloriously sacrificed their lives in fighting for the liberties of their Country. By their noble and intrepid conduct, in helping to defeat the forces of an ungrateful tyrant, they have endeared their memories to the present generation, who will transmit their names to posterity with the highest honour.

JAMES SULLIVAN TO JOSEPH WARREN.

Exeter, New-Hampshire, April 25, 1775.

SIR: I have this day endeavoured to execute my embassy to this Province with the greatest faithfulness. There seems some opposition here to the assistance we have expected from this quarter, but doubtless the despatches you receive with this will inform you of the determination of this Congress respecting the matter. My being a Committee from the Congress of Massachusetts-Bay, has procured me great respect here, which has been shown by them as a body of individuals. I doubt not but there will be the same politeness shown by you towards their missionaries to our Congress.

I am, dear Sir, &c., &c.

JAMES SULLIVAN.

To Joseph Warren, Esq., President of the Massachusetts Congress.

INSTRUCTIONS OF THE INHABITANTS OF WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS., TO SAMUEL KELLOGG.

At a meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Williamstown, on the 25th day of April, A. D., 1775, the Selectmen being Moderators of the meeting, and Ensign Samuel Kellogg was unanimously chosen a Delegate to represent this Town in Provincial Congress; and the sense of the Town was communicated to him for his instruction, as follows, viz:

That it is the sense of this Town, that we are at all times ready, as far as our circumstances will allow, to join in the common cause of American liberty, and to assist with our lives and fortunes, as occasion may require, to maintain our rights and liberties against all the hostile attempts to deprive us of our rights and liberties, made by the cruel and oppressive Acts of the British Parliament; and are always ready to bear our proportion to defend our countrymen, and to assist in repelling force by force, in such manner as the collective wisdom of the Province, in Provincial Congress convened, shall judge most expedient.

The Town Clerk being absent, the meeting ordered the Selectmen to sign in behalf of the Town.

COLONEL JOHN WENTWORTH TO THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE CONGRESS.

Somersworth, April 25, 1775, Tuesday, 6 o'clock.

GENTLEMEN: My health is such it is impracticable for me to be at Exeter this day; I was very ill able to attend last week. Hope you will agree on some method to prevent the Soldiers being mustered on every false alarm; otherwise we shall soon be distressed for the want of provisions. It was surprising to see the number that collected when I came from Exeter, at Newmarket, Durham, Dover, Somersworth, &c., some of whom came to Dover, twenty miles or more. You must know the consequence, if not prevented.

I heartily wish the Divine direction and blessing may attend your consultations and determinations; and after assuring you I am heartily engaged in the same cause with you, am your sincere friend and most obedient and humble servant,

JOHN WENTWORTH.

To the Gentlemen of the Congress convened at Exeter.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A MERCHANT IN LONDON, TO HIS FRIEND IN VIRGINIA, DATED APRIL 26, 1775.

We have petitioned the King, Lords, and Commons, on behalf of the Colonies, which has produced a promise to repeal the Tea Act, Boston Port Bill, and those of this Session of Parliament for restraining the Fishery and Trade of some of the Colonies, to Great Britain, Ireland, and the West-India Islands, provided your Assemblies will raise a Revenue, in their own mode, towards the support of Government, and to pay part of the interest, amounting to more than three-fourths of the value of all the exports to America, annually, for eleven years, ending at Christmas, 1773, of the heavy debt contracted the last war, which was begun in and carried on for the defence and protection of America. This, it is hoped, will restore harmony between all His Majesty's subjects on both sides the Atlantic; and that the Resolve to forbear exporting the produce of the industrious Planter, will be expunged and buried in oblivion. If it should be strictly adhered to in the present form, I doubt the beneficial branch of your commerce in tobacco will, in a great measure, be lost to Virginia and Maryland, as that trade will be turned into other channels, and the markets will be plentifully supplied by the Holland, Flanders, German, Russian, and Turkey Merchants, as it grows plentifully in all those countries, and also in Florida, from whence some very good tobacco has been lately imported, so that the revenues will not be diminished, and the revenge intended against Government will terminate in distressing, if not in the ruin, of the Planters and a few Merchants, there being only twenty-two houses in London who regularly send ships to import tobacco from Virginia and Maryland.

Having a little leisure time on my hands, I thought it expedient to lay these facts before you, knowing you can make a proper use of them, for the mutual interest of Great Britain and America. Peace cannot be restored by threats or hostilities, but may be easily obtained by treaty, which I most ardently wish for.

The Ship Catharine, Captain Potter, cleared out at the Custom-House at Norfolk, in Virginia, last February, with twenty thousand five hundred staves, for Lisbon, where she did not go, but arrived at Dunkirk, and delivered her cargo, with about ninety hogsheads of tobacco, which were covered with the staves; also, it is now discovered, that two other ships have arrived with like cargoes; and more are expected at the same port. Quere, Do these ships bring their return in tea, brandy, claret, &c., to be smuggled into the Colony? What will be the consequence of this pernicious practice, time will discover.

CAPTAINS GRAYSON AND LEE TO COLONEL WASHINGTON.

Dumfries, April 26, 1775.

SIR: We have just received a letter from the Officers of the Independent Company of Spottsylvania, which I have herewith enclosed. We immediately called together this Company, and had the vote put, whether they would march to Williamsburgh for the purpose mentioned in that Letter, which was carried unanimously.

We have nothing more to add, but that we are well assured you may depend on them, either for that or any other service, which respects the liberties of America. We expect your answer and determination by Mr. Davess.

We have the honour to be your most obedient servants.
By order of the Company:

WILLIAM GRAYSON,
PHIL. RD. FRANS. LEE.

HUGH MERCER, ETC., TO CAPTAIN WILLIAM GRAYSON.

Fredericksburgh, Virginia, April 24, 1775.

SIR: From undoubted authority, we received here this day, morning, the very disagreeable intelligence, that in the night of Thursday last, Captain Collins, Commander of one of His Majesty's Sloops of War, by command of his Excellency the Governour, assisted by a Company of Marines, carried off all the Powder from the Magazine in the City of Williamsburgh, and deposited it on board his vessel, which lay at Burwell's Ferry, about five miles below the City.

The said authority informs us that the Corporation of the City of Williamsburgh addressed the Governour on that occasion. The people have received no satisfaction; nor are they likely to recover the Powder, though it is so very necessary for the security of the Country.

This being a day of meeting of the Independent Company of this Town, they considered it necessary to take the matter into serious consideration, and are come to a unanimous resolution, that a submission to so arbitrary an exertion of Government, may not only prejudice the common cause, by introducing a suspicion of a defection of this Colony from the noble pursuit, but will encourage the tools of despotism to commit further acts of violence in this Colony, and more especially subject the Arms in the Magazine to the same fate as the Powder.

In these sentiments, this Company could but determine that a number of publick spirited gentlemen should embrace this opportunity of showing their zeal in the grand cause, by marching to Williamsburgh to inquire into this affair, and there to take such steps as may best answer the purpose of recovering the Powder, and securing the Arms now in the Magazine. To this end, they have determined to hold themselves in readiness to march from this place as Light-Horse, on Saturday morning; and, in the mean time, to submit the matter to the determination of yours and the neighbouring Counties, to whom expresses are purposely forwarded. We address you in the name of our Company, as its Officers, and are, Sir, your very humble servants,

HUGH MERCER, G. WEEDON,
ALEX. SPOTSWOOD, JNO. WILLIS.

To Captain Wm. Grayson.

HENRICO COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

In Committee, Wednesday, April 26, 1775.

It appearing from the Virginia Gazette, of the 21st instant, that the Powder in the publick Magazine, in the City of Williamsburgh, deposited there at the expense of the Country, and for the use of the people, in case of invasion or insurrection, had been secretly removed, under the clouds of the night, by Captain Collins, of the Mag- dales Sloop-of-War, and by order of the Governour; and the Committee having taken into their consideration the Address of the Corporation of the City of Williamsburgh, as also his Excellency's Answer thereunto, came to the following Resolutions:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Committee, that the removing of the said Gunpowder in the manner, at the time, and for the reasons given for so doing, is an insult to every freeman in this Country, a high reflection upon the respectable Corporation of the City of Williamsburgh, and to the last degree cruel, under their circumstances, being then threatened with an insurrection; that we consider the act itself as a determined step, tending towards establishing that tyranny we so much dread, and which the British Ministry, with unrelenting fury, have so long and are still endeavouring to effect. And further, that we consider it as injurious to the fame, and tending to destroy the pleasing idea we had entertained of his Excellency's regard for the happiness and true interests of this Colony.

Resolved, That we think it incumbent upon us to avow our sentiments upon this occasion; and while we declare our detestation and abhorrence of the act, we will use our best endeavours to procure an immediate restitution of the said Powder to the Magazine, from whence it was taken.

Resolved, That as we cannot rest satisfied with his Excellency's Answer to the Address of the Corporation of the City of Williamsburgh, that it be an instruction to the Committee of Correspondence to write to the Committee of the City of Williamsburgh, or to the Committee of York or James City Counties, and procure the most authentic intelligence respecting the same, and report to this Committee at their next meeting.

By order of the Committee:

JOHN BECKLEY, Clerk.

TO THE PUBLICK.

I find in Messieurs Bradfords Journal, "A Plan of an union of the several Colonies, &c., proposed by Benjamin Franklin, Esquire, and unanimously agreed to by all the Commissioners of the several Colonies, met, by order of the Crown, at Albany, in July, 1754," with the following introduction:

"The following Plan bears so strong a resemblance to that introduced into the late Congress by a Delegate from this Province, as his own, that I cannot but think it right to take the child from its putative, and restore it to real parents. Had it been produced, as undoubtedly it ought to have been, as perfect and complete as this, it is possible it would have met with a more favourable reception; but this, perhaps, would not have so entirely corresponded with the views of this gentleman, as it would have lessened his title to it, and rendered his claim to be more doubtful or liable to detection."

Having perused this introduction, I slightly ran my eye over the plan, expecting to find after it, some strictures, proving the alleged "strong resemblance" between it and the one proposed in the late Congress, but not a remark followed; the reader is left to believe the similitude upon the futile and false asseveration of an anonymous scribbler. This is a practice, of late, grown too common with a number of men, who mean to mislead and deceive, and have not even the appearance of facts or arguments to support that deception. It certainly calls for a publick reprehension, because whenever it is done, it is an insult offered to the publick, an affront to the understandings of men of sense and integrity, and, could the authors be known, they must become the objects of publick contempt.

The plan proposed in the late Congress, though offered to their consideration with the most beneficent intentions towards America, has unfortunately produced very mischievous effects with some folks. It has given them infinite anxiety, disgust, and distress. Why the mere proposal of a plan of union between the subjects of the same state, in order to the establishment of a permanent harmony between them, and to prevent the dreadful effects of a civil war, should produce these effects, is difficult to determine, unless it be because the plan is so replete with American liberty, and consequently so opposite to their frantick scheme of independency, and yet founded on such solid principles, that they know not what to do with it. It was declared in Congress, by more than one of the Delegates, that it was "big with destruction to the Colonies," and one of them undertook, at a future day, to prove it so; but near six months have elapsed, and it is not done. We are told that it is "idle, dangerous, whimsical, and ministerial." Such are the opprobrious epithets which these angry gentlemen have bestowed upon it, but the publick is not favoured with a single argument to prove it deserving of any of them. The merits of the plan remain uncanvassed and unsullied but by their abuse, supported by their defamatory assertions only. And such is the inconsistency of human conduct, when it becomes subservient to bad designs, that we ever find it like the winds, perpetually changing from point to point, until it blows opposite blasts, and incurs the most palpable contradictions. Thus the enemies to this plan, finding their attempts to persuade the publick by their positive assertions to believe that it was something very wicked and inconsistent with the true interest of America, unwillingly glide into an acknowledgment of its merit. For this same plan, which not long since was pronounced idle, dangerous, whimsical, and ministerial, is now of a sudden become, instead of an "idle and whimsical plan," the real child of a truly worthy great man, and one of the first philosophers of the present age; instead of being "dangerous to America," it is the child of the warmest, wisest, and most zealous of the friends of America; and instead of being ministerial, it is the act of a gentleman the most anti-ministerial of any one living. And we are further told, in the same Journal, that it was not inserted in the Journal of the last Congress, because it would "be disgracing their records." Yet now we find that it bears a "strong resemblance to a plan 'unanimously agreed to by all the Commissioners of the several Colonies, met at Albany in 1754,'" and consequently entered upon their records, as worthy of the attention of all America. Such are the strange, capricious, and inconsistent conduct of men who have resolved to desert the paths of truth and candour.

And, as if truth and the convictions of reason were too powerful to be longer suppressed, it is at last confessed, in the introduction, that had the plan of 1774 "been produced as perfect and complete as the one of 1754, it would have met with a more favourable reception." Here again is a full acknowledgment that the former has not deserved the abuse which has been cast upon it; and that it only required to be more "perfect and complete" to entitle it to a favourable reception. It is a just observation of a great Lawyer and a Statesman, "nihil simul et semel inceptum et perfectum est;" that there is scarce any thing of human invention which is at first perfect; it may be concluded, without derogating from the merit of the great man who proposed it, that the plan of 1754 was, when proposed, in this state, and that it did not assume its present form until it had been canvassed by, and received the alterations and amendments of the collected wisdom of the Governours and Delegates of the several Colonies. Had the last Congress acted the same candid and impartial part agreeable to their first resolution, the last plan might have been made equally perfect. If it contained the great outlines of a rational system of union between Great Britain and the Colonies, it was their indispensable duty to furnish the materials wanting to finish the work within, and to complete the superstructure. And it is yet the duty of the pretended Patriots, who are wasting pen, ink, and paper, with their calumnies, to point out its defects, and propose the proper alterations and additions. And as none of them have been capable of offering to the publick any other more perfect system of union, this would certainly be acting the part of real friends to their Country, and save them from the disgrace which must attend the continued proofs they are exhibiting, of some deep-laid, dark designs, which they do not care to unfold.

But it is further alleged, that the plan agreed in the Congress at Albany, "bears a strong resemblance to that introduced by a Delegate from this Province, into the late Congress, as his own, and that it is but right to take the child from its putative, and restore it to its real parents." If being a matter of no importance to the publick, whether the ingenious Doctor Franklin, or the Pennsylvania Delegate, was the author of the last plan, no notice would be taken of the introduction, did not the above charge strike at the honour and candour of the Delegate. But as this is the sole design of it, it is hoped the publick will not think it improper to have before them what may be said in vindication of his injured honour and character. A comparison of the two plans, and a just representation of his conduct at the time he proposed the last, will prove that this "strong resemblance" exists neither in the names, the matter, or substance of the plans, and were they the same, that he had no intent to assume to himself the merit which belonged to another.

1. The plan agreed to at Albany is properly called, in its title, "A Plan of an union of the several Colonies," &c.; and the one proposed by the Pennsylvania Delegate is, "A Plan of union between Great Britain and the Colonies."

2. The first forms a distinct inferior Legislature for the Colonies, composed of two perfect branches only, upon the same principles and model of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, without any incorporation or union with the British Legislature. But the second proposes to establish a grand British and American Legislature, by a political union and incorporation of the Representatives of the free-men of America with the King, Lords, and Commons.

3. By the first, the Legislative acts of the Grand Council are made subject to the negative of the King, as Representative of the British State, and afterwards to his negative, as one of the branches of the British Legislature. By the second, this negative in the Crown is rendered altogether unnecessary, and totally excluded, by a direction in one of the Articles, that the acts of the Grand Council shall be immediately transmitted for the approbation or dissent of the Parliament of Great Britain, before they are valid. And thus these acts would only remain subject to the negative of the Parliament, while the Grand Council would also enjoy the like negative on all the acts of the British Legislature which concern their general interest and welfare, either "civil, criminal, or commercial."

4. The Legislature of the first plan, and all its constituents, were to remain subordinate to the authority of Parliament, although America is not there represented, there being nothing either in the expressions, matter, or implications of the plan to exclude it, but, on the contrary, an express acknowledgment of that authority. But in the second, this subordination, now so much complained of, and the great object of the dispute which is likely to involve America in ruin, is taken away, and a remedy proposed by an union of the British and American members of the State, upon constitutional principles, by which the latter is placed on a par of power, and will enjoy the same solid security for their rights and freedom with the former; as under this plan no money can be taken from them, no taxes laid, none of their manufactures restrained, or their commerce prohibited or burthened, without their consent.

5. Thus we find that the first plan proposes no more than an union of the Colonies by a Grand Assembly of their Representatives, subject to a negative on their acts in the Crown, and afterwards to the repeal and control of the Parliamentary authority, which leaves the rights of America unrestored, the authority of Parliament over us arbitrary, and the essential grievances of America unredressed; while the latter proposes a political union of the Colonies with Great Britain, in which the rights of the Colonies are restored on the most solid principles of liberty; the Parliamentary authority over them modified and rendered safe and constitutional; the cause and reason of our complaints removed; and a solid foundation laid for a permanent union and harmony between the two Countries.

I could descend to many other particulars in which these plans materially differ; but this must be unnecessary, as it cannot be thought strange that they should be substantially variant from each other, when impartial men will give themselves time to reflect on the different circumstances and motives which gave rise to them. At the time when the first was proposed, the supremacy of Parliament over the Colonies was not questioned by any American. The design of the Congress was to propose some mode to His Majesty, by which the Colonies might be enabled to ascertain the just proportion of aids that each ought to contribute towards their general safety, which was then immediately endangered by their disunion, and to establish some power to compel the refractory and unwilling to a performance of their general political duties among themselves. Here the views of the first Congress rested. But when the last met, the objects of their deliberations were infinitely more extensive and important. Nothing less than the rights of the supreme authority of a great Empire over its members, and the essential rights of a very respectable part of those members, were the questions there agitated. The first plan was calculated to afford a remedy for the mischiefs then under consideration. The second, to remove the unhappy cause of the dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies, by restoring America to her right of participating in the supreme authority, and reducing that authority to a constitutional exercise of its power over the Colonies. Such being the obvious difference in the causes from which the plans originated, it was impossible, if they were in any ways calculated to answer the different ends in view, that they should not be greatly different both in their names and substance.

I shall offer but one argument more in vindication of the Delegate who proposed the last plan, from the ungenerous calumny so undeservedly thrown upon him, which will fully demonstrate that he could entertain no design of taking from Doctor Franklin, or the Congress of 1754, the merit of the first. He carried with him to the Congress the plan of 1754, with the reasons under every article, which induced the then Commissioners to adopt them in the Doctor's own writing. He shewed it to several of the members as the plan proposed by the Doctor and agreed to by the Commissioners. He delivered it to one of the Delegates without the least injunction or reserve. From that Delegate it passed into the hands of several others, until the gentleman to whom it was first delivered could not, for some time, discover in whose hands to find it. This was done to enable the members to compare the two plans, to digest the better the one then proposed, and if any addition could be made to it, that it might be done when it should be taken into consideration agreeable to the rule of the Congress. Having little vanity in his composition, any applause which might arise from the merit of the plan never entered into his imagination. His mind was too earnestly engaged in endeavouring to lend his assistance towards preserving the rights of America, and establishing a happy union of the two Countries. These were his motives, his only motives; and he is still of opinion, had the Delegates in Congress formed a constitutional system of union upon the same, or nearly alike principles, that great and beneficial effects would have flowed from it to America. It would have been acting the wise and prudent part of taking the best ground of defence first. It would have been asking, what we have a right to demand, an union with our brethren and fellow-subjects in Britain, on principles of liberty and government. It would have attached to us innumerable friends in England and all the British Dominions, whom, by a contrary conduct, we have lost. It would have united us firmly and inseparably among ourselves, upon rational and supportable grounds, while the measures adopted have only tended to divide and weaken the Colonies. And should the Administration have refused (contrary to what we had then, and more especially now, reason to expect) so reasonable and just a proposition as that of granting to the Americans the common constitutional rights of British subjects, in all probability it would have left them supported by very few, if any, of the people, on whom they must rely for aids, to enable them to carry any scheme into execution. Philadelphia, April 26, 1775.

Yesterday, at three o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to publick notice, there was a meeting of near eight thousand of the inhabitants of this City, to consider of the measures to be pursued in the present critical situation of the affairs of America.

The business was opened with several eloquent and patriotic speeches, and the company unanimously agreed to associate, for the purpose of defending with ARMS, their property, liberty, and lives, against all attempts to deprive them of them.

PHILADELPHIA ASSOCIATION.

Whereas, it appears from authentick accounts received from England, that it is the design of the present Ministry to enforce the late cruel and unjust Acts of Parliament complained of in the most legal and dutiful manner by the Congress: And whereas, an additional number of Troops, with a Fleet, have been ordered for America, to assist the Troops now in Boston in the execution of the said Acts: We, the subscribers, agree that we will associate for the purpose of learning the Military Exercise, and for defending our property and lives against all attempts to deprive us of them.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM READING, PENNSYLVANIA, DATED APRIL 26, 1775.

We have raised in this Town two Companies of Foot, under proper Officers; and such is the spirit of the people of this free County, that in three weeks time there is not a Township in it that will not have a Company raised and disciplined, ready to assert at the risk of their lives the freedom of America.

NEW-YORK COMMITTEE.

Wednesday, April 26, 1775.

The Committee having taken into consideration the commotions occasioned by the sanguinary measures pursued by the British Ministry; and that the powers with which this Committee is invested, respect only the Association, are unanimously of opinion that a new Committee be elected by the Freeholders and Freemen of this City and County, for the present unhappy exigency of affairs, as well as to observe the conduct of all persons touching the Association; that the said Committee consist of one hundred persons; that thirty-three be a quorum, and that they dissolve within a fortnight next after the end of the next sessions of the Continental Congress. And that the sense of the Freeholders and Freemen of this City and County upon this subject may be better procured and ascertained, the Committee are further unanimously of opinion, that the polls be taken on Friday morning next, at nine o'clock, at the usual places of election in each Ward, under the inspection of the two Vestrymen of each Ward, and two of this Committee, or any two of the four; and that at the said elections the votes of the Freemen and Freeholders be taken on the following questions, viz: Whether such new Committee shall be constituted? And if yea, of whom it shall consist? And this Committee is further unanimously of opinion, that at the present alarming juncture, it is highly advisable that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned; and that it be recommended to the Freeholders and Freemen of this City and County, to choose at the same time that they vote for the new Committee aforesaid, twenty Deputies to represent them at the said Congress; and that a Letter be forthwith prepared and despatched to all the Counties, requesting them to unite with us in forming a Provincial Congress, and to appoint their Deputies without delay, to meet at New-York, on Monday, the 22d of May next. By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

JOHN COLLINS TO THE COMMANDING OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL ARMY AT CAMBRIDGE.

Newport, April 26, 1775.

It is with pleasure that I communicate to you, by express, the following important intelligence, by a vessel just arrived here from New-York.

We are informed that the news of the engagement between the Regulars and Provincials got to New-York on Sunday last, between the fore and afternoon service; that the people of the City immediately arose, disarmed the Soldiers, and possessed themselves of the Forts and Magazines, in which they found about fifteen hundred Arms; that they unloaded two Transports bound to Boston, Captain Montague not daring to give them any assistance; that a third Transport had sailed while they were seizing the two others, and that the people had fitted out a vessel, in order to take and bring her back; that they had forbid all the Pilots from bringing up any of the King's Ships; that Captain Montague was not able to procure a Pilot in the whole City; and that the inhabitants were preparing to put themselves in the best posture of defence.

The gentleman who brings this intelligence left Elizabethtown yesterday morning, and tells us, that on Monday the Committee of that Town and County met, and agreed to raise one thousand men immediately, to assist in the defence of New-York, against any attack that may be made upon them. I have the honour to assure you that this intelligence may be depended upon, and that I am, Sir, your most humble servant,

JOHN COLLINS,
Chairman of the Committee of Inspection.

TO THE PROVINCIAL CONGRESS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Provincial Convention at Exeter, April 26, 1775.

"Resolved unanimously, That Colonel Nathaniel Folsom, Col. Josiah Bartlett, and Major Samuel Hobart, Esquires, be immediately sent as a Committee from this Convention, to the Provincial Congress of the Province of Massachusetts-Bay, to deliver to them the following Letter; and further inform them of the particular situation of this Province, and report the effect of their mission as soon as may be."

GENTLEMEN: Before the receipt of your letter of April 23, intelligence of the tragical scene which hath lately been acted in your Colony by the regular Troops, had pierced the ears of the inhabitants of this; upon which, many of our men, fired with zeal in the common cause, and resentment at the inhuman cruelty and savage barbarity of the action, instantly flew to your assistance, and vast numbers more on their march were stopped, on hearing they were not needed.

The Provincial Committee, upon this alarm, immediately called a special Convention of Delegates from the nearest Towns, to consult with the Committee what was then absolutely necessary to be done upon that pressing occasion; in consequence of which this Convention met.

Previous to this, our Provincial Committee, upon application to them from a Committee of your body, had notified the respective Towns in this Province to choose and empower Delegates to meet at Exeter on the 17th day of May next, to deliberate upon the important and momentous objects proposed by your Congress for the consideration and concurrence of ours; at which time the important matters recommended, will naturally come under the mature deliberation of our Congress, and, no doubt, they will readily concur and co-operate with their brethren in New-England in all such measures as shall be thought most conducive for the common safety. But this body, though heartily willing to contribute in every advisable method to your aid, in the general defence of these Colonies, judge it not expedient now to determine upon the establishment of an Army of Observation, as the Towns in this Government are not generally represented. But it is recommended in the mean time to the Towns in this Colony, to supply the men gone from it with provisions and other necessities, if their continuance shall be thought necessary; and from the spirit of the inhabitants you may expect their aid, if any emergency should require it.

We most fervently wish you the blessing and direction of Heaven in all your deliberations; and may God Almighty, who protected and saved our pious ancestors amidst ten thousand dangers, preserve New-England from the horrors and desolations of a civil war.

By order of the Convention:

MESHECK WEARE, President pro tem.

JOHN HANCOCK TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Worcester, April 26, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: Having had the honour to command the Cadet Company at Boston, and knowing the abilities of those who composed that Corps, I cannot withhold mentioning and recommending to the notice of you and the General Officers, Mr. John Smith and Mr. John Avery, two excellent good soldiers and gentlemen, who will advance the reputation of the Province in that department of command where they may be placed. I therefore most strongly recommend them, and earnestly pray they may be noticed. I will be answerable for their conduct. There are several other gentlemen of that Corps who may be useful, particularly Mr. Brant and Mr. Cunningham. Do notice Mr. Smith and Avery; they will be useful.

I set out to-morrow morning. God bless you. Why don't you send to Mr. Crafts? Pray improve him; he is a good man, and one on whom you may depend; don't miss him. I am your real friend,

JOHN HANCOCK.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO RHODE-ISLAND AND CONNECTICUT.

April 26, 1775.

The distressed situation in which we are, and the danger to which the liberties of all America, and especially the New-England Colonies, are exposed, will be the best apology for the importunate application to you for immediate assistance. We pray, as you regard the safety of your Country, that as large a number of Troops as you can spare may immediately march forward, well stocked with provisions and ammunition; that they come under proper Officers, enlisted for such a time as may be necessary; that as large a train of Artillery as can be procured, may be sent down to our aid. We rely greatly upon you, as we know the bravery of your men.

Our men have behaved with the utmost resolution; but as many of them came from home without any preparation, it is impossible to keep them in the field, without allowing many of them time to return to their families for one or two days, during which time we may all possibly be cut off, as we have a powerful and watchful enemy to deal with. We are far from despairing. We firmly trust, that, by the blessing of Heaven on us, we shall deliver our Country. We are determined, at all events, to act our parts with firmness and intrepidity, knowing that slavery is far worse than death. We pray that our sister Rhode-Island would immediately put in for a share of honour, in saving the liberties of America, as a moment lost may never be recalled. May God direct you and us at this important moment, on which the fate of us and posterity depends. We are, &c.

FALMOUTH COMMITTEE TO COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Falmouth April 26, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: At this alarming and dangerous time, we find our stock of Powder greatly deficient; therefore have sent some money by the bearers to purchase where they can find it; and if they cannot get any this side of Cambridge, have desired them to wait upon you for advice, presuming that you can direct them where it may be had.

We rely on your conduct, under God, in our righteous cause, for deliverance from our present calamities, and are, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servants,

ENOCH FREEMAN, JOHN BRACKETT,
BENJAMIN MUSSEY, WM. OWEN,
Selectmen of Falmouth.

P. S. The bearers are Captain Joseph McLellan and Captain Joseph Noyes.

TO COLONEL PHILIP SKEENE, (INTERCEPTED.)

Extract of a Letter intercepted at Ticonderoga, directed to Lieutenant Colonel Philip Skeene, of the Sixty-Ninth Regiment, to the care of Messrs. Cox and Mair, Agents, London, signed A. Mabane.

Woodfield, in Canada, April 26, 1775.

DEAR COLONEL: The Fifty-Second Regiment has been detained in America, on account of the affairs at Boston; and God knows how long they may remain there, or what will be the event of these disputes; but it is generally thought by those who have resided any time in America, and who have observed the progress which the Colonists have made in their demands and attempts towards independence, that the sooner the laws are put in force, so much the better. Procrastination only encourages the sedition, and weakens Government.

Colonel Jones acts as Brigadier at Boston. General Gage has sent for our friend Dunbar; and I would fain flatter myself that something will at last be done for deserting Officers.

The January Packet brought Mr. Carleton's new commission; it does not differ much from his former one, except in the limits of the Province, and a power given to him without consent of Council to array the Militia, march them by land, or transport them by sea into any of the other Colonies, where enemies, pirates, or rebels, may be.

The Canadians, by the late Act of Parliament, are exempted from the Test, &c., and may be admitted into offices; seven of them are named to the Council, and two of them, Rouville and Panet, are added to the number of Judges. The Counsellors are six, Croix de St. Louis and Mr. Regauville, who acted as Major to the Corps of the Canadian Militia, which General Murray sent to the upper country during the last Indian war. It is said the officers are to have half pay. This is the favourable moment for Canada, and I am very glad that the Ministry have seized it. Whatever narrow-minded men may say, the Act is consonant to sound policy, humanity, and that moderation which becomes an enlightened Nation. To conquer, has been often the lot of the British Nation; but to conciliate the affections of the conquered, has been reserved to the reign of George the Third; and I may venture to say, that the Canadians will, upon every occasion, show their fidelity and gratitude.

NEW COMMISSION TO THE GOVERNOUR OF QUEBECK.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God, of GREAT BRITAIN, FRANCE, and IRELAND, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our trusty and well-beloved GUY CARLETON, Esquire, Greeting.

Whereas we did by our Letters Patent under our great seal of Great Britain, bearing date at Westminster the twelfth day of April, in the eighth year of our reign, constitute and appoint you to be our Captain General and Governour-in-Chief in and over our Province of Quebeck in America, bounded on the Labrador Coast by the River St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that River through the Lake St. John to the south-east of Lake Nipissin, from whence the said line, crossing the River St. Lawrence and Lake Champlain in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, passes along the high lands, which divide the Rivers that empty themselves into the said River St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the Sea; and also along the north Coast of the Bay Des Chaleurs, and the Coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Rozieres, and from thence crossing the mouth of the River St. Lawrence by the west end of the Island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid River St. John, together with all the rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever thereunto belonging, for and during our will and pleasure, as by the said recited Letters Patent, relation being thereunto had, may more fully and at large appear. And whereas we did also by our Letters Patent under our great seal of Great Britain, bearing date at Westminster, the . . . day of . . . in the . . . year of our reign, constitute and appoint Molineux Shuldham, Esq., to be our Governour and Commander-in-Chief in and over our Island of Newfoundland, and all the Coast of Labrador, from the entrance of Hudson's Straits to the River St. John, which discharges itself into the Sea nearly opposite the west end of the Island of Anticosti, including that Island, with any other small Islands on the said Coast of Labrador, and also the Islands of Madelaine in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, as also of all our Forts and Garrisons erected and established in our said Islands of Newfoundland, Anticosti, and Madelaine, or on the Coast of Labrador within the limits aforesaid, for and during our will and pleasure, as by the said Letters Patent, relation being thereunto had, may more fully and at large appear. Now know you, that we have revoked and determined, and by these presents revoke and determine, the said recited Letters Patent granted to you, the said Guy Carleton, as aforesaid, and every clause, article, and thing therein contained; and that we have also revoked and determined, and do by these presents revoke and determine so much and such part of the said recited Letters Patent granted to Molineux Shuldham, Esq., as aforesaid, as relates to the Coast of Labrador, including the Island of Anticosti, with any other small Islands on the said Coast of Labrador, and every clause, article, and thing therein contained, so far as the same relates to the said Coast of Labrador, and the Islands herein before recited. And further know you, that we, reposing especial trust and confidence in the prudence, courage, and loyalty of you, the said Guy Carleton, of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, have thought fit to constitute and appoint you, the said Guy Carleton, to be our Captain-General and Governour-in-Chief in and over our Province of Quebeck in America, comprehending all our Territories, Islands, and Countries in North-America, bounded on the south by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs along the high lands, which divide the Rivers that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the Sea, to a point in forty-five degrees of northern latitude, on the eastern bank of the River Connecticut; keeping the same latitude directly west through the Lake Champlain, until in the same latitude it meets with the River St. Lawrence, from thence up the eastern bank of the said River to the Lake Ontario, thence through the Lake Ontario, and the River, commonly called Niagara, and thence along by the eastern and southeastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank, until the same shall be intersected by the northern boundary granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected, and from thence along the said northern and western boundaries of the said Province, until the said western boundary strikes the Ohio; but, in case the said bank of the said Lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank, until it shall arrive at the point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the northwestern angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania, and thence by a right line to the said northwestern angle of the said Province, and thence along the western boundary of the said Province, until it strikes the River Ohio, and along the bank of the said River westward to the banks of Mississippi, and northward along the eastern bank of the said River to the southern boundary of the Territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; and also all such Territories, Islands, and Countries, which have, since the tenth of February, 1763, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, as aforesaid, together with all the rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever thereunto belonging.

And we do hereby require and command you to do and execute all things in due manner, that shall belong to your said command, and the trust we have reposed in you, according to the several powers and directions granted or appointed you by this present Commission, and the instructions and authorities herewith given unto you, or by such further powers, instructions, and authorities as shall at any time hereafter be granted or appointed you under our signet or sign manual, or by our order in our Privy Council, and according to such Ordinances as shall hereafter be made and agreed upon by you, with the advice and consent of the Council of our said Province under your Government, in such manner and form as is herein after expressed.

And our will and pleasure is, that you, the said Guy Carleton, do, after the publication of these our Letters Patent, in such manner and form as has been accustomed to be used on like occasions, in the first place take the oaths appointed to be taken by an Act passed in the first year of the reign of King George the First, intituled, "An Act for the further security of His Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" and by an Act passed in the sixth year of our reign, intituled, "An Act for altering the Oath of Abjuration, and the Assurance; and for amending so much of an Act of the seventh year of her late Majesty Queen Anne, intituled, An Act for the Improvement of the Union of the two Kingdoms, as, after the time therein limited, requires the delivery of certain lists and copies therein mentioned, to persons indicted of High Treason, or Misprision of Treason;" as also that you make and subscribe the declaration mentioned in an Act of Parliament, made in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled, "An Act for preventing dangers which may happen from Popish recusants;" and likewise that you take the oath usually taken by the Governours in the Plantations, for the due execution of the office and trust of our Captain-General and Governour in and over our said Province, and for the due and impartial administration of justice; and further that you take the oath required to be taken by Governours of the Plantations, to do their utmost, that the several laws relating to Trade and the Plantations be duly observed; which said oaths and declaration our Council of our said Province, or any three of the Members thereof, have hereby full power and authority, and are required to tender and administer to you; all which being duly performed, you shall yourself administer to each of the Members of our said Council, (except as herein after excepted) the said oaths mentioned in the said Acts, intituled, "An Act for the further security of His Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" and "An Act for altering the Oath of Abjuration, and the Assurance, and for amending so much of an Act of the seventh year of her late Majesty Queen Anne, intituled, An Act for the Improvement of the Union of the two Kingdoms, as after the time therein limited requires the delivery of certain lists and copies, therein mentioned, to persons indicted of High Treason, or Misprision of Treason;" as also cause them to make and subscribe the aforementioned declaration, and to administer unto them the usual oath for the due execution of their places and trusts.

And whereas we may find it expedient for our service, that our Council of our said Province should be in part composed of such of our Canadian subjects, or their descendants, as remain within the same under the faith of the Treaty of Paris, and who may profess the religion of the Church of Rome; it is therefore our will and pleasure, that in all cases where such persons shall or may be admitted, either into our said Council or into any other offices, they shall be exempted from all tests, and from taking any other oath than that prescribed in and by an Act of Parliament, passed in the fourteenth year of our reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebeck in North America;" and also the usual oath for the due execution of their places and trusts respectively.

And we do further give and grant unto you, the said Guy Carleton, full power and authority from time to time, and at any time hereafter, by yourself, or by any other to be authorized by you in that behalf, to administer and give the oaths mentioned in the said Acts, intituled, "An Act for the further security of His Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" and "An Act for altering the Oath of Abjuration, and the Assurance; and for amending so much of an Act of the seventh year of her late Majesty Queen Anne, intituled, An Act for the Improvement of the Union of the two Kingdoms, as, after the time therein limited, requires the delivery of certain lists and copies therein mentioned, to persons indicted of High Treason, or Misprision of Treason," to all and every such person or persons, as you shall think fit, who shall at any time or times pass into our said Province, or shall be resident or abiding there.

And we do hereby authorize and empower you to keep and use the publick seal of our Province of Quebeck for sealing all things whatsoever, that shall pass the great seal of our said Province.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you, the said Guy Carleton, full power and authority, with the advice and consent of our said Council, to make Ordinances for the peace, welfare and good Government of the said Province, and of the people and inhabitants thereof, and such others, as shall resort thereunto, and for the benefit of us, our heirs, and successors; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend to the authorizing and empowering the passing any Ordinance or Ordinances for laying any Taxes or Duties within the said Province, such rates and taxes only excepted, as the inhabitants of any Town or District within our said Province may be authorized by any Ordinance passed by you, with the advice and consent of the said Council, to assess, levy, and apply within the said Town or District for the purpose of making roads, erecting and repairing publick buildings, or for any other purpose respecting the local convenience and economy of such Town or District; provided also, that every Ordinance, so to be made by you, by and with the advice and consent of the said Council, shall be, within six months from the passing thereof, transmitted to us under our seal of our said Province for our approbation or disallowance of the same; as also duplicates thereof by the next conveyance; and in case any, or all of the said Ordinances shall at any time be disallowed and not approved, and so signified by us, our heirs and successors by order in their, or our Privy Council unto you, the said Guy Carleton, or to the Commander-in-Chief of our said Province for the time being, then such and so many of the said Ordinances, as shall be so disallowed and not approved, shall from the promulgation of the said order in Council within the said Province cease, determine and become utterly void and of no effect; provided also, that no Ordinance touching religion, or by which any punishment may be inflicted greater than fine or imprisonment for three months, shall be of any force or effect, until the same shall have been allowed and confirmed by us, our heirs and successors, and such allowance or confirmation signified to you, or to the Commander-in-Chief of our said Province for the time being, by their or our order in their or our Privy Council.

Provided also, that no Ordinance shall be passed at any meeting of the Council, where less than a majority of the whole Council is present, or at any time, except between the first day of January and the first day of May, unless upon some urgent occasion; in which case every member thereof resident at the Town of Quebeck, or within fifty miles thereof, shall be personally summoned to attend the same: and to the end that nothing may be passed or done by our said Council to the prejudice of us, our heirs, and successors, we will and ordain, that you, the said Guy Carleton, shall have and enjoy a negative voice in the making and passing of all Ordinances, as aforesaid.

And we do by these presents give and grant unto you, the said Guy Carleton, full power and authority, with the advice and consent of our said Council, to erect, constitute, and establish such and so many courts of judicature and publick justice within our said Province under your government, as you and they shall think fit and necessary for the hearing and determining all causes, as well criminal as civil, and for awarding execution thereupon, with all reasonable and necessary powers, authorities, fees, and privileges belonging thereunto; as also to appoint and commissionate fit persons in the several parts of your Government, to administer the oaths mentioned in the aforesaid Acts, intituled, "An Act for the further security of His Majesty's person and Government, and the succession of the Crown in the heirs of the late Princess Sophia, being Protestants, and for extinguishing the hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and his open and secret abettors;" and, "An Act for altering the Oath of Abjuration and the Assurance; and for amending so much of an Act of the seventh year of her late Majesty Queen Anne, intituled, An Act for the Improvement of the Union of the two Kingdoms, as, after the time therein limited, requires the delivery of certain lists and copies, therein mentioned, to persons indicted of High Treason, or Misprision of Treason;" as also to tender and administer the aforesaid declaration to such persons belonging to the said Courts, as shall be obliged to take the same.

And we do hereby grant unto you full power and authority to constitute and appoint Judges, and in cases requisite Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, and other necessary Officers and Ministers in our said Province for the better administration of justice, and putting the laws in execution; and to administer or cause to be administered unto them such oath or oaths, as are usually given for the due execution and performance of offices and places, and for the clearing of truth in judicial causes.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you full power and authority, where you shall see cause or shall judge any offender or offenders in criminal matters, or for any fines or forfeitures due unto us, fit objects of our mercy, to pardon all such offenders, and remit all such offences, fines, and forfeitures; treason and wilful murder only excepted; in which cases you shall likewise have power upon extraordinary occasions to grant reprieves to the offenders, until, and to the intent our Royal pleasure may be known therein.

And we do by these presents give and grant unto you full power and authority to collate any person or persons to any Churches, Chapels, or other ecclesiastical benefices within our said Province, as often as any of them shall happen to be void.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you, the said Guy Carleton, by yourself, or by your Captains and Commanders by you to be authorized, full power and authority to levy, arm, muster, command, and employ all persons whatsoever residing within our said Province; and, as occasion shall serve, them to march, embark, or transport from one place to another, for the resisting and withstanding of all enemies, pirates, and rebels, both at land and sea; and to transport such Forces to any of our Plantations in America, if necessity shall require, for defence of the same against the invasion or attempts of any of our enemies; and such enemies, pirates and rebels, if there shall be occasion, to pursue and prosecute in, or out of, the limits of our said Province; and, if it shall so please God, them to vanquish, apprehend, and take, and, being taken, according to law to put to death, or keep or preserve alive at your discretion, and to execute martial law in time of invasion, war, or other times, when by law it may be executed; and to do and execute all and every other thing and things, which to our Captain-General and Governour-in-Chief doth or of right ought to belong.

And we do hereby give and grant unto you full power and authority, by and with the advice and consent of our said Council, to erect, raise, and build in our said Province such and so many Forts, Platforms, Castles, Cities, Boroughs, Towns, and Fortifications, as you by the advice aforesaid shall judge necessary; and the same or any of them to fortify and furnish with Ordnance, Ammunition, and all sorts of Arms fit and necessary for the security and defence of our said Province; and, by the advice aforesaid, the same again, or any of them to demolish or dismantle, as may be most convenient.

And forasmuch as divers Mutinies and Disorders may happen by persons shipped and employed at Sea, during the time of War; and to the end, that such, as shall be shipped and employed at Sea during the time of War, may be better governed and ordered, we do hereby give and grant unto you, the said Guy Carleton, full power and authority to constitute and appoint Captains, Lieutenants, Masters of Ships, and other Commanders and Officers; and to grant to such Captains, Lieutenants, Masters of Ships, and other Commanders and Officers, Commissions to execute the Law Martial during the time of War, according to the directions of an Act, passed in the twenty-second year of the reign of our late Royal Grandfather, intituled, "An Act for amending, explaining, and reducing into one Act of Parliament, the Laws relating to the Government of His Majesty's Ships, Vessels, and Forces by Sea;" and to use such proceedings, authorities, punishments, corrections, and executions upon any offender or offenders, who shall be mutinous, seditious, disorderly, or any way unruly either at Sea, or during the time of their abode or residence in any of the Ports, Harbours, or Bays in our said Province, as the case shall be found to require, according to Martial Law; and the said directions, during the time of War, as aforesaid.

Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to the enabling you, or any by your authority to hold plea, or have any jurisdiction of any offence, cause, matter, or thing committed or done upon the High Sea, or within any of the Havens, Rivers, or Creeks of our said Province under your Government, by any Captain, Commander, Lieutenant, Master, Officer, Seaman, Soldier, or Person whatsoever, who shall be in actual service and pay, in or on board any of our Ships-of-War, or other Vessels acting by immediate Commission or Warrant from our Commissioners for executing the office of our High-Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High-Admiral of Great Britain for the time being, under the Seal of our Admiralty; but that such Captain, Commander, Lieutenant, Master, Officer, Seaman, Soldier, or other Person so offending, shall be left to be proceeded against, and tried, as their offences shall require, either by Commission under our Great Seal of this Kingdom, as the Statute of the twenty-eighth of Henry VIII. directs; or by Commission from our said Commissioners for executing the office of High-Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High-Admiral of Great Britain for the time being, according to the aforementioned Act, intituled, "An Act for amending, explaining, and reducing into one Act of Parliament, the Laws relating to the Government of His Majesty's Ships, Vessels, and Forces by Sea;" and not otherwise.

Provided, nevertheless, that all disorders and misdemeanors committed on shore by any Captain, Commander, Lieutenant, Master, Officer, Seaman, Soldier, or other Person whatsoever belonging to any of our Ships-of-War, or other Vessels acting by immediate Commission or Warrant from our Commissioners for executing the office of High-Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High-Admiral of Great Britain for the time being, under the seal of our Admiralty, may be tried and punished according to the Laws of the place, where any such disorders, offences, and misdemeanors shall be committed on shore; notwithstanding such offender be in our actual service, and borne in our pay on board any such our Ships-of-War, or other Vessels acting by immediate Commission, or Warrant from our Commissioners for executing the office of High-Admiral of Great Britain, or from our High-Admiral of Great Britain for the time being, as aforesaid, so as he shall not receive any protection for the avoiding of justice for such offences committed on shore from any pretence of his being employed in our service at Sea.

And our further will and pleasure is, that all Publick Moneys granted and raised for the publick uses of our said Province, be issued out by Warrant from you, by and with the advice and consent of our Council, as aforesaid, for the support of the Government, and not otherwise.

And we likewise give and grant unto you full power and authority, by and with the advice and consent of our said Council, to settle and agree with the inhabitants of our said Province for such Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, as now are, or hereafter shall be in our power to dispose of, and them to grant to any person or persons upon such terms and under such moderate quit-rents, services, and acknowledgments to be thereupon reserved unto us, as you, with the advice aforesaid, shall think fit; which said Grants are to pass, and be sealed by our publick seal of our said Province, and being entered upon record by such Officer or Officers as shall be appointed thereunto, shall be good and effectual in Law against us, our heirs and successors.

And we do hereby give you, the said Guy Carleton, full power and authority to order and appoint Fairs, Marts, and Markets; as also such and so many Ports, Harbours, Bays, Havens, and other places for the conveniency and security of shipping, and for the better loading and unloading of Goods and Merchandises, in such and so many places, as by you, with the advice and consent of our said Council, shall be thought fit and necessary.

And we do hereby require and command all Officers and Ministers, Civil and Military, and all other inhabitants of our said Province to be obedient, aiding, and assisting unto you, the said Guy Carleton, in the execution of this our Commission, and of the powers and authorities therein contained; and in case of your death or absence from our said Province and Government, to be obedient, aiding, and assisting as aforesaid, to the Lieutenant Governour or Commander-in-Chief for the time being, to whom we do therefore by these presents give and grant all and singular the powers and authorities herein granted to be by him executed and enjoyed, during our pleasure, or until your arrival within our said Province.

And if upon your death or absence out of our said Province, there be no person upon the place commissioned or appointed by us to be Lieutenant Governour or Commander-in-Chief of our said Province; our will and pleasure is, that the eldest Councillor, being a natural born subject of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Plantations, and professing the Protestant Religion, who shall be at the time of your death or absence residing within our said Province, shall take upon him the administration of the Government, and execute our said Commission and Instructions, and the several powers and authorities therein contained, in the same manner and to all intents and purposes, as other our Governour or Commander-in-Chief should or ought to do, in case of your absence, until your return, and in all cases until our further pleasure be known therein.

And we do hereby declare, ordain, and appoint, that you, the said Guy Carleton, shall and may hold, execute, and enjoy the Office and place of our Captain-General and Governour-in-Chief, in and over our said Province of Quebeck, and all the Territories dependant thereon; with all and singular the powers and authorities hereby granted unto you, for and during our will and pleasure.

In witness whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent. Witness ourself at Westminster, the . . . day of . . . in the . . . year of our reign.

Whereas it was enacted by the General Assembly held at New-Haven, on the second Thursday of October last, that every Regiment in this Colony, as well the Horse as Foot belonging thereto, shall meet either together or in parts, at the discretion of the Colonel or Commanding Officer, at such time and place as such Colonel or Field Officer shall appoint for Regimental Exercise, one day before the tenth day of May next; and whereas the meeting of such Regiments agreeably to said Act will be inconvenient in the present situation of affairs,

Resolved by this Assembly, The Colonels or Commanding Officers of the several Regiments in this Colony shall be, and they are hereby released from the obligation to call out their said Regiments for Regimental Exercises before the tenth day of May next, any thing in said Act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Resolved by this Assembly, That an Embargo be forthwith laid upon the Exportation out of this Colony by water of the following articles of Provision, viz: Wheat, Rye, Indian-Corn, Pork, Beef, live Cattle and Beans, Bread, Flour, and every kind of Meal, except necessary Stores for Vessels bound to Sea; and that his Honour the Governour be, and he is hereby desired to issue a Proclamation, laying such Embargo and Prohibition of such Provisions accordingly; such Embargo to continue till the 20th day of May next.

Resolved by this Assembly, That William Samuel Johnson and Erastus Walcott, Esquires, wait upon his Excellency Governour Gage, with the Letters written to him by his Honour our Governour by the desire of this Assembly, and confer with him on the subject contained in said Letters, and request his answer.

Resolved by this Assembly, That Thaddeus Burr, Esq., of Fairfield, and Charles Church Chandler, Esq., of Woodstock, at the publick expense of this Colony, be a Committee to engage and employ News-Carriers to perform regular stages from Fairfield to Woodstock, and from Woodstock to Fairfield, in such manner that they severally arrive in Hartford every Saturday, and that they forward all proper intelligence to Fairfield and Woodstock with all convenient speed; also that Gurdon Saltonstall, Esq., of New-London, be a Committee to engage and employ two News-Carriers, at the Colony's expense, to perform regular stages from Woodstock to New-Haven on the Fairfield stage, and from New-Haven to Woodstock in such manner that they severally arrive in New-London every Saturday, and that they forward all proper intelligence each way every Monday morning with all convenient despatch; also that Thaddeus Burr, Esq., of Fairfield, and Charles Church Chandler, Esq., of Woodstock, and Gurdon Saltonstall, Esq., of New-London, be a Committee to forward at the publick expense of this Colony, all such extraordinary and important intelligence which shall be received at either place from time to time as they shall judge proper and necessary, the aforesaid regulations to continue in force until the rising of the Assembly in May next, and no longer.

Whereas it is represented to this Assembly, that sundry acts of hostility and violence have lately been committed in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, by which many lives have been lost, and that some of the inhabitants of this Colony are gone to the relief of the people distressed, it is thereupon,

Resolved by this Assembly, That Captain Joseph Trumbull and Mr. Amasa Keys be, and they are hereby appointed a Committee to procure all necessary Provisions for the inhabitants of this Colony who have gone to the relief of the people aforesaid, and that they superintend the delivery out, and apportioning the same among them till this Assembly shall consider what measures are proper to be taken relative thereto, and give orders accordingly.

An Act for Assembling, Equipping, &c., a number of the Inhabitants of this Colony for the special defence and safety thereof.

Be it enacted by the Governour, Council, and Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, That one-fourth part of the Militia of this Colony be, and it is hereby ordered and directed that they be forthwith enlisted, equipped, accoutred, and assembled for the special defence and safety of this Colony, to be led and conducted as the General Assembly shall order. That the inhabitants enlisted and assembled shall be distributed into Companies, consisting of one hundred men each. That said Companies shall be formed into six Regiments, to be commanded by one Major General, assisted by two Brigadier Generals, each of which General Officers shall take the command of a Regiment as Colonel. That each of said Regiments shall be commanded by one Colonel, a Lieutenant Colonel, and a Major, each of which Field Officers shall likewise command a Company as Captain, and each General Officer shall be assisted by two Majors to his Regiment. That each of said Companies shall be commanded by one Captain, two Lieutenants, and an Ensign, who shall all be duly commissioned by his Honour the Governour to execute the office to which they are respectively appointed. That there shall be appointed one Adjutant, one Quartermaster, one Chaplain, one Surgeon, and two Surgeon's Mates to each Regiment. That said inhabitants shall be enlisted, to continue in the said service during the pleasure of the General Assembly, not exceeding seven months.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That a premium of Fifty-Two Shillings per man shall be advanced and paid to each non-commissioned Officer and inhabitant upon their enlistment, they supplying themselves with a blanket, knapsack, clothing, &c., to the acceptance of their respective Captains, and that one month's pay shall be advanced and paid to each of said Officers and enlisted inhabitants. And it is further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the establishment of pay and wages shall be as follows, viz: the pay for their whole services:

Per Calendar Month.

To the Major General,	-	-	-	£20 00s.
To each Brigadier General,	-	-	-	17 00
To each Colonel,	-	-	-	15 00
To each Lieutenant Colonel,	-	-	-	12 00
To each Major,	-	-	-	10 00
To each Captain,	-	-	-	6 00
To each Lieutenant,	-	-	-	4 00
To each Ensign,	-	-	-	3 00
To each Adjutant,	-	-	-	5 10

To each Quartermaster,	-	-	-	£3 00s.
To each Chaplain,	-	-	-	6 00
To each Surgeon,	-	-	-	7 10
To each Surgeon's Mate,	-	-	-	4 00
The wages of each Sergeant,	-	-	-	2 08
The wages of each Corporal,	-	-	-	2 04
The wages of each Fifer and Drummer,	-	-	-	2 04
The wages of each Private,	-	-	-	2 00

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That each inhabitant so enlisted shall be furnished with good fire-arms; and that the fire-arms belonging to this Colony, wherever they are, shall be collected and put into the hands of such enlisted inhabitants as have not arms of their own; and that each enlisted inhabitant that shall provide arms for himself, well fixed with a good bayonet and cartouch box, shall be paid a premium of Ten Shillings; and in case such arms are lost by inevitable casualty, such inhabitant, providing himself as aforesaid, shall be allowed and paid the just value of such arms and implements so lost, deducting only said sum of Ten Shillings allowed as aforesaid, said premium of Ten Shillings to be paid as soon as such inhabitant shall provide such arms as aforesaid. That when the aforesaid provision fails, sufficient arms shall be impressed completely to arm and equip said inhabitants, the said impress to be limited only to the arms belonging to householders, and other persons not on the Militia Roll; and in case any householder or other person shall voluntarily furnish any enlisted inhabitant, not able to procure arms for himself, with a good gun, well fixed with a good bayonet and cartouch box, shall have and receive a premium of Ten Shillings, and in case of loss shall receive the value thereof, deducting the Ten Shillings as aforesaid. And also that every person from whom any gun shall be impressed as aforesaid, shall be paid for the use of such gun the sum of Four Shillings, and in case of loss shall be paid the just value of such gun, deducting the sum of Four Shillings aforesaid; and that a particular account be taken of the arms that may be used, and the same be all appraised by indifferent judges; and that if any enlisted inhabitant, through negligence, shall lose or damage the arms found for him as aforesaid, such loss or damage shall be deducted out of his wages. And it is also further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that three thousand stand of arms be procured as soon as may be, and held in readiness to be used for the special defence and safety of this Colony. And also that the number of five hundred Spades, five hundred Pickaxes, three hundred narrow Axes, and five hundred Tents be procured for the use of this Colony.

Whereas the General Assembly of this Colony have ordered and enacted that one-fourth part of the Militia of said Colony shall be forthwith enlisted, equipped, and assembled for the special defence and safety of said Colony, &c.: For the encouragement of such able bodied and effectual men of said Militia or others as shall voluntarily offer and enlist themselves for said service to the acceptance of the proper Officers, it is resolved by this Assembly, that each enlisted inhabitant or person as aforesaid, shall be entitled to a premium of Fifty-Two Shillings upon their enlistment, they supplying themselves with a blanket, knapsack, clothing, &c., to the acceptance of their respective Captains, and also to one month's advanced pay; Sergeants shall receive Forty-Eight Shillings each; Corporals Forty-Four Shillings each; Drummers and Fifers Forty-Four Shillings each; and each Private Forty Shillings per calendar month during their continuance in said service. That each enlisted inhabitant or person as aforesaid, who shall provide arms for himself, well fixed with a good bayonet and cartouch box, shall be paid a premium of Ten Shillings; and in case such arms are lost by any inevitable providence, such inhabitant so providing himself shall be allowed and paid the just value of such arms and implements so lost, deducting only the sum of Ten Shillings allowed as aforesaid, said premium of Ten Shillings to be paid as soon as such inhabitant shall be so provided as aforesaid. That a particular account shall be taken of all the arms that may be used, and the same shall be all appraised by indifferent judges. That each inhabitant as aforesaid, upon his enlistment, shall be entitled to Six Pence per diem billeting money, until they are otherwise provided for by the Colony.

Resolved by this Assembly, That the non-commissioned and other inhabitants now to be enlisted for the special defence and safety of this Colony, shall be allowed Six Pence a day, for billeting, from the time of their enlistment until supplied from the Colony stores.

Resolved, That the three thousand stand of Arms to be procured for the use of this Colony be of the following dimensions, to wit: the length of the barrel three feet ten inches, the diameter of the bore from inside to inside three-quarters of an inch, the length of the blade of the bayonet fourteen inches, the length of the socket four inches and one-quarter; that the barrel be of a suitable thickness, with iron ramrod, and a spring in the lowest loop to secure the ramrod; a good substantial lock, and a good stock well mounted with brass, marked with the name (initial letters) of the maker's name. And

Resolved, That all the Arms that shall be made and completed according to the above regulations in this Colony by the first day of July next, shall be purchased and taken up by this Colony at a reasonable price.

Resolved by this Assembly, That the form for Commissions for the Major General and Brigadier Generals in the service of this Colony shall be as follows, and the Governour and Secretary are desired and directed to sign the same:

"Colony of CONNECTICUT:

" Esquire, Captain General and Governour-in-Chief in and over the ENGLISH Colony of CONNECTICUT in NEW-ENGLAND, in AMERICA,

"To Esquire, greeting:

"By virtue of the power and authority to me given by the Royal Charter to the Governour and Company of the said Colony, under the great seal of England, I do, by these presents, reposing especial trust and confidence in your loyalty, courage, and good conduct, constitute and appoint you, the said, to be General and Commander of the Inhabitants enlisted and assembled for the special defence and safety of His Majesty's said Colony. You are, therefore, carefully and diligently to discharge the duty of General and Commander, in leading, conducting, ordering, and exercising in the service aforesaid the said Inhabitants, both Officers and Soldiers, and to keep them in good order and discipline, hereby commanding them to obey you as their General; and you are to observe and follow such orders and instructions as you shall from time to time receive from me or the Commander-in-Chief of the said Colony for the time being, according to military rules and discipline, pursuant to the trust reposed in you.

"Given under my hand and the publick seal of said Colony of Connecticut, the . . . day of . . . in the fifteenth year of the reign of His Majesty George the Third, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c., Anno Domini 1775.

"By his Honour's command."

Resolved by this Assembly, That the form for Commissions for the Captains and Subaltern Officers of a Company for the special defence and safety of this Colony shall be as follows, and the Governour and Secretary are desired and directed to sign the same:

"Colony of CONNECTICUT:

" Esquire, Captain General and Governour-in-Chief in and over His Majesty's Colony of CONNECTICUT in NEW-ENGLAND, in AMERICA,

"To greeting:

"By virtue of the power and authority to me given, in and by the Royal Charter to the Governour and Company of the said Colony, under the great seal of England, I do, by these presents, reposing special trust and confidence in your loyalty, courage, and good conduct, constitute and appoint you, the said, to be of the Company in the Regiment of the Inhabitants enlisted and assembled for the special defence and safety of His Majesty's said Colony. Whereas this Assembly have ordered one-fourth part of their Militia to be enlisted and equipped for the defence and safety of this Colony, and appointed Officers to command the same, and as some of the Officers so appointed may fail to accept said trust, or by death or otherwise others may be wanted:

Resolved by this Assembly, That his Honour the Governour be desired, and he is hereby desired and empowered to appoint Officers to fill up any such vacancy that shall happen, and commission them accordingly.

Resolved by this Assembly, That Captain Joseph Trumbull be appointed, and he is hereby appointed Commissary General, to take care of the Rations purchased at Salem, by Brigadier-General Spencer, or any others that shall be sent for our inhabitants enlisting or assembling for the special defence and safety of this Colony, and take care that the same are distributed among them; and take advantage of any opportunity to purchase thereabouts any further supply, when to be had on better terms than to be purchased and had from this Colony; to purchase the same as there shall be occasion, and inform, from time to time, his doings therein for the directions of the Commissaries employed in this Colony.

This Assembly do appoint Oliver Wolcott, Henry Champion, Thomas Mumford, Jedediah Strong, Esquires, Captain Jeremiah Wadsworth, Thomas Howel, Samuel Squier, Esquires, Messrs. Amasa Keys and Hezekiah Bissell, Commissaries, to supply all necessary Stores and Provisions for the Troops now to be raised for the defence of this Colony.

On Report of the Committee to consider how far the Commissaries shall be instructed to procure Provisions and other Supplies for the immediate use of the men now to be raised for the defence of the Colony, it is now

Resolved, That Joseph Trumbull, Esquire, Commissary-General, immediately purchase one hogshhead of New-England Rum, and one hundred Tin Kettles; and that Captain Jeremiah Wadsworth procure, as soon as may be, one hundred Tin Kettles, and also fifty barrels of Pork, also fifty bushels of Peas and Beans, and immediately forward said Peas and Beans to the Commissary-General, and also procure two hundred hundred weight of Bread; and that Mr. Hezekiah Bissell procure sixty barrels of Pork, and two hundred and forty hundred weight of Bread; and that the Commissaries in Litchfield County procure twenty barrels of Pork, and eighty hundred weight of Bread, and that the Commissaries for the County of New-Haven, New-London, and Fairfield, each procure fifty barrels of Pork, and two hundred hundred weight of Bread.

Resolved by this Assembly, That William Pitkin, Thomas Seymour, Oliver Ellsworth, and Ezekiel Williams, Esquires, or any three of them, be a Committee with full power, and they, or any three of them, are hereby fully empowered to examine, liquidate, adjust, settle, and give needful orders for the payment of the several accounts of the expenses that have, or may be incurred, relative to assembling, equipping, supplying, encouraging, or paying wages to such of the inhabitants as may enlist for the defence of this Colony for the current year; said Committee to proceed therein according to such order, rules, and directions, as shall from time to time be given by this Assembly for that purpose.

Resolved by this Assembly, That the Committee of Pay-Table be and they are hereby directed and empowered to take Bonds, with sufficient sureties, payable to the Governour and Company of this Colony, of every Commissary appointed, to provide Stores and Provisions for the Troops now raising for the defence of the Colony; and in such Bond every Commissary shall be obliged, faithfully and justly, to dispose of the money he shall receive for the purpose aforesaid, and to account with the Committee of Pay-Table for the same.

Resolved by this Assembly, That the chief Officers and Captains of the several Companies to be enlisted, shall be the Paymasters to their respective Companies, and that the Committee of the Pay-Table be and they are hereby directed and empowered to take Bonds, with sufficient sureties, payable to the Governour and Company of this Colony, of every Captain or other person who shall undertake to act as Paymaster to any one of said Companies now to be enlisted; and in such Bond, every Paymaster shall be obligated faithfully and justly to dispose of the money he shall receive for the purpose aforesaid, and to account to the Committee of the Pay-Table for the same; and such Paymaster shall be allowed one and a half per cent. for said service.

Whereas, a sum of Money is necessary for payment of incident charges of Government:

Be it therefore enacted by the Governour, Council, and Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, That there be forthwith imprinted the sum of fifty thousand Pounds, Bills of Credit on this Colony, equal to lawful money, of suitable denominations as the Committee herein appointed shall direct, and of the same tenour with the late impression of Bills of Credit of this Colony, without interest, payable at or before the tenth day of May, 1777, dated the ninth day of May, 1775. William Pitkin, George Wyllys, Elisha Williams, Benjamin Payne, and Thomas Seymour, Esquires, or any three of them, are appointed a Committee for the purpose aforesaid, to take care that said Bills be imprinted with all convenient speed, and to sign and deliver the same to the Treasurer of this Colony, taking his receipt therefor. And the said Committee shall be sworn to a faithful discharge of their trust, and the Treasurer is hereby directed to pay out said Bills according to the orders of Assembly. And for providing an ample and sufficient Fund to call in, sink, and discharge the aforesaid sum, to be emitted as aforesaid,

Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That a Tax of seven pence on the pound be, and is hereby granted and ordered to be levied on all the Polls and Rateable Estate in this Colony, according to the list thereof, to be brought into this Assembly in October, 1775, with the additions; which Tax shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of this Colony by the tenth day of May, 1777; which Tax may be discharged by paying the Bills of this Colony of this emission, or lawful money; and the Treasurer of this Colony is hereby ordered and directed to send forth his Warrants for collecting the same accordingly.

The Committee appointed to take into consideration what disposition is best to be made of the Colony Powder, having made their Report, which has been accepted, it is now

Resolved, That Captain Jabez Huntington, of Windham, take into his care all the Powder that is lodged in the County of Windham, and that Mr. Winthrop Saltonstall take into his care the Powder lodged in the Town of New-London, and that Jabez Huntington, Esquire, of Norwich, take into his care the Powder lodged in the Town of Norwich, and that twenty-eight half-barrels of the Powder, lodged at New-Haven, be sent to the County of Fairfield, and committed to the care of Thaddeus Burr, Esq.; and that fourteen half-barrels of the Powder lodged at New-Haven be sent to the County of Litchfield, to the care of Lynde Lord, Esq., of Litchfield, and the remainder of the Powder lodged at New-Haven, be taken into the care of Jonathan Fitch, Esq., of New-Haven. And the aforesaid persons are ordered to deliver out the same according to such orders as shall from time to time be given them respectively by the General Assembly of the Colony; or in case of some sudden and extraordinary emergency, by the Selectmen of the respective Towns where the same is lodged, taking their receipts therefor.

And it is further Resolved, That if any more Powder shall be brought into the Colony, for the use and defence thereof, a suitable proportion thereof be committed to the care of John Lawrence, Esq., of Hartford, and the remainder thereof to be distributed into the several Counties in some suitable proportion, and committed to the care of the gentlemen before named, to be disposed as aforesaid.

This Assembly do appoint and direct Robert Fairchild, Esq., and Captain Daniel Judson, to inquire after and take into their care, for the use of the Colony, whatever Stores, of the camp or military kind, belonging to said Colony, as may be found with the heirs of Theophilus Nichols, Esq., deceased, late a Commissary for this Government, or in the hands of any other person in Stratford; and cause any Arms which need, to be forthwith repaired, and make report to next Assembly.

This Assembly do appoint Mr. Jedediah Strong to make inquiry at Albany, whether any Arms belonging to this Colony, and left there during the last War, yet remain there, and if any, how many, and in whose custody. He is also to receive and give proper receipts in behalf of this Colony for the same, and cause the same to be transported into this Colony as soon as conveniently may be, and make report of his doings in the premises to the next General Assembly.

This Assembly do appoint Daniel Lyman, Enos Allyn, Thomas Howel, Dudley Woodbridge, Joseph Denison the second, Stephen Babcock, Gurdon Saltonstall, Thomas Mumford, John Lay, Esquires, Captain John Deshon, Captain Richard Dickenson, and Mr. John McCurdy, a Committee, to take into consideration the best method and means of securing and defending our Sea-coast, Ports, and Shipping therein, and to state the facts, and report their opinion thereon to the Assembly in May next, jointly or severally, without expense to this Colony.

Resolved by this Assembly, That Colonel Gurdon Saltonstall, Samuel Mott, Esq., and Captain John Deshon, be, and they are hereby appointed a Committee, forthwith to prepare Carriages, and other necessary apparatus for the Cannon at New-London, in this Colony, so that they may be put into the best order for use, in case of necessity for defence.

Resolved by this Assembly, That his Honour the Governour be, and he is hereby desired, authorized, and empowered, to give to Brigadier-General Spencer an order to the Colonels of the six Regiments under his command, to send to their respective Captains, to forward the enlistment of the inhabitants and men, for the special defence and safety of this Colony, and to hold themselves in readiness to march on the shortest notice; and the four Regiments commanded by Brigadier Spencer and Putnam, and Colonels Hinman and Parsons, or such part of them as his Honour the Governour shall order, do forthwith get into readiness and march forward to Boston, or such place or places adjoining near thereto as shall be ordered.

Considering the dark and gloomy aspect of Divine Providence over this Colony and land, and that it is the indispensable duty of every People, suffering under the afflictive chastisements of a righteous God, with deep repentance, supplication, and amendment of life, to endeavour, by all the ways which God has prescribed, to avert his anger and incline him to become reconciled to his People,

It is therefore Resolved by this Assembly, That it be recommended to all the Ministers of the Gospel in this Colony, that they earnestly endeavour to dissuade their several congregations from all excess and all diversions which may be improper in the present day of distress, and that both they and their people cry mightily to God, that he would be pleased to spare his People, and be gracious unto them, and visit them with his loving kindness and tender mercies, and not give up his heritage to reproach, but preserve unto them their great and important rights and privileges, and guide and prosper the Publick Councils of this Colony and land, and in their hour of difficulty and distress, graciously manifest his power in the deliverance and salvation of his People, to the glory of own name.

This Assembly being informed by Charles Webb, Esq., Colonel of the Ninth Regiment of Militia in this Colony, that Clap Raymond of Norwalk, in said Regiment, Lieutenant of a Company of Militia, in the Parish of Wilton, in said Norwalk, of which Matthew Mead is Captain, hath, ever since said Mead was established and commissioned as Captain of said Company, wholly refused to obey the orders of said Captain, or do his duty as Lieutenant of said Company, in any respect;

Resolved by this Assembly, That the aforesaid Clap Raymond be notified to appear before the General Assembly, to be holden at this place on the second Thursday of May next, to answer unto said information, and be dealt with thereupon as the wisdom of said Assembly shall direct. And that in the mean time the said Clap Raymond be, and he is hereby, suspended from the exercise of his office of Lieutenant of the Company aforesaid, and the Secretary of this Colony is hereby directed and authorized, by warrant under his hand, to give notice to said Clap Raymond that he appear and answer as aforesaid.

An Act to repeal an Act, entitled An Act in further addition to an Act of this Colony, entitled an Act concerning Book Debts.

Whereas a further continuance of said Act in force at this time may prove very inconvenient and prejudicial;

Be it enacted by the Governour, Council, and Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, That the said Act be repealed, and the same is hereby repealed and made void.

An Act to exempt, for a limited time, the persons of Debtors from being imprisoned for Debt.

Whereas, in the present situation of our publick affairs it will be prejudicial to the Colony to confine persons in Jail for Debt;

Be it enacted by the Governour, Council, and Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, That during the continuance of this Act, no person shall be imprisoned or confined, or held in Prison, on any attachment or execution for Debt; and in every case wherein any Debtor is released out of Prison by virtue of this Act, who was imprisoned by virtue of an execution for Debt, the Creditor may take out an alias execution against the estate of such Debtor; and the Clerk of the Court, or the authority before whom the judgment was rendered, is hereby authorized to issue such alias execution, upon being certified by the Sheriff that such Debtor was released out of Prison without satisfying the Debt, by virtue of which alias execution the lawful fees for the former service and commitment may be collected, as well as the Debt. This Act to continue in force until the rising of the General Assembly in October next.

Upon the Memorial of Joseph Gurnsey and others, inhabitants of the Parish of Westbury, in the Town of Waterbury, shewing to this Assembly that they have, with great care and expense, applied themselves to the use of arms and military exercises for a considerable time, have gained considerable skill in military exercises and the art of war, and praying this Assembly to constitute them a special and distinct Military Company, &c., as per Memorial on file;

Resolved by this Assembly, That the Memorialists be, and they are hereby, constituted and made a distinct Military Company, and shall be distinguished by the name of the Nineteenth Company in the Tenth Regiment in this Colony, with power, under the direction of the Field Officers, to receive and enlist in the room of those that shall be removed by death or otherwise from said Company, provided the enlistment and enrolment aforesaid be made from the two Military Companies in the Parish of Westbury, in said Town of Waterbury, and that that enlistment and enrolment do not reduce the number of men in the two Military Companies aforesaid below the number by law established; and that said Company be, and they are hereby, constituted with all the powers, privileges, and advantages, and under the same regulations that other Companies by law do enjoy; and the Colonel, or chief Officers of said Regiment, is hereby directed and empowered by himself, or such officer as he shall appoint, to lead said company to the choice of their Officers on their being first formed and enlisted.

Upon the Memorial of John Sutliff, Jun., and others, inhabitants of the Society of Northbury, in the Town of Wa- terbury, shewing to this Assembly that there are within the limits of the West Company or Trainband in said Society, the major part of which have evidently discovered themselves inimical to the Constitution of this Colony, &c., and under Commissioned Officers wholly disaffected to the American cause, praying to be annexed to the new Company or Trainband in said Northbury, lately established by this Assembly, &c., as per Memorial on file;

Resolved by this Assembly, That Thomas Matthews and Timothy Judd, Esquires, be, and they are hereby appointed a Committee to inquire how far said Commissioned Officers are inimical to, or disaffected with, the American cause, and all matters contained in said Memorial, and make report to the next General Assembly.

Upon the Memorial of Joseph Monson of New-Haven, praying for permission to transport in the Sea-Flower, to the West-Indies, twenty-six head of Cattle, by him purchased for that purpose, before laying the embargo by this Assembly;

Resolved, That said Monson have liberty, and he is hereby permitted, to transport said Cattle in said vessel to the West-India Islands.

Upon the Memorial of Joseph White, of Weathersfield, in Hartford County, shewing that before any embargo was laid by this Assembly, he had procured twenty Cattle and necessary provisions for them, and eighty barrels of Pork, to be laden on board a vessel he owns, called the Schooner Fox, commanded by James Mitchell, and destined on a voyage to the West-Indies, and that said Cattle remain on his hands at great expense and loss, &c., praying for liberty to export said Cattle in said vessel, &c., as per Memorial on file, dated May 3, 1775;

Resolved by this Assembly, That the Memorialist, upon his taking out said eighty barrels of Pork, except so much as is necessary for sea-stores, have liberty, and liberty is given to him, to export said twenty Cattle in said vessel to the West-Indies, any thing in said Act laying an embargo notwithstanding.

Upon the Memorial of Hezekiah Smith, shewing that he had planned a voyage to the West-Indies, &c.;

Resolved by this Assembly, That the said Hezekiah Smith have liberty, and liberty is given and granted to him to ship the said fourteen Cattle to the West-Indies on board the vessel whereof he is master, the said embargo lately laid by this Assembly notwithstanding.

This Assembly was adjourned by proclamation without day.

GEORGE WYLLYS, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA COMMITTEE.

Committee Chamber, April 27, 1775.

Whereas the Continental Congress did resolve in the words following, viz: "And we further agree and associate that we will have no Trade, Commerce, Dealings, or Intercourse whatever, with any Colony or Province in North America which shall not accede to, or which shall hereafter violate this Association," &c.

And whereas the Parliament of Great Britain, in pursuance of their plan for subjugating and distressing the Colonies, have passed a Bill for depriving our brethren in New-England of the benefit of Fishing on their own Coasts; therefore,

Resolved, That all Exportations from this City to Quebeck, Nova-Scotia, Georgia, and Newfoundland, or any part of the Fishing Coasts or Fishing Islands, ought, in the opinion of this Committee, immediately to be suspended; and that it be accordingly recommended to every Merchant immediately to suspend all Exportations to those places, until the Continental Congress shall give further orders therein. By order of the Committee of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia.

JONATHAN B. SMITH, Secretary.

STEPHEN HOPKINS TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Providence, Rhode-Island, April 27, 1775.

SIR: Yesterday, Mr. John Brown, one of the principal merchants of this Town, being at Newport, as an agent of this Colony appointed by the General Assembly to purchase provisions for the use of this and your Government, was seized upon in a freight or packet boat coming to Providence. He was carried and confined on board a Man-of-War lying in Newport, and about three hundred barrels of flour in that packet and another freight boat, taken by the Ship-of-War. It is said the captures are to be sent to Boston for condemnation.

We are greatly alarmed at this open force and hostility, and cannot but expect that the worst of treatment will be offered to our agent. We have thought proper to send you this notice, to the end that you may detain all such of the King's Officers, or others, in his immediate service, as may be in your hands, to answer and be accountable for the conduct and treatment which may be had and acted to Mr. Brown, and such as may be captured with him in the said two vessels; and that you would, on your part, in the common cause, do your utmost to make reprisals of persons to stand as security in like manner; not doubting but you will cheerfully do those things which, by the laws of Nature and Nations, are justifiable to be done to those who put themselves in a state of war with others.

We are sorry to inform you that the first struggle which hath happened in our Colony, hath been unfavourable; an event which could not have come to pass, but by the faithlessness of some of the Members of our Assembly, who must have revealed their proceedings, although the oath of God was upon them to secrecy.

Reprisals, recommended by the Continental Congress, and sanctioned by the several Colonies, appears to be a good remedial provision, and in this instance highly necessary to be put in practice; and we shall not fail ourselves to make use of it at every opportunity, and make the life of every Crown Officer in our power security for the safety of John Brown, and those captured with him.

I am, Sir, for myself, and in behalf of all the true friends of freedom in this Colony, your friend and servant,

STEP. HOPKINS.

To the President of the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts-Bay, at Concord, or elsewhere. On express by Doctor Wm. Bowen.

COLONEL ISAAC LEE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Farmington, April 27, 1775.

HONOURED SIR: In consequence of the alarming scenes that have occurred of late, by advice of the Field Officers and others of the Fifteenth Regiment, in this Colony, I gave orders for the whole Regiment under my command to be prepared with arms and ammunition, and cartridges, and every thing necessary for the defence of the Country; and to hold themselves ready to march at the shortest notice. There appeared such a spirit of zeal in the soldiers for an immediate march, that it was with difficulty that they were prevented, until they might have orders from the Captain-General, or the General Assembly. It appeared to us to be attended with very dangerous consequences, and to have a tendency to ruin the State, to march in such independent Companies, and ought by no means to be adopted but in a case of absolute necessity. On being assured by (as we thought) good authority, that more Troops were arrived, &c., gave orders for one-fifth of the Regiment to meet at the parade of the First Society, on the 26th of April instant, at ten o'clock in the morning. About one hundred and twenty able-bodied men appeared, and being divided into two Companies, I led them to the choice of their officers, &c. The First Company made choice of Captain Nediah Hooker for their Captain, and Lieutenant Peter Curtis, First Lieutenant, Sergeant David Mather, Second Lieutenant, Sergeant Amos Ensign. I then led the Second Company to a choice, and they made choice of Captain Asa Bray for their Captain, Lieutenant Joseph Byington, First Lieutenant, Sergeant Amos Beecher, Second Lieutenant, Sergeant Ambrose Sloper, Ensign, &c., on which they were ordered to hold themselves in readiness to march when they should receive orders from the Captain-General, or the General Assembly, &c., and then dismissed, and desired them to attend the business of their respective farms until further orders, &c.

Certified by your Honour's humble servant,

ISAAC LEE, JR., Colonel.

To the Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Esquire, Captain-General of His Majesty's Troops in the Colony of Connecticut, &c.

N. B. There is also provisions contracted for—enough at least for twenty days, as also teams and carriages.

JEDEDIAH HUNTINGTON TO JONATHAN TRUMBULL, JUN.

Cambridge, Thursday, April 27, 1775.

DEAR SIR: I came into this place through Roxbury, last evening, and find great numbers of Troops, or rather armed men, in much more confusion than I expected, but perhaps with as little as possible, in this disordered state of the Massachusetts. Most of the soldiers here are inhabitants of this Province, who are now enlisting in a regular manner. General Ward is at Roxbury; General Putnam is Commander-in-chief at this place. They have both of them too much business upon their hands. I wish our General Officers, as soon as appointed, might immediately repair to Head Quarters; they will, at this crisis of Provincial politics, be very cordially accepted, and be of eminent service.

The Committee of Safety, who are the primum mobile in the military movements, are crowded with business. It is expected by many, that the inhabitants of Boston will have leave to come out this day, with their effects, provided they leave their arms and provisions. It is said that pork sold there yesterday for a pistareen per pound, and milk for a pistareen per quart. Many are suspicious that the General intends to deceive them till he get possession of their arms. An experienced Engineer deserted to the Castle the 25th instant. Mr. Josiah Quincy is arrived from London, in a very low state of health, and not expected to live. The Restraining Act is come by the same ship. The reinforcements from England were not to sail till the middle of April. I will, if possible, enclose you a Salem paper. I expected to have seen brother Joseph by this time. Your affectionate brother,

JED. HUNTINGTON.

Mr. Jonathan Trumbull, Junior.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE SELECTMEN OF BOSTON.

Cambridge, April 27, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 25th instant came to hand last evening, or you should have had an answer sooner. We feel for you with the keenest sensibility. Nothing on our part shall be wanting. Our wish is, to know when you are to be permitted to come out; and at what time. We shall encourage the wagoners to go in. We have no desire to injure or molest the person or property of any one who inclines to take refuge in Boston; and so soon as we know the day appointed for you to come out, and the time limited therefor, we shall take care that our part is performed with that punctuality which we are determined ever to observe in all cases where the honour of our Country, or the safety of our beloved countrymen is concerned. We desire that we may be furnished, without delay, with an authenticated copy of your engagements with the General, and such other information as is necessary for us.

We are, gentlemen, &c.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE SELECTMEN OF BOSTON.

Cambridge, April 27, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: It is here currently reported, that General Gage gives out publicly that the Provincials fired upon his detachment before the Troops fired upon the Provincials. Such a report occasions astonishment and resentment, as there is the clearest evidence, not only that the Troops fired first at Lexington, and killed eight men there before our people fired one gun, and then marched several miles further, to Concord, and killed two men and wounded several others, before one gun was fired in that place by our men. He is a man, we trust, of too much honour to propagate such a false account, and has been scandalously deceived by his officers.

We think it probable that ten days may suffice for removing your persons and most valuable effects. We hope you will take care that your agreement is expressed in the most unequivocal terms. We take it that it is not expected that we suffer any persons to remove into Town, besides such as mean to take up their residence there.

We are, &c.

BOSTON COMMITTEE TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Boston, April 27, 1775.

SIR: Agreeably to your desire expressed in your letter of this date, we send you the following, which contains what has passed this day between his Excellency General Gage, and the Committee, respecting the inhabitants removing from the Town of Boston. We presume there will be a speedy application for passes, as there are a considerable number already who have given in their names, according to his Excellency's prescription, and therefore apprehend wagoners may be encouraged to come in as soon as may be.

It is with great satisfaction we observe your determination not to injure or molest the person or property of any one who inclines to take refuge in Boston, and hope you have made proclamation for them to come in accordingly; and that as soon as you know the time appointed for us to remove out of the Town, you are so kindly disposed to assist us all in your power under our perplexed circumstances.

We could not give you an earlier answer, as your letter did not come to hand till late this afternoon.

I am, respectfully, in behalf of the Committee, your most obedient humble servant,

JOHN SCOLLAY.

To Doctor Jos. Warren, Chairman of the Committee of Congress.

P. S. We beg you will proclaim in every Township, that all persons desirous of coming into Boston with their effects, may come without molestation; and that we may be authorized immediately to send five or six persons, or gentlemen's servants, to ride through the different Towns or Parishes, with open letters to the families of such people as are desirous to come to Boston, to give them proper notice. You will favour us with an answer as soon as possible. I am, as above, your most humble servant,

JOHN SCOLLAY.

Town-Meeting, Boston, April 27, 1775.

The Committee waited on his Excellency General Gage, with the Papers containing the account of the Arms delivered to the Selectmen, and the Return made them by the Constables of the Town, relative to the delivery of Arms in their respective Wards. After long conversation on the subject of the inhabitants removing themselves and effects from the Town, his Excellency being obliged to attend to other business, left the affair to be settled with Brigadier General Robertson, who, after further conference, and reporting the substance of it to General Gage, returned to the Committee, and declared to them that General Gage gives liberty to the inhabitants to remove out of the Town, with their effects; and desires that such inhabitants as intend to remove, would give their names to the Selectmen, and signify whether they mean to convey out their effects by land or water, in order that passes may be prepared; for which passes application may be made to General Robertson any time after eight o'clock to-morrow morning; such passes to be had as soon as persons wanting them shall be ready to depart.

DOCTOR JOSEPH WARREN TO ARTHUR LEE.

Cambridge, April 27, 1775.

MY DEAR SIR: Our friend Quincy just lived to come on shore to die in his own Country; he expired yesterday morning. His virtues rendered him dear, and his abilities useful to his Country.

The wicked measures of the Administration have at length brought matters to a crisis. I think it probable that this rage of the people, excited by the most clear view of the cursed designs of the Administration, and the barbarous effusion of the blood of their countrymen, will lead them to attack General Gage, and burn the ships in the harbour.

Lord Chatham and our friends must make up the breach immediately, or never. If any thing terrible takes place, it will not do to talk of calling the Colonies to account for it; but it must be attributed to the true cause—the unheard-of provocation given to this people. They will never talk of accommodation until the present Ministry are entirely removed. You may depend the Colonies will sooner suffer depopulation than come into any measures with them.

The next news from England must be conciliatory, or the connexion between us ends, however fatal the consequences may be. Prudence may yet alleviate the misfortunes, and calm the convulsions into which the Empire is thrown, by the madness of the present Administration. May God Almighty direct you. If any thing is proposed which may be for the honour and safety of Great Britain and these Colonies, my utmost efforts will not be wanting to effect a reconciliation. I am, in the utmost haste, surrounded by fifteen or twenty thousand men, your most obedient servant,

JOS. WARREN.

To Arthur Lee, Esquire, London.

P. S. The Narrative sent to Doctor Franklin contains a true state of facts; but it was difficult to make the people willing that any notice should be taken of the matter by way of narrative, unless the Army and Navy were taken or driven away.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM QUEBECK, APRIL 27, 1775.

The Governour's Commission from the King was read here on Monday, the 24th instant. He has very ample powers; he chooses all the Members of the Council himself, and can discharge them at pleasure; can oblige what number of His Majesty's subjects in Canada he pleases to march against any enemy, or supposed enemy, when he shall think fit; can build forts, or do any thing else with the people's money, and demolish them at pleasure. In short, he is possessed of absolute and despotick power, only with this difference, (if it is any,) that the majority of the Council (who hold their seats as before-mentioned) must approve of his measures. The Council consists of twenty-three persons, seven of them Roman Catholics.

Williamsburgh, Virginia, April 28, 1775.

Yesterday, at about one o'clock, Mann Page, Junior, Esquire, one of the Representatives for Spottsylvania, arrived here in twenty-four hours from Fredericksburgh, being charged by a number of people from different Counties, now assembling there, to inquire whether the gunpowder had been replaced in the publick magazine, the removal of which had spread a general alarm, and greatly exasperated all ranks of people. Expresses had been sent into several Counties, and it was expected that upwards of two thousand men would be assembled in Fredericksburgh by this evening; and the Militia of Caroline were ordered to meet to-morrow at ten o'clock, to be in readiness to join those of the upper Counties. Mr. Page returned again in the evening, and carried a letter from the Honourable the Speaker, to endeavour to pacify the people; and as that gentleman sets out to-morrow by land to attend the General Congress, we hear he proposes meeting them; and it is hoped, from his great influence, that he will be able to prevail on them to return home, and rest satisfied with the Governour's promise that the powder shall be given up when there is occasion for it. The independent Companies of Caroline and Spottsylvania, we hear, have determined to escort the Delegates from this Colony to Hooe's Ferry, on Potomack.

PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOUR FRANKLIN.

Perth-Amboy.

By His Excellency WILLIAM FRANKLIN, Esq., Captain-General, Governour, and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Province of NEW-JERSEY, and Territories thereon depending, in AMERICA, Chancellor and Vice-Admiral in the same, &c.:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas I have lately received despatches from one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, containing matters of great importance to the Colony, in the present situation of publick affairs, and calculated to restore that harmony between Great Britain and her American Colonies so essential to the interest and happiness of both; and being desirous of communicating the same as early as possible to the General Assembly of this Colony, in order to give them an opportunity of using their best endeavours towards effecting so desirable a purpose; I have, therefore, thought fit, and by and with the advice and consent of His Majesty's Council, do hereby appoint the said General Assembly to meet at the City of Burlington, on Monday, the 15th day of May next; of which all His Majesty's subjects concerned therein are required to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at the City of Perth-Amboy, the twenty-eighth day of April, in the fifteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord King George the Third, Annoq. Domini one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN.

By His Excellency's command:

CHARLES PETTIT, D. Secretary.
God save the King.

MEETING OF THE INHABITANTS OF PERTH-AMBOY, NEW-JERSEY.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of the North Ward of the City of Perth-Amboy, on Friday, the 28th of April, 1775:

Resolved unanimously, That James Parker, Stephen Skinner, and Jonathan Deare, Esquires, or any two of them, be a standing Committee of Correspondence for the North Ward of this City.

A copy of a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence of Princeton, signed by Jonathan D. Sergeant, Esquire, Clerk to the said Committee, transmitted by the Committee of Woodbridge, and by them directed to the inhabitants of this City, was read, wherein, after mentioning the very alarming intelligence lately received, a Provincial Congress for this Province is proposed to be held on the 5th day of May next; and a meeting of the inhabitants being now called, that their sense might be taken on the necessity and propriety of choosing Deputies to attend the said Congress:

The question was thereupon put, whether Deputies shall be sent or not, and carried in the affirmative unanimously.

James Parker, Stephen Skinner, and Jonathan Deare, Esquires, were then nominated as Deputies to attend the said Congress to represent this City, and were unanimously chosen; and it is requested that they, or any one or more of them do attend the said Congress accordingly.

It is also agreed by the inhabitants now assembled, that the expenses of the Deputies who shall attend the said Congress be defrayed by this City.

It is also requested that Mr. Deare acquaint the Committees of Princeton and Woodbridge of the proceedings of this meeting. By order of the meeting:

JOHN THOMSON, Clerk.

ADDRESS OF THE NEW-YORK COMMITTEE.

New-York, April 28, 1775.

To the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of New-York:

We regret, gentlemen, the necessity we are under of addressing you upon this occasion, and perceive with anxiety the disorder and confusion into which this City has been unfortunately involved.

From cool and temperate counsels only, good consequences may be expected; nor can union (so essential to the success of our cause) be preserved, unless every member of society will consent to be governed by the sense of the majority, and join in having that sense fairly and candidly ascertained.

Conscious that the powers you conferred upon us were not adequate to the present exigency of affairs, we were unanimously of opinion that another Committee should be appointed; and well knowing that questions of the highest moment and the last importance would come under their consideration, and call for their determination, we thought it most advisable that it should consist of a large number, in order, by interesting many of weight and consequence in all publick measures, they might meet with the more advocates, receive less opposition, and be attended with more certain success.

The names of one hundred persons were mentioned by this Committee; you were left at liberty to approve or reject them, and appoint others in their room; and that your sense might be the better taken, polls in each Ward were directed to be opened. What could be more fair?

By all means, gentlemen, let us avoid divisions; and instead of cherishing a spirit of animosity against one another, let us join in forwarding a reconciliation of all parties, and thereby strengthen the general cause.

Many, no doubt, have become objects of distrust and suspicion, and, perhaps, not without reason; you have now an opportunity of trying them. It surely never can be good policy to put it out of their power to join us heartily; it is time enough to reject them when they refuse us their aid. In short, gentlemen, consider that our contest is for liberty; and therefore we should be extremely cautious how we permit our struggles to hurry us into acts of violence and extravagance inconsistent with freedom.

Permit us to entreat you to consider these matters seriously, and act with temper as well as firmness; and, by all means, join in the appointment of some Committee, to whom you may resort for counsel, and who may rescue you from tumult, anarchy, and confusion.

We take the liberty, therefore, of recommending it to you to go to the usual places of election in each of your Wards, on Monday next at nine o'clock in the morning, and then and there give your voices for a Committee of one hundred; to consist of such persons as you may think most worthy of confidence and most capable of the arduous task. Being also fully persuaded of the necessity of a Provincial Convention being summoned with all possible expedition, we recommend it to you, at the same time, to choose twenty Deputies to represent this City and County in such Convention, to meet here on the 22d day of May next.

By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

COMMITTEE FOR THE CITY OF NEW-YORK TO THE SEVERAL COUNTIES IN THE PROVINCE.

Committee Chamber, New-York, April 28, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The distressed and alarming situation of our Country, occasioned by the sanguinary measures adopted by the British Ministry, (to enforce which the sword has been actually drawn against our brethren in the Massachusetts;) threatening to involve this Continent in all the horrors of a civil war, obliges us to call for the united aid and counsel of the Colony at this dangerous crisis.

Most of the Deputies who composed the late Provincial Congress held in this City, were only vested with powers to choose Delegates to represent the Province at the next Continental Congress, and the Convention having executed that trust, dissolved themselves. It is therefore thought advisable by this Committee, that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned to deliberate upon, and from time to time to direct such measures as may be expedient for our common safety.

We persuade ourselves that no arguments can now be wanting to evince the necessity of a perfect union; and we know of no method in which the united sense of the people of the Province can be collected, but in the one now proposed. We therefore entreat your County heartily to unite in the choice of proper persons to represent them at a Provincial Congress to be held in this City on the 22d of May next. Twenty Deputies are proposed for this City, and in order to give the greater weight and influence to the councils of the Congress, we could wish the number of Deputies from the Counties may be considerable.

We can assure you, that the appointment of a Provincial Congress, approved of by the inhabitants of this City in general, is the most proper and salutary measure that can be adopted in the present melancholy state of this Continent; and we shall be happy to find that our brethren in the different Counties concur with us in opinion. By order of the Committee:

ISAAC LOW, Chairman.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, April 28, 1775.

On the 18th of instant, April, the humane and benevolent General Gage ordered a select number of about twelve hundred of his Grenadiers and best Troops, in a most secret manner, to march up the country as far as Concord, (as supposed) to seize Colonel Hancock and Mr. Samuel Adams. The first exploit they performed was in their way to Lexington; they found about thirty men exercising, and, without any provocation, fired upon them, (for about fifteen minutes,) killed six men, and wounded several when they were retreating as fast as possible; then the Troops proceeded on their way to Concord. On the road they killed a man on horseback, and killed geese, hogs, cattle, and every living creature they came across; they came to the house where said Hancock and Adams lodged, (who luckily escaped them;) they searched the house, and when they could not find them, these barbarians killed the woman of the house and all the children in cool blood, and then set the house on fire.

Alas! would not the heathen, in all their savage barbarity and cruelty, blush at such horrid murder, and worse than brutal rage? Is this the bravery of British Troops? Is this the part of a truly great commander? Is this the native courage and intrepidity of English soldiers, so much boasted of? Is it not rather the ferocity of a mad wild beast, from whom they cannot be supposed to differ only in shape? Let every American hear and abhor; let every inhabitant consider what he is likely to suffer if he falls into the hands of such cruel and merciless wretches; what miseries and calamities shall we not be subjected to, if we submit to the unrighteous and tyrannical claims of the Parliament, of taking what we call our own, when and in what manner they please, without our consent; don't this teach us that a body of men, as well as a particular person, may tyrannically oppress? Let every American consider what interest have we in George the Third, or what inheritance have we in the Parliament of Great Britain. Have they not declared that all the New-England Colonies are rebels, and have ordered and commanded their blood-thirsty soldiers to cut the throats of men, women, and children, and are they not at this instant endeavouring to carry their bloody decrees into execution? And how long (besure not a great while) before the rest of the Americans will meet with the same, unless they tamely give up their all into their hands, to be taken by them as they please, without the Colonies' consent; but God be thanked, the soldiery have met with a check. And for what is all this rage and fury? For no other cause but that we are slow to believe the power of Parliament is omnipotent, and that they have a right to dispose of us and all we have as they please, without our consent. Surely no man in his senses, or that hath any notion of preserving his person or property, but what will, without hesitancy, resolve and determine to sell his life as dear as he can, rather than submit to such a slavish and abject condition. Therefore, my countrymen, think, and by thinking you will necessarily be led to determine that now or never you may be free; if once you lose this opportunity and submit, it is not probable you will ever have another. If any should say we had better try conciliatory measures, and again petition for relief from the King and Parliament, I ask, to what purpose can it be? Have not particular Colonies tried petitioning by themselves, and have not all the Colonies united in a petition for relief? And to what effect? Have they not been disdainfully and contemptuously trampled upon, and treated with scorn, and called nothing but factious complaints? Doth it not plainly appear, that both the King and the Ministry are so fixed and determined at all hazards to destroy American liberty, as that it is to as little purpose to complain, or reason with them, as it is to reason with irrational creatures? Therefore it seems there is nothing for us to do, but to appeal unto God in the use of what force and strength we have in defence of our liberties and properties, and rely on his Almighty aid for help to repel the tyrant's rage.

AN AMERICAN.

THOMAS BROWN TO COLONEL GEORGE PITKIN.

Cambridge, April 28, 1775, 3 o'clock, P. M.

This minute arrived from Boston Mr. Henderson Inches, with the agreeable news that the Governour had opened the gates, and given all the people that have a mind to move out, notice to give in their names to the Selectmen; and they are to have a guard to guard them out; and they are to have thirty wagons to move their effects; and when they return, thirty more to go in. The inhabitants are to resign their arms, and the Tories to have liberty to move in with their effects. And he furthermore brings advice by the last vessel from England, that when the Regiment of Light-Horse were going to embark, the populace rose and prevented their embarkation; and the General Officers that came away, were obliged to go on board incognito; but he further says the Ministry have ordered ten thousand Troops more to be sent, but they will not be here until the last of May; and being in haste, shall subscribe myself your most humble servant,

THOMAS BROWN.

To Colonel George Pitkin.

LETTER FROM THE CONGRESS OF MASSACHUSETTS TO THE CONGRESS OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

In Provincial Congress, Watertown, }
April 28, 1775. }

"Resolved unanimously, That the following Letter be authenticated by the President of this Congress, and delivered to Colonel Nathaniel Folsom, Colonel Josiah Bartlett, and Major Samuel Hobart, Esquires, Committee from the Convention of the Colony of New-Hampshire, as an answer to their Letter of the 26th instant."

GENTLEMEN: It is with pleasure we have received your letter above mentioned, and by a Committee of this Congress have had a conference with your respectable Committee.

We find the fullest conviction in the minds of the inhabitants of our sister Colonies, as well as of this, that by their immediate and most vigorous exertions, there is the greatest prospect of establishing their liberties and saving their Country; and that without such exertions, all must be lost.

It is the opinion of this Congress, as already communicated, that a powerful army on our side must at once cut out such a work for a tyrannical Administration, as, under the great opposition which they meet with in England, they cannot accomplish; and that their system of despotism must soon be shaken to the foundation. But should they still pursue their sanguinary measures, the Colonies will then be able to make a successful stand. We have the utmost confidence in your patriotic Colony, whose inhabitants have signalized themselves in joining their brethren in this; and I hope to see the New-Hampshire Government, which has been exposed to the corruption of a British Ministry, soon placed upon such a footing as will be best calculated to promote the true interest of the same, and to prevent in future such unhappy disputes as have taken place with the Mother Country. We have just received an agreeable account of the conduct of our brethren in New-York, and have delivered a copy of the letter to your Committee.

We sincerely thank you for the late measures taken by your Convention at Exeter, and are fully persuaded that the Congress of the Colony, which is to meet on the 17th of May, will take such effectual steps as the present emergency of publick affairs requires, and the Continent of America must necessarily approve at large.

LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEWPORT, RHODE-ISLAND.

Roxbury, April 28, 1775.

Notwithstanding your many neglects; notwithstanding my many avocations, I once more salute you, jacta est alea. What folly could have induced General Gage to act a part so fatal to Britain. It is all over with them; their withering laurels will soon be plucked from their brows by the rapacious Bourbon. I pity the madness which effected their destruction.

You have, no doubt, been informed of the affair of Wednesday the 19th. Is it not truly amazing, that such a body of Regulars, so thoroughly appointed, with artillery, &c., should be defeated and put to flight by a handful of raw, undisciplined peasants? We have lost but forty-one, and but few, not exceeding ten, wounded; they have near three hundred killed, wounded, and missing. Our countrymen swarm to our defence from all quarters. We are busily organizing our Troops, and shall soon have a well-constructed army in the field of thirty thousand men. Gage and his Troops are immured within the walls of Boston; and what is a delay to our satisfaction, our friends are entrapped by them. We have some hopes they will be liberated this day. General Gage has proposed, upon their surrendering their arms, that they march out. They surrendered their arms yesterday.

Poor Quincy, alas! he is no more. He returned to his native Country, pressed the beloved soil, and died. We did not see him; he breathed his last the night before last, at Cape Ann.

We have had an express by the way of Connecticut, enclosing transcripts from letters sent lately to New-York. Such a vile system of slavery is preparing for us as might make a Domitian blush. Thank God, our enemies will assuredly be defeated.

GOVERNOUR HOPKINS TO THE MASSACHUSETTS PROVINCIAL CONGRESS.

Providence, April 28, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: Mr. Joseph Brown and Mr. Moses Brown, of this place, principal merchants, and gentlemen of distinction and probity, will wait upon you with this letter. Their brother, Mr. John Brown, of this Town, merchant, was, two days ago, forcibly taken at Newport in a packet, as he was coming from thence with a quantity of flour which he had purchased there. He was carried on board a Ship-of-War and confined; and we have since heard that he was sent round to Boston with the flour.

I request you to give to the bearers any aid and assistance in your power, for procuring the relief and discharge of their brother. In my letter of yesterday to the Congress, the measure of reprisal in this instance was recommended, and if it may be, I wish it may be pursued.

I am your friend and humble servant,

STEP. HOPKINS.

President of the Congress in Massachusetts.

JAMES ANGELL TO THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Providence, Rhode-Island, April 28, 1775.

SIR: At the request of his Honour the Deputy Governour, I have undertaken to answer yours of the 26th instant.

We, Sir, sensibly feel the distresses of our brethren in the Massachusetts-Bay, and can only say, that, as Brigadier of the three Battalions under my command in the County of Providence, I will furnish you, upon any alarm, with six hundred men; but the situation of matters is such, occasioned partly by our Assembly's not appointing officers for the fifteen hundred men which they ordered to be raised for your assistance, and partly by the seizure made by the Man-of-War at Newport of three hundred barrels of flour bought by this Colony for supplying our Army, that it will be impossible for our forces immediately to proceed to join your Army, unless they go destitute of provision, which, we imagine here, would rather be a burden than a help to our friends. However, men are enlisting very fast, and when our Assembly meets here, which will be next week, you may rely on it that our forces will, as fast and as soon as possible, march to your assistance. I am, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JAMES ANGELL.

Z. ANDREWS AND T. FREEMAN TO THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Providence, Rhode-Island, April 28, 1775.

DEAR SIR: The anxiety we feel upon seeing the present situation of affairs, will be our apology for troubling you with a letter, the design of which is to convey you intelligence that might, with more propriety, come to you from other persons.

Deputy Governour Sessions received your letter requesting assistance, which we have seen a copy of yesterday. The Assembly have adjourned, after passing a simple vote that fifteen hundred men, with suitable stores, should be raised at Government's expense; and leaving the matter there. Nobody at present thinks himself authorized to enlist men, and therefore, scarce any thing in that way has been done. Mr. John Brown is taken prisoner on board a Man-of-War, and a quantity of flour which he had purchased at Newport is seized, and it is, with him, to sail in a sloop for Boston immediately, if he is not already gone.

Our Assembly meets here on Wednesday next, and then we hope to see something done in compliance with your request; but we do absolutely despair of any thing being done before, if then. We are sorry to say it, from our hearts; but fearing you might rely too much upon this Government, we thought it our indispensable duty to give you this information. The gentlemen who attended our Assembly as Delegates from your Congress well know where the difficulty lies, and which we hope will be removed next week.

We observed one clause in your letter respecting the artillery, upon which we beg leave to observe, that we have heavy cannon, if such are wanted; but if field-pieces are most required, we believe that more than four or five cannot be ready to come to you, which are now preparing with all possible despatch. We are, Sir, with great respect, your obedient humble servants,

MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS TO STEPHEN HOPKINS.

Watertown, April 28, 1775.

SIR: It is with the deepest concern we find Mr. Brown, that valuable friend of the cause of America, betrayed into the hands of our common enemies; and every measure for his release that can be pursued by us, shall most earnestly be adopted.

We have ordered Samuel Murray, son of the Mandamus Counsellor, and such Officers of General Gage's Army as are prisoners of war, not disabled from travelling, to be immediately sent, with a sufficient guard, to Providence; and I think it best that Murray and Officers should write to their friends in Boston, and acquaint them that Mr. Brown's friends have the same advantage over them as General Gage hath over Mr. Brown.

We beg leave to suggest to you the critical situation of the Colony at the present time, which disables the Congress from immediately seizing every Crown Officer in the Government. Boston is closed, and the numerous inhabitants so obnoxious to our enemies, are imprisoned therein. Several of our seaports are blockaded with shipping, and threatened with destruction if they join the Army. Under this situation, the inhabitants of those places most in danger, are day and night removing their furniture and effects; and we hope soon to see it generally done. Should we, therefore, seize the Crown Officers as proposed, it may hurl on us and our seaports sudden destruction, before they have an opportunity of saving themselves. We had it in contemplation to send a letter to the General, acquainting him that we should treat the Crown Officers with severity if Mr. Brown should be so treated by him; but we are apprehensive it would produce an unhappy, rather than good effect, as he has a greater number of our friends than we have of his. We desire you to give us your further sentiments of the matter. If any other way is left wherein the Congress can save Mr. Brown, it shall be readily pursued. We are, &c.

In Provincial Congress, Watertown, }
April 28, 1775. }

Whereas, a worthy friend to the liberties of America, Mr. John Brown, of Providence, hath been lately seized, and with two other persons, carried on board a British Ship-of-War at Newport:

Ordered, That Samuel Murray and two such Officers of General Gage's Army, as are now prisoners of war, and not disabled from travelling on account of their wounds, be immediately sent under a sufficient guard to Providence, and delivered to Hon. Stephen Hopkins, Esquire, or other friends of said Mr. Brown; to be made such use of as they shall think proper, for obtaining the liberty of the said Mr. Brown.

MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS TO STEPHEN HOPKINS.

Watertown, April 29, 1775.

SIR: The above is a copy of an Order and Letter which passed this Congress yesterday, since which we have received from Boston copies of sundry Votes of that Town to Gen. Gage, upon the subject of a license, for the inhabitants to remove with their effects into the country; and by his answers it appears that he has consented to suffer such inhabitants as have inclination therefor, to leave the place with their effects, excepting fire-arms, which are to be delivered at Faneuil Hall, to the Selectmen of the Town, and the name of the owner to be placed on them; and the General expects, on the other hand, a Proclamation from Congress, giving liberty to all inhabitants of the Colony having inclination therefor, to remove, with all their effects, into Boston. Some of the inhabitants have already left the Town, by permission of the General; and under these circumstances, should we issue the Order which has passed in Congress, it may put a stop to this unexpected favourable event, and prevent the emancipation of many thousands of friends to America. We nevertheless propose to detain the prisoners of war; and if the General should not forfeit his plighted faith, to use all expedition in getting out the families and effects of our friends from Boston, that we may be at liberty to use our prisoners, and every other means in our power, for the release of Mr. Brown, as was intended. We have just heard that the passages to and from Boston are again stopped; but the occasion of this extraordinary manœuvre, we cannot yet learn.

We are, with great respect, &c.

To the Honourable S. Hopkins, Esq., of Providence.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE SEVERAL TOWNS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Cambridge, April 28, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The barbarous murders committed on our innocent brethren on Wednesday the 19th instant, have made it absolutely necessary that we immediately raise an Army to defend our wives and children from the butchering hands of an inhuman soldiery, who, incensed at the obstacles they met with in their bloody progress, and enraged at being repulsed from the field of slaughter, will, without doubt, take the first opportunity in their power to ravage this devoted Country with fire and sword. We conjure, therefore, by all that is dear, by all that is sacred, that you give all assistance possible in forming the Army. Our all is at stake. Death and devastation are the certain consequences of delay; every moment is infinitely precious; an hour lost may deluge your Country in blood, and entail perpetual slavery upon the few of your posterity who may survive the carnage. We beg and entreat, as you will answer it to your Country, to your own consciences, and, above all, to God himself, that you will hasten and encourage, by all possible means, the enlistment of men to form the Army, and send them forward to Head Quarters at Cambridge, with that expedition which the vast importance and instant urgency of the affair demands. We are, &c.

NEWBURYPORT COMMITTEE TO THE MASSACHUSETTS COMMITTEE OF WAR.

Newburyport, April 28, 1775.

SIR: Mr. Christian Febiger, the bearer, has been a resident in this Town about three weeks. He came last from New-Haven, in Connecticut, and from what acquaintance we have had with him, it appears that he is a person well acquainted with the art military, and professes that since he is a Dane, he is willing to serve in the American Army for pay. He appeared very ready to assist in our late alarm. In behalf of the Committee.

JONA. TITCOMB.

To the Honourable the Chairman of the Committee of War.

SELECTMEN OF SANDBORNTON TO THE NEW-HAMPSHIRE CONGRESS.

Sandbornton, April 28, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: The messenger who bears this waits upon you to request your advice at this critical and alarming juncture. We are in a state almost totally destitute of the proper means of defence. People among us are extremely uneasy and greatly alarmed. We have made repeated trials to furnish ourselves with ammunition, but without success. We therefore request such advice as you in your wisdom shall think fit, and such assistance as you may please to grant.

We are encouraged to make this application, as we understand the Province Store is opened, and a barrel of Powder brought to Canterbury. We can assure you that it will be applied to no other use but our Country's defence, being determined to resist all hostile attempts against our sacred and invaluable privileges to the last extremity.

We are, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servants,

JOHN SANDBORN,
AARON SANDBORN,
CALEB GILMAN.To the Honourable Congress convened at Exeter.

GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL TO GENERAL GAGE.

[Read before Congress, May 19, 1775.]

Hartford, April 28, 1775.

SIR: The alarming situation of publick affairs in this Country, and the late unfortunate transactions in the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay, have induced the General Assembly of this Colony, now sitting in this place, to appoint a Committee* of their body, to wait upon your Excellency, and to desire me, in their name, to write to you, relative to those very interesting matters.

The inhabitants of this Colony are intimately connected with the people of your Province, and esteem themselves bound, by the strongest ties of friendship, as well as of common interest, to regard with attention whatever concerns them. You will not, therefore, be surprised that your first arrival at Boston, with a body of His Majesty's Troops, for the declared purpose of carrying into execution certain Acts of Parliament, which, in their apprehension, were unconstitutional and oppressive, should have given the good people of this Colony a very just and general alarm. Your subsequent proceedings in fortifying the Town of Boston, and other military preparations, greatly increased their apprehensions for the safety of their friends and brethren. They could not be unconcerned spectators of their sufferings in that which they esteemed the common cause of this Country; but the late hostile and secret inroads of some of the Troops under your command, into the heart of the Country, and the violences they have committed, have driven them almost to a state of desperation. They feel now, not only for their friends, but for themselves, and their dearest interests and connections.

* Doctor Johnson and Oliver Wolcott, Esquire.

FOURTH SERIES.—VOL. II.

We wish not to exaggerate; we are not sure of every part of our information, but by the best intelligence that we have yet been able to obtain, the late transaction was a most unprovoked attack upon the lives and property of His Majesty's subjects; and it is represented to us that such outrages have been committed as would disgrace even barbarians, and much more Britons, so highly famed for humanity as well as bravery.

It is feared, therefore, that we are devoted to destruction, and that you have it in command and intention to ravage and desolate the Country. If this is not the case, permit us to ask, why have these outrages been committed? Why is the Town of Boston now shut up? To what end are all the hostile preparations that are daily making? And why do we continually hear of fresh destinations of Troops to this Country? The people of this Colony, you may rely upon it, abhor the idea of taking up arms against the Troops of their Sovereign, and dread nothing so much as the horrors of a civil war. But, sir, at the same time we beg leave to assure your Excellency, that as they apprehend themselves justified by the principle of self-defence, they are most firmly resolved to defend their rights and privileges to the last extremity; nor will they be restrained from giving aid to their brethren, if any unjustifiable attack is made upon them.

Be so good, therefore, as to explain yourself upon this most important subject, so far as is consistent with your duty to our common Sovereign. Is there no way to prevent this unhappy dispute from coming to extremities? Is there no alternative but absolute submission, or the desolations of war? By that humanity which constitutes so amiable a part of your character, and for the honour of our Sovereign, and the glory of the British Empire, we entreat you to prevent it if possible. Surely it is to be hoped that the temperate wisdom of the Empire might even yet find expedients to restore peace, that so all parts of the Empire may enjoy their particular rights, honours, and immunities. Certainly this is an event most devoutly to be wished; and will it not be consistent with your duty to suspend the operations of war on your part, and enable us on ours to quiet the minds of the people, at least till the result of some further deliberations may be known?

The importance of the occasion will no doubt sufficiently apologize for the earnestness with which we address you, and any seeming impropriety which may attend it, as well as induce you to give us the most explicit and favourable answer in your power.

I am, with great esteem and respect, in behalf of the General Assembly, Sir, your most obedient servant.

To his Excellency Thomas Gage, Esq.

GENERAL GAGE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Boston, April 29, 1775.

SIR: I transmit you herewith a circumstantial account of an unhappy affair that happened in this Province on the nineteenth instant, between His Majesty's Troops and the people of the country, whereby you will see the pitch their leaders have worked them up to, even to commit hostilities upon the King's Troops when an opportunity offered. It has long been said that this was their plan, and so it has turned out.

I am, with regard and esteem, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

THOS. GAGE.

To the Honourable Governour Trumbull.

A circumstantial Account of an Attack that happened on the 19th April, 1775, on His Majesty's Troops, by a Number of the People of the Province of the MASSACHUSETTS-BAY.

On Tuesday the 18th of April, about half-past ten at night, Lieutenant Colonel Smith, of the Tenth Regiment, embarked from the Common, at Boston, with the Grenadiers and Light-Infantry of the Troops there, and landed on the opposite side; from whence he began his march towards Concord, where he was ordered to destroy a magazine of military stores, deposited there for the use of an Army to be assembled in order to act against His Majesty and his Government. The Colonel called his officers together, and gave orders that the Troops should not fire unless fired upon; and after marching a few miles, detached six Companies of Light-Infantry, under the command of Major Pitcairn, to take possession of two bridges on the other side of Concord. Soon after, they heard many signal guns, and the ringing of alarm-bells repeatedly, which convinced them that the country was rising to oppose them, and that it was a preconcerted scheme to oppose the King's Troops, whenever there should be a favourable opportunity for it. About three o'clock the next morning, the Troops being advanced within two miles of Lexington, intelligence was received that about five hundred men in arms were assembled, and determined to oppose the King's Troops; and on Major Pitcairn's galloping up to the head of the advanced Companies, two officers informed him that a man (advanced from those that were assembled) had presented his musket, and attempted to shoot them, but the piece flashed in the pan. On this the Major gave directions to the Troops to move forward, but on no account to fire, nor even to attempt it without orders. When they arrived at the end of the village, they observed about two hundred armed men drawn up on a green, and when the Troops came within one hundred yards of them, they began to file off towards some stone walls on their right flank; the Light-Infantry observing this, ran after them. The Major instantly called to the soldiers not to fire, but to surround and disarm them. Some of them who had jumped over a wall, then fired four or five shot at the Troops; wounded a man of the Tenth Regiment, and the Major's horse in two places, and at the same time several shots were fired from a meeting-house on the left. Upon this, without any order or regularity, the Light-Infantry began a scattered fire, and killed several of the country people, but were silenced as soon as the authority of their officers could make them.

After this, Colonel Smith marched up with the remainder of the detachment, and the whole body proceeded to Concord, where they arrived about nine o'clock, without any thing further happening; but vast numbers of armed people were seen assembling on all the heights. While Colonel Smith, with the Grenadiers and part of the Light-Infantry, remained at Concord to search for cannon, &c., there, he detached Captain Parsons, with six light companies, to secure a bridge at some distance from Concord, and to proceed from thence to certain houses, where it was supposed there was cannon and ammunition. Captain Parsons, in pursuance of these orders, posted three companies at the bridge, and on some heights near it, under the command of Captain Laurie, of the Forty-Third Regiment, and with the remainder went and destroyed some cannon-wheels, powder, and ball. The people still continued increasing on the heights, and in about an hour after, a large body of them began to move towards the bridge. The light companies of the Fourth and Tenth then descended and joined Captain Laurie. The people continued to advance in great numbers, and fired upon the King's Troops; killed three men, wounded four officers, one sergeant, and four privates; upon which (after returning the fire) Captain Laurie and his officers thought it prudent to retreat towards the main body at Concord, and were soon joined by two companies of Grenadiers. When Captain Parsons returned with the three Companies over the bridge, they observed three soldiers on the ground, one of them scalped, his head much mangled, and his ears cut off, though not quite dead—a sight which struck the soldiers with horror. Captain Parsons marched on and joined the main body, who were only waiting for his coming up to march back to Boston. Colonel Smith had executed his orders, without opposition, by destroying all the military stores he could find. Both the Colonel and Major Pitcairn having taken all possible pains to convince the inhabitants that no injury was intended them, and that if they opened their doors when required, to search for said stores, not the slightest mischief should be done. Neither had any of the people the least occasion to complain; but they were sulky, and one of them even struck Major Pitcairn.

Except upon Captain Laurie at the bridge, no hostilities happened from the affair at Lexington, until the Troops began their march back. As soon as the Troops had got out of the Town of Concord, they received a heavy fire on them from all sides—from walls, fences, houses, trees, barns, &c., which continued, without intermission, till they met the First Brigade, with two field-pieces, near Lexington, ordered out under the command of Lord Percy to support them. Upon the firing of the field-pieces, the people's fire was for a while silenced; but as they still continued to increase greatly in numbers, they fired again, as before, from all places where they could find cover, upon the whole body, and continued so doing for the space of fifteen miles.

Notwithstanding their numbers, they did not attack openly during the whole day, but kept under cover on all occasions. The Troops were very much fatigued; the greater part of them having been under arms all night, and made a march of upwards of forty miles before they arrived at Charlestown, from whence they were ferried over to Boston.

The Troops had above fifty killed, and many more wounded; reports are various about the loss sustained by the country people; some make it very considerable, others not so much.

Williamsburgh, May 20, 1775.

Account of an Attack upon a body of the King's Troops, by a number of People of the Province of MASSACHUSETTS-BAY, on the 19th of APRIL, transmitted by General GAGE to Lord DUNMORE, Governour of VIRGINIA.

General Gage having received intelligence that a considerable magazine of military stores was forming at Concord, for an Army which was to assemble there in order to act against His Majesty and his Government, thought proper to order the Grenadiers and light companies of the Regiments at Boston, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Smith, of the Tenth Regiment, to march to the Town of Concord, and to destroy all the military stores they might find there. Pursuant to these orders Lieutenant Colonel Smith crossed, about ten o'clock at night, from the Common to the opposite side, and began his march towards Concord, having first given strict charge to all his officers that they should, on no account, suffer any of their men to fire upon any inhabitants, unless they were first attacked by them. The advanced guard, consisting of six companies of Light-Infantry, under Major Pitcairn, had proceeded to within two miles of Lexington, when they received intelligence that five hundred men were drawn together, and seemed determined to oppose the Troops; at the same time many signal guns were fired from different places, bells were set ringing, and the country every where alarmed. As the party under Major Pitcairn advanced towards Lexington, a man presented his piece at the officer in the front, but it flashed in the pan; and when the party reached the end of the village, they discovered about two hundred men under arms, and drawn up on a green, who waited till the Troops came within about one hundred yards of them, and then filed off to their right, and posted themselves behind some stone walls. Upon which the soldiers ran up towards them, and Major Pitcairn called out to them not to fire, but to surround and disarm them; but the others having got over the walls, fired from behind them four or five shot at the Troops, which wounded a man of the Tenth Regiment, and the Major's horse in two places; at the same time several shot were fired from a meeting-house adjoining. Upon this, without any order or regularity, the soldiers began a scattered fire, and killed several of the country people, but they were soon stopped by their officers.

Colonel Smith came up with the rest of the detachment, and they proceeded together to Concord, where they arrived about nine o'clock in the morning, and while he was putting his orders into execution, in destroying the magazine which was found there, he detached a party of six companies of Light-Infantry to secure a bridge at some little distance from the Town, and to destroy some ammunition which they were informed was in several houses thereabouts. This detachment was commanded by Capt. Parsons, of the Tenth Regiment, who, leaving three companies at the bridge, with the remainder went in search of and destroyed a quantity of powder, ball, and cannon-wheels, which he found. In the mean time a great number of the country people assembled about this party, and fired upon the three companies posted at the bridge—killed three men, wounded four officers, one sergeant, and four privates. The Troops returned the fire, and retreated towards their main body at Concord, and were soon followed by Captain Parsons and the other three Companies, who, in passing over the bridge, found three soldiers lying on the ground, one of whom had been scalped, his head much mangled, and his ears cut off, though not quite dead.

Lieutenant Colonel Smith being joined by this party, and having completed the business which had been the object of this design, quitted Concord on his return to Boston; but as soon as he had got without the place, he found himself attacked on all sides from the walls, houses, barns, trees, and every place that afforded cover, and a heavy fire continued upon the Troops until they were met by Lord Percy with his Brigade and two field-pieces, upon the firing of which the country people concealed themselves, and ceased. But as soon as the Troops put themselves in march they were again attacked as before, and without intermission, till the Troops reached Charlestown, from whence they were ferried over to Boston.

The Troops made several halts and returned the fire of the country people, who, however, kept themselves entirely covered and concealed, and did not make the least attempt to show themselves, or venture a close engagement. The Troops lost fifty men killed, and many more are wounded; the loss sustained by the others is not known; some accounts make it very considerable, others little or nothing.

ACCOUNT OF AN ATTACK ON THE INHABITANTS OF MASSACHUSETTS BY THE BRITISH TROOPS, ACTING UNDER THE ORDERS OF GENERAL GAGE, ON THE 19TH OF APRIL, 1775.

Worcester, Massachusetts, May 3, 1775.

Americans, for ever bear in mind the battle of Lexington, where British Troops, unmolested and unprovoked, wantonly, and in a most inhuman manner, fired upon and killed a number of our countrymen, then robbed them of their provisions, ransacked, plundered, and burnt their houses! Nor could the tears of defenceless women, some of whom were in the pains of childbirth, the cries of helpless babes, nor the prayers of old age, confined to beds of sickness, appease their thirst for blood, or divert them from their design of murder and robbery!

The particulars of this alarming event will, we are credibly informed, be soon published by authority, as a Committee of the Provincial Congress have been appointed to make special inquiry, and to take the depositions, on oath, of such as are knowing to the matter. In the mean time, to satisfy the expectation of our readers, we have collected from those whose veracity is unquestioned the following account, viz:

A few days before the battle, the Grenadier and Light-Infantry Companies were all drafted from the several Regiments in Boston, and put under the command of an Officer, and it was observed that most of the transports and other boats were put together, and fitted for immediate service. This manœuvre gave rise to a suspicion that some formidable expedition was intended by the soldiery, but what or where, the inhabitants could not determine; however, the town-watches in Boston, Charlestown, Cambridge, &c., were ordered to look well to the landing places. About ten o'clock on the night of the 18th of April, the Troops in Boston were discovered to be on the move in a very secret manner, and it was found they were embarking in boats (which they privately brought to the place in the evening) at the bottom of the Common; expresses sat off immediately to alarm the country, that they might be on their guard. When the expresses got about a mile beyond Lexington, they were stopped by about fourteen officers on horseback, who came out of Boston in the afternoon of that day, and were seen lurking in by-places in the country till after dark. One of the expresses immediately fled, and was pursued two miles by an officer, who, when he had got up with him, presented a pistol, and told him he was a dead man if he did not stop; but he rode on until he came up to a house, when, stopping of a sudden, his horse threw him off. Having the presence of mind to halloo to the people in the house, "Turn out! turn out! I have got one of them," the officer immediately retreated as fast as he had pursued. The other express, after passing through a strict examination, by some means got clear.

The body of the Troops in the mean time, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Smith, had crossed the river, and landed at Phipps's farm. They immediately, to the number of one thousand, proceeded to Lexington, six miles below Concord, with great silence. A Company of Militia, of about eighty men, mustered near the meeting-house; the Troops came in sight of them just before sunrise; the Militia, upon seeing the Troops, began to disperse; the Troops then sat out upon the run, hallooing and huzzaing, and coming within a few rods of them, the commanding officer accosted the Militia in words to this effect: "Disperse, you damn'd rebels! damn you, disperse!" Upon which the Troops again huzzaed, and immediately one or two officers discharged their pistols, which were instantaneously followed by the firing of four or five of the soldiers, and then there seemed to be a general discharge from the whole body. It is to be noticed they fired upon our people as they were dispersing, agreeable to their command, and that we did not even return the fire; eight of our men were killed, and nine wounded. The Troops then laughed, and damned the Yankees, and said they could not bear the smell of gunpowder. A little after this the Troops renewed their march to Concord, where, when they arrived, they divided into parties, and went directly to several places where the Province stores were deposited. Each party was supposed to have a tory pilot. One party went into the jail yard, and spiked up and otherwise damaged two cannon belonging to the Province, and broke and set fire to the carriages. They then entered a store and rolled out about a hundred barrels of flour, which they unheaded, and emptied about forty in the river; at the same time others were entering houses and shops, and unheading barrels, chests, &c., the property of private persons; some took possession of the Town-House, to which they set fire, but was extinguished by our people without much hurt. Another party of the Troops went and took possession of the North bridge. About one hundred and fifty Provincials, who mustered upon the alarm, coming towards the bridge, the Troops fired upon them without ceremony, and killed two upon the spot! (Thus did the Troops of Britain's King fire first at two several times upon his loyal American subjects, and put a period to ten lives, before one gun was fired upon them.) Our people then returned the fire, and obliged the Troops to retreat, who were soon joined by their other parties, but finding they were still pursued, the whole body retreated back to Lexington, both Provincials and Troops firing as they went. During this time an express from the Troops was sent to General Gage, who, thereupon, sent out a reinforcement of about fourteen hundred men, under the command of Earl Percy, with two field-pieces.* Upon the arrival of this reinforcement at Lexington, just as the retreating party had got there, they made a stand, picked up their dead, and took all the carriages they could find and put their wounded thereon; others of them, to their eternal disgrace be it spoken, were robbing and setting houses on fire, and discharging their cannon at the meeting-house. Whilst they were thus employed, a number of our people attacked a party of twelve of the enemy, (carrying stores and provisions to the Troops,) killed one of them, and took possession of their arms, stores, provisions, &c., without any loss on our side. The enemy having halted about an hour at Lexington, found it necessary to make a second retreat, carrying with them many of their dead and wounded. They continued their retreat from Lexington to Charlestown with great precipitation; our people continued the pursuit,* firing till they got to Charlestown Neck, (which they reached a little after sunset,) over which the enemy passed, proceeded up Bunker's Hill, and the next day went into Boston under the protection of the Somerset Man-of-War of sixty-four guns.

* When the Second Brigade marched out of Boston to reinforce the First, nothing was played by the Fifes and Drums but Yankee Doodle, (which had become their favourite tune ever since that notable exploit, which did such honour to the Troops of Britain's King, of tarring and feathering a poor countryman in Boston, and parading with him through the principal streets, under arms, with their bayonets fixed.) Upon their return to Boston, one asked his brother officer how he liked the tune now? "Damn them, (returned he,) they made us dance it till we were tired." Since which Yankee Doodle sounds less sweet to their ears.

A young man, unarmed, who was taken prisoner by the enemy, and made to assist in carrying off their wounded, says that he saw a barber who lives in Boston, thought to be one Warden, with the Troops, and that he heard them say he was one of their pilots. He likewise saw the said barber fire twice upon our people, and heard Earl Percy order the Troops to fire the houses. He also informs that several officers were among the wounded who were carried to Boston, where our informant was dismissed. They took two of our men prisoners in battle, who are now confined in barracks.

Immediately upon the return of the Troops to Boston, all communication to and from the Town was stopped by General Gage. The Provincials, who flew to the assistance of their distressed countrymen, are posted in Cambridge, Charlestown, Roxbury, Watertown, &c., and have placed guards on Roxbury Neck, within gun-shot of the enemy; guards are also placed every where in view of the Town, to observe the motion of the King's Troops. The council of war, and the different Committees of Safety and Supplies set at Cambridge, and the Provincial Congress at Watertown. The Troops in Boston are fortifying the place on all sides, and a Frigate-of-War is stationed up Cambridge River, and a sixty-four gun Ship between Boston and Charlestown.

Deacon Joseph Loring's house and barn, Mrs. Mullikin's house and shop, and Mr. Joshua Bond's house and shop in Lexington, were all consumed. They also set fire to several other houses, but our people extinguished the flames. They pillaged almost every house they passed by, breaking and destroying doors, windows, glasses, &c., and carrying off clothing and other valuable effects. It appeared to be their design to burn and destroy all before them; and nothing but our vigorous pursuit prevented their infernal purposes from being put in execution. But the savage barbarity exercised upon the bodies of our unfortunate brethren who fell, is almost incredible. Not content with shooting down the unarmed, aged, and infirm, they disregarded the cries of the wounded, killing them without mercy, and mangling their bodies in the most shocking manner.

We have the pleasure to say that, notwithstanding the highest provocations given by the enemy, not one instance of cruelty, that we have heard of, was committed by our Militia; but listening to the merciful dictates of the Christian religion, they "breathed higher sentiments of humanity."

EXTRACTS FROM SEVERAL INTERCEPTED LETTERS OF THE SOLDIERY IN BOSTON.

Boston, April 28, 1775.

I am well, all but the wound I received through the leg by a ball from one of the Bostonians. At the time I

* An American Soldier, who had received a wound in his breast in pursuing General Gage's Troops, on the 19th of April, supported his body against a tree. A brother Soldier came up to him, and offered him assistance. "Pursue the enemy," said the wounded man. With these words on his lips, he fell back and died.

A gentleman who travelled lately through Connecticut, informs us that he met with an old gentlewoman, who told him that she had fitted out and sent five sons and eleven grandsons to Boston, when she heard of the engagement between the Provincials and Regulars. The gentleman asked her, if she did not shed a tear at parting with them? "No, (said she,) I never parted with them with more pleasure." But suppose, said the gentleman, they had all been killed. "I had rather (said the noble matron) this had been the case, than that one of them had come back a coward."

wrote to you from Quebeck I had the strongest assurance of going home, but the laying the tax on the New-England people caused us to be ordered for Boston, where we remained in peace with the inhabitants, till on the night of the 18th of April twenty-one companies of Grenadiers and Light-Infantry were ordered into the country about eighteen miles, where, between four and five o'clock in the morning, we met an incredible number of people of the country in arms against us. Colonel Smith, of the Tenth Regiment, ordered us to rush on them with our bayonets fixed, at which time some of the peasants fired on us, and our men returning the fire, the engagement begun. They did not fight us like a regular army, only like savages, behind trees and stone walls, and out of the woods and houses, where in the latter, we killed numbers of them, as well as in the woods and fields. The engagement began between four and five in the morning, and lasted till eight at night. I cannot be sure when you will get another letter from me, as this extensive Continent is all in arms against us. These people are very numerous, and full as bad as the Indians for scalping and cutting the dead men's ears and noses off, and those they get alive, that are wounded, and cannot get off the ground.

Boston, April 28, 1775.

The Grenadiers and Light-Infantry marched for Concord, where were powder and ball, arms, and cannon mounted on carriages; but before we could destroy them all, we were fired on by the country people, who, not brought up in our military way, as ourselves, we were surrounded always in the woods. The firing was very hot on both sides. About two in the afternoon the Second Brigade came up, which were four Regiments and part of the Artillery, which were of no use to us, as the enemy were in the woods; and when we found they fired from the houses, we set them on fire, and they ran to the woods like devils. We were obliged to retreat to Boston again, over Charles River, our ammunition being all fired away. We had one hundred and fifty men wounded and killed, and some taken prisoners; we were forced to leave some behind, who were wounded. We got back to Boston about three o'clock next morning, and them that were able to walk were forced to mount guard, and lie in the field. I never broke my fast for forty-eight hours, for we carried no provisions, and thought to be back next morning. I had my hat shot off my head three times, two balls went through my coat, and carried away my bayonet by my side, and was near being killed. The people of Boston are in great trouble, for General Gage will not let the Town's people go out. Direct for me to Chatham's division of Marines.

Boston, April 30, 1775.

DEAR PARENTS: Before this reaches you, you may hear that our regiment has been engaged with the Provincials. The Grenadiers and Light-Infantry marched about nine at night. At six next morning four hundred and twenty-three soldiers, and forty-seven marines, in all fifteen hundred, marched to reinforce the Grenadiers and Light-Infantry, joined about one o'clock, and found them not engaged, which they had been eight hours before; for we had two pieces of cannon, which made us march slow. As soon as we came up we fired the cannon, which brought them from behind the trees, for we did not fight as you did in Germany, as we could not see above ten in a body, for they were behind trees and walls, and fired at us, and then loaded on their bellies. We had thirty-six rounds, which obliged us to go home that night, and as we came along they got before us and fired at us out of the houses, and killed and wounded a great many of us, but we levelled their houses as we came along. It was thought there were about six thousand at first, and at night double that number. The King's Troops lost in killed and wounded one hundred and fifty, and the Americans five hundred men, women, and children, for there was a number of women and children burnt in their houses. Our regiment has five killed and thirty-one wounded, particularly Colonel Bernard in the thigh, which all the regiment is sorry for. The shot flew thick. I got a wounded man's gun, and killed two of them, as I am sure of. We have been busy in fortifying the Town ever since we engaged, and in a few days we expect a good many more Troops from England, and then we shall surely burn the whole Country before us, if they do not submit, which I do not imagine they will do, for they are an obstinate set of people. Tell Bill if he comes to Boston he may have a wife in every house he comes to, for the women are left at home while the men go to fight the soldiers. They have formed an army, and keep guard close to our works, so that our centries can talk together at ease. We were engaged from six to six. The whole Country is in arms against us, and they are headed by two of the Generals that headed our army last war; their names are Ward and Putnam. We have a great deal of shipping, but they are of little service, only to cover the Town, cannon and Troops, except the small schooners that go up in the creeks and destroy them, which they have done many of them. There is no market in Boston, the inhabitants all starving; the soldiers live on salt provisions, and the officers are supplied by the men-of-war cutters, who go up the creeks and take live cattle and sheep wherever they find them. We vex the Americans very much, by cutting down their liberty poles and alarm posts. We have had a great many died in our Regiment last winter, so that what with wounded men, and what have deserted, we have not three hundred men; and duty is so hard that we come off guard in the morning, and mount picket at night.

Boston, April 25, 1775.

HONOURED MOTHER: The rebels, when we came to Concord, burnt their stores, fired upon the King's Troops, and a smart engagement ensued. About two o'clock our Brigade came up to them, where we engaged and continued fighting and retreating towards Boston. The rebels were monstrous numerous, and surrounded us on every side; when they came up we gave them a smart fire, but they never would engage us properly. We killed some hundreds and burnt some of their houses. I received a wound in my head. The Troops are in Boston, and surrounded on the land side by the rebels, who are very numerous, and fully determined to lose their lives and fortunes, rather than be taxed by England. We had thirty-four killed and wounded; I suppose the King's Troops in all about one hundred and sixty. In case they take Boston, the Troops will retire on board the Men-of-War, and then the Men-of-War will burn the Town, and remain till more Troops come from England, and then conquer them; so their estates and lives will be forfeited. There are only four thousand soldiers, and about fifty or sixty thousand of them.

Boston, May 2, 1775.

LOVING BROTHERS AND SISTERS: The 19th of April the engagement happened, and my husband was wounded and taken prisoner, but they use him well, and I am striving to get to him, as he is very dangerous; but it is almost impossible to get out or in, or to get any thing, for we are forced to live on salt provisions entirely, and they are building batteries round the Town, and so are we, for we are expecting them to storm us, and are expecting more Troops every day. My husband is now lying in one of their hospitals, at a place called Cambridge, and there are now forty or fifty thousand of them gathered together, and we are not four thousand at most. It is very troublesome times, for we are expecting the Town to be burnt down every day, and I believe we are sold; and I hear my husband's leg is broke, and my heart is broke.

A SERIOUS ADMONITION TO THE INHABITANTS OF WILLIAMSBURGH.

Williamsburgh, Va., April 29, 1775.

Friends and Fellow-Citizens:

Permit one who sincerely wishes the prosperity of his Country, to address you on a subject of great importance, which has engaged the attention of us all, though the effects it has produced in our minds seem not to be of the same impression.

Some, I find, consider the Governour's ordering the removal of the powder from the magazine an illegal act, that as such it might be resisted; and the rage of patriotism has been carried so far as even to occasion a tumult directed to that end. What the consequences might have been, I tremble to think of; and earnestly congratulate you, and my Country in general, that a stop has been put to this scene of confusion by the virtuous and zealous interposition of some of our worthy inhabitants. I feel particular pleasure, too, in reflecting, that those who, in an unguarded moment were for carrying things the farthest, have not yet advanced so far as to be impenetrable to the still voice of reason. Though we had committed our unruddered bark to the mercy of a stormy ocean, we have providentially recovered the firmer element, on which we may tread in security and peace; and here let us rest.

Anxious, my friends, for every thing which is necessary to our welfare, suffer me to observe, that even admitting the powder which was removed to have been purchased by this Country, (a fact I do not pretend to be acquainted with,) yet the money given for that purpose could be constitutionally given only to the King. The powder must therefore be under his direction, to be employed indeed for the benefit of the Country; but how, and in what manner, as long as our Government exists, is in the discretion of the King, or of his Representatives. It is true, Kings have sometimes violated the most sacred trust, and in the course of their Government have chose rather to build on a discretionary power originating in themselves, than on that fiduciary and limited authority which is derived from the people. Instances of this sort we have had, and fatal instances we have had too of the resentment of the people on account of their abused rights; but no man acquainted with that part of our history will, in his cooler moments, think it right to fly in an outrageous manner in the face of Government, upon every occasion when there may be real cause of complaint. A decent representation of grievances ought certainly to precede, and much, very much, ought to be borne before the people can be justified in resorting to their natural power, in the reclaiming of which so much disorder and confusion must necessarily arise.

How frantick, then, would it appear in us to think of acting on the idea of reverted power, and of appealing to Heaven upon no other inducement than the Governour's exertion of a right certainly vested in him by the Constitution, which, for what we know, might have been necessary to our welfare, and which, after the information his Excellency has been pleased to give to the Corporation, cannot, without the most causeless breach of good manners to him as a man, and of that respect and decorum which are due to him as our Governour, be conceived not to have been so, at least in his Lordship's opinion.

Understanding, however, that though a stop has been happily put to the commotions first occasioned by this affair, there is still a leaven of discontent among a few of us, which, without some seasonable address, might possibly spread, and break out into fresh disorder; I hope it will be taken in good part that I thus venture to commit my sentiments to the examination of every friend of order.

I beg leave to conclude by observing, that whatever opinions we may hold with respect to the British Parliament, I have never yet heard it doubted, whether we are not bound to the King by the most sacred tie of allegiance; and I trust we shall all join hand and heart in proving ourselves, as we have always hitherto been, among the most loyal of his subjects.

CIVIS.

OFFICERS OF ALBEMARLE VOLUNTEERS TO COLONEL GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Charlottesville, April 29, 1775.

SIR: The County of Albemarle in general, and the Gentlemen Volunteers in particular, are truly alarmed and highly incensed with the unjustifiable proceedings of Lord Dunmore, who, we are informed, has clandestinely taken possession of our ammunition lodged in the Magazine. We should have attended at Fredericksburgh, in order to have proceeded to Williamsburgh to demand a return of the powder, had the alarm reached us before an account of security being given for its delivery. However, to assure you and the world of our readiness and willingness to resent any encroachment of arbitrary power, we now declare to you, should it be necessary, that the First Company of Independents for Albemarle will attend in Williamsburgh, properly equipped, and prepared to enforce an immediate delivery of the powder, (if not to be obtained otherwise) or die in the attempt. With respect, we remain ready to obey your commands.

CHARLES LEWIS, Captain,
GEORGE GILMER, Lieutenant,
JOHN MARKS, Second Lieutenant.

P. S. The Company will stand under arms all day on Tuesday waiting your answer.

FREDERICKSBURGH (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

Saturday, April 29, 1775.

At a Council of one hundred and two Members, Delegates of the Provincial Convention, Officers, and special Deputies of fourteen Companies of Light-Horse, consisting of upwards of six hundred well-armed and disciplined men, friends of Constitutional Liberty and America, now rendezvoused here in consequence of an alarm occasioned by the Powder being removed from the County Magazine, in the City of Williamsburgh, in the night of Thursday the 21st instant, and deposited on board an armed Schooner, by order of his Excellency the Governour:

The Council having before them the several matters of intelligence respecting this transaction, and particularly a Letter from the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, Speaker of the late House of Burgesses of Virginia, received here last night by an express despatched to Williamsburgh for the purpose of gaining intelligence, informing that the gentlemen of the City of Williamsburgh and neighbourhood have had full assurance from his Excellency that this affair will be accommodated, and advising that the gentlemen assembled here should proceed no further at this time. This Council came to the following determination, and offer the same as their advice to those publick spirited gentlemen, friends to British Liberty and America, who have honoured them by this appointment: Highly condemning the conduct of the Governour on this occasion, as impolitic, and justly alarming to the good people of this Colony, tending to destroy all confidence in Government, and to widen the unhappy breach between Great Britain and her Colonies, ill-timed and totally unnecessary, consider this instance as a full proof, that no opinion which may be formed of the good intentions of a Governour in private life, can afford security to our injured and oppressed Country; but that obedience to arbitrary and ministerial mandates, and the most tyrannical and oppressive system of Government, must be the fatal line of conduct of all His Majesty's present servants in America. At the same time justly dreading the horrors of a civil war, influenced by motives of the strongest affection to our fellow-subjects of Great Britain, most ardently wishing to heal our mutual wounds, and therefore preferring peaceable measures, whilst the least hope of reconciliation remains, do advise that the several companies now rendezvoused here do return to their respective homes; but considering the just rights and liberty of America to be greatly endangered by the violent and hostile proceedings of an arbitrary Ministry, and being firmly resolved to resist such attempts at the utmost hazard of our lives and fortunes, we do now pledge ourselves to each other to be in readiness, at a moment's warning, to reassemble, and by force of arms, to defend the Law, the Liberty, and Rights of this or any sister Colony, from unjust and wicked invasion.

Ordered, That expresses be despatched to the Troops assembled at the Bowling Green, and also to the Companies from Frederick, Berkley, Dunmore, and such other Counties as are now on their march, to return them thanks for their cheerful offer of service, and to acquaint them with the determination now taken.

GOD SAVE THE LIBERTIES OF AMERICA.

The foregoing Determination of Council having been read at the head of each Company, was cordially and unanimously approved.

JOHN DICKINSON TO ARTHUR LEE.

Fairhill, April 29, 1775.

DEAR SIR: The "immedicabile vulnus" is at length struck. The rescript to our Petition is written in blood. The impious war of tyranny against innocence has commenced in the neighbourhood of Boston.

We have not yet received any authentick accounts, but I will briefly mention the most material parts of the relations that have reached us.

General Gage having lately received despatches from England, gave orders on Saturday, the 15th of this month, that the Grenadiers and Light-Infantry should be excused from duty until further orders. Some of the inhabitants of the Town being alarmed by this circumstance, observed between ten and eleven o'clock on Tuesday night following, those bodies to be moving with great silence towards that water which is usually crossed in going to Cambridge. Notice of this movement was immediately conveyed into the country. The Troops mentioned embarked in boats, and landed at Cambridge, about four or five miles from Boston. From thence they marched, on Wednesday the 19th, in the morning, to Lexington, about twelve miles from Boston. At this place they found some Provincials exercising. The commander of the party ordered them to disperse. They did not. One of them said he was on his own ground; that they injured no person, and could not hurt any one, for they had no ammunition with them. The word was given, and the brave Britons, emulating no doubt the glorious achievements of their ancestors, gallantly gave fire upon those who were exercising, killed some, and put the rest to flight. This victory was gained by the Grenadiers and Light-Infantry, without the assistance of any other corps, though their numbers, it is said, did not exceed a thousand, and the Provincials amounted to at least, as it is reported, twenty-five or thirty men!

From Lexington the victors pursued their march to Concord, about twenty miles from Boston, where they destroyed a small Magazine, and set fire to the Court-House. By this time two or three hundred of the inhabitants were collected, and an engagement began. The Troops soon retreated, and lost two pieces of cannon, which they had seized.

General Gage receiving intelligence of this engagement, or of the murder at Lexington, between eight and nine o'clock on Wednesday morning, sent out a Brigade under Lord Percy, consisting of the Marines, the Welsh Fusiliers, the fourth, thirty-eighth, and forty-seventh Regiments, with two field-pieces. The Grenadiers and Light-Infantry, still retreating, met his Lordship advancing to their relief; but the place of meeting is uncertain, supposed to be about five or six miles from Boston. The numbers of the country people being also now increased, a very warm contest ensued. The Provincials fought as desperate men. The Regulars bore the attack awhile, still retreating, but at length broke, and retired in the utmost confusion to a hill called Bunker's Hill, not far from Charlestown, which place is situated opposite to Boston, on the other side of Charles River. About a mile from the hill, one vessel-of-war, if not more, was stationed to cover the retreat into Charlestown down to the water-side, in order to pass over to Boston. In the retreat of this one mile, it is said the Regulars lost twelve officers and two hundred privates. The Provincials, afraid of the shipping's firing on Charlestown, and of hurting the Town's people, stopped the pursuit.

On the whole, the accounts say the Regulars had about five hundred men killed, and many are wounded and prisoners. The advices by several expresses are positive, that Lord Percy is killed, which gives great and general grief here, and also General Haldimand, the two first in command; that a wagon loaded with powder and ball, another with provisions, and the field-pieces attending the reinforcement, are taken. It is added that a party of three hundred sent out to Marshfield, are cut off and taken to a man. Several letters from Boston mention that the officers returned there, several of whom are wounded, declare they never were in hotter service. The whole of the fight lasted about seven hours. Part of it was seen from the hill in Boston.

I cannot say I am convinced of the truth of all the particulars above-mentioned, though some of them are supported by many probabilities. But these facts I believe you may depend on: that this most unnatural and inexpressibly cruel war began with the butchery of the unarmed Americans at Lexington; that the Provincials, incredible as it may be at St. James or St. Stephen's, fought bravely; that the Regulars have been defeated with considerable slaughter, though they behaved resolutely; that a Tory dare not open his mouth against the cause of America, even at New-York; that the Continent is preparing most assiduously for a vigorous resistance; and that freedom, or an honourable death, are the only objects on which their souls are at present employed.

What human policy can divine the prudence of precipitating us into these shocking scenes? Why have we rashly been declared rebels? Why have directions been sent to disarm us? Why orders to commence hostilities? Why was not General Gage at least restrained from hostilities until the sense of another Congress could be collected? It was the determined resolution of some, already appointed Delegates for it, to have strained every nerve at that meeting to attempt bringing the unhappy dispute to terms of accommodation, safe for the Colonies, and honourable and advantageous for our Mother Country, in whose prosperity and glory our hearts take as large a share as any Minister's of State, and from as just and as generous motives, to say no more of them.

But what topicks of reconciliation are now left for men who think as I do, to address our countrymen? To recommend reverence for the Monarch, or affection for the Mother Country? Will the distinctions between the Prince and his Ministers, between the People and their Representatives, wipe out the stain of blood? Or have we the slightest reason to hope that those Ministers and Representatives will not be supported throughout the tragedy, as they have been through the first act? No. While we revere and love our Mother Country, her sword is opening our veins. The same delusions will still prevail, till France and Spain, if not other Powers, long jealous of Britain's force and fame, will fall upon her, embarrassed with an exhausting civil war, and crush, or at least depress her; then turn their arms on these Provinces, which must submit to wear their chains, or wade through seas of blood to a dear-bought and at best a frequently convulsed and precarious independence.

All the ministerial intelligence concerning us is false. We are a united, resolved people; are, or quickly shall be, well armed and disciplined; our smiths and powder-mills are at work day and night; our supplies from foreign parts continually arriving. Good officers, that is, well-experienced ones, we shall soon have, and the Navy of Great Britain cannot stop our whole trade. Our Towns are but brick and stone, and mortar and wood; they, perhaps, may be destroyed; they are only the hairs of our heads; if sheared ever so close, they will grow again. We compare them not with our rights and liberties. We worship as our fathers worshipped, not idols which our hands have made.

I am, dear Sir, your sincerely affectionate friend,

JOHN DICKINSON.

New-York, April 29, 1775.

The following publication, under the initial letters of my name, having appeared in an English Paper of the 27th of January, I take this opportunity to declare that it is altogether a malicious forgery, calculated to inflame the minds of my countrymen, and expose me to undeserved suspicion and distrust.

OLIVER DE LANCEY.

"The following is a copy of a Letter written by O . . . R DE L . . . Y to a person high in Administration:

"SIR: The Resolutions of the Congress will never be observed; the Delegates themselves are ashamed of them, and many are studying ways to elude them. The people attached to Government, Sir, in this City, laugh at their Resolutions, and the most flaming zealots despise themselves for passing them. On occasion of the Stamp Act confederacies were formed, which treachery among themselves soon put an end to. There cannot be a doubt, Sir, but a similar defection will soon show how little may be depended on from the Resolutions of the Congress. In such defection this City will take the lead, and in which my influence shall be exerted, and may be relied on. Five of the Provinces are already preparing to violate their Resolutions.

"I beg leave to say that Government are extremely mistaken, if they are alarmed at a Congress like that at Philadelphia. I was born in this City, and am well acquainted with the other Colonies, from whose opposition Government has nothing to fear, except from New-England; and as a dutiful subject to the Crown; I hope that they will meet a punishment suitable to their rebellion. This Province of New-York and Pennsylvania are most attached to the Crown and Parliament; and to the keeping them so, I hope I have some merit, together with my relations and connexions, of whom many are in the Assembly and Council; but notwithstanding, I would advise the keeping two Regiments here. I was not in Town when the packet arrived. Your favour I shall have the honour to answer per next opportunity. The Deputies from this City in the Congress were some of the meanest of the people.

"New-York, December 3, 1774."

At Mr. De Lancey's request, we have perused several Letters from him to persons in England, which he declared to us upon his honour were all he had written on political subjects during the present disturbances. These Letters, far from exciting violent measures against America, are calculated to discourage all hostile proceedings, and represent the Colonies as firmly resolved to submit to no Parliamentary taxation.

JAMES DUANE,
JOHN JAY.

New-York, April 29, 1775.

TO THE PUBLICK.

Westchester County, New-York, April 29, 1775.

We, the subscribers, do hereby make this publick declaration: That whereas we and several others in Westchester County, having signed a certain number of Resolves, which, at the time of our said signing, we deemed constitutional, and as having a tendency to promote the interest of our Country; but since, upon mature deliberation and more full knowledge of the matter, find not only injurious to our present cause, but likewise offensive to our fellow-Colonists: We do therefore thus publickly testify our abhorrence of the same, and declare ourselves friends to the Colonies, and ever ready cheerfully to exert ourselves in the defence and preservation of the same.

JONATHAN FOWLER, Esquire,
GEORGE CORNWELL, Esquire.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF BOSTON.

Boston, April 29, 1775.

SIR: We wrote you yesterday, and were in hopes of an answer, more especially as we find you have this day wrote a letter to Town, part of which has been communicated to the Committee, upon which we beg leave to observe, that it is very desirable to us that you would comply with our request of making proclamation or notification to such persons as may incline to come into Boston with their effects, as it must expedite the removal of our inhabitants, with their effects, from the Town of Boston; but to determine how many days will be necessary to effect this removal, is utterly impracticable. Those persons who are here from the country, and have left their effects behind, we desire may be permitted to send their servants to put them up and convey them to Boston without molestation; and that the Selectmen may be informed to whom they may direct such persons to apply for permits.

You will receive this by the hands of Mr. Payne, who, being one of the Committee, we refer you to him for more particular information. We are, very respectfully, your most humble servants,

JOHN SCOLLAY, SAML. AUSTIN,
EZEK. GOLDTHWAIT, EDWD. PAYNE,
THOS. MARSHALL, JOHN PITTS.

To Doctor Joseph Warren, Chairman of the Committee of Congress.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE COMMITTEES OF THE SEVERAL TOWNS.

Cambridge, April 29, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: As many of the persons now in camp came from their respective Towns, without any expectation of tarrying any time, and are now under the necessity of returning, this is to desire that you would, with the utmost haste, send other persons to supply their places for a few days, until the enlistments are complete, and the men sent down to us. We pray you immediately to set about this business, as the most fatal consequences must follow, if we should be reduced to so weak a state as that the Army under General Gage may be able to issue out of the Town, and spread destruction through this Country, and we think none can be unwilling to come for a few days to relieve their brethren, who have been absent from their families. We are, &c.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE SEVERAL TOWNS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Cambridge, April 29, 1775.

One half of the Militia and Minute-Men in your Town are hereby ordered forthwith to march to the Town of . . . , as we have information that General Gage designs speedily to sally out of the Town of Boston with a detachment of his Army. You are therefore not to lose one moment's time, but come instantly to the support of your brethren, and the half to hold themselves in complete readiness to march upon the slightest notice.

We are, &c.

SAMUEL THOMPSON TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Brunswick, Maine, April 29, 1775.

I this minute have an opportunity to inform you of the state of our affairs at the eastward, that we are all staunch for country, except three men, and one of them is deserted. The other two are in irons. As for the vessels which attempted to convey stuff to our enemies, are stopped, and I am about to move about two hundred of white pine masts and other stuff got for our enemies' use. Sir, having heard of the cruel murders they have done in our Province makes us more resolute than ever; and finding that the sword is drawn first on their side, that we shall be animated with that noble spirit that wise men ought to be, until our just rights and liberties are secured to us. Sir, my heart is with every true son of America, though my person can be in but one place at once, though very soon I hope to be with you on the spot. If any of my friends inquire after me, inform them that I make it my whole business to pursue those measures recommended by the Congresses. We being upon the sea-coast, and in danger of being invaded by pirates, as on the 27th instant, there was a boat or barge came into our harbour and river, and sounding as they went up the river.

Sir, as powder and guns are wanted in this eastern part, and also provisions, pray Sir, have you thought something on this matter against I arrive, which will be as soon as business will admit. Sir, I am, with the greatest regard to the country, at heart your ready friend and humble servant,

SAMUEL THOMPSON.

MEETING OF THE INHABITANTS OF LONDONDERRY, NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of Londonderry, on the 29th of April, Colonel Stephen Holland personally appeared and made the following Declaration, upon which the inhabitants of said Town voted unanimously, that it was satisfactory to them for his past conduct.

Attest: JOHN BELL, Town Clerk.

"Whereas through mistake, misunderstanding, misrepresentation, or for reasons unknown to me, I am represented an enemy to my Country: to satisfy the publick, I solemnly declare I never aided or assisted any enemy to my Country in any thing whatsoever; and that I make this Declaration not out of fear of any thing I may suffer, but because it gives me the greatest uneasiness to think that the true sons of liberty, and real friends to their Country, (from any of the first mentioned reasons,) should believe me capable so much as in thought of injuring or betraying my Country, when the truth is, I am ready to assist my countrymen in the glorious cause of liberty, at the risk of my life and fortune.

"STEPHEN HOLLAND.

"Londonderry, April 29, 1775."

ALEXANDER SPOTSWOOD TO COL. GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Fredericksburgh, April 30, 1775.

SIR: It is imagined, that the first thing which will come on the carpet at the meeting of Congress, will be that of establishing regular armies throughout the Continent on pay. If such a thing should take place, there is not the least doubt that you will have the command of the whole forces in this Colony. In that case, I shall ever esteem you as my best friend, if you will use your interest in procuring me a commission; or, should the power of appointing officers be vested in you, and you should think proper to confer so great an honour on me, as qualifying me to be one of your officers, you will find me, as I have always been, ready to serve my Country gratis in the glorious cause of liberty, at the risk of my life and fortune.

I am extremely glad to inform you, that, after a long debate, it was at last agreed we should not march to Williamsburgh. I am, with respect, &c.

ALEXANDER SPOTSWOOD.

TO THE RESPECTABLE PUBLICK.

New-York, April 30, 1775.

Johannes Slegt, Chairman of the Committee of Ulster County, has published me as an enemy to my Country for selling Tea, in which is set forth, that all the Merchants and Skippers had signed articles, in which they agreed not to sell Tea. This is absolutely false, for there are more which have not signed for the very reasons I had, and the Committee knew that they had not all signed at the time of publishing this piece of malice. It is known in Kingston, that I was for maintaining the Association, and that I offered to sign the third article, which I would abide by, but that the Committee would not agree to it; moreover, that the Committee in New-York had determined that no Tea should be sold, and that I would quit selling it. It was reported by one of the members of the Committee, on the day of meeting, that he had purchased Tea at my house. Johannes Slegt continued drinking Tea after the 1st of March, in direct violation of the Association; and John Beekman did confess at the meeting, that he had a quantity of Tea, and intended that it should be made use of in his family, contrary to the Association. This I could not but consider as a great piece of chicanery, that the sale of Tea should be prohibited, and others declare that they would continue to use it in their families, when the Association expressly mentions, that they shall not purchase nor use it. I told those gentlemen that I would refer the matter to the consideration of the Committee at New-York, and would firmly adhere to their explanation of the third article of the Association, which I must confess I did not think prohibited the selling of Tea, and that the Non-Consumption Agreement was only intended to preserve the Non-Importation Agreement. The report that I am unfriendly to the cause of liberty, and had given an affront to the Committee of New-York, is a most villanous falsehood. And as it is agreed upon by the well wishers of American liberty, not to purchase nor use any Tea in their families, I am determined to abide by such their agreement.

JACOBUS LOW.

LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN NOW AT NEW-YORK TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE IN PORTSMOUTH, NEW-HAMPSHIRE, DATED APRIL 30, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: At this time of general confusion through the Colonies, nothing can give greater pleasure to every well-wisher to his Country, than the unanimity that takes place through the Continent, more especially at this City; as it is evident (from a number of private letters from London) that Administration have put the greatest dependance on the Yorkers breaking with the other Colonies. But notwithstanding all the endeavours of designing men, I have the pleasure to inform you, that by the notable struggles of the sons of freedom, all difficulties are surmounted, and nothing can equal the determined spirit of the people here. Yesterday about six or seven thousand men were out on the plain, among whom were some families who have been in the opposition; one and all unanimously voted to defend their liberties, &c., at all hazards. They have stopped clearing to the Custom-House, have taken all the city arms and ammunition from the Hall and Magazine; every preparation is making to completely arm the inhabitants; great numbers of people are employed hauling the cannon from the City to King's bridge, about fourteen miles, where they will immediately intrench. All denominations are under arms, and in high spirits. It is the opinion of almost every one in this place that the Acts of Parliament would have been repealed, had it not been for the encouragement given Administration by this place, that the Colonies would break their union. No people can be more despised, nor more frightened than those here who have been inimical to their Country, particularly the eleven Members of the House. Mr. Rivington has made a recantation; President Cooper has decamped; and it was with much difficulty the people were prevented from taking the lives of those who they have considered as traitors to their Country. All Government seems to be laid aside. The City is now to be regulated by a Committee of Safety, consisting of one hundred worthy men. Though there was a number of large vessels, loaded with wheat and flour, and cleared out, and many partly loaded . . . It was nobly done; immediately stopt every vessel. The New-England men are held in the highest esteem for their bravery, and people here are determined to supply provisions, and march to their assistance when called for. The die is thrown, and every man of us, whether we are hearty in the cause or not, must abide by the cast; and as we are all considered as rebels, (not by the Nation, but by a . . . Ministry,) let us one and all (which they are determined on this way) stand forth boldly; which will most certainly, under God, insure us success, and that soon.

TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Killingsworth, April 30, 1775. }
Nine o'clock, P. M. }

SIR: This moment Captain Caldwell came over to me from Guildford, where I have a vessel loaded for the West-Indies, having all her cargo on board, consisting of forty thousand lumber, twenty-three oxen, and one horse, having on board no provisions but for the use of said vessel, which was cleared at the Custom-House on the twenty-fourth instant, and informed me that the honourable General Assembly have embargoed all vessels bound to the West-Indies with stock and other provisions. As I have the good of my Country at heart, and pay the greatest regard to the resolves and determinations of the Legislature of this Colony, I would by no means do any thing that should have the remotest appearance of acting counter to their determinations; but your Honour must be sensible the unshipping my cattle and stores must be attended with great loss, as the stock is by no means fit for a present market. I humbly request my said vessel may be permitted to sail, as I had not the least suspicion of an embargo, and have only waited several days for a wind. I would have waited myself on your Honour, but my present indisposition would not permit; and for the purpose of obtaining permission, my son now waits on your Honour, on whose goodness I greatly rely; and am your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,

THEOPHILUS MORGAN.

General Assembly, April, 1775. }
In the Upper House. }

His Honour the Governour is desired to grant a permit to Mr. Theophilus Morgan, that his vessel may proceed on its voyage according to the request in the within letter.

Test: GEORGE WYLLYS, Secretary.

Concurred in in the Lower House.

Test: RICHARD LAW, Clerk.

COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO THE SELECTMEN OF BOSTON.

Cambridge, April 30, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: Enclosed you have a Resolve of Congress, which we hope will remove every obstacle to the removal of our friends from Boston. The necessity of going from this Town to Watertown, in order to lay the proposals of this Committee before the Provincial Congress, we hope will suggest to you an apology for any supposed delay. But be assured that no person now in Boston is more sensible of the distress, nor more desirous of relieving our brethren there, than the members of this Committee. Encouragement will be given to-morrow to the wagoners in the country, to repair to Boston to give all possible assistance to our friends, in the removal of their effects. I wrote yesterday to General Gage upon the subject, and requested him to take into consideration the expediency of restraining the country from sending in more than thirty wagons at one time, but I have received no answer. If I should receive any, the contents, so far as they respect my ever-adored Town of Boston, shall be communicated to you. We are, &c.

TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY FOR MASSACHUSETTS.

Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, April 30, 1775.

There is much probability that the last mail from England for General Gage passed through Northampton, eastward or northward, yesterday about twelve o'clock. It may be that it may pass up the river as far as Northfield, before it steers its course from the sea-shore. Probably its direction may be to Portsmouth or Salem. No one will judge that it will attempt to enter Boston directly. No doubt the bearer will be several times shifted before its arrival to the place of destination. The people of Northampton yesterday knew nothing that there was any suspicion of the mail's passing by land. The circumstances which make up the evidence that a traveller who passed this Town yesterday was the bearer of the mail, are too many to be mentioned. He undoubtedly came from Hudson's River to Northampton, whether in a direct or oblique course, is not yet made certain. The suspected bearer, who was at Northampton, does not altogether answer the description given in the New-York letter of the probable bearer from them, but many think it more likely that they would attempt to get the mail along by some acquainted up the river, in the County of Cumberland, than by Oliver De Lancey, Jun.

Quere. Whether it is not expedient to search every suspicious person passing as far northward as any road leading from Connecticut River to Portsmouth.

BENEDICT ARNOLD TO THE MASSACHUSETTS COMMITTEE OF SAFETY.

Cambridge, April 30, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: You have desired me to state the number of cannon, &c., at Ticonderoga. I have certain information that there are at Ticonderoga eighty pieces of heavy cannon, twenty brass guns, from four to eighteen pounders, and ten to twelve large mortars. At Skenesborough, on the South-Bay, there are three or four brass cannon. The Fort is in a ruinous condition, and has not more than fifty men at the most. There are large numbers of small arms, and considerable stores, and a sloop of seventy or eighty tons on the lake. The place could not hold out an hour against a vigorous onset. Your most obedient servant,

BENEDICT ARNOLD.

Honourable Joseph Warren, and the honourable Committee of Safety.

MASSACHUSETTS COMMITTEE OF SAFETY TO NEW-YORK COMMITTEE.

Cambridge, April 30, 1775.

It has been proposed to us to take possession of the Fortress at Ticonderoga. We have a just sense of the importance of that fortification, and the usefulness of those fine cannon, mortars, and field-pieces which are there; but we would not, even upon this emergency, infringe upon the rights of our sister Colony, New-York. But we have desired the gentleman, who carries this letter, to represent the matter to you, that you may give such orders as are agreeable to you.

We are, with the greatest respect, your most obedient servants,

JOSEPH WARREN, Chairman.

To Alexander McDougall.

MEETING OF FREEHOLDERS OF KING WILLIAM COUNTY, VIRGINIA.

At a meeting of the Freeholders of the County of King William, at the Court-House, on Monday the first of May, Carter Braxton and William Aylett, Esquires, were unanimously chosen their Delegates to represent them in Convention for one year, from the date hereof.

A subscription being then opened for the relief of our brethren in Massachusetts-Bay, and it being thought highly necessary, at this important crisis, that supplies should be sent to them, and money being the only means by which that relief could be afforded with certainty, the sum of one hundred and seventy-five Pounds was immediately contributed, and it is expected that a much larger sum will be given, when collections are made from the whole County.

PENNSYLVANIA ASSEMBLY.

Monday, May 1, 1775.

The House met pursuant to their adjournment.

Ordered, That Mr. Gray and Mr. Hillegas wait on the Governour, and acquaint him that a quorum of the Representatives being met, they are ready to receive any business his Honour may be pleased to lay before them.

Mr. Charles Thomson laid before the House a Letter from *William Bolla*n, Benjamin Franklin, and Arthur Lee, Esquires, dated London, February 5, 1775, which was read by order, and is as follows, viz:

SIR: Our last letter informed you that the King had declared his intention of laying the Petition before his two Houses of Parliament. It has accordingly been laid before each House, but undistinguished among a variety of letters and other papers from America.

A motion made by Lord Chatham, to withdraw the Troops from Boston, as the first step towards a conciliating plan, was rejected; and the Ministry have declared, in both Houses, the determination to enforce obedience to all the late laws. For this purpose, we understand that three Regiments of Foot, one of Dragoons, seven hundred Marines, six Sloops-of-War and two Frigates, are now under orders for America.

We think it proper to inform you that your cause was well defended by a considerable number of good and wise men in both Houses of Parliament, though far from being a majority, and that many of the commercial and manufacturing parts of the Nation, concerned in the American Trade, have presented, or, as we understand, are preparing to present Petitions to Parliament, declaring their great concern for the present unhappy controversies with America, and praying expressly, or in effect, for healing measures, as the proper means of preserving their commerce, now greatly suffering or endangered. But the treatment the Petitions already presented have hitherto received, is such as, in our opinion, can afford you no reliance on any present relief through their means.

As soon as we learned that the Petition of the Congress was before the House of Commons, we thought it our duty to support it, if we might be permitted so to do, as there was no other opportunity for the numerous inhabitants of the Colonies to be heard in defence of their rights. Accordingly we joined in a Petition for that purpose. Sir George Savile kindly undertook to present it, but on previously opening the purport of it, as the order is, a debate arose on the propriety of receiving it, and, on a division, it was rejected by a great majority.

The following extract of a letter from General Gage to Lord Dartmouth, as laid before Parliament, we think it our duty to transmit, viz:

"December 15, 1774.—Your Lordship's idea of disarming certain Provinces would doubtless be consistent with prudence and safety, but it neither is, nor has been practicable, without having recourse to force, and being masters of the Country."

It was thrown out in debate by a principal member of Administration, that it would be proper to alter the Charters of Connecticut and Rhode-Island.

Enclosed we send you a copy of the Resolutions passed in a Committee of the Whole House on Thursday last, which are to be reported on Monday.* It is said that these

* That it is the opinion of this Committee, that an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, to return His Majesty our most humble thanks for having been most graciously pleased to communicate to this House the several papers relating to the present state of the British Colonies in America, which, by His Majesty's commands, have been laid before this House, and from which, after taking them into our most serious consideration, we find that a part of His Majesty's subjects, in the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay, have proceeded so far to resist the authority of the Supreme Legislature, that a rebellion at this time actually exists within the said Province, and we see, with the utmost concern, that they have been countenanced and encouraged by unlawful combinations and engagements, entered into by His Majesty's subjects in several of the other Colonies, to the injury and oppression of many of their innocent fellow-subjects, resident within the Kingdom of Great

Resolutions are to be the foundation of several Bills to be brought in; but the purport of these Bills we have not yet learned with sufficient certainty.

We send you likewise a copy of Lord Chatham's first motion in the House of Lords, and of his plan of a Bill for settling the troubles between Britain and her Colonies, both which were rejected on the first reading.

With great respect, we are, Sir, your most obedient humble servants,

WM. BOLLAN,
B. FRANKLIN,
ARTHUR LEE."

The Members appointed to wait on the Governour with the Message of the House, reported they had delivered the same according to order, and that his Honour was pleased to say he should lay some business before the House shortly.

The House adjourned to ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

May 2, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The Governour, by Mr. Secretary, sent down a written Message to the House, together with a copy of a Resolution of the House of Commons, passed the 20th of February last, which were read by order, and are as they respectively follow, viz:

A Message from the Governour to the Assembly.

GENTLEMEN: I have ordered the Secretary to lay before you a Resolution† entered into by the British House of Britain and the rest of His Majesty's Dominions. This conduct, on their part, appears to us the more inexcusable, when we consider with how much temper His Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament have acted in support of the laws and Constitution of Great Britain. To declare that we can never so far desert the trust reposed in us as to relinquish any part of the sovereign authority over all His Majesty's Dominions, which by law is vested in His Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, and that the conduct of many persons in several of the Colonies during the late disturbances, is alone sufficient to convince us how necessary this power is for the protection of the lives and fortunes of all His Majesty's subjects; that we ever have been, and always shall be, ready to pay attention and regard to any real grievances of any of His Majesty's subjects, which shall, in a dutiful and constitutional manner, be laid before us; and whenever any of the Colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence; but that at the same time we consider it as our indispensable duty, humbly to beseech His Majesty that His Majesty will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the Supreme Legislature; and that we beg leave, in the most solemn manner, to assure His Majesty, that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by His Majesty against all rebellious attempts in the maintenance of the just rights of His Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament.

Ayes, two hundred and ninety-six; noes, one hundred and six.

Amendment proposed to leave out from the first [and] to the end of the question, and insert [to assure His Majesty, that in order to fix the true dignity of his Crown, and the authority of Parliament on a sure foundation, we shall endeavour to recover the hearts of his subjects in America, too many of whom are unhappily alienated from their usual affection to their Mother Country, by endeavouring to remove all those causes of jealousy and apprehension which have arisen from an unfortunate management of His Majesty's affairs, and from acts of the last Parliament, made without sufficient information of the true state of America.]

Question put, that the words proposed to be left out stand part of this question? Ayes, three hundred and four; noes, one hundred and five.

† The Resolution of the House of Commons.

Luna, 20^o Die Februarii, 1775.—The House in a Committee on the American Papers, motion made and question proposed,

That it is the opinion of this Committee, that when the Governour, Council, and Assembly, or General Court, of any of His Majesty's Provinces or Colonies in America shall propose to make provision, according to the condition, circumstances, and situation of such Province or Colony, for contributing their proportion to the common defence, (such proportion to be raised under the authority of the General Court or General Assembly of such Province or Colony, and disposable by Parliament,) and shall engage to make provision also for the support of the civil Government, and the administration of justice in such Province or Colony, it will be proper, if such proposal shall be approved by His Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, and for so long as such provision shall be made accordingly, to forbear, in respect of such Province or Colony, to levy any duty, tax, or assessment, or to impose any further duty, tax, or assessment, except only such duties as it may be expedient to continue to levy or impose for the regulation of Commerce, the nett produce of the duties last mentioned to be carried to the account of such Province or Colony respectively.

Commons the twentieth of February last, relative to the unhappy differences subsisting between our Mother Country and her American Colonies. You will perceive by this Resolve not only a strong disposition manifested by that august body to remove the causes which have given rise to the discontents and complaints of His Majesty's subjects in the Colonies, and the dreadful impending evils likely to ensue from them, but that they have pointed out the terms on which they think it just and reasonable a final accommodation should be grounded.

Let me earnestly entreat you, gentlemen, to weigh and consider this plan of reconciliation held forth and offered by the parent to her children, with that temper, calmness, and deliberation, that the importance of the subject and the present critical situation of affairs demand. Give me leave to observe, that the Colonies, amidst all those complaints which a jealousy of their liberties has occasioned, have never denied the justice or equity of their contributing towards the burdens of the Mother Country, to whose protection and care they owe not only their present opulence, but even their very existence. On the contrary, every state and representation of their supposed grievances that I have seen, avows the propriety of such a measure, and their willingness to comply with it.

The dispute, then, appears to me to be brought to this point: Whether the redress of any grievances the Colonists have reason to complain of, shall precede, or be postponed to the settlement of that just proportion which America should bear towards the common support and defence of the whole British Empire.

You have, in the Resolution of the House of Commons, which I have authority to tell you is entirely approved by His Majesty, a solemn declaration that an exemption from any duty, tax, or assessment, present or future, except such duties as may be expedient for the regulation of Commerce, shall be the immediate consequence of proposals on the part of any of the Colony Legislatures, accepted by His Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, to make provision, according to their respective circumstances, for contributing their proportion to the common defence, and the support of the civil Government of each Colony.

I will not do you so much injustice, gentlemen, as to suppose you can desire a better security for the inviolable performance of this engagement, than the Resolve itself, and His Majesty's approbation of it gives you.

As you are the first Assembly on the Continent to whom this Resolution has been communicated, much depends on the moderation and wisdom of your counsels; and you will be deservedly revered to the latest posterity, if, by any possible means, you can be instrumental in restoring the publick tranquillity, and rescuing both Countries from the dreadful calamities of a civil war.

JOHN PENN.

May 2, 1775.

A Remonstrance from a number of Farmers and Millers in the County of Bucks, respecting an alteration of the sizes of Flour-Barrels, was presented to the House and read.

Ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. Speaker laid before the House a Letter received in their recess from the Speaker of the House of Assembly of the Colony of New-York, with sundry Papers therein referred to, which were read by order, and the said Letter is as follows, viz:

"New-York, April 10, 1775.

"SIR: By an order of the General Assembly of this Colony, I am directed to transmit you the enclosed papers upon the subject of the unhappy situation of American affairs; they contain a List of Grievances, with the Resolutions of the House in consequence thereof, and also a Petition to the King, a Memorial to the House of Lords, and a Representation and Remonstrance to the Commons of Great Britain. I am also directed to request of you to lay the same before the House of Assembly of your Colony at their first meeting after the receipt hereof. I shall only add that our Assembly stands adjourned until the third day of May next, and that I am, respectfully, Sir, your most humble servant,

"JOHN CRUGER, Speaker.

"To the Speaker of the General Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania."

May 3, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment, and taking into consideration the Governour's Message of yesterday, with the Resolution of the House of Commons attending it, after some debate thereon, Ordered, That Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Charles Thomson, Mr. Brown, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Webb, Mr. Ewing, Mr. Allen, Mr. Chreist, Mr. Edmonds, Mr. Dougherty, Mr. Hunter, and Mr. William Thompson, be a Committee to essay and bring in a draught of an Answer to the said Message.

May 4, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The Committee appointed to prepare and bring in a draught of an Answer to the Governour's Message reported an Essay for that purpose, which being read by paragraphs, and after some alteration, agreed to by the House, was ordered to be transcribed.

The Answer of the House to the Governour's Message being transcribed according to order, was again read, signed by the Speaker, and follows in these words, viz:

Answer to the Governour's Message from the House.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: We have taken into our serious consideration your Message of the second instant, and the Resolution of the British House of Commons therein referred to.

Having "weighed and considered this plan with the temper, calmness, and deliberation that the importance of the subject and the present critical situation of affairs demand," we are sincerely sorry that we cannot "think the terms pointed out" afford "a just and reasonable ground for a final accommodation" between Great Britain and the Colonies.

Your Honour observes, "that the Colonies, amidst all those complaints which a jealousy of their liberties has occasioned, have never denied the justice or equity of contributing towards the burdens of the Mother Country;" but your Honour must know, that they have ever unanimously asserted it as their indisputable right, that all aids from them should be their own free and voluntary gifts, not taken by force nor extorted by fear.

Under which of these descriptions the "plan held forth and offered by the parent to her children" at this time, with its attendant circumstances, deserves to be classed, we choose rather to submit to the determination of your Honour's good sense, than to attempt proving by the enumeration of notorious facts, or the repetition of obvious reasons.

If no other objection to "the plan" proposed occurred to us, we should esteem it a dishonourable desertion of sister Colonies, connected by an union founded on just motives and mutual faith, and conducted by General Councils, for a single Colony to adopt a measure so extensive in consequence, without the advice and consent of those Colonies engaged with us by solemn ties in the same common cause.

For we wish your Honour to be assured, that we can form no prospect appearing reasonable to us, of any lasting advantages for Pennsylvania, however agreeable they may be at the beginning, but what must arise from a communication of rights and prosperity with the other Colonies; and that if such a prospect should be opened to us, we have too sincere an affection for our brethren, and too strict a regard "for the inviolable performance of" our "engagements," to receive any pleasure from benefits equally due to them, yet confined to ourselves, and which, by generously rejecting them at present, may at length be secured to all.

Your Honour is pleased to observe, that as we are "the first Assembly on the Continent to whom this Resolution has been communicated, much depends on the moderation and wisdom of our counsels, and we shall be deservedly revered to the latest posterity, if, by any possible means," we "can be instrumental in restoring the publick tranquillity, and rescuing both Countries from the dreadful calamities of a civil war."

Your Honour, from your long residence and conversation among us, must be persuaded that the people we represent are as peaceable and obedient to Government, as true and faithful to their Sovereign, and as affectionate and dutiful to their superiour State, as any in the world; and though we are not inattentive to the approbation of "posterity," as it might reflect honour upon our Country, yet higher motives have taught us upon all occasions to demonstrate by every testimony our devotion to our King and Parent State.

Still animated by the same principles, and most earnestly desirous of enjoying our former undisturbed condition of dependance and subordination productive of so many blessings to "both Countries," we cannot express the satisfaction we should receive "if, by any possible means," we could "be instrumental in restoring the publick tranquillity." Should such an opportunity offer, we shall endeavour with the utmost diligence and zeal to improve it, and to convince His Majesty and our Mother Country, that we shall ever be ready and willing with our lives and fortunes to support the interests of His Majesty and that Country, by every effort that can be reasonably expected from the most loyal subjects, and the most dutiful Colonists.

Until Divine Providence shall cause, in the course of his dispensations, such a happy period to arrive, we can only deprecate, and, if it be possible, strive by prudence to avoid the "calamities of a civil war;" a dreadful misfortune, indeed, and not to be exceeded but by an utter subversion of the liberties of America. Signed by order of the House:

JOHN MORTON, Speaker.

May 4, 1775.

Ordered, That Mr. Brown and Mr. John Jacobs wait on the Governour and deliver the foregoing Answer to his Message.

A Petition from a considerable number of the inhabitants of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia, was presented to the House and read, setting forth that the Petitioners, deeply affected with a sense of the imminent dangers to which this Province particularly and the Colonies in general are exposed at this instant, are compelled, by the first law dictated by nature, to endeavour to preserve themselves from utter destruction, and therefore look up to the honourable House, the guardians of publick liberty, in whom the people of this Province have reposed the highest trust, for that protection which, under the favour of the Almighty God, it is in their power to afford; that the Petitioners in this contest for freedom and all the blessings attending it, have been greatly encouraged by the firmness, wisdom, and publick spirit of the late and present House of Assembly; and affairs being now reduced to extremity by the commencement of a civil war on this Continent, which, in all probability must, in its course, soon reach Pennsylvania, the Petitioners most humbly and fervently beseech and supplicate the honourable House to grant, raise, and apply with all possible despatch, a sum of money, at least amounting to Fifty Thousand Pounds, towards putting this Province into a state of defence, in such manner as to the House shall appear most proper and effectual.

Ordered to lie on the table.

May 5, 1775.—The House met pursuant to their adjournment.

The Members appointed to wait on the Governour with the Answer of the House to his Message of the second instant, reported they had delivered the same according to order.

The House resumed the consideration of the Petition presented yesterday from the inhabitants of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia, for aid from Government towards putting the Province into a state of defence; and after a debate of some length, adjourned to three o'clock, P. M.

The House met at three o'clock P. M., and proceeded to the consideration of the Petition from the inhabitants of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia, and after further time spent therein, adjourned to ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

May 6, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment. Being acquainted that with Captain Osborne, who arrived yesterday, came passenger Benjamin Franklin, Esquire, late Agent for this Province in London:

Resolved, n. c. d., That the said Benjamin Franklin, Esquire, be, and he is hereby added to the Deputies appointed by this House on the part of Pennsylvania, to attend the Continental Congress expected to meet on the 10th instant in this City.

Resolved, n. c. d., That the Honourable Thomas Willing, Esquire, of Philadelphia, and James Wilson, Esquire, of Carlisle, be also added to the said Deputies for this Province.

Post Meridian, May 9, 1775.—The House resumed the consideration of the Petition from the inhabitants of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia, and after some time spent therein, adjourned to three o'clock, P. M.

Upon motion, the House resumed the consideration of the Draught of Instructions to the Deputies for this Province, brought in at the last sitting, which being considered, and, after some alterations, agreed to by the House, was ordered to be transcribed.

A Petition from the Committee of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia, respecting engagements they have entered into for the publick security, whereby a considerable debt hath accrued, which cannot be discharged without the aid of the Legislature, was presented to the House and read.

Ordered to lie on the table.

The Instructions to the Deputies appointed by this Province to attend the Continental Congress being transcribed according to order, were signed by the Speaker, and follow in these words, viz:

GENTLEMEN: The trust reposed in you is of such a nature, and the modes of executing it may be so diversified in the course of your deliberations, that it is scarcely possible to give you particular instructions respecting it.

We shall, therefore, in general, direct that you meet in Congress the Delegates of the several British Colonies, to be held on the 10th instant, to consult together on the present critical and alarming situation and state of the Colonies, and that you exert your utmost endeavours to agree upon and recommend such further measures as shall afford the best prospect of obtaining redress of American grievances, and restoring that union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies so essential to the welfare and happiness of both Countries.

You are directed to make report of your proceedings to this House at their next sessions after the meeting of the Congress. Signed by order of the House:

JOHN MORTON, Speaker.

May 9, 1775.

The House adjourned to ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

May 11, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment.

Taking again into consideration the Petition from the Committee of the City and Liberties of Philadelphia, after some debate, Ordered, That the Committee of Accounts do examine the Funds of the Province, and report to the House what sum they may immediately draw from thence.

The House adjourned to three o'clock, P. M.

Three o'clock, P. M.—The Committee of Accounts reported that, upon examining the Provincial Funds, they find the sum of Two Thousand Pounds at the disposal of the House.

Upon motion,

Resolved, That George Gray, Michael Hillegas, and Charles Humphreys, Esquires, or any two of them, are hereby authorized and empowered to draw orders on Samuel Preston Moore, Esquire, to the amount of Eighteen Hundred Pounds, out of the Interest Money in his hands, and on the Provincial Treasurer for the sum of Two Hundred Pounds, out of the rents of the Province Island, to be disposed of and applied towards discharging certain engagements lately entered into for the publick security.

The House then adjourned to ten o'clock, to-morrow morning.

May 12, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment.

Upon motion,

Resolved, That Mr. Gray, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Charles Thomson, Mr. Wynkoop, Mr. Wayne, Mr. Slough, Mr. Ewing, Mr. Montgomery, Mr. Edmonds, Mr. Dougherty, Mr. Hunter, and Mr. William Thompson, or a majority of them, do immediately use such measures to provide Stores that may be necessary for the service of the Province at this time, not exceeding in value the sum of Five Thousand Pounds, as to them shall appear most expedient and effectual.

Joseph Galloway, Esquire, having repeatedly moved in Assembly to be excused from serving as a Deputy for this Province in the Continental Congress, the House this day took his motion into consideration, and do hereby agree to excuse him from that service.

The House adjourned to three o'clock, P. M.

Three o'clock, P. M.—Ordered, That Mr. Wynkoop and Mr. Edmonds wait on the Governour, and acquaint him that the House incline to adjourn to Monday, the 19th of June next, if his Honour has no objection thereto.

The House adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

May 13, 1775.—The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The Members appointed to wait on the Governour with the Message of last night, reported they had delivered the same according to order, and that his Honour was pleased to say, he had no objection to the adjournment proposed by the House.

The House adjourned to Monday, the 19th of June next, at four o'clock, P. M.

MEETINGS OF INHABITANTS OF MORRIS COUNTY, NEW-JERSEY.

Pursuant to an appointment of a meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Morris, agreeable to notice given by the former Committee of Correspondence, the said Freeholders and Inhabitants did meet accordingly on Monday, the first day of May, Anno Domini, 1775.

JACOB FORD, Esq., Chairman,
WILLIAM DE HART, Esq., Clerk.

And came into the following Votes and Resolutions, to wit:

That Delegates be chosen to represent the County of Morris, and that the said Delegates be vested with the power of legislation, and that they raise Men, Money, and Arms for the common defence, and point out the mode, method, and means of raising, appointing, and paying the said Men and Officers, subject to the control and direction of the Provincial and Continental Congress; and that afterwards they meet in Provincial Congress with such Counties as shall send to the same, jointly with them to levy taxes on the Province, with full power of legislative authority, if they think proper to exercise the same, for the said Province, and the said Provincial Congress be subject to the control of the Grand Continental Congress.

And they proceeded to elect the following persons to be their Delegates as aforesaid, to wit:

William Winds, Esquire, William De Hart, Esquire, Silas Condit, Peter Dickerson, Jacob Drake, Ellis Cook, Jonathan Stiles, Esq., David Thompson, Esq., Abraham Kitchell.

By order: WILLIAM DE HART, Clerk.

And pursuant to the above appointment, the said Delegates met at the house of Captain Peter Dickerson, at Morristown, in the County of Morris, on the said first day of May, 1775:

Present: William Winds, Esquire, William De Hart, Esq., Silas Condit, Peter Dickerson, Jacob Drake, Ellis Cook, Jonathan Stiles, Esq., David Thompson, Esquire, Abraham Kitchell.

William Winds, Esq., was unanimously chosen Chairman. Archibald Dallas was appointed Clerk.

Voted unanimously, That any five of the Delegates, when met, be a body of the whole, and do make a board, and that a majority of them so met should make a vote.

Voted unanimously, That Forces should be raised.

Then the Delegates adjourned till to-morrow, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to meet at the house of Captain Peter Dickerson aforesaid.

Tuesday, Nine o'clock, May 2, 1775.

Pursuant to adjournment, the Delegates met.

Present: William Winds, Esq., William De Hart, Esq., Silas Condit, Peter Dickerson, Ellis Cook, Jonathan Stiles, Esq., David Thompson, Esq., Abraham Kitchell.

Voted, That three hundred men should be raised, exclusive of Commissioned Officers.

Voted, That the said three hundred men be Volunteers.

Voted, That the three hundred men, so raised, shall be divided in Five Companies, sixty men each.

Voted, That those Companies shall be commanded by three Commissioned Officers, viz: a Captain and two Lieutenants.

Voted, That two Field Officers shall be appointed, and that each of them shall supply the place of Captain in the two first Companies.

Voted, That William Winds shall be Colonel.

At twelve o'clock adjourned, to meet at half an hour after one o'clock in the afternoon.

Half past One o'clock.

Met, according to adjournment. All the Members present.

Voted, That William De Hart, Esquire, shall be Major.

Voted, That Samuel Ball, Joseph Morris, and Daniel Budd shall be Captains.

Voted, That John Huntington be Captain-Lieutenant in the Colonel's Company, and Silas Howell to be Captain-Lieutenant in the Major's Company.

Voted, That the Captain of each Company shall appoint his Lieutenants.

Ordered, That the Captains shall discipline their men at the rate of one day every week, and to continue the same till further orders; and the times be appointed, and the places of training affixed by the Captains.

Voted, That in case of any invasion or alarm, either in this or any of the neighbouring Provinces, the said Officers and men shall be called out to service by the Commanding Officer for the time being; and the said Officers and men shall be paid as follows, viz: Captains, Seven Shillings, Proclamation money, per day; First Lieutenants, Six Shillings per day; Second Lieutenants, Five Shillings per day; Sergeants, Three Shillings and Six Pence per day; Private men, Three Shillings per day, and found with Provisions, Arms, and Ammunition; and when only in discipline at home, the same wages, and to find themselves, and their wages to be paid every two months.

Voted, That the following be the form of the Enlisting paper, to be signed by the recruits:

"We, the subscribers, do voluntarily enlist in the Company of Captain to be and serve in the Regiment under the command of Colonel William Winds, in this or any of the neighbouring Provinces, where we may be called, agreeable to certain Resolves, made and entered into by the Delegates for the County of Morris."

Ordered, That five hundred weight of Powder and a ton of Lead be purchased and kept in a Magazine, for the use of the new Regiment now to be raised for the County of Morris.

Voted, That William De Hart, Esquire, be appointed to purchase the said Powder and Lead.

Voted, That the Votes and Resolves of this meeting shall be subject to the control of the Provincial and Continental Congresses, to take place after due notice being given to us by either of the said Congresses, of their disapprobation of all or any of our proceedings.

And the Delegates taking into consideration the unhappy circumstances of this Country, do recommend to the inhabitants of this County capable of bearing arms, to provide themselves with Arms and Ammunition to defend their Country in case of any invasion.

Adjourned till the ninth day of this month, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to meet at the house of Captain Peter Dickerson, in Morristown.

WOODBIDGE (NEW-JERSEY) COMMITTEE TO THE SEVERAL COMMITTEES OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Committee, Woodbridge, New-Jersey, }
May 1, 1775. }

GENTLEMEN: We have received repeated intelligence by expresses of your engaging and defeating the Regulars under the command of General Gage, which is universally credited in this Colony; and we have the pleasure of assuring you, your conduct and bravery on that occasion is greatly applauded and admired by all ranks of men. In consequence of the intelligence, a Provincial Convention will be held, as soon as the Members can possibly be convened; in the mean time the inhabitants are putting themselves in the best posture of defence, being determined to stand or fall with the liberties of America. We have, for some time past, feared the New-Yorkers would desert American liberty, but are now fully convinced, by their late spirited conduct, that they are determined to support the grand cause. We also learn, with pleasure, that the inhabitants of Pennsylvania and the other Southern Provinces are firm, unanimous, and spirited. We have only to add, that you have our unfeigned and hearty thanks for the noble stand you have made, and our sincere and fervent prayers for a speedy deliverance from all your calamities.

We are, very respectfully, gentlemen, your most obedient humble servants. By order of the Committee:

COUNCIL OF NEW-YORK.

At a Council held at the Council Chamber in the City of New-York, on Monday, the first day of May, 1775, Present: The Honourable Cadwallader Colden, Esquire, His Majesty's Lieutenant Governour, &c., &c., Mr. Watts, Mr. De Lancey, Mr. Apthorp, Mr. Morris, Mr. Smith, Mr. Wallace, Mr. White, Mr. Axtell, Mr. Cruger, Mr. Jamney.

That the advice of the Council for the prorogation of the Assembly may not be interpreted a neglect of the last intimations of His Majesty's pleasure for restoring the tranquillity of the Empire, signified in the Earl of Dartmouth's Letter of the 3d of March, the Council observed to his Honour:

That there was, in the course of the last winter, a general expectation in this Province of some signification to the Colonies upon the contested subject of taxation and other grievances, and an earnest desire in the people to maintain their ancient union with, and dependance upon Great Britain.

That if the Secretary of State's Letter had found the Colony in this temper, there was room to hope, from the explicit declarations contained in it, of His Majesty's most gracious intentions of promoting a reconciliation between the several branches of the Empire, that the Colonies would have declared themselves upon its important contents in some way favourable to the Union, which every good subject to His Majesty so ardently desires, and which the Council conceive the people of this Colony were disposed most strenuously to promote.

That Lord Dartmouth's Letter arrived on the 24th of April, the very day after the news reached us of the melancholy event in the Massachusetts-Bay, of the 19th April, which has thrown the Provinces into confusion, kindled a flame that renders it impossible for the Representatives of the people to give that attention to his Lordship's Letter that is expected by His Majesty, until the present ferments subside.

Astonished by accounts of acts of hostility in the moment of the expectation of terms of reconciliation, and now filled with distrust, the inhabitants of this City burst through all restraints on the arrival of the intelligence from Boston, and instantly emptied the vessel laden with Provisions for that place, and then seized the City Arms, and in the course of a few days distributed them among the multitude, formed themselves into Companies, and trained openly in the streets; increased the numbers and power of the Committee before appointed, to execute the Association of the Continental Congress; convened themselves, by beat of drum, for popular Resolutions; have taken the keys of the Custom-House by military force; shut up the Port; drawn a number of small cannon into the country; called all parts of the Colony to a Provincial Convention; chosen twenty Delegates for this City; formed an Association, now signing by all ranks, engaging submission to Committees and Congresses, in firm union with the rest of the Continent, and openly avow a resolution, not only to resist the Acts of Parliament complained of as grievances, but to withhold succours of all kinds from the Troops, and to repel every species of force, whenever it may be exerted, for enforcing the taxing claims of Parliament, at the risk of their lives and fortunes.

In such a change of temper and conduct, (which has entirely prostrated His Majesty's Government in this Province,) there cannot be the least prospect of bringing the Assembly to a deliberate consideration of the Earl of Dartmouth's Letter; nor is there any foundation for the most distant hope of accomplishing His Majesty's intentions, if there is any farther irritation by the movements of the Army, and fresh effusions of blood. And as it appears to the Council to be of the last importance to the British Empire, that the true state of the Colonies be immediately made known to His Majesty, and also to the Commander-in-chief of his forces on this Continent, the Council, moved by their zeal for the interest of the Crown and the felicity of His Majesty's subjects, recommend it to his Honour to transmit, as soon as possible, the full information of the late events in this Province, with assurances to General Gage that the great end of the reconciliation, so explicitly urged in the Secretary of State's Letter, cannot be accomplished, agreeable to His Majesty's expectations, unless he can find means to remove the suspicion of his meditating further operations on the part of the Army, that the people may, with due composure of mind, attend to the terms recommended by His Majesty for re-establishing the tranquillity of the Empire.

PROCLAMATION BY GOVERNOUR COLDEN.

By the Honourable CADWALLADER COLDEN, Esquire, His Majesty's Lieutenant Governour and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of New-York, and the Territories depending thereon in AMERICA:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the General Assembly of this Province stands adjourned to the third day of May instant: I have thought fit for His Majesty's service to prorogue, and I do, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Council, prorogue the said General Assembly to the seventh day of June next, of which all His Majesty's subjects concerned therein are required to take notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at Fort George, in the City of New-York, the first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, in the fifteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth.

CADWALLADER COLDEN.

By his Honour's command:

SAM. BAYARD, Jun., Deputy Secretary.

God save the King.

TIMOTHY PICKERING, JUNIOR, TO THE COMMITTEE OF SAFETY FOR MASSACHUSETTS.

Salem, May 1, 1775.

GENTLEMEN: As a great number of men will soon be out of employ within the limits of the First Regiment, in Essex, it is thought by many highly expedient that they should have an opportunity to enlist into the Army. I imagine a Regiment may presently be enlisted, if field officers be appointed; and I beg leave to recommend Lieutenant Colonel John Mansfield, of Lynn, as well qualified to take the command of the proposed Regiment, and Captain Israel Hutchinson, of Danvers, to be the second in command. The latter is an active man, of experience in war, having made three campaigns; and both he and Colonel Mansfield will, I am persuaded, be very acceptable to the people. I do not think just now of a Major; but as soon as it is known that a Regiment is to be formed in the environs of Salem, I doubt not but a sufficient number of suitable persons will present themselves to fill all the vacant offices in the Regiment. I am, gentlemen, your most humble servant,

TIM. PICKERING, Junior.

To the Committee of Safety.

BOSTON COMMITTEE TO DOCTOR JOSEPH WARREN.

Boston, May 1, 1775.

SIR: We wrote you the 29th ultimo, per Mr. Edward Payne, who left the Town yesterday morning. As General Gage thought that he could not, in his official capacity, correspond with you on the subject you imparted to him, he desired us to write you on it; in conformity to which, we say that you have, in a great measure, adopted the same sentiments in your Resolves, which we are this day favoured with in yours of yesterday, saving that part of it that respects persons being sent from hence to carry into execution the desires of any of the inhabitants of the Province now in Boston, respecting their bringing their effects from the different parts of the Government where their dwelling places are. In order to remove all difficulties, we do propose to give to persons to be sent from hence, either servants or others, passes to the office you have established, desiring they may be furnished with passes for so long a time as may be proper for them, according to the distance they go; that they may have liberty to procure any help necessary for the conveyance of said effects, and that they may pass and repass unmolested.

If the above be agreeable, please to favour us with an answer by the bearer. We are, with respect and the greatest regard and sincere affection, Sir, your most humble obedient servants,

JOHN SCOLLAY, SAMUEL AUSTIN,
THOS. MARSHALL, JOHN PITTS.

TIMOTHY NEWELL,

To Doctor Joseph Warren.

LEMUEL WILLIAMS TO BENJAMIN AIKIN, ESQUIRE, IN WATERTOWN.

Dartmouth, May 1, 1775.

SIR: I am desired to acquaint you that Mr. Samuel Allen, (by the desire of the principal part of the inhabitants of this place) is sent to you to know the minds of the Provincial Congress, whether it is most proper at this time for the Merchants in this place to send their Vessels and Provisions to sea, or not. Your early proposing the same to that respectable body, will much oblige your humble servant,

LEMUEL WILLIAMS.

ELBRIDGE GERRY TO THE MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESS.

Monday morning, 1775.

Mr. White, of Marblehead, from Boston, who has been an Addresser, was dismissed yesterday, after having been taken in a vessel of his own, with salt, and carried up to that place. He informs the inhabitants of Marblehead, that a transport arrived there yesterday with one hundred and fifty Troops, and sailed from Ireland in company with thirty-three more, which had on board eight Regiments, three hundred and fifty Recruits, and one Regiment of Dragoons. He parted with seventeen of them on Friday last; and it was supposed when they all arrived, that they would be twelve thousand strong; but I cannot conceive that there will be that number. Notwithstanding which, it may be highly necessary to be ready for such an army. This I have by a brother from Marblehead, just arrived, who received it from White, and thought it proper to apprise you of it, to be communicated to Congress, if necessary. He likewise adds an anecdote of a vessel in Marblehead, loaded with molasses, under custody of the Sloop-of-War posted there, which the inhabitants boarded the last night: they slipped her cables, and after running her into the wharf, where a number of our men armed, were posted to receive her, they unladed her cargo, and saved the whole. I am, in much haste, Sir, your very humble servant,

ELBRIDGE GERRY.

Honourable President of the Congress.

PETITION OF JONATHAN BREWER.

To the Honourable the President and Members of the Provincial Congress of MASSACHUSETTS-BAY, now sitting in WATERTOWN, in said Province.

The Petition of Jonathan Brewer, Esq., of Waltham, humbly sheweth:

That your Petitioner having a desire of contributing all in his power for this Country's good, begs leave to propose to this honourable House to march with a body of five hundred Volunteers to Quebec, by way of the Rivers Kennebeck and Chadier, as he humbly begs leave to apprehend that such a diversion of the Provincial Troops into that part of Canada, would be the means of drawing the Governour of Canada with his Troops, into that quarter, and which would effectually secure the Northern and Western Frontiers from any inroads of the Regular or Canadian Troops. This he humbly conceives he could execute with all the facility imaginable. He therefore begs that this honourable Assembly would take this his proposal into consideration, and to act thereon as in their wisdom shall seem meet.

J. BREWER.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM HOLLAND, OF MAY 2, 1775, TO THE REV. MR. WILLIAM GORDON, OF ROXBURY.

When the Parliament met, I was in hopes the manly Address of the General Congress to the King, and that to the People of England, would have opened their eyes, and have led them to apply a remedy suitable to the disease; but instead of that, what have they done? Like true quacks, they deal in inflammatories, and attempt to heal by exasperating the evil they should cure. Of this nature is Lord North's concession, the merit of which, (if it has any) is wholly destroyed by the Restraining Bill. By this they will further provoke those who are already sufficiently enraged, and force the discarded useless fishermen to fly to arms, and to fight against Administration, from a principle of hatred, as well as zeal for the publick. Never, sure, were Ministers more infatuated than those headless beings who manage the affairs of England; and to tell you the truth, it is like man like master with respect to the latter. Don't you remember what Mr. T. . . . once told you concerning his invincible obstinacy, as mentioned by a gentleman who was much about his person when he was a youth? Has not all his conduct confirmed it ever since he mounted the Throne? For I am persuaded he (as tutored by the assuming favourite) and the junto, is at the bottom of all these wild measures; nor will they relinquish them till they smart severely for their folly. Don Quixote like, they are obstinately bent on fighting wind-mills; and no wonder if they get broken heads in the encounter. Were they alone to smart, it were no great matter; but the mischief is, that I fear they will draw down irreparable evils upon both Englands. Lord North is only a tool to do the dirty work of his more dirty superiours; and the precious Parliament are, in their place, the tools to do his dirty work in return, for the pay he gives them. They have lately employed that old mungy jacobite Doctor, alias Dictionary Johnson, alias the Rambler, to answer the Congress, in a pamphlet entitled "Taxation no Tyranny"—a piece full of sophistical quibbles, dressed out in pedantick bombast language. I hope to see some good answer to it; and am pleased to see how effectually the authors of the Monthly Review, in their last Review, (March.) have cut him down in a few words. If you ever see that periodical work on your side the water, it will give you pleasure to read what they have said on the subject. If we may believe the papers, all things with you threaten war. In the last it is affirmed the standard of liberty had been lately erected at Salem, and that it was repaired to by numbers in arms, determined to fight or die. Should the King's Troops be worsted in any general action, of which I think there is the greatest probability, what an uproar will it make in England. And then let the Ministry stand clear. If the Troops beat you, you can soon recruit. If they gain five battles, and lose but one, it is over with them, so great is the disadvantage under which they engage, besides what arises from the circumstances of climate, and fighting against those who fight, or are at least persuaded they fight pro aris et focis, and this upon their own ground.

The English Ambassador at the Hague applied to the States to forbid their subjects supplying the Americans with arms and ammunition. The States published a prohibition under the penalty of a Thousand Guilders, that is, about Ninety Pounds Sterling. I leave you to comment on this at your leisure, and judge if, where the profits of a voyage are so great as a voyage of that kind must be, it is not worth the merchant's while to risk that sum. And to assist you in your determination on that point, it is owned by our Ambassador at this place, that a Dutch ship has lately got into Virginia, where it has landed four hundred barrels of powder and fourteen hundred stand of arms. France was applied to to forbid its subjects furnishing you with any military stores. France, it is well known, could easily have crushed all such assistance by an express prohibition; but France knows better than to do it, and therefore only tells its subjects, if they do it, it is entirely at their own risk, which is plainly saying, if you will venture, you may. Spain, when applied to, roundly refused to give any hindrance to her subjects supplying you; and I dare say, from present appearances, will soon act openly against England.

An article lately appeared in the English papers, that a Prussian ship sailed from Stetten to some part of America, with thirty field-pieces, a good store of powder, ball, and small arms, and six or seven Prussian Generals, whose names were mentioned at length. This begins to gain great credit in this part of the world, and is now affirmed to be true. It is said they were engaged for by an American agent at the Court of Berlin. That politick Prince, too, is on the watch; he bears no good will to the Court of London; and in case England should be engaged in a war with her Colonies, will carve himself a handsome slice out of a certain Electorate, or the world will be greatly mistaken.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN AT PARIS, DATED MAY 2, 1775, TO HIS FRIEND IN PHILADELPHIA.

I find the French are extremely attentive to our American politicks, and to a man strongly in favour of us; whether mostly from ill-will to Britain, or friendship to the Colonies, may be matter of doubt; but they profess it to be upon a principle of humanity, and a regard to the natural rights of mankind. They say that the Americans will be either revered or detested by all Europe, according to their conduct at the approaching crisis; they will have no middle character; for in proportion as their virtue and perseverance will render them a glorious, their tame submission will make them a despicable people.

GLOUCESTER COUNTY (VIRGINIA) COMMITTEE.

At a meeting of the Committee of Gloucester, at the Court-House, on Tuesday, the 2d of May, 1775:

Resolved, That we will not ship a single Hogshead of Tobacco to Great Britain, until the determination of the Continental Congress respecting Exportation be known.

Resolved, That we deem the Resolution of our Committee last November, not to ship any Tobacco to Mr. Norton's House, as still obligatory, the Ship Virginia having arrived without the concessions then required.

JASPER CLAYTON, Clerk.

COUNCIL OF VIRGINIA.

At a Council held at the Palace, May 2, 1775. Present: His Excellency the Governour, Thos. Nelson, Richard Corbin, William Byrd, Ralph Wormeley, Jr., Esquires, John Camm, Clerk, and John Page, Esquire.

The Governour was pleased to address himself to the Board in the following manner:

GENTLEMEN: Commotions and insurrections have suddenly been excited among the people, which threatens the very existence of His Majesty's government in this Colony; and no other cause is assigned for such dangerous measures, than that the gunpowder, which had some time past been brought from on board one of the King's ships to which it belonged, and was deposited in the Magazine of this City, has been removed, which, it is known, was done by my order, to whom, under the constitutional right of the Crown which I represent, the custody and disposal of all publick stores of arms and ammunition alone belong. And whether I acted in this matter (as my indispensable duty required) to anticipate the malevolent designs of the enemies of order and government, or to prevent the attempts of any enterprising negroes, the powder being still as ready and convenient for being distributed for the defence of the Country, upon any emergency, as it was before, which I have publicly engaged to do, the expediency of the step I have taken is equally manifest, and therefore it must be evident that the same headstrong and designing people, who have already but too successfully employed their artifices in deluding His Majesty's faithful subjects, and in seducing them from their duty and allegiance, have seized this entirely groundless subject of complaint, only to enslave afresh, and to precipitate as many as possible of the unwary into acts which, involving them in the same guilt, their corruptors think may bind them to the same plans and schemes which are unquestionably meditated in this Colony for subverting the present, and erecting a new form of Government.

Induced by an unaffected regard for the general welfare of the people whom I have had the honour of governing, as well as actuated by duty and zeal in the service of His Majesty, I call upon you, his Council, in this Colony, for your advice upon this pressing occasion; and I submit to you whether a Proclamation should not issue conformable to what I have now suggested; and before our fellow-subjects abandon themselves totally to extremities, which must inevitably draw down an accumulation of every human misery upon their unhappy Country, to warn them of their danger, to remind them of the sacred oaths of allegiance which they have taken, and to call up in their breasts that loyalty and affection which upon so many occasions have been professed by them to their King, their lawful sovereign; and farther, to urge and exhort, in particular, those whose criminal proceedings on this occasion have been, and are still, so alarming, to return to their duty, and a due obedience to the laws; and, in general, all persons whatsoever to rely upon the goodness and tenderness of our most gracious Sovereign to all his subjects, equally, and upon the wisdom of his Councils, for a redress of all their real grievances, which redress can only be obtained by constitutional applications; and, lastly, to enjoin all orders of people to submit, as becomes good subjects, to the legal authority of their Government, in the protection of which their own happiness is most interested.

The Council thereupon acquainted his Excellency, that as the matters he had been pleased to communicate to them were of the greatest consequence, they desired time to deliberate thereon till the next day.

The Board resuming the consideration of the subject laid before them yesterday by the Governour, advised him to issue the following Proclamation; and the same was ordered accordingly.

By his Excellency the Right Honourable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, His Majesty's Lieutenant and Governour General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice-Admiral of the same:

A PROCLAMATION.

VIRGINIA, to wit:

Whereas there is too much reason to suppose that some persons in the different parts of this Colony are disaffected to His Majesty's Government, and by their weight and credit with the people, are endeavouring to bring the Country into such a situation as to afford them the fairest prospect of effecting a change in the form of it, covering the wicked designs under the specious appearance of defending their liberties, and have taken advantage of the unhappy ferment which themselves have raised in the minds of their fellow-subjects, in prosecution of their dangerous designs to oppose the most undoubted prerogative of the King, which, in a late instance, I thought it expedient to exert, by removing on board His Majesty's Ship the Fowey, a small quantity of Gunpowder, belonging to His Majesty, from the Magazine in this City: I have thought fit, by advice of His Majesty's Council, to issue this my Proclamation, with a view of undeceiving the deluded, and of exposing to the unwary the destruction into which they may be precipitated, if they suffer themselves to be longer guided by such infatuated counsels.

Although I consider myself, under the authority of the Crown, the only constitutional judge in what manner the munition, provided for the protection of the people of this Government, is to be disposed of for that end, yet, for effecting the salutary objects of this Proclamation, and removing from the minds of His Majesty's subjects the groundless suspicions they have imbibed, I think proper to declare that the apprehensions which seemed to prevail throughout this whole Country, of an intended insurrection of the Slaves, who had been seen in large numbers in the night time about the Magazine, and my knowledge of its being a very insecure depository, were my inducements to that measure, and I chose the night as the properest season, because I knew the temper of the times, and the misinterpretations of my design which would be apt to prevail if the thing should be known. Acting under these motives, I certainly rather deserved the thanks of the Country, than their reproaches. But whenever the present ferment shall subside, and it shall become necessary to put arms into the hands of the Militia for the defence of the people against a foreign enemy or intestine insurgents, I shall be as ready as on a late occasion to exert my best abilities in the service of the Country. In the mean time, as it is indispensably necessary to maintain order and the authority of the laws, and thereby the dignity of His Majesty's Government, I exhort and require, in His Majesty's name, all his faithful subjects to leave no expedient untried which may tend to that happy end. Such as are not to be influenced by the love of order for its own sake, and the blessings it is always productive of, would do well to consider the internal weakness of this Colony, as well as the dangers to which it is exposed from a savage enemy, who, from the most recent advices I have received from the frontier inhabitants, are ready to renew their hostilities against the people of this Country. But as, on the one hand, nothing can justify men, without proper authority, in a rapid recurrence to arms, nothing excuse resistance to the Executive power in the due enforcement of law; so, on the other, nothing but such resistance and outrageous proceedings shall ever compel me to avail myself of any means that may carry the appearance of severity.

Anxious to restore peace and harmony to this distracted Country, and to induce a firmer reliance on the goodness and tenderness of our most gracious Sovereign to all his subjects equally, and on the wisdom of his Councils for a redress of all their real grievances, which can only be obtained by loyal and constitutional applications, I again call upon and require all His Majesty's liege subjects, and especially all Magistrates and other officers, both civil and military, to exert themselves in removing the discontents, and suppressing the spirit of faction which prevail among the people, that a dutiful submission to the laws of the land may be strictly observed, which shall ever be the rule of my conduct, as the interest and happiness of this Dominion ever have been, and shall continue to be, the objects of my administration.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the Colony, at Williamsburgh, this third day of May, 1775, and in the fifteenth year of His Majesty's reign. DUNMORE.

God save the King.

COMMITTEE OF INSPECTION FOR KENT COUNTY ON DELAWARE.

Dover, Tuesday, May 2, 1775. P. M.

The Committee met by adjournment, when the following Letter was laid before them by the President of the Committee of Correspondence for said County:

"I acknowledge to have wrote a piece (and did not sign it) since said to be an extract of a Letter from Kent County on Delaware, published in Humphreys's Ledger, No. 3. It was not dated from any place, and is somewhat altered from the original. I folded it up, and directed the same to Joshua Fisher and Sons. I had no intention to have it published, and further let them know, the author thought best it should not be published, nor did I think they would. I am sincerely sorry I ever wrote it, as also for its being published, and hope I may be excused for this my first breach in this way, and I intend it shall be the last.

"ROBERT HOLLIDAY."

To the Committee of Correspondence for Kent County on Delaware.

Resolved unanimously, That this be not satisfactory, and that Mr. Holliday be requested to attend the Committee at their next meeting, on Tuesday the ninth instant, then to give further satisfaction for the gross misrepresentation of the people of this County, by said Letter, from which an extract was published in Humphreys's Ledger.

Tuesday, May 9, P. M.

The Committee met according to adjournment, when Mr. Holliday appeared, and offered to make the necessary concessions for his conduct.

On motion, Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to draw up Mr. Holliday's concessions in writing.

This being done, Mr. Holliday waited on the Committee with his concessions, drawn up in the form of an Address, as follows:

"To the Committee of Inspection for KENT County on DELAWARE:

"GENTLEMEN: With sorrow and contrition for my weakness and folly, I confess myself the author of the Letter from which an extract was published in the third number of Humphreys's Ledger, said to be from Kent County, on Delaware, but at the same time do declare it was published without my consent, and not without some alterations.

"I am now convinced the political sentiments therein contained were founded in the grossest error, more especially that malignant insinuation, that "if the King's Standard were now erected, nine out of ten would repair to it," could not have been suggested but from the deepest insinuation. True, indeed it is, the people of this County have ever shown a zealous attachment to His Majesty's person and Government, and whenever he raised his standard in a just cause, were ready to flock to it; but let the severe account I now render to an injured people witness to the world, that none are more ready to oppose tyranny, or to be first in the cause of liberty, than the inhabitants of Kent County.

"Conscious that I can render no satisfaction adequate to the injuries done my Country, I can only beg the forgiveness of my countrymen upon those principles of humanity which may induce them to consider the frailty of human nature. And I do profess and promise, that I will never again oppose those laudable measures necessarily adopted by my countrymen for the preservation of American freedom, but will co-operate with them to the utmost of my abilities, in their virtuous struggle for liberty, so far as is consistent with my religious principles.

"ROBERT HOLLIDAY."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA TO HIS FRIEND IN LONDON.

Philadelphia, May 2, 1775.

Do not we see the hand of Providence in the late repulse of the National soldiery? New-England men who are justly noted for religious attentions, do say, that God hath evidently appeared on their side, and fought for them; thus deriving powerful motives for perseverance and vigour in a cause so favoured. And indeed the battle has been the Lord's. He has wrought by few, as easily as he could by many.

The Militia, it is said, threaten the siege of Boston, however difficult it may seem, and we have a report that General Gage is suffering the inhabitants to retire. This forebodes the destruction of that City; but the people of the Colony contemplate that consequence, the bombardment of their Coast-Towns, and the total stagnation of their Fishery and Trade. These advices must strike terror into the British Ministry, and astonish all Europe. But this comes of driving people to despair. Though I trust you will have come away, yet I venture to risk a letter.

This is the last I shall write to you, till further advices from you. Indeed means of conveyance will probably fail, for we expect that the Congress (about to sit) will recommend the total suspension of exportation at their first meeting. This has already taken place at New-York. The van of the New-England Militia has actually arrived there, and will be joined by the inhabitants, who are arraying. You may be assured that from Maryland north-eastward, there is no scarcity of ammunition. Gunpowder abounds in New-England. A proper magazine of victuals for six months, and stores, (even tents for thirty thousand men,) have been collected at Worcester, forty-five miles west of Boston.

Our City affords thirty Companies, from fifty to one hundred each, of trained bands, who daily practise the manual exercise of the musket. Citizens may not perhaps be so much esteemed as soldiers; but it is the same throughout the Country.

NEW-JERSEY COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE.

At a meeting of the New-Jersey Provincial Committee of Correspondence (appointed by the Provincial Congress) at the City of New-Brunswick, on Tuesday, the second day of May, Anno Domini, 1775, agreeable to summons of Hendrick Fisher, Esq., Chairman.

Present: Hendrick Fisher, Samuel Tucker, Joseph Borden, Joseph Riggs, Isaac Pearson, John Chetwood, Lewis Ogden, Isaac Ogden, Abraham Hunt, and Elias Boudinot, Esquires.

The Committee having seriously taken into consideration as well the present alarming and very extraordinary conduct of the British Ministry, for carrying into execution sundry Acts of Parliament for the express purpose of raising a revenue in America, and other unconstitutional measures therein mentioned; as also the several acts of hostility that have been actually commenced for this purpose by the Regular Forces under General Gage against our brethren of the Colony of Massachusetts-Bay, in New-England; and not knowing how soon this Province may be in a state of confusion and disorder, if there are not some effectual measures speedily taken to prevent the same: This Committee are unanimously of opinion, and do hereby advise and direct, that the Chairman do immediately call a Provincial Congress to meet at Trenton, on Tuesday the twenty-third day of this instant, in order to consider of and determine such matters as may then and there come before them; and the several Counties are hereby desired to nominate and appoint their respective Deputies for the same, as speedily as may be, with full and ample powers for such purposes as may be thought necessary for the peculiar exigencies of this Province.

The Committee do also direct their Chairman to forward true copies of the above minute to the several County Committees of this Province, without delay.

HENDRICK FISHER, Chairman.

NEW-YORK COMMITTEE.

The Committee met at the Exchange, at six o'clock, Monday, 1st May, 1775. Present:

Francis Bassett,	Augustus Van Horne,	Thomas Buchanan,
Victor Bicker,	Garret Ketteltas,	Petrus Byanck,
John White,	Eleazer Miller,

Mr. Isaac Low was unanimously elected Chairman; Mr. Henry Remsen, Deputy Chairman; Mr. John Blagge, Secretary; and Mr. Thomas Pettit, Messenger.

The following Address was received from Mr. Samuel Broome and his Company, which was read in the words following, viz:

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen:

"We wait on you by order of one hundred inhabitants who have formed themselves into a Military Association Company, in order to co-operate with their fellow-citizens in carrying into effect the purposes of the General Association; and we are desired to assure you that they have great confidence in your wisdom and zeal, and are determined to be guided by your advice, and to support your resolutions respecting the preservation of American liberty, of the peace and good order of the City, the safety of individuals (unless proscribed by you) and of private property; upon every occasion we will cheerfully take our tour of duty; and when our services are wanted you may apply to Mr. Samuel Broome, who we have chosen to command us."

Mr. Scott moved, seconded by Mr. McDougall, That a Sub-Committee of four members for each Ward be appointed to offer the Association without delay to the inhabitants of this City and County, and that they take down the names of such of them as shall not sign the Association, and report their names to this Committee.

On the question, whether every person should be waited on except the Lieutenant-Governor, carried in the affirmative, by a great majority.

The following Rules for the government of this Committee in their debates and proceedings, were read, agreed to, and ordered to be entered on their Minutes, viz:

1st. That the Chairman, and in his absence, the Deputy Chairman, and in the absence of both, a Chairman to be appointed pro tempore, shall preside at every meeting, and keep order and decorum, and that it shall be his duty to sign all letters from the Board.

2d. That a Secretary shall be appointed who is not a member of the Board.

3d. That all Addresses shall be made to the Chair, and standing.

4th. That if more than one shall rise to speak at the same time, the Chairman shall determine who shall first be heard.

5th. That the substance of every motion which is seconded, shall be entered on the Minutes.

6th. That no interruption shall be offered while a member is delivering his sentiments.

7th. That every question shall be determined by a majority of voices, and after a determination, the same question shall not be resumed, but with the consent of a majority at a subsequent meeting.

8th. That when a question shall be determined, the names of the members shall be entered as they shall vote, on each side.

9th. That the Committee shall meet every Monday at six o'clock in the evening, and on application of any five members the Chairman, or in his absence the Deputy, and in the absence of both, the Secretary, shall call a special meeting, printed notice whereof to be left at the residence of each member.

10th. That, for the despatch of business and to prevent interruptions, the doors, at our meetings, shall be shut, and that no act, proceeding, or debate of the Committee shall be published or divulged, except to a member, unless leave shall be first given by the Committee.

11th. That when the Chairman and Deputy Chairman shall be out of Town, the five first members named on the list of the body, who may be in Town, shall be at liberty to open Letters directed to the Committee, and that the contents of such Letters shall not be communicated but to a member, without leave of the Committee.

12th. That every member after appearing shall keep his seat, and not leave the Committee without the consent of the Chairman.

13th. That no question shall be determined the day that it is agitated, if one-third of the members then present desire it to be postponed to the next meeting.

14th. That no member shall be at liberty to speak more than twice to the same point without leave of the Board.

15th. That at every stated weekly meeting, these Rules shall be publickly read previous to the proceeding upon business.

Whereas it appears by the publick Papers that all Exportation from Philadelphia to Quebeck, Nova-Scotia, Georgia, and Newfoundland, or any part of the Fishing Coasts or Fishing Islands are suspended, and that it be accordingly recommended to every Merchant immediately to suspend all Exportation to those places until the Continental Congress shall give further orders therein :

Resolved, That the above measure be recommended by this Committee to the Merchants and Inhabitants of this City and County, and that henceforth no Provisions or other necessaries be sent from this Port to the Army or Navy at Boston, and that the Committee of Philadelphia be requested to establish the same restriction, until the Continental Congress shall give further orders therein.

Ordered, That the above be published.

Ordered, That Mr. Scott, Mr. Van Schaack, and Mr. McDougall be a Sub-Committee to draft and report an Answer to Captain Samuel Broome's Address.

Mr. McDougall moved, seconded by Mr. Scott, that a Sub-Committee be appointed to devise ways and means to purchase Arms, Ammunition, and Provisions in our exigency, and that they report the same without delay to this Committee.

Carried unanimously in the affirmative.

Ordered, That Mr. Remsen, Mr. Van Zandt, Mr. McDougall, Mr. Randall, Mr. Lispenard, Mr. Van Dam, Mr. Sands, Mr. Kissam, Mr. Scott, Mr. Duryee, Mr. Yates and Mr. Curtenius be a Committee for the above purpose.

The Committee adjourned until to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Theophilus Anthony,	John M. Scott,

Mr. Duane moved, seconded by Mr. McDougall, that the Committee come into the following Resolution, viz :

Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to every inhabitant to perfect himself in Military Discipline, and be provided with Arms, Accoutrements, and Ammunition as directed by law.

Carried unanimously in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the above Resolve be immediately made publick by a handbill.

Mr. Goforth moved, seconded by Mr. Lamb, that a Committee be appointed to move all the Cannon out of Town that are private property, and to provide every thing necessary thereto, and that a particular account be taken of them, and the names of the proprietors.

Carried unanimously in the affirmative.

Ordered, That Captain Sears, Captain Randall, Mr. Lamb, Mr. A. P. Lott, Mr. Brasher, and Mr. Goforth be a Sub-Committee for the above purposes. Names added : Mr. Berrian, Mr. Sands, Mr. Byvanck.

Mr. Lamb, seconded by Mr. McDougall, made a motion in the words following, viz :

Whereas it is essentially necessary in the present posture of our affairs, that the true state of this City should be known in regard to what quantity of Arms and Ammunition can be procured for our defence :

I move that a Sub-Committee of Inspection be appointed for that purpose, and to make inquiry of the inhabitants what Military Stores and Arms they have for their own use, and for sale, and that the said Committee be desired to report the same to this Board with all convenient speed.

Which being unanimously agreed to ;

Ordered, That the same be referred to the Committees appointed for carrying about the Association in the different Wards, and that the same consist of the following persons, viz :

MONTGOMERIE WARD.—Joseph Bull, John Berrian, David Beekman, Petrus Byvanck.

SOUTH WARD.—Thomas Randall, Frederick Jay, John Lasher.

DOCK WARD.—Gabriel H. Ludlow, Nicholas Hoffman, Gerardus Duyckinck, and Abraham Brinkerhoff.

WEST WARD.—Jacob Van Voorhies, Peter T. Curtenius, William W. Gilbert, John Van Cortlandt.

NORTH WARD.—Captain Fleming, John White, Robert Benson, John Anthony.

OUT WARD.—John M. Scott, George Janeway, Cornelius P. Low, Jeremiah Platt, Benjamin Helme.

EAST WARD.—Thomas Ivers, John Imlay, Oliver Templeton, John Broome, Joseph Hallett, Augustus Van Horne, Daniel Phenix.

Mr. Duane moved, seconded by Mr. McDougall, that the Committee come into the following Resolution, viz :

Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governour, to explain the motives which, at this alarming juncture, have obliged the inhabitants to appoint the present Committee for their safety and preservation, and to assure his Honour that this Committee will at all times exert their utmost endeavours to promote good order, and support the Civil Magistrates as far as shall be compatible with the melancholy exigency of our publick affairs.

Carried unanimously in the affirmative.

Ordered, That the following gentlemen be a Committee for the above purpose, viz: Mr. Duane, Mr. Scott, Mr. John Jay, Mr. Van Schaack, Mr. Kissam, Mr. McDougall, Mr. Low, and Mr. Lewis.

Resolved, That a Committee of Correspondence and Intelligence be appointed, and that it consist of the following persons, viz: Mr. Low, Mr. Van Schaack, Mr. Kissam, Mr. Scott, Mr. Jones, Mr. P. V. B. Livingston, Mr. Van Cortlandt and Mr. McDougall, who are desired to transmit to England, and to the Committees of the principal Cities on this Continent, copies of the Association entered into in this City, with such further acts and resolutions of this Committee for advancing the common cause, as they shall direct to be published.

The Committee adjourned until to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

ASSOCIATION OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, May 4, 1775.

The following Association was set on foot here last Saturday, April 29, and has been transmitted, for signing, to all the Counties in the Province, and signed by most of the men of this City:

"Persuaded that the salvation of the rights and liberties of America depend, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants, in a vigorous prosecution of the measures necessary for its safety, and convinced of the necessity of preventing the anarchy and confusion which attend a dissolution of the powers of Government: We, the Freemen, Freeholders, and Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York, being greatly alarmed at the avowed design of the Ministry to raise a revenue in America, and shocked by the bloody scene now acting in the Massachusetts-Bay, do, in the most solemn manner, resolve never to become slaves; and do associate, under all the ties of religion, honour, and love to our Country, to adopt and endeavour to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress, or resolved upon by our Provincial Convention, for the purpose of preserving our Constitution and opposing the execution of the several arbitrary and oppressive Acts of the British Parliament, until a reconciliation between Great Britain and America, on constitutional principles, (which we most ardently desire,) can be obtained; and that we will, in all things, follow the advice of our General Committee respecting the purposes aforesaid, the preservation of peace and good order, and the safety of individuals and private property."

GOVERNOUR WANTON TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF RHODE-ISLAND.

Newport, May 2, 1775.

To the General Assembly of the ENGLISH Colony of RHODE-ISLAND, &c., to be held at PROVIDENCE, within and for said Colony, on the first WEDNESDAY in MAY, 1775.
